

Dr. Martin Luther's

Complete Writings, published by

Dr. Joh. Georg Walch.

Fifteenth volume.

Reformation Writings.

Documents related to the history of the Reformation.

New revised stereotype edition.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
CONCORDIA PUBLISHING HOUSE.
1899.

Dr. Martin Luther's

Reformation Writings.

First section.

Documents related to the history of the Reformation.

A. Against the Papists.

From the years 1517 to 1524.

Published anew on behalf of the Ministry of the German Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Missouri, Ohio and other States.

St. Louis, Mo.
CONCORDIA PUBLISHING HOUSE.

1899.

Foreword.

This fifteenth volume brings together the documents against the papists from the years 1517 to 1524, which belong to the history of the Reformation. It may seem strange to some that so many atrocious papist writings have been included in an edition of Luther's works. The task of defending ourselves against this, as if this could be asserted as an accusation against our edition, is one that Luther himself has elevated us to. He has repeatedly printed even the most wretched works of his papist opponents, such as "Des Silvester Prierias Dialogue on the Violence of the Pope" and his "Replica" (St. Louis Edition, Vol. XVIII, 310 and 412). Through the contrast of the papist darkness, the light of the Gospel, which Luther again put out of the lampstand for us, the great grace of God granted to us in the same, only emerges in full splendor and encourages us to praise and glory for God's bestowal of grace, which has been granted to us. In his preface to the booklet: "What was decided at the Imperial Diet of Nuremberg in 1522 to 1523 by papal sancti ligkeit bei kaiserlicher Majestät Statthalter und Ständen halben Lutherischer Sachen gesucht, und darauf geantwortet worden worden," which Luther reissued in 1538, he says (St. Louis edition, vol. XIV, 422 f.): "Our people, in my opinion, would do well to take care that this and similar books are preserved for their descendants in order to perceive the incredible and innumerable cunning of Satan.): "In my opinion, our people would do very well if they took care that this and similar books were preserved for the descendants, in order to perceive and hand down to memory the incredible and innumerable cunning of Satan, which reigns in the Roman trousers, the den of sin and ruin." (Ibid. Col. 426:) "Therefore, if this and similar books (as I have said) are preserved and brought down to posterity, it will be useful and salutary, not only for Germany, but also for the whole world, against this exceedingly harmful mountain of Roman Babel, which corrupts all the world (to use the words of Jeremiah). For here you see that the princes of Germany, who have finally awakened from a deep sleep, have dared to confront the pope and the Roman court (that is, the dunghill).

to the face,¹) what he could not hear, cannot hear and will not be able to hear. And they have not been moved (which is a miracle) by the splendid pretenses and arts of the Roman court, which one can read here in the message of the Roman Pontiff." ²) And the same princes, most of whom were papists, already testify in 1523,³) enlightened by Luther's teachings, that it was not possible, as the pope desired, to execute the papal sentences and the imperial mandates on Luther, "because (they say) all the estates of the German nation are so unmistakably burdened by manifold abuses of the court of Rome and of the ecclesiastical estates, and now so much informed by Luther's letters, where one should act against it in earnest or in fact, according to the content of reported judgments or mandates, that it would certainly be considered by them as if one wanted to suppress evangelical truth by tyranny and handle unchristian abuses" 2c.

After many documents have been presented to us in the first chapter of this volume, which vividly show us the ghastly evil and corruption in the Roman Church, namely the indulgences of Tetzl, which gave the next cause for the Reformation, the remaining eight chapters contain the documents, which, as already mentioned, describe the most important events of the Reformation in its beginning and progress.

1) In No. 722 of this volume.

2) No. 719 in this volume.

3) In No. 720 of this volume, § 9.

in the years 1517 to 1524. The second chapter deals with Luther's opposition to indulgences, especially through his 95 Theses; the third with the events between the papal legate Cajetan and Luther at the Imperial Diet in Augsburg in 1518, and presents the Acta Augustana in full. The fourth is about Luther's negotiations with the papal nuncio Carl von Miltitz; the fifth about the Leipzig disputation, which is reported in its entirety; the sixth about the papal ban against Luther and its consequences; the seventh about Luther's standing before the emperor and the imperial estates at the Diet of Worms in 1521, his declaration of eight and his hidden stay at Wartburg Castle; the eighth, on the good and bad changes that occurred during Luther's absence in Wittenberg, especially on all the events between Carlstadt and Luther, up to Carlstadt's complete escape from Saxony; the ninth, on two imperial congresses held in Nuremberg in the years 1522 to 1524, and what consequences the latter in particular had.

Of the documents in this volume, many have been newly translated from Latin, such as Luther's disputation with Eck at Leipzig and about two hundred letters; others have been thoroughly revised from the Latin. We have only added No. 158b, a short message about the order of the Vicar General of the Augustinian Order, Gabriel Venetus, to seize Luthern and imprison him bound hand and foot.

and No. 644 instead of the "Extract of the Instruction of the Elector Friedrich for Johann Oswald, Amtmann in Eisenach, to Luther", the complete text. No. 643, a fragment in poor translation, is replaced by the complete text. On the other hand, the duplicates have been omitted, namely No. 5, p., because once again No. 10; the note b. at No. 72, because contained in No. 73; No. 225, §§ 14-19, because already No. 200; No. 585 (the Worms Edict), because contained in No. 747 (at Walch wrongly "647"); No. 590, because already St. Louis edition, Vol. XIX, 1007; Appendix, No. 98, because already in St. Louis Edition, Vol. XIX, 560, and Appendix, No. 108, because already in No. 663. Otherwise, we have retained Walch's entire arrangement and even the numbers of the old edition. We have left the pieces that Walch placed in an incorrect position in their place, but have indicated each time where they should have been placed.

In many cases, it was necessary to correct the erroneous, often completely wrong headings of the documents in the old edition, also to add the time determinations, which are very much in disorder in Walch, partly, partly to resolve them (which did not happen in Walch), partly to indicate them more correctly. As an indication of what had to be done in this respect, we give a sample from the ninth chapter. At the beginning of this chapter, we were obliged to give a short historical overview of the three imperial diets held at Nuremberg in the years 1522 to 1524, so that the reader may feel at ease with the rather jumbled up information given by Walch.

documents. Then we had to separate four documents, namely No. 727 to 730, which do not belong in this chapter, but in the first section of the preceding eighth chapter. Furthermore, we had to change the heading of No. 743, in which Walch relocates to the Imperial Diet at Nuremberg what took place at a convention at Regensburg. We have added a time determination to the numbers 720, 722, 723, 731, 733, and 747; time determinations dissolved in No. 724, 732, 742, 756, and 758; corrected in No. 734, 735, 736, 743, 750, 751, and 754. Those dates in Walch, which are designated by a weekday in a Latin original, are almost always wrong, because he takes feria prima as Monday, not as Sunday.

At the beginning of the fifteenth volume Walch has a 96 pages (192 columns) long preliminary report, in which he proves the necessity, the divinity and the sufficiency of the Reformation. We consider such a proof to be completely superfluous in this place, because we are convinced that he who reads the writings contained in this volume, even just the table of contents, does not need such a proof; therefore, we have omitted it.

The preliminary report is followed by Walch's "Anzeige, woraus die in diesem Theile befindlichen Documente genommen worden". We were able to omit this as well, since we have provided this proof for every single number, saving the reader the trouble of having to look things up.

On the other hand, we have added to the table of contents an index of the documents and letters of Luther contained in this volume, arranged in chronological order. This was prompted by Seidemann, who in his "Erläuterungen zur Reformationgeschichte," p. 61, note, says: "A new, better edition of Luther's works than the excellent Walch gave and was able to give, would be very necessary. It would have to be chronological and give the impacting documents chronologically in a special volume." Since we are now bound to the order given by Walch in the task that has become ours, we have had to limit ourselves to satisfying the certainly justified requirement made by Seidemann, at least to some extent, by a chronological register. Only the documents of the first chapter, which concern the papal indulgences, we have not included in this chronological register, because they are on the whole already arranged by Walch according to the chronological order, and can be found so, but several times with corrected dates, also in our table of contents. That we, although the letters are already

The fact that we have included some of the documents in the index, but have nevertheless made a special index of them, will certainly be welcome to many. We have indicated the locations of the documents in these two registers according to the numbers, so that we did not have to wait for the completion of the printing before preparing them. Finding the documents in this way is not difficult for the reader, since the numbers are inserted in the heads of the pages. Because we had to break the course in the chronological work, we hope that this attempt will be judged favorably.

Whoever reads the documents in this volume carefully will see very clearly how God has held His protective hand over His chosen armament, Doctor Martin Luther, through whom He has brought His holy gospel to light again against all the power of darkness, despite the resistance, raging and blustering of the pope, the emperor and many powerful princes. This must serve to greatly strengthen our faith and make us certain that God will not forsake us, if we hold fast to his holy word in faith, but will preserve us to eternal blessedness. God grant this in mercy. Amen.

St. Louis, on Reformation Day, 1899.

A. F. Hoppe.

Content of the

The first part of the fifteenth volume of Luther's complete writings.

which contains the documents on the history of the Reformation from 1517 to 1524.

The first chapter.

The documents that show that religion has been turned into a trade in the papacy, especially the indulgences of Tetzl.

The first section.

On the origin and progress of papal indulgences.

A. The pope has driven out money by tendering the Jubilee and letters of indulgence for churches, monasteries, hospitals 2c.

Column

1. Bull of Pope Bonifacius VIII. Anno 13001
2. Bull of Pope Clement VI Anno 1350 2
3. Bull of Pope Paul II Anno 1470 6
4. pope Sixtus IV's Confirmation Bull. Anno 1473 11
5. several letters of indulgence from the popes and others.
 - a. The Cardinals of Avignon letter of indulgence for the church at Untergreislau. 1331 14
 - b. Letter of indulgence for the church at Bernstadt. 133916
 - c. Letter of indulgence for the church at Lommatsch. 135917
 - d. Letter of indulgence for the church at Memleben. 135918
 - e. Letter of indulgence for the new Hospital zuHalle in Saxony. 1381 19
 - f. Letter of indulgence for the renovated Sonnenfeld Monastery. 138420
 - g. Letter of indulgence from Pope Bonifacius IX for the Hospital Martini at Nordhausen together with Pope Alexander V's bull for an altar portable. 1391 and 1409 21
 - h. Letter of indulgence for the church at Mühlhausen. 1423 23
 - i. Letter of indulgence of Pope Martin V. together with the Bishop of Merseburg confirmation. 1422 24 Letter of indulgence from Bishop Nicolaus of Merseburg. 1415 26
 - k. Letter of indulgence for a chapel at Hofstedt. 1442 27

Column

- I. Letter of indulgence from Pope Nicolaus V for the Chapel at Ziegenhain. 1453 29
- m. Letter of indulgence from the bishop of Naumburg for the chapel at Ziegenhain. 1425 30
- n. Copy of a letter of indulgence under the pope's Eugenius IV government [1431-1447] from given 31
- o. Letter of indulgence from Pope Bonifacius IX for the Liebfrauenkirche in Dresden. 1398 33
- p. Letter of indulgence from 1470 (in the old edition Duplicate) 34
- q. Letter of indulgence for the church in Weickershahn. 1470 34
- r. Letter of indulgence for the church in Pfafroda. 1480 36
- s. Letter of indulgence for the church in Westhausen.
- t. Letter of indulgence for the church in Memleben. 1503 39
- u. Letter of indulgence for St. Mary's Church in Dan cig. 1516 40
- v. Letter of indulgence for the church in Trier, especially the skirt of Christ. 1515 41
- w. Letter of indulgence for the church in Eilenberg. 1518 45

B. The pope has exorcised money by pretending to pay the Turk tax.

- 6 Pope Nicolaus V's passport against the Turks. 1453 46
- 7th indulgence letter of the first papal general indulgence commissarius Marinus de Fregeno. 145750
- 8th Letter of Indulgence of Marinus de Fregeno. 1458... 52
9. Reimar Kock's report of an accident encountered by Marinus. 1463 52
- 10th Letter of Indulgence of Heinrich Sletstater, a Dominican. 1470 53
11. indulgence letter of Johann Nixstein, a Franciscan. 1482 55

C. The pope has driven out money through milk and butter letters.

- 12 Butter letter issued by Pope Nicolaus V to the "Würtemberger". 1448 56
13. of D. Spenlin zu Herrnberg Objection to this Papal Indult 58

	Column		Column
14 Pope Innocent VIII's Bull. Bull in which he permits butter and milk production. 1490	58	33. indulgence letter of Raymundus Peraldus. 1489. ...	160
15. The letter of the Elector Frederick referring to this bull. 1491	61	34. the same Raymundus two diplomas of the relics in Paris. 1502	162
16 The letter of the Elector Frederick 2c referring to the renewed bull. 1513 ...	63	35 Letter of indulgence given by the same Raymundus to Wolfgang Peilike. 1502	167
17: Pope Innocens VIII's butter letter for Freiberg Cathedral. Butterbrief for the Cathedral of Freiberg. 1491	64	36 The same Raymundus letter of indulgence for the Church of the Holy Cross in Dresden. 1502	168
18. the pope Innocens VIII. Confirmation of the above butter letter. 1492	67	37. the same Raymundus two letters of indulgence for D. von Büren and H. Grashof. 1502	170
19 Joh. von Breitenbach's expert opinion against the papal butter letters. About the beginning of 1492 70		38 Same Raymundus Letter of Freedom for Duke George's Court Chaplain. 1502	172
20 Bishop of Meissen John VI's Protestation against Indulgences. About the beginning of 1492 91		39. the same Raymundus orders and patents issued for the benefit of those who want to earn the Jubilee year. 1502.	173
21 Duke George of Saxony's order to settle the disputes over the bull permitting milk dishes. 1492	92	40 The Instruction given to Raymundus by Pope Alexander VI. 1502	187
22 The Dukes of Saxony, Albrecht and George, request to Pope Alexander VI that he put an end to the objection to the aforementioned bull	93	41. report what happened to Raymundus after his return to Italy	200
23. the letter of pope alexander VI, by which ches he drags the matter to the Roman court	96	42. excerpt from the "heavenly treasure trove" of the Indulgence preacher Joh. Paltz 1490 and 1502	201
24. pope alexander VI, by a bull, sets at-silence on the part of the parties. 1496	100	43 Summa and extract from the bull of Pope Julius II, for the protection of the Christian faith.	215
25th Pope Julius II extends the butter freedom for Chursachsen for another twenty years.	103	44 Baumhauer's letter of indulgence for Adam Leuterer. 1508	221
26 Letter of the brothers Elector Frederick and Duke John with reference to the previous Bull 1513 (See No. 16.)	105

Second Section.

The indulgences offered by Popes Julius II and Leo X for the construction of St. Peter's Church in Rome give rise to the Reformation.

D. The pope has finally dispensed and permitted everything for money, so that a formal trade has become out of it.

27 Letter of request to the Württemberg envoys in Rome, in which they ask for complete freedom and exemption from all church ordinances, church discipline 2c. 1517	105
28 Reply to the previous letter, in which Leo X grants everything requested. 1517 108
29. Three indults granted by Pope Clement VI to King John of France and his wife. 1350.
a. Permission to celebrate in places that were under interdict	109
b. Permission to choose a confessor 110 c. Permission to take vows through a confessor.	111
and oaths to change	111
30. collection of some of the most distinguished indulgences as found in the English Officiis. 1526	111
31. seven Roman jubilee calendars of the unspeakable indulgence of sins through all the months and on all the days of the year.
1. Venice 1532	115
2. Ingolstadt 1596	121
3. Vienna 1629	125
4. Constance 1603	136
5. new castle 1630	143
6. Augsburg 1630	147
7. cologne 1603	151
32 Alexander de Neronibus' plenary indulgence. 1516	158

A. The indulgences granted under Pope Julius II.

45 Cardinal Pallavicini's historical account of how Julius II was prompted by a lack of money to issue an indulgence for the further construction of St. Peter's Church.	224
46. of Timotheus de Lucă Abłaßbries for Dyttings deceased mother. 1513	224
47 Timothy de Luca's permission for Dytting to communicate wherever he wishes. 1513	226
48 Timothy de Luca's permission for Dytting to choose a confessor. 1513	226
49 Plenary Indulgence granted to the Swiss by Pope Julius II. 1511	229
50 Emperor Maximilian I forbids the imperial city of Memmingen from further paying indulgence money to the Dominicans in Augsburg. 1515	230
51. Emperor Maximilian I revokes the above mandate. 1515	231

B. The indulgences granted under Pope Leo X.

1. written out in Rome itself.
52. Leo's X. Bull of the Most Plenary Indulgence for the Construction of St. Peter's Church in Rome. 1517	232
53 The Jesuit Maimburg report shows that Leo X's true intention in this indulgence was not the building of St. Peter's Church, but the collection of a bridal treasure for his sister. 245
54. The letter of indulgence of Bartholomew Farratinus. 1515	247

Column	Column
55: Letter of indulgence and fraternity of Francis of Tripontio for the Hospital of the Holy Spirit in Saxia in Rome. 1516250	laßkram zu Markt gebracht habe. Walch, old edition, vol. XVII, 1703 ff.
56. of M. Enoch Widemann News about this Tripontinus ..254	78 Myconius' report on how Tetzel first laid out his stuff in Albrecht's bishoprics of Magdeburg and Halberstadt, and how brazenly he preached338
2. through the general commissions in other countries as well.	79. a piece of Tetzel's short instruction for the priests how they should advertise the indulgences 339
a. Joh. Angelus Arcimboldus and Christoph de Forli and their subcommissaries Tetzel and Samson.	80: Some of the contents and fragments of one of Tetzel's instructions, communicated by Chemnitz343
57 Hermann Bonni Relation, how Arcimboldus let himself be seen with his indulgence, and of its immense expense. 1516255	81 Tetzel's letter of indulgence for Matthias Menner in Krichow. 1515345
58 Emperor Maximilian's permission for Arcimbold to display his indulgences in Meissen. 1516 255	82 Heinrich Campis informs Abbot Johannes of Königsutter that the indulgence there has been cancelled by Tetzel, and asks him to take countermeasures. 1517347
59 A letter of indulgence signed by Tetzel's hand. 1516 256	83: Duke Henry the Younger of Brunswick sends a letter to the cathedral dean and chapter of Magdeburg, in which he asks for the revocation of the ban on indulgences in Königsutter. 1517348
60. memoirs, instructions and statutes of Johann Angelus Arcimboldus for his subcommissaries 2c 256	84 Letter from Abbot Johannes of Königsutter to Count Botho of Stolberg, courtier of Archbishop Albrecht, requesting the lifting of the ban on indulgences in Königsutter. 1517 349
61 An indulgence from Arcimboldus. 1517 277	85 Count Botho of Stolberg's favorable reply. 1517351
62. an indulgence by Arcimboldus under Tetzel's name for Andreas Hummelshayn. 1516 281	86 Tetzel's letter to the abbot at Königsutter, in which he allows the indulgence of Königsutter to be proclaimed. 1517352
63 Tetzel's letter of indulgence for the priest and the sexton at Schmiedeberg because of a lost host. 1516 282	87 A letter of indulgence from Tetzel, issued in Berlin. 1517 353
64 Hottinger's account of how the sub-commissary of Christopher de Forli, Bernardinus Samson, had fared in Bern in 1518283	88: A letter of indulgence from Tetzel, issued to Meckel, widowed Rodt 2c. 1517355
65. the same narrative, how Bullinger, decan to Bremgarten, which Samson resisted 284	89 A letter of indulgence issued by Tetzel to Tilemann from Köpenik. 1517357
66 A letter of indulgence from Samson. 1518 285	90 Myconius's account of how the commissary of indulgences was brought in with great honor358
67 Leo's X. Breve to the Swiss cantons, in which he indicates that he wants to have Samson recalled and, if he has gone too far, to punish him. April 30, 1519 289	91: How Tetzel, at the departure of the congregation of Zwickau, wheedled a lot of money that was used for a feast for the priests ... 359
68 Joh. Bapt. Pupp Letter to the Swiss Cantons. 1519 290	92 Tetzel makes Juvenal a saint in Zwickau and raises a lot of money by preaching about him360
69. Leo's X to Ennio, Bishop of Verulan, on The indulgence instruction issued to Switzerland. 1514 ... 291	93 A History of the Fraud Tetzel Committed with Alleged Sanctuaries361
d. Under the Archbishop of Mainz and the Franciscan Guardian of Mainz and his sub-commissioner Tetzel.	94 An almost identical history of the measuring monkey Iselinus in Swabia361
70 D. Georg Arnold Report on Albrecht of Mainz 301	95 How Tetzel is rejected by a rich woman in Magdeburg with his demand of one hundred florins for absolution362
71 Luther's verdict on Albrecht 301	96 How Tetzel is robbed of his indulgence money by a horseman to whom he had given indulgences for future sins ..362
72 Summary Instruction for the Sub-Commissioners of the Archbishop of Mainz 301	97 A similar tale from a nobleman 363
73 Myconius's account of how the guardian of the Franciscan monastery in Mainz had shifted the responsibility for indulgences away from himself 333	98 A strange story that happened at Annaberg with Myconius, when he wanted to get the indulgence from Tetzel for free364
74 Myconius' report on how Tetzel had offered himself to Archbishop Albrecht as a sub-commissary and had been employed by him 335	99 Hottinger's report on what happened to a cobbler's wife 369
75 Tetzel's permission, allegedly received from Pope Leo X, to grant indulgences also for himself335	100 Narrative by Mathesius about how a miner in Schneeberg thoroughly shamed an indulgence merchant370
76 Joachim I, Elector of Brandenburg, mandate to his subjects to let Tetzel proclaim indulgences freely and without hindrance. 1517 336
77. Luther's narration of the true and secret reasons why Tetzel actually had his ab-

	Column		Column
101 Myconius's report on how indulgences were made so exceedingly coarse that even emperors, kings, and princes grew tired of the indulgence fuss370		111 Two bulls given by Leo X in 1516, which contributed to the fact that a large number of people turned out for the feast of All Saints.... 385
102 The Jesuit Maimburg's Rather Sincere Report of the Outrageous Indulgences371		112 Meisner's more distant account of the great pilgrimage to Wittenberg brought about by the Bull of Indulgence .389
103 Mayer, Chancellor of the Chur-Maints, complains about the pope's money-grubbing in a letter to Cardinal Aeneas Sylvius. 1457372		113 Luther's account of the weakness and trembling with which he first attacked the cause of indulgences and only desired to investigate the truth is found in the St. Louis edition, vol.
104 List of the annals that some German bishoprics and abbeys give to Rome 374		114 Luther's letter to Albrecht, Archbishop of Mainz, in which he asks him to put a stop to the indulgences and at the same time sends along his theses. October 31, 1517 390
		115 Luther's letter to Johann Lang, with which he sends his theses, shows his joy in God and his confident courage. Nov. 11. 1517394
		116 Luther's report to Spalatin that the bishop of Brandenburg had sent the abbot of the monastery of Lehnin to him with the request to wait with the publication of the Resolutiones . End of March 1518396
		117 Luther's report to Wenc. Link on the same matter. July 10, 1518397
		118 Luther's report of how the superiors of his order had been hard on him because of the theses and had wanted to make him fainthearted. St. Louis edition, Vol. V, 1204.
		119 Luther's report to Joh. Lang that the indulgence merchants were issuing counter-theses. March 21, 1518..... 397
		120 Excerpt from the Faculty Book of the University of Greifswald, in which it is reported that a student, Joh. Knipstrow, refuted Tetzel's theses and silenced Tetzel at the disputation in Frankfurt 397.
		121 Luther's account of the burning of Tetzel's theses in Wittenberg, in which he had no part, nor was he to blame. March 21 1518397 122 A tale of how great joy I). The story tells of the great joy that Fleck expressed in the monastery at Steinlausig when he saw Luther's theses against indulgences 398.
		123) The story of how Georg von Zedlitz sent to Luther and asked him if he was the swan that Hus had prophesied about. 1518 398
		124 Luther's report on how his good friends, especially Carlstadt, did not agree with him. Feb. 15, 1518 400
		125 Luther's report of the fury of his enemies, who shout in all the pulpits that he must be burned shortly. March 21, 1518 400
		126 Luther writes to Spalatin that he is not deceived by the fact that people speak evil of him, but is convinced that his cause is from God. Jan. 14, 1519 400
		127 Luther's letter to Pope Leo X concerning his disputation on indulgences with the transmission of his resolutions. s30. May 1518Z 400
		128 Luther's letter to Hieronymus Scultetus, Bishop of Brandenburg, with which he sends him his resolutions. Probably Feb 6, 1518 405

The second chapter.

Beginning of Luther's Reformation, and papal counter-measures up to the Diet of Augsburg in 1518.

First Section.

Luther's attempts to abolish the abuse of indulgences.

A. Luther's warnings in sermons and in the confessional, and Tetzel's behavior against them.

- 105 Myconius' account of how Luther first preached against indulgences in the old, small, dilapidated church of the Augustinian monastery in Wittenberg380
- 106 Luther's own account of how he had raised several objections to indulgences in the castle church at Wittenberg, but was not well received by the Elector, in Walch's old edition, Vol. XVII, 1703 ff.
- 107 Myconius' report on how Luther had not wanted to absolve people of their letters of indulgence and how Tetzel had been enraged by this383
- 108 Mathesius's account of how modestly Luther initially opposed the sale of indulgences, while Tetzel publicly raged against Luther383

B. Luther's public stand against the abuse of indulgences in his 95 Theses. How this was received by friends and enemies.

- 109 Myconius' report of how Luther wrote to the bishops of Meissen, Frankfurt, Zeitz, Merseburg, and later also to the bishop of Mainz, urging them to control indulgences by virtue of their office, but then, when he failed to do so, put his theses into print384.
- 110 Meisner's account of the strange circumstance that on the Feast of All Saints, on the day when Luther posted his theses, a great indulgence was set aside in the castle church at Wittenberg385

	Column
129 Spalatin's praising report by Scultetus, Bishop of Brandenburg	409
130 Luther's report to Spalatin that he had had a verbal discussion with the Bishop of Brandenburg. Feb. 12, 1519	409
131 Luther's letter to his former teacher, Jodocus Trutfetter, at Erfurt, in which he seeks to appease him. 9 May 1518	410
132 Luther's letter to Johann Staupitz, with which he sends his resolutions and asks him to forward them to the pope. May 30 1518	414

C. Luther's journey to Heidelberg for the General Convention of the Augustinians and the disputation held there.

133 Luther's report to Joh. Lang that he had been advised against the trip to Heidelberg. March 21 1518	418
134 Luther's letter to Spalatin, in which he reports on the journey to Heidelberg, as far as Coburg, April 15, 1518	418
135 Luther's letter to Spalatin from Würzburg. April 19 1518	420
136 Spalatin's Report of the Godly Bishop of Würzburg, Lorenz von Brbra	421
137 Another message about this bishop	422
138 Luther's report to Spalatin, from Wittenberg, about his honorable reception at Heidelberg by Count Palatine Wolfgang. May 18 1518	422
139 Luther's report to Spalatin on the disputation in Heidelberg. May 18, 1518	422
140 Alting's report that Bucer, Brenz, Billicanus, and Schnepf came to the knowledge of the truth through the disputation at Heidelberg	423
141 The letter of Count Palatine Wolfgang, which he gave to Luthern to the Elector of Saxony. May 1, 1518	423
142 Luther's report to Spalatin on the return journey from Heidelberg. May 18, 1518	425

The second section of the second chapter.

From the counter institutions of the Roman court.

A. Pope Leo orders the new Augustinian general Gabriel Venetus to dissuade Luthern from his nobility.

143 Pope Leo's letter to Gabriel Venetus offering him the office of General of the Augustinians. January 23, 1518	424
144 Pope Leo's letter to the same, in which he orders him, since he refuses to accept the office, with reference to the owed obedience, to take up the office without delay, and to fill Luthern in an amicable way as soon as possible. February 3, 1518	426
The Pope confirms the election of Gabriel by the Augustinians in Venice. June 5, 1519	428

B. How they wanted to put Luther on trial in Rome in a short time.

1. Luther is cited before the spiritual court in Rome. Column	430
146 Luther's own report on the papal citation he received to appear in Rome within sixty days.	430
147 Luther's letter to Spalatin at Augsburg, in which he asks him, after receiving the citation, to have the Elector investigate his case in Germany. 8 Aug. 1518	430
148 Luther's letter to Spalatin at Augsburg, in which he testifies to his courage and asks the Elector to ensure that he is denied a letter of safe conduct. Aug. 21. 1518	432
149 Another testimony to his courageous courage in a letter to Staupitz. Sept. 1, 1518	434
2. Luther is released from the trip to Rome through the mediation of Chursachsen and the University of Wittenberg.	434
152 Luther's report to Johann Lang that the Elector had taken him into his special protection and would not suffer the indulgence merchants to drag him to Rome. March 21, 1518	434
151: The University of Wittenberg's letter of concession to Pope Leo X concerning Luther's citation to Rome. Sept. 25, 1518	434
152. the university of Wittenberg letter to Carl von Miltitz in the same matter. 25 Sept. 1518	436

C. About the further efforts of the papal court against Luther.

153 Emperor Maximilian I's letter to Pope Leo X concerning Luther's cause. Aug. 5, 1518	437
154 Luther's Indication of the Cause That Required Him to publish his explanations on the Theses on Indulgences, in three letters to Spalatin of Feb. 15 and Sept. 2, 1518, and Nov. 11, 1517.	439
155 Elector Frederick's very wise response to Cardinal Raphael, of the title St. OeorAii eto, letter concerning Luther's cause. July 10, 1520	440
156 Luther's report on what actually happened to the Cardinal's Raphael Intent.	441
157 Luther's account, which Aurifaber gave him according to has written.....	442
158 a. Luther's report on Cajetan's intention. Aug. 21, 1518 .. .	442
158b. The Vicar General of the Augustinian Order, Gabriel Venetus, orders Luthern to be seized and held captive, bound hand and foot. Aug. 25, 1518	442

D. How to confess Luther with poison and assassination after life.

Luther's report on this in a briefs to Link. July 10, 1518	443
160 Luther's report to Spalatin on how to make a Doctor to kill him. 16 Apr. 1520	443

Column

161 Luther's report to Spalatin that Hütten had warn against poison. Sept. 11, 1520	443
162: Narrative of how they tried to kill Luthern in 1520	444
163. a few other histories of the same kind	444

The third chapter.

From the Imperial Diet at Augsburg Anno 1518 and the Augsburg world-famous events between the papal legate Cajetan and Luther (Acta Augustana).

First Section.

About the Reichstag itself and the actions and transactions concerning religion that took place there.

Emperor Maximilian I summons the prelate of the Herrenalb church to an Imperial Diet in Augsburg scheduled for Nov. 25, 1517. Oct. 1, 1517	448
--	-----

A. The imperial estates complain to the emperor about the Roman court.

165 Complaints of the German Nation, with the Means and Counsel Against Them, to Emperor Maximilian, and the Emperor's Edict. 1510 and 1518	452
166 Erhard von der Mark, Bishop of Liège and Prince of the Roman Empire, letter to Maximilian I and the Estates assembled at Augsburg in 1518, in which he asks for the intolerable abuses of the Roman Court to be stopped	466
167 Emperor Maximilian I's order to hold the Concordats of the German Nation in the Liège Diocese. Augsburg, July 2, 1518	471

B. The papal legate's request for money for the Turkish war is completely denied.

168 Report of Achilles Pirminius Gassarus that the imperial estates did not want to tolerate either the priestly tithes or the further collection of the indulgences	473
169: Raynaldus' excerpt from a speech in which the Cardinal- Legate asked the Germans to Money to the Turkish War concerns	473
170 Answer given by the princes of the German Empire to Cardinal Cajetan and other papal legates. 1518	476

C. What edicts have been drafted on the imperial consultations and on the imperial farewell.

171 Proposals of the pope and a commission assembled in Rome to Emperor Maximilian I on how to proceed with a campaign against the Turks. 1517 and 1518	482
172. farewell of the Diet of Augsburg 1518	517

The second section of the third chapter.

From the actions at Augsburg between Cajetan, the Elector of Saxony, and Luther.

A. From the dispatch of the Cardinal to Deutschland. Column

173 Report of Raynaldus on how Cajetan was chosen as legate to Germany instead of Cardinal Farnesius.	522
174 The Instruction given to the Papal Legate, Cardinal Cajetan, for his journey to Germany, dated May 5, 1518....	523

B. What gifts Cajetan brought from the pope for the emperor and the Elector Albrecht of Mainz.

175 Jakob Manliu's story of two acts at Augsburg in 1518. Archbishop Albrecht of Mainz receives the cardinal dignity, the emperor receives his hat and sword from the pope	526
---	-----

C. From the Pabst's order to the Cardinal in Augsburg.

176 Pope Leo X's breve to Cardinal Cajetan, Legate a Latere, on how he should behave against Luther and his followers. Aug. 23, 1518	539
177 Luther's gloss on the preceding papal breve	542
179 Luther's verdict on this breve in a letter to Spalatin. Oct. 31, 1518	547

D. How the Elector of Saxony acted on Luther's behalf at Augsburg.

179: Pope Leo X's request to the Elector Frederick of Saxony that Luther be handed over to the authority of the papal see. Aug. 23, 1518	547
Luther's message to Joh. Lang about what the Elector Frederick had done to Cajetan on his behalf. Sept. 16, 1518	549
181 Report of Myconius on how the Elector had brought about Luther's cause in Germany	549
182 Handwritten letter from the Elector to Spalatin, from which it can be seen how favorably he was disposed toward Luther	550
183 Spalatin's letter of intercession for Luther's cause, addressed to the emperor's minister Hans Renner on the prince's orders. 1518	550
184 Luther's letter to Spalatin, in which he regrets the inconveniences that have befallen the Elector because of him and does not want him to be taken care of. Sept. 2, 1518	551
185 Staupitzen's letter to Spalatin, in which he asks the latter to encourage the Elector to look neither to him, nor to Luther, nor to the Augustinian Order, but only to the preservation of truth. Sept. 7, 1518	551

E. Luther leaves for Augsburg, although some good friends tried to prevent him from doing so.

186. Staupitzen's letter to Luther, in which he urges him to leave Wittenberg and come to him secretly in Salzburg. Sep. 14, 1518 553
- 187 Luther's report to Link that Johann Lang had told him that the grass Albrecht of Mansfeld had warned him in writing not to let Luther leave Wittenberg because everything was in place to kill him. July 10, 1518 553
- 188 The report of Myconius on Luther's conversation with the Provisor of the Franciscans at Weimar, Joh. Kestner, on the journey to Augsburg. End of Sept. 1518 553

F. Luther arrives in Augsburg on October 7, and reports to his friends what protection and love he had received from the Augsburg patricians.

- 189 Luther's letter to Melanchthon from Augsburg, in which he says a heart-moving farewell in view of the probability of suffering death for the truth. Oct. 11, 1518. ... 554
- 190 Luther's report to Spalatin of his arrival in Augsburg and the friendly reception he received. Oct. 10. 1518 555
- 191 Luther's further report to Spalatin that Staupitz had certainly promised to come to Augsburg 555

G. Of the cunning plot of Urban de Serralonga, a deputy of Cajetan, with Luther to Augsburg.

- 192 Luther's account in a letter to Spalatin of what kind of conversation he had with Urban de Serralonga. Oct. 10, 1518..... 556
- 193 Another Report by Luther of Urban's Second Visit and Other Conversation 556
- 194 Georg Spalatin's report thereon 557
- 195 A very harsh letter from this Urban de Serralonga to the Elector of Saxony, in which he demands that he either drive Luther out of the country or have him stoned to death. July 3, 1520 558

H. Of Luther's three interrogations by Cajetan.

1. from the first interrogation.
- 196 Spalatin's Report of Luther's First Audience with Cardinal Cajetan, 12 Oct. 1518 561
2. from the second interrogation.
- 197 Spalatin's Report of Luther's Second Audience at Cajetan, 13 Oct. 1518 564
- 198 Luther's report to Spalatin in a letter of Oct. 14, 1518, on how Cajetan had been in the third Interrogation dealt with him 565
- 199 Luther's Briefs to Carlstadt primarily about the third interrogation. 14 Oct. 1518 565
- 200 Luther's Protestation, delivered in the second audience in the presence of notaries and witnesses 568

3. of the third and last interrogation..... Column
201. Luther's report of the third audience. Oct. 14, 1518 569
- 202 D. Johann Rühel's report on the third audience. [15 Oct. 1518.] 569
- Luther's written reply to the Cardinal, handed over during the third interrogation, in which he declares Clement VI's Extravagante to be a doctrine of man. Oct. 14, 1518 571
- 204 Luther's report on how the Cardinal behaved at and after the delivery of this written declaration 585
- 205 Luther's report to Spalatin on how poorly Cajetan was versed in the Holy Scriptures, and on the poor scholarship of the papists in general 587
- 206 Myconius' account of Luther's entire interrogation by Cajetan 587

I. How the Cardinal had Staupitz deal with Luther.

- 207 Luther's report of this to Spalatin..... 588
- 208 Report of Myconius, what strange words had escaped the Cardinal, when Staupitz further demanded an audience for Luther. 588

K. How Luther asked the Cardinal for clearance, but because he could not receive it and was not allowed to proceed, he took leave of him in writing.

- 209 Luther's first letter to the Cardinal before his departure, in which he offers to remain silent if silence is also imposed on his opponents. Oct. 17, 1518 589
- 210 Luther's second letter, in which he takes leave and commemorates his appeal. Oct. 18, 1518 592

L. Of Luther's departure from Augsburg and the appeal he left behind.

- 211 Myconius' report of how Luther had left Augsburg after hearing that Cajetan had talked about having him taken prisoner 594
- 212 Luther's appeal of Cajetan's proceedings to Pope Leo X, left behind on his departure from Augsburg, dated Oct. 16, 1518 594.
- 213 An old written message from Augsburg about Luther's departure from that city 604
- 214 Luther's own message of his departure to Spalatin 604
- 215 Conrad Adelman's, Canon of Augsburg, Letter to Spalatin, dated 18 Oct. 1518 604
- 216 Luther's report to Spalatin that the notary feared to knock the appeal on the cathedral door 606
- 217 Luther's report to Spalatin that the Carmelite prior, Licentiate Joh. Frosch, would come from Augsburg to Saxony, since the Elector had promised to give him the meal at his doctoral graduation 606.

Column	Column
218 Luther reports to Spalatin the arrival of Prior Frosch, who had persuaded the notary at Augsburg to appeal to Luther, and asks that the doctor's meal be arranged. 606	after the first ones would have been picked up from the print shop 625
M. How the timid Staupitz, frightened by some threatening words of Cajetan, hurriedly departed from Augsburg without saying goodbye, among other samples of his timidity and Fickleness.	232 Luther's report on how the court saw through his fingers, or rather allowed it 625
219 Myconius' and Luther's reports on how Cardinal Cajetan had let it be known that he would have Staupitz and Link captured and sent to Rome, as well as Luther, and on their removal soon thereafter. 607	233 Luther's Thoughts from his Acta to Wenceslaus Link .. 625
220 Luther's letter to Staupitz, in which he tries to raise him up by reciting the words of encouragement that Staupitz addressed to Luther at Augsburg 607.	The third section of the third chapter.
221 Luther's somewhat sharper letter to Staupitz, in which he reproaches him not indistinctly for his fickleness and for the denial of Christ that he must worry about. 607	Of Cajetan's more distant undertakings against Luther after his departure from Augsburg.
222 Luther's letter to Staupitz indicating that Luther could not believe that the acceptance of the abbey in Salzburg was in accordance with God's will. June 27, 1522 607	A. Cajetan's publication of a new papal decree on indulgences.
223 Luther's letter to Staupitz, in which he complains about the correspondence that has been issued, presents him with the danger of denying Christ to his abbey, and considers it necessary to abandon it. Sept. 17, 1523 611	234 Pabst's Leo X new decree declaring the point of indulgences to be a proper point of faith. Nov. 9, 1518 626
N. Luther publishes the history of his trade with Cardinal Cajetan at Augsburg in print under the title	235 Luther writes to Peter Lupinus and Carlstadt about this Decretale, for whose author he considers Cardinal Cajetan 633
224 Luther's preface to the Acta Augustana. Beginning Decembers 1518 612	236a. Luther's discussion of this same Decretale at the Leipzig Disputation on July 11, 1519, at opinion expressed in the tenth thesis 634
225 Luther's relation under the title: Acts of the venerable father D. Martin Luther, Augustinian, both apostolic Lord Legate at Augsburg 613	236b. Letter from Pope Leo X to the Swiss cantons, in which he refers to this decree. 30 April 1519. See Col. 289, No. 67 in this volume 634.
226 Luther's resolution to the Acta Augustana, in which he speaks almost throughout about the power of the pope 617	B. The Cardinal's correspondence with the Elector of Saxony concerning the Augsburg events.
227 Luther's Table Talks on this Trade at Augsburg 625	237 Cardinal Cajetan's letter to the Elector of Saxony about Luther's behavior and departure from Augsburg. Oct. 25, 1518 634
O. How difficult it was initially for Luther to publish his Acta Augustana.	238 Luther's letter of responsibility to the Elector of Saxony in response to Cajetan's complaint. Nov. 19, 1518 637
228 Luther's report to Spalatin that his Acta were now being printed 625	239 Luther's report of this matter to Staupitz 654
229 Luther's report on how the Elector was not satisfied with it, but had it revoked by Spalatin 625	240 Luther's request to Spalatin to write him his verdict on the responsibility pamphlet sent to him enclosed 654
230 Luther's report that the Elector had even hinted that the printed sheets should be suppressed -- 625	241 Prince Frederick of Saxony's Reply to Cajetan. 8 Dec. 1518 654
231 Luther's respectful apology to the Elector that it was now no longer possible, nor advisable, to return the last sheets.	242 Luther testifies to Spalatin his heartfelt joy about this answer. 656
	C. How Luther was prompted by this persecution of Cajetan to appeal to a general Concilium.
	243 Luther's appeal of the proceedings of Pope Leo X against him to a general concilium. 28 Nov. 1518 656
	244 Luther's complaint about the printer who issued the printed copies of this appeal under his own hand in two letters, to W. Link and Spalatin 665
	245 Luther's report to Spalatin that he had appealed 665
	246 Luther writes to Link that, in his opinion, the matter has not yet had its beginning, let alone its end, as the papists hope 665.

D. How the Elector accepted Luther at the Imperial Court. Column

- 247 Prince Frederick of Saxony's letter to Degenhard Pfeffinger, his minister at the imperial trousers, to have Luther's case settled. Nov. 19, 1518665
The fourth chapter.

Of the negotiations about Luther's cause continued by the papal nuncio Carl von Miltitz under the direction of Cajetan, both at the electoral court and with Luther himself.

First Section.

Von Miltitzens Abfertigung am päpstlichen Hof, seiner Reise und Ankunft in Sachsen.

A. How Miltitz announced to the Elector of Saxony, as did Spalatin, the matter assigned to him by the Pope.

- 248 Carl von Miltitzen's letter to Spalatin from Rome, in which he reports that the Pope has appointed him nuncio and made him the bearer of the consecrated rose to the Elector. Sept. 10, 1518666

B. What instructions 2c. Miltitz were given.

- 249 Papal Instruction for Carl von Miltitz on the presentation of the rose to the Elector. Oct. 15, 1518668
250 Papal Breve to the Elector of Saxony, in which Luther is most disgracefully scolded. Oct. 24, 1518669
251 Papal Breve to the Chief Minister of the Elector, Degenhard Pfeffinger, to be conducive to the Papal Nuncio to the Elector. Oct. 24, 1518672
252 Papal Vice-Chancellor Julius de Medici's letter to Pfeffinger, similar content. Oct. 11, 1518673
253 Papal breve to Spalatin with the same content. Oct. 24, 1518674
254 Letter from the Cardinal de Medici to Spalatin, in which he asks him for support for Carl von Miltitz. 20 Oct. 1518 676
255 Papal breve to the Naumburg canon Donat Groß. Oct. 24, 1518677
256 Papal Breve to the Captain and the Councillors of the City of Wittenberg against Luther and for Miltitz. Oct. 24, 1518678

C. How Miltitz set out on the journey to Germany, and what he undertook on the way.

257. Luther's report to Spalatin that Miltitz was on his way, and that he was not unaware that he was bringing the golden rose for the Elector from the Pope679.

Column

- 258 Albert de Mironibu's letter to Spalatin, in which he urgently asks for information as to whether Miltitz has already arrived. Dec. 22, 1518 679
259 Luther's report of how Miltitz, on his journey, had asked everywhere what people thought of the Roman See and of Luther, and had learned that they were more on Luther's side than on the Pope's.680
260 Miltitzen's letter to Spalatin, in which he reports that he has arrived in Gera and will be with him in Altenburg tomorrow. 26 Dec. 1518681

The second section of the fourth chapter.

Of the Elector of Saxony's timidity, and how Luther should have left Wittenberg, but finally should and wanted to stay there again.

A. How the court gave Luther to understand that it would like to see him leave Wittenberg.

- 261 Bavaru's account of the hardship Luther, who had been abandoned by the whole world, had gotten into, in that the Elector not only did not like his return to Wittenberg, but also advised him to go somewhere else682.
262 Luther's report to Spalatin about how he had already decided to go to France when the papal ban arrived683.

B. The University of Wittenberg Intercession for Luther.

- 263 The University of Wittenberg interceded on Luther's behalf to the Elector when Luther wanted to leave Wittenberg. Nov. 23, 1518683

C. How Luther made arrangements to leave so as not to cause the Elector any displeasure on his account.

- 264 Luther's renewed request to the court through Spalatin whether the Elector could not appeal to the Pope for a commission in Germany686
265 Luther's declaration to Spalatin that he was quite ready to leave Wittenberg. Nov. 25. 1518686
266 Luther's frankly stated to Spalatin that he did not require the protection of secular princes and prelates686
267 Another such frank declaration by Luther686
268 Another quite exceptional testimony that Luther certainly did not want the Word of God to be protected by men 686.

D. How the court finally instructed Luther to stay in Wittenberg.

- 269 Bavaru's report on how Luther had made serious arrangements for his departure, and had also held a banquet with some friends.

Column	Column
During which he first received an order from the court to leave, and then a counter-order that he should stay. 686	281: Luther's instruction on a number of articles that were imposed on him by his patrons. Probably end of February 1519 699
270 Luther's letter to Spalatin, in which he reports that he would already be gone from Wittenberg if Spalatin's letter had not arrived, and says that he is still prepared to leave if the Elector is annoyed by his staying. Dec. 2, 1518 687	282 Luther's answer to Spalatin, from which it can be seen that his friends, especially Spalatin, had urged him to publish this work, thinking that it would make things better. .. 705
271 Luther's statement in a letter to Spalatin as to how far the rumor was true that he had already taken leave of the people in public sermons 689	283 Luther's humble letter to Pope Leo X, which he had promised Miltitz he would leave out. Probably end of February 1519 705
272 Fragment of a letter from Capito to Luther, in which he reports that there are many powerful friends in Switzerland and in the Rhineland who have already arranged for a safe stay and support for him, but who have seen from the Elector's letter to Cajetan that he no longer needs their help. February 18 1519 689	284 Luther's letter to Spalatin in which he reports that he has proposed three bishops to decide his case at Miltitzen's request. Jan. 19, 1519 708
The third section of the fourth chapter.	C. How Chursachsen, no doubt on Miltitzen's advice, wanted to apologize to the Pope in writing, but subsequently failed to do so.
Of Miltitzen's negotiations with Luther at Altenburg.	285: A Concern Drawn Up by the Electoral Council at Altenburg Concerning the Sending of a Letter from the Elector to the Pope in Luther's Matter 709
A. From the personal meeting of Miltitzen and Luther at Altenburg.	286 Draft of the princely letter to the pope, established after the above concern 710
	287. Elector Frederick of Saxony's letter to Fabian von Feilitzsch, holding his resolution to refrain from writing to the pope. 12 Jan. 1519 712
	288: Prince Frederick's letter to Carl von Miltitz, in which he apologizes for not writing to the Pope. Jan. 11, 1519 713
	Section Four of Chapter Four.
	From Miltitzen's journey via Leipzig, where he interrogates Tetzeln, to Cardinal Cajetan in Trier.
	A. How Miltitz cited Tetzeln to Altenburg immediately after his arrival in Saxony, but the latter did not appear.
273 Luther's Report of the Confidential Conversations with Miltitz at Altenburg, and How Miltitz Left Himself Out 690	289 Tetzel's letter of apology to Carl von Miltitz that he would not have come to him without risking his life. could come to Altenburg. Dec. 31, 1518 714
274 Luther's report of this to Joh. Cgranus, in which he says, among other things, that Miltitz honored him at the conference with a Judas kiss and shed tears of crocodile 690.	B. How Miltitz therefore demanded that he appear before him when he was passing through Leipzig and sharply reprimanded him for his sacrilege.
275. Luther's report of this to Staupitz, in which he calls the hypocritical tenderness of Miltitz Ita ¹ itat ⁶⁸ ^italian trick 691	290 Miltitzen's written report to the Electoral Councilor Pfeffinger on his interrogation of Tetzel in Leipzig. Jan. 22, 1519 716
276 Luther's status causae, recently drafted for Carl von Miltitz in Spalatin's house, on the causes of the Reformation movements that have arisen. About 4 or 5 Jan. 1519. 691	291 Luther's report of how Miltitz had treated Tetzeln so harshly that he died of melancholy 717
277 Miltitzen's concern, raised at the request of the Elector, as to what might be helpful in Luther's affairs with the papal see, to settle them amicably. Around Jan. 11. 1519 693	292 Luther's magnanimous compassion for Tetzel, who had become quite pusillanimous and sick over the fact that Miltitz had been so hard on him 717
278: Spalatin's counter-objection, also on the prince's orders. Around Jan. 11. 1519 695	293 The Franciscan Provincial Hermann Rabe's intercessory letter for Tetzel at Miltitz. Jan. 3, 1519 717
B. What Luther promised Miltitz in this conversation, and how he also fulfilled it, also suggested certain arbiters at Miltitz's request.
279 Luther's written report to the Elector who was staying at Lochau at the time about what he had declared against Miltitz that he was willing to do. About Jan. 5 or 6, 1519 696
280 Luther's short report to the Elector that he had united with Miltitz on two articles. About January 6 or 7, 1519 ... 698.

C. Von Miltitzen's continued journey to Augsburg and the correspondence with Chursachsen continued from there.

Column

- 294 Miltitzen's letter to Chursachsen, in which he gives good hope for Luther's cause, but asks that Luther be able to abstain from writing books until his return. Feb. 5, 1519718
- 295: Prince Frederick's response to this cry
ben. March 4, 1519719
- 296 Luther's letter of apology to the Elector that Eck's behavior made it impossible for him to remain silent. March 13 1519720

Section Five of Chapter Four.

How Luther's matter, after Miltitzen's arrival at Cafetan in Loblenz, according to the agreement made with Luther and also with Cajetan's approval, was to be settled before the Thurfürst Richard at Trier.

A. How Miltitz reminds the Elector of Trier, who is staying at Ehrenbreitstein at that time, in writing to now carry out the investigation of the matter that was assigned to him and taken over by him.

- 297 The Elector Richard of Trier responds to two letters from Miltitzen, in which he postpones Luther's interrogation until the upcoming Imperial Diet. April 2, 1519.722
- 298 A copy of the Electorate of Trier's reply to Miltitzen's first letter enclosed with the above letter, because he had not received it. Feb. 6, 1519 723

B. How Miltitz tried to make Luther trustful and lure him to Coblenz, but in vain.

- 299 Miltitz's letter to Luther, in which he tries to make him secure and exhorts him to be confident and to go to Coblenz soon, so that the settlement of the matter will not become more difficult afterwards. May 3, 1519 724
- 300 Luther's report of this to Spalatin and his thoughts about it726
301. Luther's letter to Johann Lang about this miracle726
- 302 Luther's letter of reply to Miltitz from the latter's Invitation to the Elector of Trier, in which Luther rejects it. May 17, 1519727

C . How Cajetan and Miltitz tried to persuade the Elector by empty promises that he should deliver Luthern to Coblenz, and Chursachsen's answer to this.

- 303 Cajetan's letter to Chursachsen, in which he reports that the golden rose will arrive soon, but at the same time indicates that the pope, on the other hand, is expecting something more detailed in Luther's matter. May 5, 1519729

Column

- 304 Miltitzen's letter to the Elector, in which he apologizes, as he is only waiting for some brevia from Rome and wants to come soon afterwards, but does not spare any words to induce the Elector to deliver Luthern to Trier. May 3, 1519 730

- 305 Miltitzen's letter to Spalatin, of the same content, in which he makes it even more urgent that Luther should come soon. May 3, 1519733

D. How Churtrier has finally been persuaded to bring Luthern to Ehrenbreitstein by requesting Chursachsen to do so, but which Churfürst Friedrich wisely refuses.

- 306: Richard, Elector of Trier, requests that the Elector of Saxony put Luthern on trial. May 10 1519735
- 307 The answer of Elector Frederick of Saxony to the above request, in which he reports that he did not send Luther the letter from Trier because he wanted to discuss it first with Elector Trier in Frankfurt. June 2, 1519736

E. How Miltitz, on receiving an order from Rome to deliver the golden rose to Churfachsen, refuted Luther's maturity to Coblenz, because he would come to him himself, and what Churfachsen, since this delivery was again delayed, answered Cajetan.

- 308 Miltitzen's letter to Chursachsen, in which he reports that the golden rose has arrived at Augsburg, and therefore considers it good that Luther waits until its arrival and does not travel to Coblenz. May 11, 1519737
- 309 The Elector of Saxony's answer to Cajetan, in which he mentions that the rose, which had been on its way for so long, has not yet arrived, but does not show any strong desire for it. June 8, 1519739

Section Six of Chapter Four.

About Miltitzen's return to Saxony and the final delivery of the long-promised golden rose, in which Chursachfen shows himself to be rather cold.

A. Von Miltitzens Reise zum Churfürsten zu Sachsen, und was für Ceremonien er überreichen die goldene Rose.

- 310 Cajetan's instruction to Miltitz when he wanted to travel to the Elector again740
- 311 Papal breve, which the nuncio presents at the delivery of the golden rose, in which only the virtue of the rose is dealt with. Oct. 24, 1518741
- 312 Papal Breve to the Bishop who would say Mass at the presentation of the rose, 24 Oct. 1518743

B. How Electoral Saxony did not receive this gift, which is otherwise highly respected and dedicated only to kings, personally, but only through his ministers. Column

- 313: Elector Frederick's authority, which he gave to Fabian von Feilitzsch, Haugold von Einsiedel and Günther von Büнау collectively and specifically, that they should accept the holy rose from the nuncio of Pope Leo X, Carl von Miltitz, in his stead and in his name. Sept. 16, 1519745
- 314 Luther's report to Staupitz and Lang, how Miltitz had undertaken to perform a magnificent actus with the golden rose at Wittenberg, and already boasted that D. Luther was certainly in his hands, but how he finally presented the rose at Altenburg in the absence of the Elector. 747

Section Seven of Chapter Four.

From the colloquium at Liebenwerda, which was requested in writing by Miltitz during his presence in Saxony at that time, and which was approved by both the Elector and Luther.

A. Von Miltitzens Ansuchen darum bei dem Churfürsten und Luther.

- 315 Miltizen's letter to the Elector, in which he thanks him for the 200 florins he received after the presentation of the golden rose, but asks for 200 more; then he asks for the colloquium with Luther at Liebenwerda. Sept. 26, 1519746
- 316 Miltizen's letter to Luther inviting him to the colloquium in Liebenwerda. 26 Sept. 1519749
- 317 Luther's report and thoughts on this to Staupitz750

B. Of the Elector's and Luther's willingness to do so.

- 318: Prince Frederick of Saxony writes to Spalatin that the colloquium at Liebenwerda has been approved and that this should be made known to Luther. Sept. 30, 1519 750
- Luther's letter to the Elector in which he designates October 9 as the date of the colloquium with Miltitz at Liebenwerda. Oct. 1, 1519751

C. From the colloquium held on October 9 at Liebenwerda.

- 320 Luther's report to Spalatin on the conference at Liebenwerda. Oct. 10 (?) 1519752

D. Von Miltitzens an Churtrier und Chursachsen abgestattetem, gar unlaudem Bericht von dieser Conferenz.

1. Von Miltizen's false pretense, as if Luther had promised in the Colloquium to travel with him to the Elector of Trier.

Column

- 321 Miltizen's letter to the Elector of Saxony, in which he pretends that Luther had
- 322 The prince granted him the right to travel with him to the Elector of Trier. Oct. 10, 1519..... 753

2. how Luther thoroughly answered to the Elector.

Luther's quite different report of this to Spalatin, at the same time painting Miltizen's character. 754

- 323) Elector Frederick's reply to Miltitz that Luther's report was quite different from his own, and in which he is criticized for having sent the Elector's letter, which he should have returned, to Trier. Oct. 12, 1519754

What Miltitz then further objected to Luther.

- 324 Miltizen's letter to the Elector, in which he denies that he said his commission is now finished and insists that Luther promised him to travel with him to Trier, but apologizes for sending the Elector's letter to Trier. Oct. 14, 1519755
- 325 Luther's letter to the Elector, in which he explains with regard to Miltitz's letter that it had never occurred to him to travel with Miltitz to Coblenz, and what his words and opinion had been. 15 Oct. 1519757
- 326 The Elector Frederick's answer to Miltizen's second letter, which includes Luther's explanation and assures him that the Elector has written to him that he would like to send the letter back to Elector Frederick. Oct. 17, 1519758
- 327 A letter of insinuation from the Elector of Saxony to Elector Trier, in which the letter reclaimed from Miltitz and also received back was sent enclosed. Oct. 25, 1519759

Section Eight of Chapter Four.

Von Miltizen's somewhat more serious dealings with the Church of Saxony ministers at Torgau in the matter of Luther.

A. As Miltitz reports to Chursachsen that the papal court is very unwilling about the delay and has sent him stricter orders, therefore he wants to come to the Elector in Torgau.

- 328 Miltizen's letter to the Elector of Saxony that the Abbot was very angry that nothing serious was being done in this matter and that Luther was still allowed to preach; he himself had been blackened at the Roman court and was concerned that the ban would come into effect and that the matter would be ordered to another nuncio. 8 Dec. 1519760

B. What the Elector staying at Lochau had his ministers negotiate with Miltitz.	Column
329 The Electoral Councils' concerns about what can be done Miltitzen would like to display or write again	762
330 What is to be said to Carl von Miltitz on account of our most gracious Lord, the Elector of Saxony 2c.	764
331: What is to be done with Miltitz at Torgau. (Dec. 11, 1519.)	766

Chapter Four, Section Nine.

How Miltitz stayed thereafter in Saxony until around Fastnacht 1520.

A. Von Miltitzens Correspondenz mit Chursachsen wegen des Bischofs zu Merseburg, des Fürsten Adolph von Anhalt.

332 Miltitzen's letter to Chursachsen, in which he reports that he has been to the Bishop of Mersburg; he wants to report orally on his dealings with him upon his return. 19 Jan. 1520... 768

B. Von Miltitzen's correspondence with Chursachsen concerning a life pension.

333 Miltitzen's letter to the Elector, in which he asks for 100 guilders pension, which he enjoyed in Rome, for life and tells how he made fun of the Bishop of Meissen at Stolpe, when Luther's writing against the official at Stolpe arrived there. 19 Feb 1520 769

334 The Elector's answer, in which he leaves the decision about the requested service money out of his brother's decision, and reports other news to Miltitz. Feb. 21, 1520 771

335 Miltitzen's letter to the Elector of Saxony from Augsburg, where he had traveled to see Cardinal Cajetan. He indicates that he had fallen ill at Landshut when he had wanted to go to Linz to see the Cardinal. March 20, 1519 772

The tenth section of the fourth chapter.

Von Miltitzen's efforts to prevent the publication of the book "To the Nobility of the German Nation. His presence at the Augustinian convent in Eisleben.

A. How Miltitz complains to the Elector about Luther's vehement, angry letter and asks that Luther be induced to forgive the publication of the book he has under his hands.

336 Miltitzen's letter to the Elector that Luther had done such things that serve to diminish the Roman Church, and therefore asks the Elector to prevent Luther from publishing the book he now has in his hands.

	Column
Aug. 19, 1520	774
337 The Elector's answer that he had been told that Luther had let a booklet go out and that Miltitz had been too late with his request. Aug. 23, 1520	775

B. About the Eisleben Augustinian Convent, and what has been done about Luther's cause in Miltitzen's presence, as well as with Luther himself through deputies.

338. Luther's report to Spalatin that Staupitz had been on would resign his vicariate at this convention 776

339 Miltitzen's very polite letter to Luther, which he gave to the deputies, asking him to obey the deputies. Aug. 29, 1520 776

340 Miltitzen's strange letter to Saxony, in which he relates that Luther was willing to write to the pope as an obedient son at the presentation of the deputies. Report on Eck's arrival with the bull and its danger. He disapproves of the publication of the bull and asks for money so that he can receive his patrons favorably in Rome. Oct. 3, 1520 777

341 Luther's report to Spalatin on the events at the Augustinian convent in Eisleben 781

342 Another report from Luther to Spalatin on what had been done on his account at this general chapter 781.

343 Another report from Luther to Spalatin that the Eisleben deputies had been with him. However, he no longer wanted to write to the pope after he had heard that Eck had arrived with the bull 781.

Section Eleven of Chapter Four.

About Miltitzen's last conversation with Luther at Lichtenburg in October 1520, and how far Luther had given in even then.

344, Luther's report to Spalatin that he had now (the Oct. 11) departs for Lichtenburg for another conference with Miltitz 782

345 Luther's letter to Spalatin that he had become one with Miltitz at Lichtenburg, that he wanted to write to the pope again and assure him that he never wanted to touch him personally and that all blame should be placed on Eck. 12 Oct. 1520 782

346 Luther's very humble letter to Pope Leo X, written after Miltitzen's persuasion in Lichtenburg. After Oct. 13, 1520 783

347 Letter from Wolfgang Reisenbusch to Fabian von Feilitzsch, in which he tells how the colloquium at Lichtenburg went, and apologizes for not being able to be there. Oct. 13, 1520 794

Column

- 348 Miltitzen's letter to the Elector, in which he asks him to write to the Pope, to present Luther's peacefulness, the hardness of the opponents, and Miltitzen's diligent efforts, so that the bull of excommunication will be alleviated or lifted. Oct. 14, 1520796

Section Twelve of Chapter Four.

Von Miltitzens letzter Lorrespondenz mit dem Churfürsten Friedrich.

- 349 Miltitzen's letter to the Elector, in which he reports that Luther's cause is now in a better position in Rome than was thought, and asks that the Elector write to the Pope or to a cardinal, at the same time asking for the promised pension. Aug. 10, 1521798

The fifth chapter.

Of the disputation held in Leipzig in June 1519 between Eck on the one hand, and Carlstadt and Luther on the other.

First Section.

From the next inducement to this disputation.

A. What gave rise to this in the first place, and how Eck first came into conflict with Carlstadt on account of Luther.

1. Eck broke the good friendship in which he had stood with Luther by the insidious scattering of his obelisks, under the pretext that it was done at the request of the bishop of Eichstädt, where Eck was canon.
- 350 Luther's complaint that Eck had attacked him without warning, against the law of friendship, by issuing his so-called obelisks802
2. Since Eck realized that he had been hasty in this matter and had heard that Carlstadt would have something printed against him, he apologized to him, but too late.
- 351 Carlstadt's letter to Spalatin, with which he sends his theses published against Eck.
May 14, 1518802

- 352 Eck's letter to Carlstadt, in which he apologizes for his obelisks published out of haste, and offers peace. May 28 1518804
- Carlstadt's answer to this, in which he reminds him of his immodesty against Luther and admonishes him to think better of it. June II, 1518805
- 354 Carlstadt's letter to Spalatin, with which he sends Eck's letter above along with the answer he gave. June 14, 1518 807

Column

3. of Carlstadt's against Eck published carriage figures, and what therefore happened rst.
- 355 Description of the figure of two carts published by Carlstadt, the first of which represents the right way to heaven, but the other the wrong way of the scholastic teachers and the error of free will.807
- 356: How Eck complains about these carriage images in a letter to the Elector of Saxony809
- 357: How Carlstadt answers for this figure in a letter to the Elector of Saxony809
358. as Eck replies in another letter to the Elector809

B. How Eck, according to the agreement made in Augsburg in the fall, did not want to debate with Carlstadt alone in Leipzig, which Eck had chosen, but also wanted to have Luthern there by force, and since Luthern refused in every way, demanded this by means of a printed note.

- 359 Luther's letter to Eck, in which he reports to him that Carlstadt, according to the agreement made in Augsburg, wants to debate with him in Leipzig or Erfurt, and leaves him the choice of choosing one of the two places. Nov. 15. 1518809
- 360 Luther's thoughts to Egranus and Lang about Eck's public challenge, from which it is clear that Luther should not have and did not want to dispute with Eck at all, but only with Carlstadt.810
- 361 Luther's response to Eck's edited disputation note, in the form of a letter addressed to Carlstadt. Late January or early February 1519810
362. Eck's so-called Disputation and Apology against Luther's Accusations in Response to the Open Letter to Carlstadt. March 14 1519815
- 363 "Brother Martin Luther's Disputation and Apology against the Accusations of D. Johann Eck," as Luther's response to the previous writing. May 16, 1519821
- 364 Carlstadt's sharp letter to Eck in response to Eck's two challenges and as a preface to his 17 theses for the disputation in Leipzig. April 26, 1519825

C. How Luther was urged by these and other circumstances to get involved with D. Eck, and both to answer Eck's writings by means of counter-writings and to decide on the disputation.

- 365 Luther's letter to Spalatin, in which he discovers to the latter which nets he had set up for D. Eck in his theses. After Feb. 24, 1519831.
- 366 Another letter from Luther on this matter to Spalatin. After 24 Feb. 1519835

The second section of the fifth chapter.

Of the serious preparations made by both parties for the disputation.

A. Duke George's and the University of Leipzig's partly doubtful, partly successful answer to D. Eck's and Luther's request to be allowed to debate in public. Column

367 Letter to Luther reprimanding the University of Leipzig. Feb. 19, 1519 836

368 Luther's report to Lang on how the Leipzig theologians and the bishop of Merseburg had tried to prevent the disputation from taking place 839

369 Luther's Report to Spalatin and Lang of Duke George's Doubtful and Rejecting Answer 839

B. Of the permission given by Duke George himself and subsequently also by the University of Leipzig to allow the disputation to take place.

Excerpt from a very emphatic letter of Duke George to the bishop of Merseburg, Prince Adolph of Anhalt, who was the chancellor of the University of Leipzig, and who strongly opposed the disputation, that he should not prevent the disputation any longer.... 839

371 Letter from the Bishop of Merseburg to the theologians of Leipzig, in which he informs them that the disputation can now no longer be prevented, and promises to see to it that it is not detrimental to the university. Jan. 31, 1519 .. 841

372 Eck's letter to Luther, in which he informs him of the permission given by Duke George and the university for the disputation and invites him once again to Leipzig. Feb. 19, 1519 842

373 Luther's thoughts about this disputation, which is now to proceed, opened to Joh. Lang 844

374 Luther's report to Lang about what Tetzel is supposed to have said when he heard that the Leipzig disputation was to take place 844

375 Letter from Mosellanus to Erasmus, in which he informs him of the upcoming disputation. Jan. 6, 1519 844

The third section of the fifth chapter.

From the doctrinal act of the Leipzig Disputation itself.

A. From the public speech given at the beginning of the same.

376 Speech of Petrus Mosellanus delivered at the castle in the name of Duke George at the opening of the disputation: Von der rechten Weise zu disputiren, besonders in theologischen Sachen. June 27, 1519 844

B. Of the actual actus of the disputation that took place. Column

377. The acts transcribed under the disputation itself and published soon after with a preface. Issued probably in December 1519 859

a. The first disputation of Eck and Carlstadt.

June 27 1519 860

b. The disputation of Eck and Luther. 4. To July 14, 1519 904

c. The second disputation of Eck and Carlstadt. July 14 and 15, 1519 1101

378 The sermon preached by Luther on St. Peter's and St. Paul's Day, June 29, 1519, at the castle in Leipzig. St. Louis Edition, Vol. XI, 2306.

C. From the final speech given after the end of the disputation.

379 The final speech of M. Joh. Lange von Lemberg, in which at the same time various historical circumstances of this disputation are recounted. July 15, 1519 1130

D. From the various historical descriptions of this disputation.

1. what Luther himself wrote and told about it.

380 Luther's letter to Spalatin on the Resolutiones Lutherianae super propositionibus suis Lipsiae disputatis, in which he tells him in detail about the whole business of the disputation and shows what kind of adversary he had to deal with, what was actually argued about, and what outcome the disputation had achieved. Aug. 15, 1519 1142

381 Luther's detailed report to Spalatin of the Leipzig disputation, and complaint about the hostile behavior of the Leipzigers against the Wittenbergers. July 20, 1519 1162

382 Luther's report to Spalatin on Eck's expurgatio, which is directed against Luther's preface to the explanation of the 13th thesis 1170.

383 Luther's letter to Johann Eck about Eck's purification writing (expurgatio). At the beginning of November 1519 1170

384 Luther's report of this to Spalatin together with the transmission of this answer in 1184.

385 Luther's declaration against Spalatin that he did not want to engage in any further correspondence with Eck after the disputation and, if possible, did not want to have anything to do with him 1184.

2. how the friends of truth and Luther's have described this disputation.

386: Nicolaus von Amsdorf's letter to Spalatin about the disputation in Leipzig. Aug. 1, 1519 1184

387 Spalatin's Relation of the Disputation to Leipzig 1187

388: Myconius' account of it in 1188

389 Des Johann Aurifaber Historie von der zu Leipzig Anno 1519 held Disputation, to Spalatin allegedly written in July 1519, in fact after 1555 1189

Column	Column
390 Letter of Petrus Mosellanus from the Leipzig Disputation to the famous Willibald Pirckheimer. Aug. 3, 15191191	403 Luther's letter to Lang, from which it is clear that the theologians at Erfurt did not want to pass judgment on the religious controversy, and Luther says that they acted very wisely if they did not get involved1259
391: Petrus Mosellanus' other description of this disputation in a letter to Julius von Pflug. December 6, 1519 1194	404 Another letter of Luther to Lang, of the content: he would have heard that the people of Erfurt had given a verdict against him for Eck, and assured that if this were the case, he would expose their inequity and ignorance to all the world 1259.
392 The Leipzig Colloquium, described by M. Sebastian Fröschel, who himself heard it1204
393 Another worth reading description of this colloquium by the Electoral Saxon Chancellor D. Pfeifer 1208
394. Melanchthon's report of this in a letter to Oecolampad. July 21, 15191217
3. what news of this disputation has come to light on the papal side.
395. Eck's report of this in a letter to Jakob Hoogstraten (Hochstraten) of July 24, 15191224	B. Of Melanchthon's and Eck's dispute that arose over this and the writings exchanged with each other on it.
A letter from Eck to two Ingolstadt professors of law, Georg Hauen and Franz Burckardt, in which he described this disputation. July 1, 15191227	405 Melanchthon's letter to Oecolampadius from the Leipzig Disputation in 1260
397 To Wolfgang Fabricius Capito, Doctor of Theology and Preacher at Basel, of Johannes Cellarius of Gnostopolis (Kunstadt), Professor of Hebrew at Leipzig, writing of the true and orderly course of the theological disputation at Leipzig. July 31, 15191232	406 Eck's protective writing against what Phil. Melanchthon, the Wittenberg language teacher, because of the Leipzig disputation. July 25, 1519 1260
398 The discussions and answers of the Wittenberg doctors in the public disputation at Leipzig, who will be able to do little against Eck's thunderbolts, and of their hopeful arrival and their humble departure. By Joh. Rubeus. 13 Aug. 15191239	407 Philipp Melanchthon's defense against Johann Eck, Professor of Theology. Perhaps still in July 1519 1266
399 Luther's complaints about the so-called "new booklet of the laudable disputation, held publicly before princes and lords, before the high and the low, in the valuable, highly-prized city of Leipzig", which Joh. Rubeus had written in German rhymes, in a letter to Lang1259.	408 Oecolampadius, to whom Melanchthon had addressed the above-mentioned letter (No. 405), published soon after: "Antwort der ungelehrten lutherischen Domherren an Johann Eck. December 15191275
400. Luther's of it to Spalatin opened thoughts1259	409 Luther's report to Spalatin, how Oecolampadius had written to Melanchthon that he had done the previous writing, and how Eck had complained that this writing had hurt him most of all1284.
401. the same report to Spalatin that Eck had these rhymes reprinted at Augsburg at his expense1259	410 Georg Spalatin's Collectanea of Eck1284
	C. How Eck blackened Luther in the worst way with the bishop of Brandenburg, so that he was quite violently incensed against Luther.
	411 Luther's report to Spalatin on how the bishop not only believed Eck's lies without investigation, but even spread them further 1285
	412 Luther's report of this to Staupitz, in which he states how the bishop had said that he would not lay his head gently until he had thrown Luther into the fire, as he had thrown the stick, which he, saying this, had thrown into the fire in 1286.
	D. How Eck sued Luthern in writing before the Elector Frederick of Saxony.
	413: Eck's letter to Elector Frederick of Saxony from the disputation in Leipzig. July 22 1519 1286
	414 The Elector's short answer to this. July 24 1519 1289
	E. Of Carlstadt's and Luther's joint responsibility sent in on the Elector's order and communicated Eck's accusation, and what Eck replied against it.
	415: D. Carlstadt's provisional letter of responsibility sent to the Elector of Saxony in response to D. Eck's accusation. July 31, 15191290

Section Four of Chapter Five.

From what has been done on this disputation.

- A. How the Acta of the Leipzig Disputation were sent to the theological faculties of Paris, Erfurt, Cologne and Leuven in order to obtain their opinions about it.
- 402: How D. Eck has Hoogstraten request the Parisians to take over and accelerate the assessment1258

Column	Column
416 Both Wittenberg theologians, D. Andreas Carlstadt and Martin Luther, detailed letter of responsibility to the Elector Frederick of Saxony, because of D. Eck's accusation. Aug. 18, 1519 1291	425 Letter to Luther from Johann Frobenius, printer at Basel, in which he informs him of the strong outflow of his writings to France, Spain, Italy, Brabant and England, and at the same time encloses the favorable judgment of the Cardinal of Sion in the Wallifer Land about him and the then still future disputation with Eck. 14 Feb. 1519 1374
417 Carlstadt's and Luther's accompanying letter to the Elector of Saxony. Aug. 18, 1519. 1306	426: The letter of Joh. Botzheim (Abstemius), Doctor and Canonikus at Costnitz, to Luther, in which he testifies how he enjoys his writings so much that he is glad to live at a time when the light of pure divine truth has shone brightly again. March 3, 1520. 1376
418 Luther's private responsibility against Eck in a letter to Spalatin, in which he especially answers the point, since Eck had falsely pretended in his defamatory letter that Carlstadt and Luther had suggested Leipzig or Erfurt to him as the place of the disputation, since Wittenberg had been suggested to him first, which, however, was not up to him. 1307	427 In this letter, Caspar Hedio commemorates Luther's teachings with special praise. June 23 1520 1377
419: Eck's response to Carlstadt's and Luther's letter to the Elector of Saxony. Nov. 8, 1519 1308
F. The condemnation of Luther's writings by the theologians at Cologne and Louvain.	The sixth chapter.
420. action of the university of Leuven against Luther. 1520 1331	The first part of the book is a description of the papal excommunication and its consequences under the newly elected Emperor Carl, despite all of Luther's humble ideas, by D. Eck, who had ripened after Rome.
421 The doctrinal condemnation of Luther's books by some magistri nostri at Louvain and Cologne with Luther's response to it.	First Section.
a. The condemnation of the teachings of Brother Martin Luther by the theological faculty of Cologne. August 30, 1519 1338	Luther's very humble request to Emperor Carl not to let him be condemned unheard, and other complaints about the accusations of his enemies.
d. The theological faculty of Louvain's doctrinal condemnation of Martin Luther's teachings. Nov. 7, 1519 1340
c. Letter of Adrian, Cardinal of Tortosa, to the theological faculty of Louvain, in which he approves of their preservation. Dec. 4. 1519 1345	A. From Luther's petition to the Emperor Carl.
d. Martin Luther's answer to the articles which the Magistri nostri of Louvain and Cologne extracted from his writings and condemned as heretical. March 26, 1520 1346	428 Luther's letter to Emperor Carl V, in which he writes nothing against the pope, but only asks that he not be condemned unheard. Aug. 30, 1520 1378
G. The Hussites in Bohemia and other lovers of the truth corresponded with Luther around this time. The letters of the former are congratulatory letters because of his disputation.	B. Luther's letter to the bishops of Mainz and Merseburg and their response.
422: Johann Poduschka, pastor of the main church of B. Virginis ante latam curiam in Prague, sends a letter of congratulations, consolation and encouragement to Luther, assuring him of his and the Hussites' prayers. July 16, 1519 1370	429 Luther's letter to Prince Albrecht, Archbishop of Mainz, telling him not to believe his detractors. 4.lebr.
423: Wenceslaus Rosdalowsky, provost of the Kaiser-Carls-Collegium at Prague, writes to Luther, in which he also congratulates him on the disputation held with Eck, and at the same time sends a book by John Hus. July 17 1519 1373	430: Answer to Luther's letter from the Elector of Mainz. Feb. 26, 1520. 1385
424 Luther's report to Staupitz of the above two letters, as well as of some others from France, in which Erasmus' thoughts about Luther and Eck are communicated 1374.	431 Luther's letter to the Bishop of Merseburg, Adolph. Feb. 4, 1520 1388
	432 Answer from the Bishop of Merseburg. 25 Feb. 1520 1391
	C. From Luther's printed protestation and public offer of inheritance.
	433 Luther's Protestation and Erbietten, in which he testifies that he has knowingly written and taught nothing but divine truth, is an obedient son of the Christian church, and will willingly remain silent if he can before his adversaries. Printed end of August 1520 1392
	434 Handwritten draft of the above inheritance. August 1520 1396

The second section of the sixth chapter.

Like D. Eck, after taking bad honor from the Leipzig disputation, set out and traveled to Rome.

A. Of Eck's earlier, though futile, attempt to burn Luther's books.

435 Luther's report of this to Spalatin in 1398

B. About D. Eck's journey to Rome and his trial there against Luther.

436: Eck's letter about his legation and action in Rome against Luther. Rome, May 3, 1520 1398

437 Luther's thoughts about this in a letter to Johann Lang 1401

C. About the correspondence of Valentin Teutleben with Chursachsen, which was conducted during Eck's stay in Rome and was quite dangerous for Luther, and what the Pope himself, as well as the Cardinal, had to say St. Georgii to Chursachsen has written.

438: Elector Frederick of Saxony's answer to Valentin Teutleben, dispatched to Rome, how he had not supported Luther at all up to now, and how he had let him answer for his teachings himself; how he would have liked to see Luther leave his lands long ago, and how Luther would have wanted to do this if Miltitz had not been against it. Sept. 1. 1520 1401

439 Pope Leo X's letter to Elector Frederick of Saxony, in which he flatters him and requests that he either make Luther recant or imprison him. He reports that he had a congregation of cardinals investigate Luther's abominable teachings and condemns them in a bull, of which he sends a copy. July 8, 1520 1406

440 Luther's answer to Spalatin after he had received the letters from Teutleben and Cardinal St. Georgii. July 9, 1520 1408

441 Luther's Report to Spalatin of the Answer to be Written to Cardinal St. Crucis 1411

Section Three of Chapter Six.

About Eck's return from Rome; about the papal bull of excommunication against Luther that he brought with him and the difficulties that occurred during its publication, as well as about Luther's appeal to a concilium.

A. What Luther did after he learned of Eck's arrival.

442 Luther's report to Spalatin of Eck's arrival and the bull he had brought with him, in which he had

Column

He despises the same and promises to examine this Eckische Bulle 1410.
443 Luther's writing "On the New Cornerstones Cops and lies". Mid October 1520 1411

B. Of the Papal Bull of Condemnation itself, and how Luther and his friends examined and thoroughly answered it.

444: Pope Leo's X. Bull against Luther from June 15, 1520. With Ulrich von Hutten's preface, glosses and postscript. Beginning of 1521 1425 445. excerpt from Ulrich von Hütten's letter to the Elector Frederick of Saxony, concerning the papal bull 1459

446 Luther's writing "against the bull of the end-christs". Beginning of November 1520 1460

447 Luther's Report to Spalatin of this Writing against the papal bull 1475

448: Luther's "Grund und Ursach aller Articles so unlawfully condemned by the Roman Bull". Issued March 1 1521 1476

449 Luther's report to Spalatin on the above writing in ... 1565.

450 Protective Scripture of Christ our Lord for D. M. Luther, to the city of Rome 1565

451. letter from an unnamed man to Spalatin, concerning the Apologia Christi pro Luthero; likewise some collectanea from Rome and the Roman popes 2c. to be advanced to Aleander 1567.

C. About the publication of the papal bull by Eck and the great difficulties that occurred.

1. what difficulties Eck has found.

a. At the publication in Leipzig.

452 Excerpt from a letter from Carl von Miltitz to the Elector, dated Oct. 3. 1520, in which he gives news of Eck's arrival in Leipzig, of his loud threats, and how badly he had been received by the students 1570

453 Luther's report of this to Spalatin, in which, according to his Christian mind, he does not wish Eck to perish, but that his attempts be thwarted 1571

454 Luther's report to Wenceslaus Link that the bull at Leipzig had been sullied with excrement and torn, as well as at Torgau and Döbeln in 1571.

455 Luther's identical report to Spalatin in 1571

b. In the publication at Wittenberg and in the lands of the Elector and Duke Johann.

456 D. Joh. Eck's letter to the University of Wittenberg, with which he delivers to it the papal bull brought from Rome. Oct. 3. 1520 1571

457 The Elector Frederick of Saxony's response to the report submitted by the then Rector of the University of Wittenberg, "sent" by the latter. Nov. 18, 1520 1573

	Column
458 Veit von Warbeck's letter of reply to the Elector Prince John Frederick of Saxony, in which he asks him not to let Luther move away from Wittenberg, but to protect him. Oct. 22, 1520	1573	d. at the publication in Erfurt. Column
459 D. Joh. Eck's letter to Duke John of Saxony, with which he sends a copy of the bull and a copy of the papal breve to Chursachsen. Oct. 6, 1520....	1575	472. Luther's report to Spalatin, how both the University of Erfurt and the Bishop of Bamberg did not admit the bull. The students of Erfurt, however, besieged Eck with armed hands, tore up the bull and threw it into the water
460 The learned council of Wittenberg wrote a reply to Duke John about the bull "sent" by Eck, in which they advised him to delay the reply and the publication of the bull. Oct. 23, 1520	1577	1592.
461 Letter from Hans von Taubenheim to von Einsiedel and other electoral advisors, in which he reports that he does not intend to allow the Bishop of Brandenburg to display the bull in Wittenberg. 14 Jan. 1521	1578	473. of Jerome von Endorf, imperial Raths, concerns about Eck's bull addressed to Mr. Siegmund von Dietrichstein. Jan. 11, 1521
		1592
		474. of the lord Siegmund von Dietrichstein cry The Prince of Saxony receives a letter with which he sends Endorf's objection and reports that he will see to it that it is read to the Emperor. Feb. 28 1521
		1598
		2. where the bull has been published without difficulty.
		a. With the bishop of Eichstädt.
		475 A mandate issued by the Bishop of Eichstädt, Gabriel von Eib, at Eck's request, concerning the publication of the papal bull. 24 Oct. 1520
		1598
		b. With the Bishop of Freisingen.
462 D. Joh. Eck's letter to the official at Zeitz, D. Schmidberg, that he should publicize the bull in the Naumburg diocese. Oct. 1, 1520	1579	476 Bishop Philip of Naumburg and Freising's mandate to publicize the bull and to proceed against Luther's writings. The 10 Jan. 1521
463 Letter from the governor and the bishop's councilors at Zeitz to the electoral governors and councilors, in which they request information as to whether they should publicize the bull. 20 Oct. 1520	1581	1600
464 The Electoral Council's answer to the above letter: that in the absence of the Elector, they wish to seek advice from the learned councilors in Wittenberg. Oct. 22, 1520	1582
465 Letter from the Electoral Governor and Councilors to the University of Wittenberg, in which they ask for advice on the publication of the Bull in Naumburg and Zeitz. Oct. 22, 1520	1583	D. How Luther appealed from the bull of excommunication to a general concilium, and what therefore happened at the council in Wittenberg and between the princely ministers and the learned councilors.
466 Answer to the above letter from the University of Wittenberg. 26 Oct. 1520	1584	477 Luther's report to Spalatin on the intention, to renew its appeal
467 The bishop's councilors at Zeitz write another letter to the electoral councilors, in which they again ask for advice. Nov. 5, 1520	1586	1602
468 The Electoral Councils wrote a letter to the Councils of Zeitz in which they reported that they knew nothing more about the fact that Luther had appealed the bull and intended to write against it; Melanchthon would give their representative thorough information about this. Nov. 15, 1520	1587	478 "Luther's Appeal from the Pope Leo and his unjust sacrilege to a free Christian concilium", on Nov. 17, 1520, which is to be seen as a renewal of the appeal made on Nov. 28, 1518
469 The Electoral Councils wrote to Melanchthon, asking him to help the person sent from Zeitz obtain a copy of Luther's appeal against Eck and the papal bull. Nov. 15, 1520	1588	1602
470 The Electoral Councils' reply to the Zeitz Collegiate Councils to their letter of Nov. 5, 1520, before Nov. 15,	1588.	479. Des Raths zu Wittenberg Bericht an die chur-princely governors and councilors that Luther had asked him to attach to his appeal. Request for advice for their behavior. Nov 5 1520
471 Letter from Nicolaus Hausmann to Nicolaus Tilomannus, Vicarius at Zeitz, concerning the obedience to be rendered to the bishops. July 31, 1521	1590	1608
		480: Letter from the Electoral Councilors to the learned councilors at Wittenberg, in which they request an expert opinion on the previous letter
		1609

Section Four of Chapter Six.

From the action of the two papal nuncios, Caraccioli and Aleander, who came from Rome at the same time as Eck, with Chursachsen to Cologne, against Luther. 1520.

A. Of the two nuncios' legitimation with the Elector of Saxony.

481 Leo's X. Creditiv for Marinus Caraccioli to Chursachsen. Dated Rome, June 6, 1520 1610 482. Leo's X. Creditiv for Jerome Aleander and Joh. Eck. July 17, 1520

1610

B. The same action. Request and demand to the Elector. Column

483. Short account of the action at Cologne between the papal envoys Caraccioli and Aleander and Elector Frederick of Saxony, concerning Luther. November 15201612

Section Five of Chapter Six.

About the burning of Luther's books.

A. How Luther's books were burned in three places.

- 484 Luther's report to Staupitz on how his books were burned in Louvain, Cologne and Mainz, but in Mainz with great danger to the burners in 1616.
- 485 Luther's judgment of his books in a letter to Spalatin, from which it can be seen that he does not care much about their demise, and instead, as living books, desires righteous preachers of the Holy Scriptures 1616.

B. How Luther, after the adversaries had burned his writings, publicly burned the Papal Bull and the Decretals together with Emser's and Eck's books at Wittenberg.

- 486 Brief History of How the Antichristic Decretals of D. Martin Luther Were Burned. 10 Dec. 1520 1616
487. D. M. Luther's writing: "Why the Pope's and his disciples' books are burned by D. M. Luther" 2c. Decemder 1520 1619

Section Six of Chapter Six.

How the German nobility, especially in Franconia, offered Luther protection and security.

A. Of the protection offered by the German nobility to Luther.

- 488 Aurifaber's report on how the nobility embraced Luther 1630
- 489 Letter from Silvester von Schaumburg to Luther, requesting him to come to him for his safety, with the promise that he would raise a hundred of the nobility and protect him through their assistance until the matter was settled. June 11, 1520 1631
- 490th Letter from Ulrich von Hütten to Luther, in which he exhorts him to steadfastness and caution against secret persecution, and also offers his assistance. June 4, 1520 1633
- 491 Two letters from Ulrich von Hütten dated 20 Jan. and 28 Feb. 1520 to Melancthon, in which he asks the same to report to Luther that Sickingen is ready to take him into protection 1635

Column

- 492 Franz von Sickingen's letter to Luther, in which he offers to show him support and favor according to his ability. Nov 3 1520 1636

B. How Luther behaved against this offer.

- 493 Luther's sending of the Schaumburg letter (No. 489) to Spalatin 1637
- 494 Luther's Report of this Offer to Spalatin..... 1637
495. Luther's report of it to Wenceslaus Link in 1637.
- 496 Luther's writing "To the Christian Nobility" 2c. St. Louis ed. vol. X, 266.
- 497 Luther's report to Link on the publication of this work, in which he says that it is directed against the pope and exposes all the ungodly arts and violence of the papists, and will therefore cause much anger in Rome 1638.
- 498 Luther's letter to Lang about the writing "To the Christian Nobility. He mentions that the writing does not displease the court. 18 Aug. 1520 1638

C. The first part of the book is a description of the German nobility's bitterness against the Roman See, and of Kronberg's correspondence with Luther.

- 499 Ulrich von Hutten's letter to Jodocus Jonas concerning the papists' enterprise against the Protestants and John Crotus. April 17 1521 1639
- 500: Hermann Busch's letter to Hütten about the mockery of the papists about Hutten's threats and their rage because of Luther's and Hutten's writings during the Diet of Worms. May 5, 1521 1640
- 501 Luther's report to Spalatin that he had received letters from Hütten stating his zeal against the pope, who would have followed him with dagger and poison 1642.
- 502 Luther's thoughts on Hutten's vehemence opened to Spalatin 1643
503. tzartmuths von Kronberg Christian exhortation to the four mendicant orders. The 25 Jan. 1522 1643
- 504 Hartmuth of Kronberg's letter to Pope LeoX. 1521 ... 1646
505. tzartmuths von Kronberg letter to the inhabitants of Kronberg. 1522 1652
- 506 Hartmuth von Kronberg's letter to Jakob Kobel zu Oppenheim. March 6, 1522 1660
507. "A missive, comforting to all those who suffer persecution because of the Word of God, written by D. Luther to Hartmuth von Kronberg." Mid-March 1522 1662
- 508 Hartmuth of Kronberg's Response to Luther's Missive. April 14, 1522 1672
- 509 Hartmuth of Kronberg appointment 1678
- 510 Hartmuth of Kronberg's warning against the false prophets to the inhabitants of the city of Frankfurt. March 16, 1522 1681
- 511 Hartmuth von Kronberg's letter to D. P. Meyer, pastor at Frankfurt, in which he gives him

	Column
sharply points out that he oppresses Luther's teaching.
June 9 1522	1683
512 D. Meyer's reply to the above letter. June 11, 1522 ...	1684
513 Kronberg's second, sharper letter to D. Meyer. 14 June 1522	1685
514 D. Meyer's complaint about Kronberg to the Frankfurt City Council. June 17, 1522	1688
515 Ulrich von Hutten's complaint about Meyer to the Frankfurt City Council. April 1, 1522	1689
516. letter of requisition from Churmainz to the council of Frankfurt to hand over their preacher, tzartmann Jbach, Luther's follower. The March 11 1522	1691
517: Some neighboring noblemen, friends of Kronberg, complain about the actions of the Frankfurt City Council against tzartmann Jbach. March 13, 1522	1692

The seventh chapter.

From Luther's standing before the emperor at the Diet of Worms, his Declaration of Eight, and Patmos, to his return to Wittenberg.

First Section.

The Emperor's correspondence with Electoral Saxony about bringing Luther to the Diet in Worms.

A. How Chursachsen had the imperial ministers request the emperor not to take any action against Luther before he was heard, and what the ministers did and answered the Elector.

518 The imperial ministers' letter to Chursachsen, in which they report that the emperor, like them, found it advisable for the Elector to bring Luthern with him to Worms. Nov. 27, 1520	1694
519 Chursachsen's letter to the imperial ministers that their letter had arrived, but not the imperial one they had mentioned. 14 Dec. 1520	1696

B. Of the Emperor's own handwritten letter to Chursachsen, in which he demands that Luther be brought to Worms with him, and what Chursachsen argued against this, and also wrote to the imperial ministers.

520 Carl V wrote to Chursachsen that the Elector should take Luther with him to Worms, where he was to be interrogated by learned men; in the meantime, Luther was not to write anything further against the Pope. Nov. 28. 1520	1697
521 Answer of the Elector of Saxony to the Emperor, in which he states important reasons why it would not be advisable to bring Luther to Worms. Dec. 20, 1520	1698

	Column
522 Chursachsen's other letter to the imperial ministers, in which the arrival of the imperial letter is reported and Luther's cause is again recommended to them. 20 Dec. 1520 1700

C. How the emperor changed his mind and indicated to Chursachsen that Luther should stay at home, and what Chursachsen answered to this.

523 Carl V wrote to the Elector that he should leave Luthern at home if he did not want to recant before his departure, and that if he did recant, he should not take him further than Frankfurt or its environs, because he was under the Pope's ban. Dec. 17, 1520	1702
524: Prince Frederick's reply to the above letter. 28 Dec. 1520	1704
525 Luther's report of these things to Staupitz and Link ..	1705

Chapter Seven, Section Two.

How the pope sought to thwart the emperor's sincere intention in Luther's cause by repeatedly banning him, but how the papal envoys at Worms sought to thwart the emperor's sincere intention in Luther's cause.

A. Of the new Papal Bull of Condemnation against Luther, which confirms the previous one.

526 Pope Leo's X. Condemnation and Banishment bulle against Luther. Jan. 4, 1521	1704
--	------

B. What the Papal Nuncio Aleander did at Worms against Luther at the Imperial Diet.

527 Luther's report to Wenceslaus Link before his journey to Worms, how the papal legate Aleander had let himself be heard. End of January or beginning of February 1521	1710
528: Excerpt from Aleander's long speech against Luther before the imperial estates. February 13 1521	1711
529: The Electoral Council's concerns about the bull of Eugenius IV, which Aleander referred to in his speech. Feb. 14. 1521	1714
Luther's report to Lang. March 6, 1521: Aleander is working in Worms to have an imperial edict issued against him, but so far in vain.	1716
531 Luther's report to Staupitz, Feb. 9. 1521, of the many evil but futile attempts against him at Worms.....	1716

C. Of the plans put forward for the settlement of the religious disputes at Worms, even before Luther's arrival in Worms.

532: An Anonymous Proposal to Prince Frederick that the Emperor, together with the Kings of England and Hungary, should elect arbiters over Luther's books, with whose pronouncement both the Pope and Luther would have to be satisfied	1716.
--	-------

	Column
533: The Dominican prior Johann Faber Rathschlag, given to the Elector of Saxony at the Diet of Worms in	1722.
534 Another concern raised shortly before this Imperial Diet and given to the Elector of Mainz. Nov. 2, 1520	1723

Section Three of Chapter Seven.

How the cunning plots of the papists harmed them themselves, since the imperial order, which they carried out, to hand over Luther's books to the authorities in all places and to force him to recant, not only caused the imperial estates to force the emperor to summon Luther personally to Worms and to interrogate him, but also to bring forward a large number of complaints against the Roman See to the emperor.

A. Of the demand made in writing by the emperor through Chursachsen, on the petition of the papists, that Luther recant, and how steadfastly Luther declares himself against it.

535 Luther's answer to Spalatin, who transmitted the imperial order to him: that if it were only a matter of recantation, he would not go to Worms, since he could also recant at Wittenberg; but if the emperor required him to be killed there, he would appear, so that God's word would not be in danger. March 19, 1521....	1724
536 Luther's letter to Elector Frederick concerning the revocation of several articles. (This letter does not belong to the Diet of Worms, but to the negotiations with Miltitz, and refers to No. 277 in this volume). On or after 19 Jan. 1519...	1726
537 Luther's report to Wenceslaus Link, how the Elector wrote to him, that he, Luther, could well notice, the papists have not yet got the thing where they would like it	1729

B. Council of the Estates on how to proceed with Luther.

538: Advice of the Estates on how and in what form to proceed with Luther. Approximately March 2, 1521	1729
--	------

C. What complaints the imperial estates have brought before the Emperor against the Roman See.

539 The complaints of the Roman Empire and especially of the German nation, which were brought before the Emperor in 1521 at the Diet of Worms against the Roman See and the clergy	1730
---	------

	Column
540. nine articles by an unnamed person, in Latin, for the benefit of the German nation, because of the complaints against the Roman court, written in	1779.

Section Four of Chapter Seven.

From the imperial citation to Luther to come to Worms in person under free, secure, imperial as well as electoral and princely escort, the papists had used all cunning to prevent Luther's personal appearance before the emperor, which was inconvenient to them; whereupon Luther also confidently began his journey.

A. What guile the papists used with the Saxons, that the Elector should demand Luther to Worms only for his person, but Frederick the Wise was too clever for them.

541 A note sent by the imperial ministers to the Saxon ministers, requesting that Prince Frederick summon Luthern to Worms on imperial escort only for himself,	1784.
542 The draft of the Elector's answer made by the Saxon councillors, in which the wise gentleman rejects the above request with concise reasons of proof, and incidentally, if the Emperor and the imperial estates wanted to demand that Luther come to Worms, he would be willing to lead him to Worms under safe conduct	1785

B. Of Luther's Citation and Free Imperial, Electoral and Princely Escort.

543 Emperor Carl V's citation to D. Martin Luther to appear at the Imperial Diet at Worms. March 6, 1521	1786
544. imperial escort letter for I). Martin Luther of March 6, 1521, and insinuated by the herald to Luther at Wittenberg on March 26, 1521	1787
545. escort letter of Elector Frederick and Duke John of Saxony, dated Worms, March 12, 1521	1789
546. escort letter of Duke George of Saxony for Luther. 8 March 1521	1790
547. escort letter of landgrave Philipp zu Hessen for Luther's return journey. April 26, 1521	1791

C. About the papal Bulla coenae domini published around this time, in which Luther was once again condemned as an arch-heretic, and by which the pope wanted to deter the emperor and the princes once again from having anything to do with Luther as an exile.

548. Leo's X. Bulla coenae domini against Luther and others. Rome, Maundy Thursday, March 28, 1521	1792
--	------

Column	Column
549 Luther's sharp writing about this bull under the title: "Bulla coenae domini, das ist, die Bulla vom Abendfressen des allerheiligsten Herrn, des Pabsts, verdeutscht durch v. M. Luther" 2c. 1522 1792	561 Luther's further account of how the papal legate Caraccioli had urged at Worms that he should be burned, but Cochläus had offered to dispute with him if he would give up his escort 1839
D. Luther's journey to Worms, what he encountered on the way, and the cunning plots of the Archbishop of Mainz, with which he, along with other papists, wanted to hold out Luther beyond the set time of his safe conduct.	562 Ulrich von Hütten's letter to Marinus Earaccioli asking him to leave Germany because of his shameful deeds 1840
550 Luther's report of the attempts made by the Archbishop of Mainz to send him away on the way and to prevent him from coming to Worms, or at least not within the set time of the escort in 1824.	563: Some rhymes written on Joh. Cochläus at Worms ... 1844
551 Report of Myconius on the sermon Luther preached in Gotha on the way to Worms, also on the illness that affected him in Eisenach; also on his heroism 1826	C. Ulrich von Hütten's encouragement to Luther and letter to Emperor Carl and the clergy assembled at Worms.
Luther's sermon delivered at Erfurt on April 7. St. Louis edition, vol. XII, 1386.	564 Two beautiful letters of encouragement from Hutten to Luther. a. From Ebernburg April 17, 1521 1845 b. From Ebernburg the 20th of April 1521 1846
Luther's letter to Spalatin that he had been ill on the way, but that he hoped to arrive in Worms with God's help. Apr. 14, 1521 1827	565 Ulrich von Hütten's letter to Emperor Carl V, in which he emphatically presents to him the oppressions of Germany by the pope and the clergy, and urges him not to let himself be so taken in by them, but especially by Luther. To give ear. April 1, 1521 1848
554 Spalatin's Relation of Luther's Journey to Worms 1828	566 Ulrich von Hütten's letter to the clergy assembled at Worms, in which he reproaches them with great frankness for their enmity against the evangelical truth and their vicious life and exhorts them to reform 1858
555 Luther's Narrative of His Confident Answer to Spalatin 1828	D. What high chiefs and other distinguished persons of rank and deputies were at the Diet of Worms.
556 The Litany of the Germans, made around that time, which is still well papal, but nevertheless well set up for and in Luther's cause. Between March 6 and April 16, 1521 1829	567 Directory of the Princes, Bishops, Lords, Counts and Embassies who attended the Imperial Diet in Worms 1872
Section Five of Chapter Seven.	E. Von Luthers Stehen und Verhör vor dem Kaiser und der Reichsversammlung.
Of Luther's arrival in Worms and his interrogation before the emperor and the imperial assembly, also of the attempts by the papists to force Luther's safe conduct, indeed, for the Bringing life.	1. from the first audience.
A. From Luther's arrival and public entry into Worms.	568 Luther's Report of the Official of Trier, Johann von Eck, Addressing Him in the Imperial Assembly and Luther's Reply 1877
557 Letter from Veit Warbeck to Duke John of Saxony concerning Luther's arrival in Worms. April 16, 1521 1836	569. Spalatin's Report of the First Audience..... 1878
558 Spalatin's Narrative of Luther's Arrival in Worms in ... 1838	2. from the second audience.
559. Luther's own report of it 1838	570 Luther's Narrative of the Second Audience, the^abermal Address of the Official of Trier to Him, and His Reply 1879.
B. The discussion of the papists immediately after Luther's arrival, whether he should be given safe conduct, and their efforts with the emperor and other cunning attempts to get him to do so.	571 Spalatin's report of this second audience in 1880
560 Luther's Report that the Emperor's Most Privy Councillors Had Gave Him Advice to Put Luther Away, and What the Emperor Had Answered 1838	F. What the Emperor, at the instigation of the papists, communicates to the imperial estates as his resolution in Luther's matter after this public interrogation.
	572 Emperor Carl V's handwritten rescript to the princes and estates of the empire, in which he announces his resolution against Luther and his doctrines, and calls upon them to follow him in this. 19 Apr. 1521 1880

G. Of a renewed interrogation of Luther before some princes, who, after having asked for an extension of his leave, made another attempt for themselves to bring Luther to recant, but in vain. Column

573: Luther's account of the interrogation before some princes, of the conference with the deputies from Trier, and of the last private audience with the Elector at Trier..... 1882

Section Six of Chapter Seven.

Of Luther's fearless and confident courage before and at the Diet of Worms, how fervently and devoutly he prayed there, and how God again publicly honored this faithful confessor who had given Him glory by confessing the truth.

A. Of Luther's undaunted courage and devout prayer.

574 Luther's answer to Spalatin, since the Elector had asked him whether he would go to Worms if the Emperor ordered him to appear there. Dec. 21, 1520 1884

Luther's letter to the Elector Frederick of Saxony, in which he offers to go to Worms under safe escort at the Emperor's command. Jan. 25, 1521 1887

576 Luther's earnest prayer, which he made at the Diet of Worms. St. Louis Edition Vol. X, 1420.

B. What honor Luther received at Worms.

577 Spalatin's account of how Luther received such great or greater honor than one of the princes, but how Elector Frederick marveled at Luther's great courage 1890

578 Luther's Report of the Visit of the Landgrave of Hesse and His Conversation with Him in 1891

Section Seven of Chapter Seven.

About Luther's dismissal from Worms and his return journey under imperial escort and what happened on the way.

A. Of Luther's farewell, which the emperor had issued through two deputies.

579 Spalatin's report, how Luther had predicted his departure from Worms, and the emperor had given him his farewell through two deputies, the Trier official D. Johann Eck and the secretary Maximilian Transsilvanus, with the order to travel home within 21 days, but henceforth not to preach, teach and write, and what Luther had answered 1892

B. Of Luther's letters sent back to the emperor and the imperial estates at the dispatch of the imperial herald accompanying him. Column

580 Luther's letter to Emperor Carl V, sent back from Friedberg after his departure from Worms, in which he first repeats everything that happened at Worms recently, then gives concise reasons why God's Word does not submit to human judgment, furthermore thanks him for his humble escort, and finally asks the emperor not to let him be oppressed, suffer violence, and be condemned by his opponents. April 28 1521 1893

581 Luther's letter to the Electors and Estates from Friedberg, with the same content. April 28, 1521 1899

C. Luther's sermons on the way back from Worms at the request of good friends, although against the imperial order, and the students' tumult against the clergy in Erfurt.

582 Luther's report to Spalatin, how he had preached publicly on the return journey, when, at Hersfeld, at the request of the abbot, who did him immense honor, although he reminded the abbot that he could easily lose his abbey by doing so; also at Eisenach, although the pastor protested against it before a notary and witnesses 1905

583 Luther's report in the same letter of how the students in Erfurt stormed the houses of some priests at night out of displeasure that the dean of the Severistift had publicly led M. Draco away from the choir because he, along with others, had gone out to meet Luther on his arrival in Erfurt. 1906

584 A piece of a letter from Luther to Melanchthon in which he testifies to his serious displeasure with it. Around the middle of May 1521 1906

Section Eight of Chapter Seven.

About the harsh Edict of Worms, which was only drafted by the papists after Luther, like many electors and princes, had left, and was published to the great displeasure of many imperial estates, by which Luther was declared outlawed.

A. From the outgoing sharp edict itself.

585 Emperor Carl V's Edict against Luther's Books and Doctrine, His Followers, Abstainers and Successors 2c. Worms, May 8, 1521 1906

586 Emperor Carl V's order to the University of Vienna in the same year to burn Luther's books. Nov. 25, 1521 ... 1907

B. About the displeasure and displeasure that some great people have testified about this sharpness used against Luther. Column

- 587: Knight Johann von Rechenberg, Silesian Oberamtsdirector, wrote to the Elector of Saxony, inquiring whether such a decree had been made at Worms with the unanimous consent of the Estates. Aug. 31, 1521 1909
- 588 Prince Frederick of Saxony's answer that he had left Worms due to indisposition before the decisions on all matters concerning the empire had been made. 5 Sept. 1521 1911
- 589 Luther's report on this edict to Melanchthon, in which he also reports that Hartmuth von Kronberg had resigned his lucrative service to the emperor, 1911
590. Luther's instruction to the confessors about his forbidden books is found in the St. Louis edition, Vol. XIX, 808.

Chapter Seven, Section Nine.

Of the writings in which the actions at the Diet of Worms were described.

- 591 Luther's summary report to Count Albrecht zu Mansfeld of the action taken with him at Worms. May 3, 1521. . 1912
- 592 Detailed description of Luther's action before the emperor and the estates at the Diet of Worms 1521 1916
- 593 Luther's letter to Lucas Cranach about his interrogation in Worms and the forthcoming the capture. 28 Apr. 1521 1935
- 594a. Ulrich von Hutten's letter to Wilibald Pirckheimer, in which he tells what happened to Luther at Worms. May 1, 1521 1937
- 594b. extract from one of Hutten's pamphlets. April 1521 1939

Section Ten of Chapter Seven.

From Luther's Patmos or how the Elector of Saxony had Luther picked up on his return journey from Worms and brought to safety at Wartburg Castle, and what happened to Luther there.

A. How it happened with his suspension on the way and the removal to the Wartburg.

595. des Mathesius report of Luther's abolition 1940
- 596 Luther's own report of this to Spalatin 1941
- 597 Luther's statement against Melanchthon that he went to Wartburg more out of obedience to the authorities than of his own will 1941

Column

598. Luther's report of it to Amsdorf and Gerbet 1941
599. Another report to Johann Agricola, in to which he says that he is a strange prisoner who likes to sit there because God wants it that way, but with reluctance because he would like to publicly defend God's word 1941

B. About Luther's physical condition, about the very good treatment he had at the Wartburg, but also about his very painful illness.

- 600 Luther's report to Spalatin about how his host provides for him so abundantly that he may have gotten such a body ache from it that he has no rest at night; however, he thanks God for the cross that was laid on him and Spalatin for the medicine that was sent to him. 1942
- 601 A report from Luther to Melanchthon, in which he says that he is too well kept in food and drink, while he was used to living badly in the monastery, and therefore cannot pray and study properly, nor is he spared from various temptations of the flesh. If this does not change soon, he will ask doctors for advice. 1942

C. About Luther's state of mind, since he not only found the idle way of life burdensome, but Satan also attacked him with temptations.

- 602 Luther's Report of his State of Mind to Melanchthon 1942
- 603 Luther's report to Gerbel and Spalatin of the many temptations of Satan, which he in his loneliness 1942

D. What Luther dealt with in his Patmos, especially his translation of the Bible, which he started there and continued later.

- 604 Luther's report to Spalatin that he spends his time reading the Bible in the basic languages and what he intends to write 1943
- 605 Luther sends the explanation of the 68th Psalm, written in solitude, to Melanchthon with the request to share it with good friends and, if possible, to have it printed 1943.
- 606 Luther reports to John Lang that he is willing to translate the New Testament, and because he has heard that Lang is also dealing with it, he exhorts him to continue 1943
- 607 Luther's report to Spalatin that he had translated the entire New Testament in his Patmos and was now going through it with Melanchthon, for which he requested Spalatin's assistance; he was expecting the promised gems and would send them back again 1943
- 608 Luther's letter to Amsdorf concerning this translation and that of the Old Testament 1943
- 609 Luther informs Amsdorf that he and Duke John are the only ones who have the

	Column
	sheets coming from the press one by one, reporting that ten thousand sheets were printed daily on three presses 1943 610 Luther's other report to Spalatin and Wenceslaus Link of his work on the Old Testament in 1944. 611 Luther's request to Spalatin to provide him with the actual names of the birds of prey, the wild and creeping animals, in order to be able to use them in the translation of the books of Moses 1944
E. How Luther cared for the University of Wittenberg and its preservation in pure teaching and in a flourishing state during his Absence.
612 Luther's admonition to the Wittenberg professors not to follow the advice of the court, since they did not want to print his writings or have them disputed 1944 613 Luther testified to his displeasure that his Wittenberg colleagues had been forbidden by the court from disputing confession. that papal law is still taught at Wittenberg, and expresses the wish that the princes would take it into their hearts to abolish the jurisdiction and censures of the pope in their lands 1944 614 Luther's request to Spalatin that Melanchthon sometimes preach a German sermon to the common people in Wittenberg, who had a great desire for the preaching of the Gospel. 1944 615. Luther's declaration to the Wittenbergers, like He is very happy that Wittenberg is flourishing in his absence, and he exhorts them to send messengers to other places as well, and to use their abundance to help others' lack; he himself is ready to go to another place, where God may call him; in Wittenberg he can be well relieved 1945
F. How Luther's whereabouts finally came to light, which Divine Providence so cleverly did, because it was soon time for this Elijah to emerge again anyway.
616: Mathesius reports how Luther sometimes walked to the nearest monasteries and visited his friends, but was not recognized, except once in Reinhardsbrunn. His secret visit to Wittenberg in 1945 617 Luther's own account of his secret visit to Wittenberg in 1947 618 Luther tells Spalatin that Amsdorf has written to him that a scribe of Duke John has reported to a woman in Torgau that Luther is at the Wartburg, and now the talk is almost everywhere 1947 619 Another report to the same that Duke John now knows his whereabouts, since his host at Wartburg Castle has discovered the same to him 1947

The eighth chapter.

Of the good and bad changes that occurred during Luther's stay in his Patmos, especially in Wittenberg and Saxony, and Luther's return to Wittenberg caused by the latter. Of all events between Carlstadt and Luther, up to Carlstadt's complete escape and departure from Saxony and the subsequent transition to the Swiss.

First section.

What good changes have taken place in Wittenberg and Saxony in the meantime.

A. Of the case of the mass and the monastic vows. Column

1. how the Augustinians, at the chapter held in Wittenberg at the beginning of 1522, abolished the private or corner masses by joint resolution and declared monastic life free.
- 620 Luther's writing on the abuse of the mass. St. Louis ed. vol. XIX, 1068.
- 621 Luther's earnest reminder to Spalatin not to withhold and suppress this writing of the mass sent to him, as well as that of monastic vows and against Mainz, out of court politics, otherwise his spirit would become very bitter and irritated to write much more vehemently, because he definitely wanted his things to be printed. St. Louis edition, vol. XIX, 560.
- 622 The resolutions of the Augustinian Chapter held in Wittenberg at the beginning of 1522, in which they abolished the mass in the fourth article 1948
- 623 Johann Aurifaber's report on what changes the Augustinians in Wittenberg made in monastic life during Luther's absence, how they dropped the corner masses and began to distribute the Lord's Supper in both forms; also about the commission ordered to investigate the matter of Chursachsen in 1949.
2. of the commission ordered by the Elector to investigate the beginning of the Augustinians, which again deputized some from the university for this purpose.
- 624 Report and Concerns of the Deputies Ordered by Electoral Command to Investigate the Hearings of the Augustinians and Their Opinion of the Private Mass to Elector Frederick 1952
- 3) What instructions the Elector of Saxony has given to D. Beyer and what he has answered in turn.
625. of the Elector of Saxony hereupon to D. Christian Beyer, who at that time was Professor and mayor of Wittenberg, but later became chancellor at court, issued instructions and orders to the above deputies	1957

	Column
626 The Wittenberg Deputies' Answer to the concerns expressed to them by D. Beyer opened to them churfürstliche concern, concerning the fair	1959
 B. Of the reemergence of the marriage of priests, and Archbishop Albrecht's zeal against it; nevertheless, others have followed, and the monks have begun to leave the monasteries.
1. by Bartholomäus Bernhardt of Feldkirch, as the first priest in the papacy, who made the beginning to enter into marriage.
627 Luther's thoughts opened against Melanchthon on the marriage of the provost at Kemberg, and report that several had already followed in it [Aug. 1, 1521]	1965
628 Luther's Congratulations to Gerbel for Preferring Marriage to the Unmarried Life	1965
2. How Feldkirch, after Elector Albrecht of Mainz requested that the married priest be held responsible in Halle, defended himself against the Elector of Saxony as well as against everyone because of his marital status.
629: Feldkirch's defense of his marriage. 1521	1966
630 Feldkirch's petition to the Cburfürst Friedrich, in which he defends his marital status with concise reasons based on divine and secular rights. 1521	1973
3. the subsequent abandonment of the monasteries, which Luther, through his book of monastic vows, partly caused and partly approved of, but by no means approved of the abuses that occurred.
631 Luther's report to Spalatin on Nov. 11. 1521 how he was now willing to attack the monastic vows and deliver the young people from the hell of the celibate state	1975
632 Luther's complaint to John Lang that many monks leave the monasteries for the sake of carnal freedom	1975
633 Luther's complaint against Spalatin about this	1975

The second section of Chapter Eight.

What evil changes occurred in Luther's absence, and of the return of Luther to Wittenberg.

A. Of the so-called new prophets, who had meanwhile begun in Zwickau and had also come to Wittenberg.

	Column
1. from the Wittenberg report on this matter to the Elector, and how he behaved.
634 Melanchthon's report to the Elector Frederick about the arrival of three men of the so-called new prophets from Zwickau and about their actions and nature, from which it can be seen that they had greatly blinded Melanchthon. 27 Dec. 1521....	1976
635 Spalatin's account of how Chursachsen had spoken out in the matter of the new prophets	1977
2. from Luther's correspondence with Melanchthon and Spalatin, the new prophets half.
636 Luther's letter to Melanchthon from Jan. 13, 1522, in which he indicates how these spirits should be tested, and at the same time aptly asserts the infant baptism rejected by them.....	1978
637 Luther's reminder to Spalatin that he should work to prevent the Elector from staining his hands with the blood of the Zwickau prophets	1978
3. How Luther met with the new prophets after his return from Patmos, and soon discovered what children of the Spirit they were.
638 Luther's report of this to Lang, in which he asserts, among other things, that he apparently encountered Satan among them.....	1978
639 Luther's report to Spalatin, how Nicolaus Storch, one of the new prophets, who did not attend the above meeting, had come to him in soldier's clothing, along with two others, and what he had given	1978
 B. Of the Carlstadt riots, which mainly forced Luther to return to Wittenberg.
1. as Luther already complained in his Patmos about Carlstadt's disagreement in doctrine, but still tolerated him in order not to give the opponents any trouble.
640 Luther's distress, shown in his Patmos against Amsdorf, over Carlstadt's contrary doctrinal opinions, stating that although he could easily be resisted, it would give the opponents an opportunity to boast as if the Wittenbergers themselves were at odds with one another, to the great annoyance of the weak in	1979.
2. Luther's decision to return to Wittenberg.
641 Short Summarium of the First Five of the "Eight Sermons against D. Carlstadt's Innovations in Wittenberg," March 9-16, 1522, 1979.
642 Luther writes to Spalatin that he hears worse things every day, and that it is necessary for him to return to Wittenberg as soon as possible; the Elector should not be concerned about him in	1983.

Section Three of Chapter Eight.

Of Luther's departure from his Patmos, his Second Coming, and his public appearance in Wittenberg.

A. How Luther announced his return to the court, but the Elector did not want to allow it. Column

- 643 Luther's letter to the Elector of Saxony, in which he congratulates him on God's visitation of him with this cross (the riots in Wittenberg); he should not be frightened by it, but praise and thank God; but he wants to be present soon. End of February 1522 1984
- 644: Instruction of Elector Frederick for Johann Oswald, bailiff in Eisenach, to request Luther not to go to Wittenberg at all, because the pope and the emperor could easily demand his extradition. End of February 1522 1985

B. How Luther nevertheless set out and on the way freely announced his return to the court, and what means the Elector took to put himself out of suspicion and blame with the Emperor and the Imperial Regiment because of Luther's return to Wittenberg.

- 645 Luther's letter from Borna to the Elector, written with unheard-of frankness. March 5, 1522. ... 1989
646. instruction of the Elector for D. H. Schürf to Luther: that he should write a letter to the Elector, stating his reasons for having gone back to Wittenberg and testifying that this had happened without the knowledge of the Elector, and that the letter should be written in such a way that the Elector could communicate it to several gentlemen. March 7, 1522 1994
- 647 D. Schurf's reply and report thereon. March 9 1522 .. 1995
- 648 Luther's letter to the Elector, drawn up at the Elector's request. The 7 Mä^ 1522 1998
- 649th Postscript to this letter 2001
- 650: The Elector's second rescript to Schürf: There is something in Luther's letter that needs to be changed, which he has Spalatin indicate to him; he should persuade Luther to do so. March 11 1522 2002
- 651 Luther's letter to Spalatin, that the change that has taken place is not at all dear to him, but he wants to give way to the Elector's weak faith. He reports that Carlstadt is making it difficult to give in, but that Christ will force him to do so. March 13, 1522 2003

Column

- 652 Luther's previous letter to the Elector was moderated and amended by Spalatin at his command. March 12, 1522 2005
- 653 Schurf's report to the Elector, when Luther's changed form was sent, about how there was immense joy in Wittenberg over Luther's return and sermons, and how the people were already beginning to recognize the truth again. March 1522 2008
- 654: Prince Frederick of Saxony's letter to Duke John of Luther's return to Wittenberg with an enclosed copy of Luther's letter of apology and the request to have another copy taken and sent to von Planitz in Nuremberg so that he can show it at the Imperial Diet. [March 16, 1522.
- 655: Instruction of the Elector to Planitz enclosed at the same time concerning Luther's letter of apology. March 16, 1522 2010
- C. How Luther, immediately after his arrival in Wittenberg, earnestly resisted the innovations of Zwilling, Carlstadt, and other mischiefs.
656. The "eight sermons against Carlstadt's innovations" delivered by Luther after his return to Wittenberg, March 9-16. St. Louis edition, vol. XX, 5 ff.
- 657 Luther's writing "Von beider Gestalt des Sacraments zu nehmen und anderer Neuerung. St. Louis edition, vol. XX, 62.
- D. How Luther announces his return to good friends, as well as his opinion of what he thinks of Carlstadt's actions, and how he enrages him greatly by his opposition; also that he is in great danger as someone who is still under ban and imperial power.
658. Luther's writing to Nicolaus Hausmann, in which he exhorts him to stand firm against the new prophets, gives news of the evil that has broken out in Wittenberg, and indicates that he dares to control it only by means of the Word. March 17 1522 2011
- 659 Luther's letter to Gerbet in Strasbourg, in which he reports that he had to plunge himself into the midst of the emperor's and the pope's wrath because of the ruin that had been wrought in his sheepfold by his return to Wittenberg, but that he surrenders to the will of God. March 18, 1522 2013
- 660: Luther's report to Wenceslaus Link, the same Contents. March 19 1522 2015
- 661 Luther apologizes to Joh. Lang that he cannot come to Erfurt; there is no need to tempt God; he already has enough danger in Wittenberg, since he is under the spell of the Pope and the Emperor..... 2015
- 662 Luther writes to D. Joh. Heß his opinion about the unrest and innovations that have taken place. March 25, 1522 2015

	Column
663 Luther's report to Caspar Güttel that he had offended Carlstadt by rescinding his orders, and indicates what Carlstadt's errors were. March 30, 1522	2016
 Section Four of Chapter Eight.
Of Gabriel Zwilling's conversion and improvement, as well as of the hope for Carlstadt's improvement, which soon turned around.
 A. Zwilling's conversion, recovery and fate, and how Luther faithfully took care of him with the Elector, but in vain.
664 Luther's Opinion on Zwilling's Change and Improvement in a Letter to Spalatin	2018
665 Luther's letter of recommendation for Zwilling to the mayor and council of Altenburg for a preacher's position. April 17, 1522	2018
666 Luther's letter to Zwilling that he should accept the Altenburg profession. April 17, 1522	2019
667 Frederick for Gabriel Zwilling, he wanted to let him come to the request of the council and the congregation of Altenburg to preach there, although the lords of the rule opposed it. May 8, 1522	2020
668 Luther's other letter to the mayor and council of Altenburg, in which he testifies to his joy that Zwilling pleases them, and lives in hope that the Elector will allow the request made on his behalf to take place. May 8, 1522	2023
669 Luther sends to Spalatin the petition of Altenburg that Gabriel Zwilling be left to them, and himself adds the request that the Elector not take the same away from there and expel him	2024
670 Luther's letter of exhortation to Zwilling, He should not boast of what he will suffer and do for the word of God, but rather walk in the fear of God and despair of his ability, let Christ do everything alone; moreover, abstain from all innovations, turn his congregation away from external things and ceremonies through the word, and lead them primarily on faith and love. May 8, 1522	2024
671. Luther's letter to Zwilling, in which he admonished him to wait calmly to see whether or not he would retain his office. May 27, 1522	2025.
672 Luther's answer to Zwilling when he told him about the that he would have had to leave Altenburg, and the Elector would have put another in his place	2026
673 Luther testifies to his displeasure with Spalatin, that Zwilling had been expelled, and reports that he had received very good praise from the people of Altenburg.	2026
 B. How Luther tried to appease the angry Carlstadt in kindness and to bring him to better thoughts, which also went quite well, and seemed to have renewed the friendship with Luther, therefore Luther carried him again with great patience.
674 Luther's report to Spalatin, how he had asked Carlstadt on Easter Monday 1522 to stop writing against him, otherwise he would have to oppose him against his will, which he did not want to do because of the papists. From this, Carlstadt presumed highly that he would not consider a pen against him, although the Rector already had some printed sheets in his hands, who worked together with the Senate to have Carlstadt take the book back again	2027.
675 Luther's report to Spalatin that he had written to Carlstadt about a meeting and settlement with him. [Dec. 29, 1524.]	2027
676 Luther's report to Wenceslaus Link on the April 8, 1523, that he would come to Link's wedding along with others, but Carlstadt was not at home	2027
 C. How Carlstadt broke with Luther again in the beginning of 1524, had writings printed against him, and escaped to Orlamünde, cunningly drove out the priest there, took his office and income, and in addition sought to justify himself to the Elector by very impudent and presumptuous writings.
677 Luther's steeling of the changes and incidents with Carlstadt together with his thoughts about it	2027
678 Luther's report to Spalatin that Carlstadt, after his own fashion, had not yet ceased to make trouble, but intended to have eighteen tracts printed against him, and had already made a start on some of them.	2028
679 Luther's thoughts to Spalatin about Carlstadt's departure from Wittenberg, together with a heartfelt wish that God would not give him there in a wrong way, and an exhortation to Spalatin to still pray for him; Luther, however, is concerned that he will not desist from hastening towards his downfall	2028
 D. How Luther had to travel to Jena on the prince's orders and warn the people there against the false spirits, which offended Carlstadt and led to a disputation with Luther.
680 The so-called Acta Jenensia or Martin Reinhard's, preacher at Jena, report of the action between D. Luther and D. Carlstadt, which took place at Jena on Aug. 22, 1524; printed at the end of September	2028
681. Luther's letter to Spalatin, in which he judged about the Acta, that they are quite unfaithful

	Column
and lies and truth are mixed together. Oct. 3, 1524	2036
682 Luther's letter to Amsdorf, the same content as the previous one, reporting that Carlstadt had sent a letter to the Orlamünde, with a strange signature, and that the preacher Reinhard had received orders to leave Jena	2037.
E. How Luther traveled from Jena also to Kahla and Orlamünde, and what repulsions he encountered in both places.
683 Letter from the council and congregation of Orlamünde to Luther, in which they complain that he publicly declared them heretics and false spirits in the pulpit and ask him to come to them so that they can give him an account of their faith. Aug 16 1524	2037
684: Luther's Action with the Council and Community of Orlamünde. Aug. 24, 1524	2039
685] Mathesius' account of how Luther traveled to Kahla and preached a sermon there, and what he encountered in the process. [Aug. 23, 1524.	2044
F. How Carlstadt finally had to vacate the land by order of the Elector and Duke John, against which the intercession of Orlamünde did not help.
686 Luther's report to Spalatin on how Carlstadt, after his departure, wrote two letters to Orlamünde, one to the men, the other to the women, for the reading of which the people were called together by the bells	2045.
G. How Carlstadt then went to Strasbourg and further to Basel, and Luther, when he had warned the Strasbourg people against Carlstadt, began to publicly blaspheme through writings, and also vehemently denied the true presence of Christ in the Lord's Supper.
687 Luther's letter to Gerbet in Strasbourg to comfort him and others about the Carlstadt trades. Oct. 22, 1524	2045
688 Luther's letter of warning to the Christians of Strasbourg to beware of Carlstadt's swarms.
rei to be well provided for. ^15 Dec. 1524.^	2047
689. the Strasbourg letters and reports to Luther about Carlstadt.
a. Letter of the jurist Gerbel to Luther from Carlstadt's nobles against the Lord's Supper and baptism. Nov. 22, 1524	2053
b. The Strasbourg Lutheran preachers Capito, Zell, Hedio, Auhießer, Schwarz, Firn and Bucer letter to Luther. 23 Nov. 1524	2055
690 Carlstadt's Tractate, in which he vehemently denied the true presence of Christ in Holy Communion, and made Luther as black as possible	2065

Section Five of Chapter Eight.

Of the renewed hope for Larlstadt's change and settlement with Luther, for which the latter again offered his hand, and not only pleaded for him with Elector Frederick, but also, after his death, obtained permission from the new Elector John for him to come to Saxony again, and again made every effort to bring Carlstadt back on the right path, who, however, after a friendship that had lasted for a while, was unresponsive and remained obdurate, secretly exchanged letters with the insane spirits, and then escaped from Saxony forever.

A. What an effort Luther made while Frederick the Wise was still alive to bring Carlstadt back into the country, but the court shot this down. Column

691 Luther's report to Spalatin of Dec. 29. 1524 that he had written to Carlstadt, and hoped to have a meeting with him and make peace	2066
692. Luther's letter to Spalatin that he had been Carlstadt, and he sends this answer along, asking Spalatin to arrange for Carlstadt's safe conduct with the Elector in order to hold an interview with him. March 4, 1525	2066
693 Luther's report to Spalatin on how he liked the Elector's negative answer, which he wanted to send to Carlstadt	2067.

B. How Carlstadt after the death of Elector Frederick, fearing to be killed as a co-instigator of the peasant revolt, again sought help from Luther; he compassionately hid Carlstadt in his house for more than eight weeks, induced him to recant through printed writings, trusted him even this time, and obtained permission from Elector John for his return to Saxony.

694 Luther's letter to all Christians as a preface to Carlstadt's booklet, in which he apologizes for the riot. Probably late June or early July 1525	2068
695 Luther's preface to "Carlstadt's Declaration, How He Respects and Wants His Doctrine of the Reverend Sacrament and Others Respected. Probably still in July 1525	2071
696 Luther with Prince John for Carlstadt on Nov. 22, 1526, that he be allowed to live in Kemberg, because he could not stay in the villages around Wittenberg because of the malice of the peasants, and the provost in Kemberg could supervise him better	2073

C. Of Carlstadt's renewed inconsistency, new false tricks against Luther, stubborn insistence on his error, secret correspondence with Krautwald and Schwenkfeld against Luther and the Wittenbergers, and his secret escape from Saxony.

Column

- 697 Luther's report to Melanchthon that Carlstadt had already been absent from the place assigned to him for several weeks and was perhaps looking for his nest elsewhere, adding that he should always move there because he could not be brought back to his rightful place by any kind of good deed.....2073
- 698 Luther's report to Brenz on how Carlstadt, who until now had been carried in the fold, as it were, in the hope that he would get back on the right path, had become more and more hardened day by day, and how he still held to his opinion of the Lord's Supper.2074
- 699: "Luther's Answer and Refutation of Some Erroneous Arguments, Which D. Carlstadt Led Against Him to Defend and Preserve His False Opinion of the Holy Sacraments. End of November 1527, St. Louis edition, vol. XX, 324.
- 700 Carlstadt's letter to the Silesians Krautwald and Schwenkfeld, in which he badly criticizes Luther's great confession of the Lord's Supper, also complains about his poverty and the poor mercy of the Wittenbergers, although they see and know that he must sell everything, and also reports that he has written a booklet about Lutheran disunity and wants to write another about their (the Sacramentarians') unity. May 17 15282074
- 701 Carlstadt's letter to Chancellor Brück, in which he accuses Luther and defends his false opinion and error about the Sacrament. Aug. 12, 15282076
- 702 Luther's report to Chancellor Brück, in which he apologizes against Carlstadt's display and at the same time warns against him. Sept. 24. 15282089

Section Six of Chapter Eight.

From other, partly after Tarlstadt's evil example, arisen ravings, errors, impetuous preachers and similar annoyances, against all of which Luther bravely Resisted.

A. Of the impetuous preacher at Oelsnitz and" others who had spread erroneous teachings.

- 703 Luther's testimony of his annoyance at such preachers who cause trouble with uncouth words and manners2092
- 704 Luther expresses his displeasure against Spalatin that the Weimar court preacher

Column

- Wolfgang Stein had married an old woman for the sake of mammon, which was a disgrace to the Gospel2092
- 705 Luther's letter to the council of Oelsnitz on account of their impetuous preacher, in which he asks that the people be turned away from him and that the mob be prevented from using violence. Dec. 4, 15232092
- 706 Luther's letter to Michael von der Straßen concerning the preacher at Oelsnitz, Wolfgang Crusius, who, in very harsh words, rejected confession and absolution, as well as papal law and the Mass without Communion. 16 Oct. 1523 2094
- 707 Luther's letter to Elector John of Saxony concerning Hans Mohr, a soldier at Coburg, who had denied the presence of the body and blood of Christ in the Lord's Supper. Jan. 16, 15282095
- 708 Luther's letter to Michael von der Straßen against the rebellious preacher at Oelsnitz. Dec. 5, 15232096

B. How D. Strauß at Eisenach and Wolfgang Stein at Weimar wanted to abolish imperial and papal law and reintroduce the Mosaic laws.

- 709 Luther's objection, written at the request of Duke John Frederick on June 18, 1524, to the controversy raised by Jakob Strauss as to whether one should judge according to the laws of Moses or those of the Emperor 2097.
- 710 Duke John Frederick's Answer to Luther about this Concern 2097

The ninth chapter.

Two imperial congresses held at Nuremberg in the years 1522 to 1524, and the consequences of the latter in particular.

First Section.

Of the former Imperial Diet at Nuremberg, which began in the fall of 1522 and continued until March 6, 1523.

A. From the imperial tender of this Imperial Diet.

- 711 Emperor Carl V's invitation to the Imperial Diet in Nuremberg. Feb. 12, 15222098

B. What the Emperor has sent to the Imperial Estates and to the Pope at their request concerning the Annals.

- 712 Emperor Carl V's answer to Count Palatine Frederick, Imperial Majesty's governor, and the estates assembled at the Imperial Diet in Nuremberg, concerning the Annals. 15222101

	Column
713 Emperor Carl V writes to Pope Hadrian VI, informing him of the request of the Imperial Estates. Oct. 31. 15222102		723 The papal legate Chieregati's reply, in which he rebukes the estates, but singles out the pope immensely, insists on the execution of the Worms edict, and accuses the estates of hemming in God's cause. 7 feb 1523 2183
714 The same document in another translation2105
C. Again Pope Chursachsen tried to make fearful by sending hard brevia, but the Elector did not turn to it, but showed his displeasure about it.		E. From the Elector of Saxony, on Planitzen's advice to Luther, a reminder to moderate his violent writing.
715 Pope Hadrian VI's breve exhorting Elector Frederick to help protect the dignity of the apostolic see and the tranquil state of Christendom at the Imperial Diet in Nuremberg. 5 Oct. 15222108		724 Luther's response and offer to the Elector of Saxony's request that he refrain from harsh writing. May 29, 1523 2187
716 Pope Hadrian VI's extremely punitive breve to Elector Frederick of Saxony, in which he expresses his ingratitude to the Elector, that the Princely House of Saxony has to thank Pope Gregory V for the electorship, bitterly reviles Luther and the Elector, and exhorts the Elector to repentance and return, if he does not want to receive both swords, the papal and the imperial. 1523 2110		F. Of the futile proposals made at this Diet to settle Luther's case amicably.
717: The Elector Frederick of Saxony's response to this decree. 15232124		725 Proposal to settle Luther's case amicably that came to light in July 1523 2191
		726 The same according to Aurifaber's story 2192
D. What the pope, through his envoy to the Diet, Franciscus Chieregati, had given to the imperial estates on account of Luther for reprimands, against which they in turn handed over to him the complaints of the German nation.		G. Of the decree of the imperial regiment at Nuremberg (1522), and how Chursachsen and Luther behaved in it, also of the imperial diet of 1523.
718 Pope Hadrian VI's instruction for his legate at the Imperial Diet in Nuremberg, in which the papal confession of the miserable decay of the Church and the supreme necessity of a Reformation is especially noteworthy. 15222125		727 The imperial regiment at Nuremberg issued a resolution ordering all bishops to investigate and punish priests who have changed anything in the mass or other church customs, as well as monks who have left the church and those who have entered into matrimony. 20 Jan. 1522 2194
719 Pope Hadrian VI's Breve to the Estates of the Holy Roman Empire Assembled at Nuremberg. Nov. 25, 1522. ..2132		728 Duke George's decree against Luther that monks and priests who adhere to Luther's cause and those who receive Holy Communion in both forms are to be imprisoned, and that the students are to be recalled from the universities where the new doctrine is being taught. 10 Feb. 1522 2196
The Imperial Estates' answer to the above papal request, in which Archduke Ferdinand as governor and the Imperial Estates thank the pope for the promise that he will keep the treaties, but at the same time ask the pope to diligently reform the complaints and abuses that they have handed over in specific points, otherwise there will be no peace and harmony. Feb. 5, 15232138		729. Mandate of Duke Henry of Brunswick, the Younger, against Luther. Jan 12, 1522 2199
721: Luther's Pleasure with Spalatin over the Answer Given by the Estates of the Empire to the Papal Envoy2146		730: Count Palatine Philip, Bishop of Freising and Naumburg, Mandate against Luther. 24 feb 1522 2200
722 The secular imperial estates' gravamen, or grievances they have against the See of Rome and other ecclesiastical estates, which are handed over to the papal orator at the Imperial Diet in Nuremberg. 15232146		731 Roman Imperial Majesty's mandate in Doctor Martin Luther's matters, together with the exhortation to do so every Sunday against the Turks in the pulpit. March 6, 1523 2201
		732: The Electors Frederick and John, brothers, Dukes of Saxony, order to the von Einsiedels at Kohren concerning the imperial mandate issued at the Imperial Diet at Nuremberg in Luther's matter, as well as the exhortation to be made in the pulpit every Sunday against the Turks. May 25 15232207
		733 Luther's letter to the governor and the imperial regiment, issued "against the transporters and counterfeiters of the imperial mandate. Shortly before July II, 1523 2208

	. Column	Column
734. farewell of the Diet of Nuremberg, the May 8 1522	2215	744: The imperial edict against the Nuremberg agreement with the estates of the empire. Burgos, July 15, 1524 2268
735: The Saxon envoy, Philipp von Feilitzsch, protests against the draft of the Nuremberg Diet of 1523 regarding the printing and writing of the Gospel and the Word of God. 11 Feb. 1523	2223	745 Ebner's and Nützel's letter to Chursachsen, in which they send the Elector a copy of this mandate received through a good friend in Esslingen, along with other news. Sept. 23, 1524..... 2271
H. The Breve of Pope Hadrian VI sent from Nuremberg to the Council of Bamberg against Luther around this time, and how Luther answers for it.		746 The Elector's answer to this, in which he indicates that in the copy of the mandate sent to him by the imperial regiment, several alarming and threatening words of the Emperor have been omitted. Oct. 3, 1524. 2273
736 Pope Hadrian VI's Breve to the Council of Bamberg against M. Luther, Nov. 30. 1522, Germanized by Luther himself, with his glosses, follow-up speech and reply. 1523 ..	2223	747 "Two imperial discordant and repugnant commandments concerning Luther," with Luther's preface and postscript. After April 1524
737. Two letters from Hans von der Planitz to the Elector Frederick of Saxony, concerning the action at the Imperial Diet in Nuremberg, dated Dec. 27, 1522, and Jan. 8, 1522. 1523	2232	2274
Chapter Nine, Section Two.		Section Three of Chapter Nine.
The new Imperial Diet at Nuremberg, which was to begin on December 11, 1523, was attended by the Elector of Saxony at the beginning of December, but was not opened until January 14, 1524.		The first of these was the Regensburg Arivatconvent of the papally-minded princes, bishops and estates, which took place soon after these two imperial congresses, and the constitution drawn up there.
A. From the Campeggio's Attachment at Chursachsen.		748 The papal nuncio in Germany, Campegius, as well as King Ferdinand and most of the Catholic ecclesiastical and secular princes of the Roman Empire, issued a constitution concerning the reformation of the abuses committed by the clergy in Germany. July 7, 1524
738 Breve of Pope Clement VII to the Electorate of Saxony, Dec. 7, 1523, in which he reminds the Elector to behave as befits his house. 2236		2296
739 A somewhat more extensive breve of 15 Jan. 1524 ..2238		Section Four of Chapter Nine.
740 Letter from Campeggio to the Elector Frederick of Saxony. 29 Feb. 1524		2239
B. About the passing of this Diet, and how the making of it met with great opposition, as well as about other acts that took place at this Diet.		About the death of Pope Hadrian VI at Nuremberg between the two above-mentioned imperial congresses, after he had canonized Bishop Benno of Meissen a quarter of a year before, against which action Luther had printed a document, and what qualities this Pope had.
741. farewell of the Diet of Nuremberg, Apr. 18. 1524..... 2243		749 Pabst Hadrian VI's Bull of the Canonization of St. Benno, then Bishop of Meissen. Rome, May 31, 1523..... 2310
742: Protestation of the Electors and Princes of Saxony and of the Counts and Lords against the Imperial Decree at Nuremberg. April 20, 1524		2260
C. How enraged the emperor was by the papists' decision to leave, and by the letter of complaint and very sharp edict he sent to the estates.		750 Luther's writing "against the new idol and old devil, who is to be exalted in Meissen". Late April or early May 1524.... 2323
743 Action on the Roman Catholic religion at a convention in Regensburg by the imperial governor and several Catholic estates. July 6, 1524		2263
		751 A letter from Battus Parmensis to Hieronymus Saulius, in which Hadrian is accused not only of atrocious avarice, but also of shameful and sodomitic fornication. 13 Jan. 1524 2340
		752 Speech by Conrad Vegerius on the death of Hadrian VI in the presence of the Cardinals in Rome in 1523 2345

1522 publicirten Beschluss (siehe oben das 727. Document.), von den Bischöfen zu Merseburg und Meißen vorgenommenen Visitation in den churfürstlichen Landen.
A. About the visitation of Bishop Adolph at Merseburg, but especially about the dispute between this bishop and the parish priests at Schönbach And Book.	Column
753 Two letters from Johann Stumpf, pastor of Schönbach, to Adolph, bishop of Merseburg, dated 1522, in which he proves that it is not heresy to serve Holy Communion in two different forms, and further requests the bishop's protection against his enemies and a safe conduct.	2354
754 Answer given by the pastors of Schönbach and Buch to the castle of Colditz. After 25 Aug. 1523	2356
755 Citation of the Bishop of Merseburg to Johann Stumpf, pastor of Schönbach. 20 Jan. 1523	2357
756. act of the bishop of Merseburg with the parish priests of Schönbach and Buch.
Aug. 25, 1523	2360
B. From the visitation of the Bishop of Meissen, Johann von Schleinitz.
757 Letter of the Elector Frederick of Saxony to this bishop concerning the three parish priests of Lochau, Schmiedeberg and Düben, which the bishop wanted to have delivered, but which the Elector refuses. 1522 ..	2367
758 Bishop John of Meissen's mandate to his parish priests and clergy concerning religion. May 6, 1522	2370
759 Des M. Andreas Carlstadt, Phil. Melanchthon and Joh. Agricola application to the Bishop of Meissen for Jakob Seidler, a priest imprisoned because of his marriage and Luther's teachings. July 18, 1521.	2371
Appendix.
130 Letters of Luther. See the list of Luther's letters contained in this volume, arranged in chronological order	2374.

The documents and letters contained in this fifteenth volume, which are marked with a date, are arranged in chronological order.

1517.	No.		No.
1517 or earlier. The Archbishop of Mainz's Summary Instruction for the Indulgence Sub-Commissioners	72	May 28. Eck's letter to Carlstadt	352
Oct. 1 Maximilian I's call for an Imperial Diet in Augsburg	164	May 30 Luther's letter to Staupitz	132
Oct. 31 Luther's letter to Albrecht of Mainz	114	May 30 Luther's letter to Leo X	127
Beginning of Nov. Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 11.		June 11 Carlstadt's letter to Eck	353
Nov. 11 Luther's letter to Lang	115	June 14 Carlstadt's letter to Spalatin	354
1518.		July 2 Maximilian I's order to keep the Concordats	167
Jan. 23. Leo'sX. letter to Gabriel Venetus	143	July 10. Luther's letter to Link Annex. no. 2.
Feb. 3 Leo's X. Letter to Gabriel Venetus	144	Aug. 5 Maximilian's letter to Leo X in Luther's matter	153
Feb. 6 Luther's letter to Jerome Scultetus	128	Aug. 8 Luther's letter to Spalatin	147
Feb. 15: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 4.		Aug. 21 Luther's letter to Spalatin	148
Feb. 22: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 10.		Aug. 23. Leo's X. Breve to Cajetan on how to should behave against Luther	176
March 21: Luther's letter to Lang. Annex No. 3.		Aug. 23 Leo's X. Request to the Elector that Luther be extradited	179
March 24: Luther's letter to Egranus. Annex No. 42.		Aug. 25 Vicar General Venetus orders Luthern to be held prisoner, shackled	158b
End of March. Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 1.		Sept. 1 Luther's Letter to Staupitz. Annex No. 8.
April 15 Luther's letter to Spalatin	134	Sept. 2 Luther's Letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 9.
April 19 Luther's letter to Spalatin	135	Sept. 7 Staupitz's letter to Spalatin.	185
May 1 Count Palatine Wolfgang's letter to the Elector	141	Sept. 10. Miltitz's letter to Spalatin.	248
May 5 Instruction for Cajetan on his journey to Germany	174	Sept. 14: Staupitz's letter to Luther. Annex. No. 15b.
May 9 Luther's letter to Trutfetter	131	Sept. 16, Luther's letter to Lang. Annex. No. 15a.
May 14 Carlstadt's letter to Spalatin	351	Sept. 25 The university's letter of intercession for Luther to Leo X	151
May 18. Luther's letter to Spalatin Annex. no. 7.		Sept. 25 University letter to Carl von Miltitz	152

[illegible]

1519No	1519No
April 2 Letter from the Elector of Trier to Miltitz 297	Sept. 3. Luther's letter to Lang. Annex no. 35.
April 2 Supplement to the Elector of Trier's letter to Miltitz . 298	Sept. 16 The Elector's authority to his councilors to receive the golden rose313
April 13: Luther's letter to Lang. Annex. No. 44.	Sept. 26 Miltitz seeks from the Elector for the Colloquium on Liebenwerda after 316
April 26 Carlstadt's letter against Eck 364	Sept. 26 Miltitz invites Luthern to316
April 30 Leo's X. Breve to the Swiss Cantons 67	Sept. 30 The Elector tells Spalatin that it is approved 318
May 3 Miltitzen's letter to Luther 299	Early Oct. Luther to Spalatin. Annex No. 51.
April 3 Miltitzen's letter to Prince Frederick 304	Oct. 1 Luther's Letter to the Elector Frederick 319
April 3 Miltitzen's letter to Spalatin 306	Oct. 3. Luther's letter to Staupitz Annex no. 36.
April 5 Cajetan's letter to the Elector concerning the golden rose 303	Oct. 10(?). Luther's letter to Spalatin 320
May 10 Letter from the Elector of Trier to Chursachsen 306	Oct. 10: Miltitzen's letter to the Elector Friedrich 321
May 11 Miltitz reports the arrival of the golden rose to the Elector 308	Oct. 12: The Elector's answer to Miltitz323
May 16: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 33.	Oct. 13. Luther's letter to Spalatin. Anh.No.37.
May 16: Luther's letter to Lang. Annex No. 34.	Oct. 14 Miltitzen's reply to the Elector (to No. 323.) 324
May 16 Luther's Disputation and Apology against Eck 363	Oct. 15: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 50.
May 17 Luther's letter to Miltitz 302	Oct. 15 Luther's letter to the Elector325
June 2 Reply of Elector Frederick to	Oct. 15(?). Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 48.
Churtrier's letter (No. 306) 307	Oct. 16: Luther's letter to Lang. Annex No. 49.
June 3 Leo X confirms the election of Gabr. Venetus as Augustinian General 145	Oct. 17: The Elector's answer to Miltitz326
June 6: Luther's letter to Lang. Annex No.45.	Oct. 25: Letter from the Elector to Churtrier 327
June 8 Letter from Elector Frederick to Cajetan 309	Ans. Nov. Luther's letter to Eck about the expurgatio 383
June 27 Des Mosellanus speech at the opening of the Leipzig Disputation 376	Nov. 1: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 46.
June 27 to July 15 The Leipzig Disputation itself 377	Nov. 7: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 47.
July 1. Eck's description of the disputation for two professors in Ingolstadt 396	Nov. 7 Condemnation of Luther's teaching by the theologians at Louvain 421b
July 15: M. Joh. Lange's speech at the close of the Disputation 379	Nov. 8 Eck's reply to No. 416 419
July 16 Poduschka's letter to Luther 422	Dec. 3: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 53.
17 Rosdalowsky's Letter to Luther 423	Dec. 4 Cardinal Adrian's letter to the theologians at Louvain 421c
July 20 Luther's letter to Spalatin 381	Dec. 6 Des Mosellanus Description of the Leipzig Disputation 391
July 21 Melanchthon's report to Oecolampad on the disputation 394	Dec. 8 Miltitzen's letter to the Elector Frederick 328
July 22: Eck's letter to the Elector concerning the disputation 413	Dec. 11 Concerns about what should be done with Miltitz at Torgau 331
July 24 The Elector's answer to this 414	Dec. Oecolampad's "Reply of the Unlearned Lutheran Canons" 2c 408
July 24 Eck's report on the disputation to Hoogstraten 395
July 25 Eck's protective letter against Melanchthon 406
July 31 Joh. Cellarius describes the disputation for Capito 397
July 31 Carlstadt's letter of responsibility against the Elector against Eck 415
Perhaps still in July. Melanchthon's defense against Eck .. 407
Aug. 1. Amsdorf's letter to Spalatin about the Disputation . 386
Aug. 3 Des Mosellanus letter to Pirkheimer about the disputation 390
Aug. 13: Des Joh. Rubeus reviling description of the disputation 398
Aug. 15 Luther's letter to Spalatin 380
Aug. 18. Luther's letter to Spalatin Annex no. 54.
Aug. 18. Carlstadt's and Luther's Responsibility letter to the Elector against Eck 416
Aug. 18 Carlstadt's and Luther's cover letter to the previous 417
Aug. 30 Condemnation of Luther's teachings by the Faculty of Cologne 421a 1520.
	Jan. 19 Miltitzen's letter to Elector Frederick 332
	Jan. 20 and Feb. 20. Two letters from Hutten to Melanchthon 491
	Feb. 4 Luther's letter to the bishop of Merseburg 431
	Feb. 4 Luther's letter to the archbishop of Mainz 429
	Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 65.
	Feb. 19 Miltitzen's letter to the Elector333
	Feb. 21 The Elector's answer to Miltitz334
	Feb. 25 Bishop of Merseburg's reply to Luther (on No. 431) 432
	Feb. 26 Archbishop of Mainz's reply to Luther (on No. 429) 430
	Feb. 27: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 52.
	March 3 D. Joh. Botzheim's letter to Luther426
	March 21. Luther's letter to Lang Annex. no. 56.
	March 25: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 29.
	March 26 Luther's Response to Condemnation his teaching to lions 421d

1520	No.	1520	No.
April 16: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 12.		Nov. 3 Sickingen's letter to Luther	492
May 3 Eck's letter to Joh. Fabri	436	Nov. 4: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 27.
May 5: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 38.		Nov. 5: Letter from the Wittenberg City Council to the Electoral Councils	479
May 13: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 63.		Nov. 5: Repeated letter of the councilors at Zeitz to the electoral councilors	467
June 4 Hütten offers Luther his assistance	490	After Nov. 5, the Electoral Councils wrote to the learned Councils	480
June 6 Leo's X. Creditiv for Caraccioli to Chursachsen	481	Before Nov. 15 Answer of the Electoral Councils to the Councils at Zeitz (to No. 467)	470
June 11 Des von Schaumburg letter to Luther	489	Nov. 15 Letter from the Electoral Councilors to the councilors at Zeitz	468
June 16. Leo's X. Bull of Excommunication against Luther	444	Nov. 15 Letter from the Electoral Councilors to Melancthon	469
June 23 Hedio's letter to Luther	427	Nov. 17 Luther's appeal from the pope to a free Christian council	478
July 3 Letter from Urban of Serralonga to the Elector	195	Nov. 18: The Elector's answer to the University of Wittenberg	457
July 8 Letter of Leo X to the Elector with the Bull of Excommunication	439	Nov. 27 The imperial minister's letter to the Elector	518
July 9 Luther's letter to Spalatin	440	Nov. 28 Carl V's letter to the Elector to bring Luthern	520
July 10: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 62.		Dec. 10. brief history of how the decretals of Luther are burned	486
July 10: The Elector Frederick's reply to the Cardinal St. Georgii, Raphael	155	Dec. 14 Des Churfürsten Antwort an die kaiserlichen Minister (auf No. 518)	619
July 17 Leo's X. Creditiv for Aleander and Eck	482	Dec. 17 Carl V's letter to the Elector to leave Luther at home	523
July 20. Luther's letter to LinkAnh	No. 64.	Dec. 20 The Elector's Answer to Emperor Carl V	521
Aug. 18 Luther's letter to Lang	498	Dec. 20: The Elector's second letter to the imperial ministers	522
Aug. 19 Miltitzen's letter to the Elector	336	Dec. 21 Luther's letter to Spalatin	574
Aug. 23: The Elector's answer to this-	337	Dec. 28 Des Churfürsten Antwort auf das zweite Schreiben Karls V. (No. 523)	524
Aug. 23: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No.57.		December. Luther's writing "Why the Pope's 2c. Books are burned "	487
Aug. 29 Miltitzen's letter to Luther	339
30 Luther's letter to Carl V	428
End of August. Luther's Protestation and Inheritance 2c.....	433
Sept. 1. letter from the Elector to Val. Teutleben in Rome	438
Sept. 1. Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 39.
Oct. 1. Eck's letter to the official at Zeitz	462
Oct. 3. Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 40.
Oct. 3 Miltitzen's letter to the Elector	340
Oct. 3. An excerpt from this letter	452
Oct. 3 Eck sends the bull to the University of Wittenberg	456
Oct. 6 Eck sends the bull to Duke John of Saxony	459
Oct. 11. Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No.41.
Oct. 12. Luther's letter to Spalatin.	345
Oct. 13: Preceptor Reißbusch's letter to Fab. von Feilitzsch	347
After Oct. 13, Luther's letter to Leo X.	346
Oct. 14: Miltitzen's letter to the Elector	348
Mid-Oct. Luther's writing "von den neuen Eckischen Bullen und Lügen"	443
Oct. 20 Letter from the Bishops' Council at Zeitz to the Electoral Council	463
Oct. 22: The Electoral Council's response	464
Oct. 22: Letter from the Electoral Councils to the University in Wittenberg	465
Oct. 22 Veit Warbeck's letter to Duke Johann Friedrich	458
Oct. 23: The learned councilors at Wittenberg reply to Duke Johann.....	460
Oct. 24: The bishop of Eichstädt orders the publication of the bull.	475
Oct. 26 The University of Wittenberg's answer to the Electoral Councils	466
Beginning of Nov. Luther's writing "against the bull of the end Christian"	446
Nov. 2 A reservation given to the Elector of Mainz before the Diet of Worms	534

1521.

Jan. 4 Leo X's new bull of condemnation and banishment against Luther	526
Jan. 10. The bishop of Naumburg enjoins the Publication of the bull Ecks	476
Jan. 11. des Hier, from Endorf concerns about Eck's bull to Dietrichstein.....	473
Jan. 14 Letter from Hans von Taubenheim to the Electoral Council	461
Jan. 14: Luther's letter to Staupitz. Annex No. 20.
Jan. 14: Luther's letter to Link. Annex No. 66.
Jan. 16: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 65.
Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 58.
Jan. 25: Luther's letter to Prince Frederick.	575
End of Jan. or Ans. Feb. Luther's letter to Link	527
Feb. 9: Luther's letter to Staupitz. Annex No.21.
13. excerpt from Aleander's speech to the imperial estates at Worms	528
Feb. 14 The princely scholars' concerns about this	529
Feb. 28 Dietrichstein sends No. 473 to the Elector Friedrich	474
March 1 Luther's writing: "Grund und Ursach aller Artikel" 2c. ..	448
About March 2: Advice of the Estates on how to proceed with Luther	538
March 6 Carl V's citation to Worms for Luther	543

1521	No.	1521	No.
March 6 Carl V's escort letter to Worms for Luther	544	Without date. Des Joh. Faber Rathschlag für Churfürst Friedrich	533
March 6. Luther to Spalatin. Annex No. 59.		No date. Hutten's letter to the clergy assembled at Worms	566
March 6: Luther's letter to Lang. Annex No. 67.		No date. Complaints of the German Nation against the Roman See at Worms	539
Between Mar. 6 and Apr. 16 Litany of the Germans	556	Undated. Nine articles by an unnamed person about these complaints	540
March 7: Luther's letter to Link. Annex No. 60.		Without date. Detailed description of Luther's action at Worms	592
March 7: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 61.		Without date. Directory of the Imperial Estates at Worms	567
March 8 Duke George's escort for Luther	546
March 12 The Elector's escort for Luther	545
March 19 Luther's letter to Spalatin	535
March 28 Leo's bull coenae Domini against Luther and others	548
April 1 Hutten's letter to Carl V	565
April 14 Luther's letter to Spalatin	553
April 16 Warbeck's letter to Duke Johann of Saxony	557
April 17. Hutt's letter to Jodocus Jonas.....	499
April 17 and 20. Two letters from Hutten to Luther	564
April 26 Landgrave of Hesse's escort briefs for Luther's return	547
April 28 Luther's letter to Cranach	593
April 28 Luther's letter to Letter to Carl V	580
April 28: Luther's letter to the Electors and stands	581
April. Excerpt from one of Hutten's pamphlets	594d
May 1 Hutten's letter to Pirkheimer	594a
May 3 Luther's letter to Albrecht von Mansfeld	591
May 5 Des Herm. Busch letter to Hütten	500
May 8. Carl V's Edict against Luther	585
May 12. Luther to Melanchthon. Annex No. 69.
May 12: Luther's sweetbreads to Amsdorf. Annex No. 70.
May 12: Luther's letter to Agricola. Annex No. 72.
May 14: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 68.
Mid-May. Luther's letter to Melanchthon	584
May 26: Luther's letter to Melanchthon. Annex No. 79.
June 10: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 74.
June (?). Feldkirch's petition to the Elector on account of his marriage	630
June (?). Feldkirch's Defence Writ because of his Marriage	629
July 13: Luther's letter to Melanchthon. Annex No. 75.
July 13: Luther's letter to Amsdorf. Annex No. 81.
July 15: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 77.
July 18 Carlstadt's, Melanchthon's and Agricola's Letter to the Bishop of Meissen	759
July 31 Hausmann's letter to Tilomannus.	471
July 31: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex no. 78.
Aug. 1. Luther's letter to Melanchthon. Annex No. 99.
Aug. 3: Luther's letter to Melanchthon. Annex No. 100.
Aug. 10 Miltizen's letter to the Elector	349
Aug. 15: Luther's Spalatin. Annex No. 73.
Aug. 31 Joh. von Rechenberg's letter to the Electors	587
Sept. 5 The Elector's reply to the above letter	588
Sept. 9: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 76.
Sept. 9: Luther's letter to Amsdorf. Annex No. 97.
Nov. 1: Luther's letter to Gerbel. Annex No. 71.
Nov. 11: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 80.
Nov. 25. Carl V's order to the University of Vienna	586
Dec. 18: Luther's letter to Lang. Annex No. 82.
Dec. 27 Melanchthon's Report to the Elector on the Zwickau Prophets	634
No date. Kronberg's letter to Leo X	504

1522.

At the beginning of the year. Resolutions of the Augustinian Convent at Wittenberg	622
At the beginning of the year. Report of the deputies of the Electors about these resolutions	624
Jan. 12 Duke Henry of Brunswick's mandate against Luther	729
Jan. 13: Luther's letter to Amsdorf. Annex No. 85.
Jan. 13: Luther's letter to Melanchthon. Annex No. 103.
Jan. 17: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 104.
Jan. 20 Resolution of the Imperial Regiment on Nuremberg	727
Jan. 25 Hartmuth von Kronberg's exhortation to the mendicant orders	503
Feb. 10: Duke George's letter against Luther	728
Feb. 12 Carl V's invitation to the Diet in Nuremberg	711
Feb. 24 Mandate of the Bishop of Naumburg and Freising against Luther	730
End of Feb. Luther's letter to the Elector	643
End of Feb. Instruction of the Elector for Joh. Oswald, bailiff at Eisenach	644
March 5 Luther's letter to Elector Frederick	645
March 6 Kronberg's letter to Jakob Kobel	506
March 7 Luther's letter to Elector Frederick	648
March 7 Des Churfürsten instruction für D. Schurf to Luther	646
March 9 Schurf's reply to the Elector (to No. 646)	647
March 9 to 16 Summarium of Luther's first five sermons against Carlstadt	641
March 11 Second letter from the Elector to Schurf	650
March 11 Letter of requisition from Churmainz to the Frankfurt City Council	516
March 12 Luther's letter to Elector Frederick	652
March 13 Luther's letter to Spalatin	651
March 13 Several noblemen complain against the Rath at Frankfurt	517
March 15 D. Schurf's report to the Elector.....	653
Mid-March. Luther's missive to Hartmuth von Kronberg	507
March 16 Kronberg's letter of warning to the Frankfurt	510
March 16: Letter from Elector Frederick to Duke John of Saxony	654
March 16 Instruction of Elector Friedrich for Planitz in Nuremberg	655
March 17 Luther's letter to Hausmann	658
March 18 Luther's letter to Gerbel	659
March 19: Luther's letter to Link. Annex No. 107.
March 25 Luther's letter to Hess	662
March 28: Luther's letter to Lang. Annex No. 101.
March 30: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 83.

1523.	No.	1523.	No.
March 30 Luther's letter to Güttel	663	Feb. 5: The Imperial Estates' response to No. 719 by the complaints (No. 722)	720
April 1 Hutten's complaint about D. Meyer to the City Council to Frankfurt	515	Feb. 7 Legate Chieregati's replica	723
April 12: Luther's letter to Lang. Annex No. 105.		Feb. 11 Protestation of the envoy to the legates against the draft Reichstag resolution	735
April 14 Kronberg's Response to Luther's Missive (No. 507) 508		March 6: Carl V's mandate against Luther 731 March 8: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 124.
April 17 Luther's Letter to the Altenburg Council	665	April 8: Luther's letter to Link. Annex No. 113.
April 17 Luther's letter to Zwilling	666	May 25 The Prince of Saxony's order to the von Einsiedel (via No. 731)	732
April 21: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex. No.111.		May 29: Luther's reply and offer of inheritance to the Elector Friedrich	724
May 6: Bishop of Meissen's mandate to his parish priests .	758	May 31. Hadrian's VI bull, in which he gave Benno of Meissen canonized	749
May 8 Farewell to the Diet at Nuremberg	734	Shortly before July II. Luther's letter against the Transporter 2c. of the imperial mandate	733
May 8 Luther's letter to Elector Frederick	667	July 11: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 102.
May 8 Luther's letter to Zwilling	670	July. Proposal to settle Luther's case amicably	725
May 8: Luther's letter to the Altenburg council.	668	Aug. 5: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 125.
May 10: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 84.		Aug. 25 Act of the bishop of Merseburg with Johann Stumpf 756
After Luther's 16th letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 86.		After Aug. 25. reply of Joh. Stumpf 2c., to whom Castle at Colditz given	754
May 27 Luther's letter to Zwilling	671	Sept. 17 Luther's letter to Staupitz	223
May 29: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 109.		Sept. 19: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex no. 123.
May 29: Luther's letter to Prince Frederick	724	Before Sept. 24, Hadrian's breve to Elector Frederick, in which he threatens	716
After Luther's 29th letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 88.		Before Sept. 24, the Elector's answer to this breve	717
Ans. June. Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 87.		After Sept. 24, funeral oration of Conrad Vergerius for Hadrian VI	752
June 9 Kronberg's letter to V. Meyer in Frankfurt	511	Oct. 16 Luther's letter to M. v. der Straßen	706
June 11 D. Meyer's reply to this letter	512	Dec. 4 Luther's letter to the council at Oelsnitz.	705
June 14 Kronberg's second letter to D. Meyer	513	Dec. 5 Luther's letter to M. v. der Straßen	708
June 17 D. Meyer's complaint about Kronberg to the council at Frankfurt	514	Dec. 7 Breve of Pope Clement VII to Chursachsen	738
June 27 Luther's letter to Staupitz	222
July 4. Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex. No.91.
July 10: Luther's letter to Zwilling. Annex No. 110.
July 26: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex no. 92.
Aug. 11: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex no. 89;
Aug. 20 Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex no. 90
Sept. 4: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 93.
Sept. 25: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 28.
Oct. 5: Pope Hadrian VI's breve to Chursachsen	715
Nov. 3: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 94.
Nov. 25 Pope Hadrian VI's Breve to the Estates at Nuremberg	719
Nov. 30 Pope Hadrian VI's breve to the Rath zu Bamberg (with Luther's glosses 1523)	736
Dec. 12. Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 96.
Dec. 19: Luther's letter to Link. Annex No. 95.
Dec. 27 and Jan. 8. 1523. Two letters from von Planitz to the Elector	737
End of 1522. Luther to Hofmann Annex no. 114.
No date. Kronberg's letter to the inhabitants of Kronberg ..	505
Without date. Kronberg's "appointment"	509
Undated. Luther's writing about the bullæ coenæ domini ..	549
No date. Carl V's answer to Count Palatine Frederick about the annals	712
Without date. Two letters from Joh. Stumpf to the Bishop of Merseburg	753
No date. Letter from Elector Frederick to the Bishop of Meissen	757
No date. Hadrian VI's instruction for his legate at the Imperial Diet of Nuremberg in	718.
1523.
Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 112.
Jan. 20 Citation of the Bishop of Merseburg to Joh. Stumpf 755
Before Feb. 5, the secular imperial estates complained against the See of Rome	722

	1524.
Jan. 13 Letter of Battus Parmensis to Hier. Saulius about Hadrian VI's life of vice	751
Jan. 14: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 115.
Jan. 15 Another breve of Clement VII to Chursachsen	739.
Feb. 29 Letter from Campegius to Elector Frederick	740
March 14: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 116.
April 18 Farewell to the Diet at Nuremberg	741
April 20 The Saxon princes and others Estates protest against the imperial decree	742
End of April or Ans. May. Luther's writing "Against the New God" 2c	750
According to April. Luther's writing "Two imperial discordant and repugnant mandates" 2c	747
July 6 Action of several Catholic estates at a convention in Regensburg	743
July 7 Of Nuncio Campegius, King Ferdinand and other Catholic Estates Constitution	748
July 15 The imperial edict against the Nuremberg Diet	744
Aug. 16 Letter to Luther from the Council and Congregation of Orlamünde	683
Aug. 23 Des Mathesius' account of Luther's sermon in Kahla	685
Aug. 24. the Acta Jenensia of Mart. Reinhard	680

1524	No.
Aug. 24 Luther's action with the council and congregation at Orlamünde	684
Sept. 23 Ebner's and Nützel's letter to the Churfürsten ...	745
Oct. 3 The Elector's answer to this	746
Oct. 3 Luther's letter to Spalatin	681
Oct. 22 Luther's letter to Gerbel	687
Oct. 27: Luther's letter to Amsdorf. Annex No. 117.
Oct. 30: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 118.
Nov. 22 and 23 Strasbourg letters and reports to Luther	689
Dec. 15: Luther's letter to the Strasbourg	688
Dec. 29: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 119.

1525.

March 4 Luther's Letter to Spalatin	692
March 11: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 129.
March 23: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 120.
April 11: Luther's letter to Amsdorf. Annex No. 126.
June 21: Luther's letter to Amsdorf. Annex No. 127.

1525	No.
End of June or beginning of July. Luther's letter to all Christians (preface to Carlstadt's book)	694
Probably still in July. Luther's Preface to Carlstadt's "Declaration"	695

1526.

March 27: Luther's letter to Spalatin. Annex No. 128.

1527.

Oct. 27. Luther to Melanchthon. Annex no. 121.
After Nov. 11, Luther to Jonas. Annex No. 130.
Nov. 28: Luther's letter to Brenz. Annex No. 122.

1528.

Jan. 16 Luther's letter to Elector John	707
May 17, Carlstadt's letter to Krautwald and Swing field	700
Aug. 12 Carlstadt's letter to Brück	701
Sept. 24 Luther's letter to Brück	702

The first volume of this volume contains a list of Luther's letters, arranged in chronological order.

1517.	Appendix No.	Docum. No.
Oct. 31 to Albrecht of Mainz		114
Beginning of Nov. to Spalatin	11
Nov. 11 to Lang		115
1518.
Feb. 6 to Here. Scultetus		128
Feb. 15 to Spalatin	4
Feb. 22 to Spalatin	10
March 21 to Lang	3
March 24 to Egranus	42
End of March to Spalatin	1
April 15 to Spalatin		134
April 19 to Spalatin		135
May 9 to Trutfetter		131
May 18 to Spalatin	7
May 30 to Staupitz		132
May 30 to Leo X		127
July 10 an Link	2
Aug. 8 to Spalatin		147
Aug. 21 to Spalatin		148
Sept. 1 to Staupitz	8
Sept. 2 to Spalatin	9
Sept. 14 to Staupitz to Luther	15b
Sept. 16 to Luther to Lang	15a
Oct. 10 to Spalatin	16
Oct. 11 to Melanchthon		189
Oct. 14 to Carlstadt		199
Oct. 14 to Cajetan		203
Oct. 14 to Spalatin	17

Appendix No.	Docum. No.
Oct. 17 to Cajetan	209
Oct. 18 to Cajetan	210
Oct. 31 to Spalatin	14
Nov. 12 to Spalatin	19
Nov. 15 to corner	359
Nov. 19 to Prince Frederick	238
Nov. 19 to Spalatin	18
Nov. 25 to Spalatin	22
Dec. 2 to Spalatin	270
Dec. 9 to Spalatin	26
Dec. 11 to Link	24
Dec. 13 to Staupitz	23
Dec. 20 to Spalatin	25
1519.
Jan. 4 or 5 Report for Miltitz	276
Jan. 5 or 6 to Prince Frederick	279
Jan. 6 or 7 to Churfürst Friedrich	280
Jan. 14 to Spalatin	5
Jan. 19 to Spalatin	284
Jan. 19 or later to Prince Frederick	536
End Jan. or Ans. Feb. to Carlstadt... ..	361
Feb. 2 to Egranus	30
Feb. 3 to Lang	43
Feb. 12 to Spalatin	6
Feb. 20 to Staupitz	31
After Feb. 24 to Spalatin	365
After Feb. 24 to Spalatin	366
Prob. End of Feb. to Leo X	283

Annex Docum.		Annex Docum.
No.	No.	No.	No.
March 5 to Spalatin	32	March 7 to Spalatin	61
March 13 to Elector Frederick	296	March 19 to Spalatin	535
April 13 to Lang	44	April 14 to Spalatin	553
May 16 to Spalatin	33	April 28 to Cranach	593
May 16 to Lang	34	April 28 to Carl V	580
May 17 to Miltitz	302	April 28 to Electors and Estates	581
June 6 to Lang	45	May 3 to Albrecht of Mansfeld	591
July 20 to Spalatin	381	May 12 to Melanchthon	69
Aug. 15 to Spalatin	380	May 12 to Amsdorf	70
Aug. 18 to Spalatin	54	May 12 to Agricola	72
Aug. 18 to Elector Frederick	416	May 14 to Spalatin	68
Aug. 18 to Elector Frederick	417	Mid-May to Melanchthon	584
Sept. 3 to Lang	35	May 26 to Melanchthon	79
Early Oct. to Spalatin	51	June 10 to Spalatin	74
Oct. 1 to Elector Frederick	319	July 13 to Melanchthon	75
Oct. 3 to Staupitz	36	July 13 to Amsdorf	81
Oct. 10(?) to Spalatin	320	July 15 to Spalatin	77
Oct. 13 to Spalatin	37	July 31 to Spalatin	78
Oct. 15 to Spalatin	50	Aug. 1 to Melanchthon	99
Oct. 15 to Spalatin, Elector Frederick	325	Aug. 3 to Spalatin	100
Oct. 15 (?) to Spalatin	48	Aug. 15 to Spalatin	73
Oct. 16 to Lang	49	Sept. 9 to Spalatin	76
Beginning of Nov. at corner	383	Sept. 9 to Amsdorf	97
Nov. 1 to Spalatin	46	Nov. 1 to Gerbel	71
Nov. 7 to Spalatin	47	Nov. 11 to Spalatin	80
Dec. 3 to Spalatin 53		Dec. 18 to Lang	82
1520.		1522.
Feb. 4 to Albrecht of Mainz	429	Jan. 13 to Amsdorf	85
Feb. 4 to Bishop of Merseburg	431	Jan. 13 to Melanchthon	103
Feb. 8 to Spalatin	55	Jan. 17 to Spalatin	104
Feb. 27 to Spalatin	52	End of Feb. to Elector Frederick	643
March 21 to Lang	56	March 5 to Elector Frederick	645
March 25 to Spalatin	29	March 7 to Elector Frederick	648
April 16 to Spalatin	12	March 12 to Elector Frederick	652
May 5 to Spalatin	38	March 13 to Spalatin	651
May 13 to Spalatin	63	March 17 to Hausmann	658
July 9 to Spalatin	440	March 18 to Gerbel	659
July 10 to Spalatin	62	March 19 an Link	107
July 20 an Link	64	March 25 to Heß	662
Aug. 18 to Lang	498	March 28 to Lang	101
Aug. 23 to Spalatin	57	March 30 to Spalatin	83
Aug. 30 to Carl V	428	March 30 to Güttel	663
Sept. 1 to Spalatin	39	April 12 to Lang	105
Sept. 11 to Spalatin	13	April 17 to Gemini	666
Oct. 3 to Spalatin	40	April 17 to the council of Altenburg	665
Oct. 11 to Spalatin	41	April 21 to Spalatin	111
Oct. 12 to Spalatin	345	May 8 to Elector Frederick	667
Nov. 4 to Spalatin	27	May 8 to the Altenburg City Council	668
After Nov. 13 to Leo X	346	May 8 to twin	670
Dec. 21 to Spalatin	574	May 10 to Spalatin	84
1521.		After May 16 to Spalatin	86
Jan. 14 to Staupitz	20	May 27 to twin	671
Jan. 14 to link	66	May 29 to Spalatin	109
Jan. 16 to Spalatin	65	May 29 to Elector Frederick	724
Jan. 21 to Spalatin	58	After May 29 to Spalatin	88
Jan. 25 to Elector Frederick	575	Beginning of June to Spalatin	87
End Jan. or early Feb. to Link	527	June 27 to Staupitz	222
Feb. 9 to Staupitz	21	July 4 to Spalatin	91
March 6 to Spalatin	59	July 10 to Gemini	110
March 6 to Lang	67	July 26 to Spalatin	92
March 7 to Link	60	Aug. 11 to Spalatin	89
		Aug. 20 to Spalatin	90
		Sept. 4 to Spalatin	93
		Sept. 25 to Spalatin	28

LBriefe of Luther arranged in chronological order.

	Appendix Docum. No.	No.		Annex Docum. No.	No.
Nov. 3 to Spalatin	94		Oct. 27 to Amsdorf	117
Dec. 12 to Spalatin	96		Oct. 30 to Spalatin	118
Dec. 19 to Link	95		Dec. 15 to the Strasbourg	688
End of 1522 to Hofmann	114		Dec. 29 to Spalatin	119
	1523.			1525.
Jan. 2 to Spalatin	112		March 4 to Spalatin	692
March 8 to Spalatin	124		March 11 to Spalatin	129
April 8 to Link	113		March 23 to Spalatin	120
May 29 to Elector Frederick.	724		April 11 to Amsdorf	126
July 11 to Spalatin	102		June 21 to Amsdorf	127
July 11 to the imperial governor.....				1526.
.....	733		March 27 to Spalatin	128
Aug. 5 to Spalatin	125			1527.
Sept. 17 to Staupitz	223		Oct. 27 to Melanchthon	121
Sept. 19 to Spalatin	123		After Nov. 11 to Jonas	130
Oct. 16 to M. von der Straßen	706		Nov. 28 to Brenz	122
Dec. 4 to the council of Oelsnitz	705			1528.
Dec. 5 to M. from the streets	708		Jan. 16 to Elector John	707
	1524.		Sept. 24 to bridge	702
Jan. 14 to Spalatin	115
March 14 to Spalatin	116
Oct. 3 to Spalatin.....	681
Oct. 22 to Gerbel	687

Reformation Writings.

First part: Historical documents.

A. Against the Papists.

The first chapter.

The historical documents in the first chapter, such as papal bulls, letters of indulgence and butter, indulgence instructions and the like, show how religion was turned into a trade in the papacy. The entire papal indulgence system is presented to us according to its origin and progress, especially Tetzel's indulgences, which gave rise to the Reformation.

The first section.

On the origin and progress of papal indulgences.

A. The pope has driven out money by tendering the Jubilee and letters of indulgence for churches, monasteries, hospitals 2c.

1. Bull of Pope Boniface VIII, Anno 1300, in which he decrees that every hundred years there should be a Jubilee Year, in which Christians who come to Rome and perform certain devotions there should be granted a general remission of all sins by the Roman Pontiff.

From cherubim bullar. rrmZu. toru. l. aä aun. l300 no. 7, p. 178.

Translated into German.

Bonifacius, the bishop, to the constant memory of the cause.

It is already known from reliable stories of ancient ancestors that those who visit the venerable main church of St. Peter, the most distinguished among the apostles, in the city of Rome, great indulgences and forgiveness of sins. Therefore, We, who by virtue of our office have the salvation of all and every man very much at heart, and who gladly take care to promote it, consider all such and similar decrees of indulgences and indulgences in general and in particular to be approved, good, and right, and also approve and confirm them by virtue of our apostolic sovereignty and authority; indeed, we hereby wish to have them renewed and protected, administered, and fortified by the present Manifesto.

So that the more devoutly and diligently their main churches in Rome are visited by the faithful of Christ, the more gloriously and more highly the blessed apostles Peter and Paul may be venerated; and so that these faithful themselves, in view of and on account of such diligent attendance, may feel themselves filled with and gifted with an all the richer impartation of such spiritual gifts of grace:

Thus, in and out of perfect confident trust, we want to the mercy of Almighty God, and to the very same of His holy apostles high merits and reputation,

On the advice of our brethren, and by virtue of our perfect apostolic authority, to all those who in this one thousand and three hundred years, begun on the recently passed feast of the birth of our Lord Jesus Christ; likewise, who in future times, whenever another hundred years have passed, reverently come and attend the above-mentioned two main churches, have done true penance and confession, or will still do true penance and confession, both in the present jubilee year, as well as in each such year, as often as it will follow again after a hundred years, not only in a complete and abundant, but even in a most perfect and exuberant measure, indulgence and forgiveness of all their sins are entitled to and grant. They also hereby really grant them, and decree, set and resolve that those who wish to partake of such indulgences granted by us, if they are Roman residents, shall attend these two main churches at least 30 days after each other, or even one after the other, and only once on the same day; but if they should be foreigners or persons of jurisdiction, they shall likewise attend these two main churches for 15 days in the above manner. However, the more often and the more devoutly he visits these churches, the more he will earn and also the more powerful indulgences he will obtain. Given at Rome in the Vatican, 22 Feb. of Our Papal Dignity in the 6th year.

2nd Bull of Pope Clement VI, Anno 1330, in which he recalls the Jubilee Year after every fifty years.

From the eorxus juris cunonieï öxtruvaZ. eomm. lid. V., tit. 9th, 6ux>. 2.

Translated into German.

Clement the Sixth, the Archbishop of Tarragona and his auxiliary bishops.
The only begotten Son of God considered the body of the Virgin Mary worthy to descend from the bosom of His heavenly Father and to enter into it, where He united our essential and mortal nature with His divinity, in unity of person, in an ineffable and to us completely hidden way, which had its subsistence in the divine one, but did not absorb and accept the latter into its unity, so that in this way he might redeem the fallen human race and in its place fully reconcile the enraged father. For since the time had come

God sent His Son, born of a woman and made subject to the law, to redeem those who were under the law, so that we might receive the adoption of children. For he was made unto us of God unto wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption; and entered not by goats' and calves' blood, but by his own blood once into the holy place, and found an everlasting redemption. As he did not redeem us with perishable silver and gold, but with his precious blood, as an innocent and unblemished lamb, which he poured out on the altar of the cross, although he knew of no sin, not drop by drop, which would have been enough to redeem the entire human race, because of the exact union with the independent word, but frequently and stream by stream, so that from the sole of the foot to the head, nothing healthy was to be found in him. What a glorious treasure he has acquired for the struggling church! Which the pious Father in heaven is willing to give to his children, so that this bloodshed, which was done out of merciful love, would not be in vain, futile and superfluous, and so that we poor people would have an infinite treasure, through which we could be made partakers of God's lost grace, love and friendship again, if only we would make use of it. Finally, he entrusted this treasure to Blessed Petro, who holds the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and to his ordinary successors as governors on earth, so that it would not be kept in a sweat sheet, as it were, or remain hidden in the field, but would be made known through them to the faithful in a salutary way, and, for peculiar and reasonable reasons, be graciously applied to the truly penitent and confessing, both in general and, in particular, as they may deem good, to the complete and partial remission of the temporal punishment deserved for sin. As is well known, the merits of the blessed Mother of God and of all the saints contribute much to the increase of this treasure; and there is not the least reason to fear that it will ever be diminished or exhausted, partly because Christ's merit is infinite, and partly because the merits of the elect and saints become so much greater the more their number increases. Which, our predecessor, Pope Boniface the Eighth, of blessed memory, contemplated in godly contemplation, and carefully considered what great reverence and esteem should be paid to the most glorious among men and the most distinguished in the world.

The apostles are to be blamed for the fact that the light of the gospel has dawned in Rome and the Christian religion has been introduced, that they have begotten the church of Christ through the word of the gospel, that they have shepherded the Lord's flock, that they have shone forth with their faith to others, that they are to be regarded as pillars of the church, and that they have a special privilege before the other apostles because of the power of faith in our Savior Himself; He entrusted the keys of the kingdom of heaven to one of them, the foremost of all the apostles, as a faithful steward; to the other, as a skillful and efficient teacher, he entrusted the most distinguished teaching office in the church: In order that their memory might be renewed the more diligently, that they might be venerated the more zealously, devoutly and humbly by all believing Christians, and that their grace and protection might be assured the more undoubtedly, he wished to open such an inexhaustible treasure to encourage the faithful in their devotion and to reward them for it, and, after the counsel of his brethren, concluded that all who, in the year of the birth of our Lord 1300, and every 100 years thereafter, approached the main churches of the said apostles in Rome with reverence, and, if they were Roman citizens, visited them 30 days, but if they were foreigners or judicial persons, 15 days one after the other, or alternately one after the other, at least once during the day, but not differently from penitents and confessors, should obtain and receive complete and perfect remission of all their sins. But after we have perceived that according to the law of Moses, which the Lord came not to abolish but to fulfill spiritually, the fiftieth year was a year of reverence or remission, and those days on which the debts were remitted were solemnly observed; likewise that the fiftieth number is to be held strange and especially high, because in the Old Testament on the fiftieth day the law was given, and in the New the Holy Spirit, by whom we obtain forgiveness of sins, was visibly poured out upon the apostles, and that in this number still lie several and exceeding great mysteries of the holy divine Scriptures: We, who are very much inclined to listen to the groaning of the Roman nation, which belongs to us, and which is humbly before us, by means of the special messengers appointed for this purpose, just as it was done in former times by Moses and Aaron, and we have to ask for the sake of the entire Christian people, and to break out in the words: "Lord, open your treasure to them, and let them draw living water from it, as from a well," gladly and willingly; not that they may cease to murmur in the manner of the obdurate and hardened Jewish people, but rather that zeal and devotion in religion may grow and increase among this noble and valuable nation and among all the faithful, that faith may appear in its full splendor, that hope may flourish and blossom, and that love may become all the more ardent; besides heartily wishing that quite a few may be granted this indulgence. Considering, however, that the fewest bring their age, because of the shortness of human life, to a hundred years, according to the counsel of our brethren, it has been deemed good to set said indulgence, for the above-mentioned and other legitimate and well-founded reasons, to the fiftieth year, and to decree, according to the aforesaid counsel of our brethren and our complete apostolic authority, that all the faithful who, as truly penitent and confessing, will live the next 1350th year, and thereafter every 50 years, be granted the indulgence. year, and every 50 years thereafter, the said churches of the Apostles Peter and Paul and the Papal Palace, where Constantine, of glorious memory, having received Holy Baptism from the blessed Pope Sylvestro, as revealed to him by God through these Apostles, and having been freed from leprosy, in honor of Christ our Savior, and Pope Sylvestro himself is said to have consecrated it with special ceremonies and newly invented chrism, on the walls of which a crucifix, painted and all the more highly esteemed, was first presented to the eyes of the entire Roman people, and in honor of whom, for these and other certain and reasonable reasons, so that this temple may receive a higher adornment from the privilege of more said indulgences, and devout Christians may deserve from the Savior Himself, who proved Himself wonderful, great and mighty in often-named apostles, to obtain rich indulgences by their merits and intercession, we are to visit for devotion in the aforesaid manner, to receive complete and utter remission of all their sins. Thus, and in such a way that those who wish to obtain such indulgences shall be obliged to attend the aforementioned main churches and papal palace for at least 30 days if they are Roman citizens, or 15 days if they are foreigners or sovereigns. Also make this decree that those who wish to obtain such indulgences shall be present there, and after they have made the journey, are hindered for justifiable reasons from coming to Rome in the same year, or on the way, or before the aforementioned number of days have elapsed, they shall confuse the temporal with the eternal in the aforementioned city, where they shall do true penance.

and confess their sin, shall be granted this indulgence. Nevertheless, we declare all and every indulgences which have been decreed and granted by us or by our predecessors in the papal dignity, both in the city mentioned above and in other churches, to be valid; we approve, confirm and renew them by virtue of our apostolic authority, and we also want to protect them by the present writing. Accordingly, no one shall dare to violate this written ordinance 2c. 2c. But if anyone should attempt to do so, let him know that he will infallibly incur the wrath and disgrace of Almighty God and of His blessed Apostles Peter and Paul. Given at Avignon, January 27, 1349, in the first year of our papal dignity. Accordingly, we command you, our brethren, by our apostolic authority, that if you, in all your cities and episcopal sees, make our letter known and understandable to your spiritual and temporal, high and low subjects, you may endeavor that, with the help of God, they may prepare and enable themselves to deserve this indulgence and be worthy of it. Incidentally, since the present letter, for the sake of the very different ways and other existing legal obstacles, can hardly be delivered to all and everyone among you, it is our will that through you, as archbishops, our own handwritten letter should be sent to you, its auxiliary bishops, in copy and sealed, to which we have herewith accorded complete faith. Given 2c. 2c.

3rd Bull of Pope Paul II, Anno 1470, in which he reduces the time of recurrence of the Jubilee Year to twenty-five years.

From Cherubim bullar. insZu. tom. I., arm. 1470 no. 7, p. 385.
Translated into German.

Paul, the bishop, a servant of the servants of God, for the constant remembrance of the cause.

The ineffable providence of the Most High (who, for the redemption of men and the reconciliation of their nature, condemned to eternal death because of Adam's transgression, has clothed His only begotten Son in the garment of our mortality, and, having preached the sacred doctrine of the Gospel, has given Him the power to redeem mankind) has made His Son the Son of God.

The Lord, who has borne and given a holy example of his life and deeds on earth, crucified him and let him die, equips us through praiseworthy discipleship so that, since we, without special merits, are the governors of our Savior on earth, we make every effort to protect the Lord's host, which, according to his decree, has been entrusted to our care, concern and watchfulness, and which the deceitful and deceptive enemy is always trying to draw away from the path of righteousness, to make them pleasing and pleasant to our Creator, who does not want the death of sinners but their conversion, and to present them diligently in good works, so that we may escape the severe justice and well-deserved divine vengeance and punishment on the last dreadful day of judgment, when the final account will be demanded of us. It is therefore incumbent upon us to direct our minds and thoughts by vigilant care so that we may, under the gracious assistance of the Most High, so usefully provide for the salvation of all believing souls of Christ, and so salutary promote it by all kinds of spiritual gifts of grace, that one may be able to defend oneself against the cunning attempts of the enemy with a proven remedy, and the believers themselves may carry away the reward of eternal blessedness by the grace of the Most High.

Since long ago, when it was known from credible stories of the ancients that great indulgences and forgiveness of sins had been granted to those who had come to Rome to the venerable churches of the most distinguished among the apostles, Pope Boniface VIII, of blessed memory, our predecessor, as he sought the salvation of all believers with earnestness, and was only concerned that, because through the blessed originators of Christian doctrine, Peter and Paul, true worship had been established in the holy Roman and universal Church, and the Gospel of Christ had dawned in Rome, that these most distinguished of the apostles, as shepherds of the Lord's host and as strong pillars of this church, are held in special esteem and reverence, and that this our predecessor may himself open to the faithful an incomparable treasure of blessedness, he concluded, according to the counsel of his brethren: that all those who in the 1300. year after the birth of Christ, and so on every 100 years at this time, would come to Rome to the main churches of these apostles in reverence, and the same, if they are Roman citizens, at least 30 days, but if they are foreigners, or persons of authority, 15 days in succession, or one after the other, the day at least once, as truly penitent.

and confessors personally should obtain and receive as it has actually been observed.

the most perfect indulgence of all their sins.

Pope Nicolaus the Fifth, of blessed memory, also

Afterwards, however, our predecessor, Pope our predecessor, who, after the example of these Clement the Sixth, of blessed memory, moved by forefathers, considered the more-mentioned Bull of foreseen and some other causes, reduced the Clementine Indulgences valid and approved, renewed aforementioned indulgence to the fiftieth year after and confirmed it with the approval of his brethren at mature consideration, and decided by virtue of that time and of ours, and by virtue of the perfect apostolic sovereignty that all believers of Christ would apostolic power, and by virtue of perfect apostolic devoutly visit the aforementioned main churches and authority, renewed, confirmed, protected by his indult the Lateran every fifty years, as often as was formerly and made public, decided and decreed that all the decreed, and should be granted the same indulgence faithful of Christ who did true penance and confessed for their sins.

their sins, if according to the regulation contained in the

Also subsequently, our predecessor, Pope our predecessor, Pope our predecessor Clementis, in the then Gregory XI, of blessed memory, demanded that the still future 1450th year after the birth of our Lord, shall Church of the Blessed Virgin Mary Majoris, together be punished. The letter, which is often referred to, with the aforementioned main churches and the reads more extensively: "If, according to the regulation Lateran, should be emblazoned with the contained in the papal bull of our predecessor aforementioned privilege granted for indulgences, Clementis, in the then still future 1450th year after the and therefore carefully drafted the conclusion, and by birth of our Lord Jesus Christ, they visited the virtue of the aforementioned apostolic majesty made aforementioned main churches and temples, they the decree, that whoever of the Christian faithful has should obtain a complete remission of all their sins.

a desire to obtain such an indulgence as has been Thus we, who by the mercy of the Most High, expressed in the indult of this Clementis, should and according to His gracious prudence, have governed must visit the B[eată] Mariă Majoris Church, as well the Catholic and universal Church during the past as the above-mentioned main churches and the years, and who, after wise deliberation, have justly Lateran.

considered that the weak condition of human life,

And Urbanus the Sixth, whom we call with due which is inclined to sin and transgression, is running obedience, having well considered that human age so fast, as was thought before, that the human age was growing shorter and shorter, and wished that the would be very short, and we would be subject to many vast majority of people might be granted this pestilences and deadly diseases because of our sins; indulgence, yet because of the brevity of human life, Also that the Turks and unbelievers would constantly very few reach the age of fifty, In order that the have to issue severe persecutions against the faithful, devotion of the people may increase more and more, and that the whole of Christendom, which had been the light of faith may shine and love may become greatly oppressed in past times, would still have to more fervent, for these and other important reasons, suffer many and no less injustices, miserable according to the advice of his brothers, the above-accidents and damages, and that many other plagues mentioned fiftieth year has been reduced to the 33rd and tribulations would so greatly prevail against the year. And according to the advice of his brothers and members of Christ, and would commonly cause such by virtue of the perfect apostolic power, he made the and other adverse fates, that very few would deserve statute that all the faithful who do true penance and to be granted such indulgences; Not less also well confess their sins, if in the 1390th year after the birth considered that it is nothing new or unusual, after the of our Lord, and so on every 33 years, they visit the times change, to reduce the statutes of these said main churches, the Lateran and the Church of predecessors to a shorter time, primarily because of the Blessed Mary Majoris in Rome, in the prescribed the blessedness of believing souls, which we seek with manner, should receive this same indulgence and all our heart and diligently provide for it according to forgiveness of sins.

the grace bestowed upon us by the Lord; for the Finally, after our predecessor, Martinus the Fifth, impetus of the aforementioned and some other Roman bishop of blessed memory, considered this important causes, this 33rd year, according to the reduction made by Urbano, confirmed it, and ordered counsel of our venerable Father, we have decided to that it should be followed in the 33rd year, it should reduce the statutes of these predecessors to a shorter also be put into effect at the beginning of that year.

time. We have, in accordance with the advice of our venerable brethren and by virtue of our complete authority, reduced this 33rd year from the 25th year; we also order and establish, by virtue of such prestige, approval and power, that in the future the Jubilee year (namely, the complete redemption year) and the

The Holy Mass of the Holy Apostles (the "Holy Reconciliation of the Human Race") with all and any of the above indulgences after 25 years should be held and solemnly celebrated with thanksgiving and inward pleasure by all believers in Christ. For we give and grant, trusting in the mercy of Almighty God and in the reputation of these apostles, to these believers of both sexes, who in the 1475th year of the Lord, from the holy evening before the feast of the Nativity of our Lord Jesus Christ of the 1474th year, until that time again reckoned, the indulgences of the Holy Spirit. The apostles will be the first ones to give the most complete indulgence of all their sins to these believers of both sexes, who will devoutly visit the main churches and the other churches, according to the decree of these predecessors, every twenty-five years from the holy evening before the feast of the birth of our Lord Jesus Christ in the year 1474 until then.

Accordingly, all and every believer who seeks to attain to the knowledge of the revealed truth may well take heed of it, and weigh in the balance of their hearts with a like guide the burden of their sins, and how hardly they have indebted themselves to the holy Savior and incurred divine disfavor. They should also go through the register of their debts again, and remember that the course of this transitory time is gradually drawing to a close, and the inexorable law: You must die, applies to everyone without exception, which puts everyone in one class without distinction of persons and status, and that we have no reason to raise the honor of this world with vain praise, because as soon as one is born, the day of death is also announced, and because one must drag oneself through the unnoticed and uncertain course of this life with mortality until the very last day, because of the impermanence of the passing time. The terrible day of judgment shall also be diligently before their eyes, on which we shall give an account of all that we have done while alive, whether good or evil, and without the effect and benefit of an appeal or demand each shall receive his own reward, namely either the reward of eternal bliss or the punishment of eternal death and damnation, which the other death will never be able to shorten or alleviate. And since this is finally the case, and mortal men have nothing that they can worthily repay the Giver of all gifts (because they have nothing good in them that has not been graciously bestowed upon them by God), they should make an effort to escape this harmful death and damnation and atone for their sins through these and other meritorious works, so that at least by these means and by the granting of such indulgences and indulgences, by which we invite all Christians, as it were with a given assurance, to eternal salvation, and by the merits and intercession of the saints to come to eternal blessedness, we may attain worthiness. Also, all who profess the Catholic faith should receive and accept with special joy the paternal admonitions and ordinances of salvation, and the rich grace of indulgences aimed at the preparation for eternal glory, which we, its unworthy stewards, as governors of JESUS CHRIST, distribute from the treasure entrusted to the holy Roman Church; so that we may snatch their souls from the power of the infernal enemy, give them to the immortal God, our Creator, as we sincerely wish, and we may attain the enjoyment of heavenly bliss together with them, amen. Accordingly, no 2c.

Given in Rome at St. Peter's, in the year after the birth of the Lord 1470, April 19, in the sixth year of our papal dignity.

4 Pope Sixtus IV's Confirmation Bull, in which he confirms the bull of his predecessor Paul II, and forbids all other pilgrimages and indulgences during the Jubilee Year.

From the eorpU8 juri8 Canonici, cxtravaZ. coinin. lib. V., tit. 9. cap. 4.

Translated into German.

Sixtus the Fourth.

Just as a diligent and vigilant shepherd makes every effort to ensure that the sheep entrusted to his care are safe from the attacks and dangerous pursuits of wild animals, and that they are placed in a good and blessed condition through constant growth and multiplication: So we also, who according to the will of the Most High have to take care of the whole flock of the Lord, have the most heartfelt desire, and tirelessly think of ways and means, how all believing members of Christ, whom the rejected enemy of the human race has drawn away from the true way of righteousness by his devilish intrigues and cunning, may have their heavy burden of sin removed and be reconciled again with their heavenly Father, so that they may enjoy the glorious reward of eternal life through the unchaste and unpolluted world.

We hope that the eternal salvation of the people will be seriously promoted by our efforts, which are based on the general benefit, and also by the acceptance and acceptance of grace, and that both our and our blessed predecessors' salutary decrees will be vigorously applied to them. If our predecessor, Pope Paul the Other, of blessed memory, for the reasonable reasons then mentioned, was moved to reduce the Jubilee Year to a shorter period by a wise decree, according to the advice and with the approval of our venerable brethren who were alive at that time and among whom we also found ourselves, and to bring it to the 25th year, by virtue of his apostolic authority. He also decreed that the aforementioned Jubilee should be celebrated every 25 years, and that the same should begin in the next year of the Lord 1474, namely from the holy evening before the birth of the Lord Christ, and that it should be concluded in 1475 at that time; also that all and every believer of both sexes who visited the main churches of the blessed Apostles Peter and Paul, the Lateran and the holy St. Mary Majoris Church in the Vatican, should be able to celebrate the Jubilee. Mary Majoris Church in the worthy city at the appointed time, should obtain all and every kind of indulgence and remission of their sins, which this pope and his predecessors had granted to those who devoutly visited said principal churches and places of worship in that year: We, who, after it has pleased the Lord to reclaim the said predecessor from temporality, have been elevated by the divine government of grace to the highest apostolic dignity, confirm, with the consent of our brethren, first by this, then also by our other letters, this predecessor Paul's decree, will and conclusion, together with all that is contained in this letter of his. We also resolve and decree that the said Jubilee Year, with the plenary indulgence and forgiveness of sins, shall last the future year from Christmas Eve until then, as is more extensively contained in all the aforementioned letters, which we have observed according to their content just as if it had been expressly told in the present one. However, because afterwards both we and our predecessor Paul, in order to promote the salvation of believing souls, at the request and entreaty of many princes and other believers in Christ and God-fearing per

In view of the fact that the Churches, monasteries and holy places have deemed it good to grant various kinds of perfect indulgence and remission of sins to some churches, monasteries and holy places, for which reason the pilgrimage of whole peoples to the said main churches and places of worship might be denied, or the approaching Jubilee Year itself might have to be shortened, or even discontinued, to the not inconsiderable detriment of poor souls: We, who by virtue of our pastoral office are bound to see to the growth of all the faithful and their blessedness, and by appropriate means are glad to prevent that, because of other letters of indulgence hitherto frequently granted by us, or by Paul, or by other of our predecessors, this sacred work and the proclamation of indulgences should be suspended, this sacred work and the year of indulgences and pardons, or that the faithful themselves be deprived of this high benefit, all and any complete liberties, indulgences and pardons, which either under the title of a jubilee year, or confusing one vow with the other, or being unknowingly stolen therefrom and from them, or property extorted by malicious usury or in any other illicit manner, or to formally remit them, and to deputize confessors with authority, even in cases reserved by the apostolic see, from us and that see, or by virtue of their authority to all churches, monasteries, hospitals, and holy orders, universities, Fraternities, both permanently and for a certain time, in life or in death, in whatever manner and in whatever circumstances it may have happened, as it may be, have been granted and may be granted in the future, by virtue of the apostolic authority and power through present letters, as long as it is pleasing to us and to this See. And we want them to be suspended and revoked as long as it pleases us and the said See, and in the meantime we do not want anyone to do anything about it, but in such a way that the indulgences granted for the said main churches and places of worship in Rome shall retain their full force. As we also hereby seriously forbid that other letters of indulgence, apart from these, be distributed to the public or to private parties, and that the indulgence merchants extort money with them. Yes, we also want and command that all indulgence merchants and indulgence preachers be forbidden such indulgence sermons and indulgence stuff by virtue of the present indult, under threat of public punishment and penalty, with which they shall be regarded in time. Accordingly, no one shall take the liberty to offend this written suspension, prohibition, order and will of ours, or to act contrary to it in a bold manner. But if anyone should do so who shall know that by so doing he will incur the disgrace of Almighty God and of His blessed Apostles Peter and Paul. Given at Tivoli, in the year after the birth of Christ 1473, August 28, in the third year of our papal dignity.

5. several letters of indulgence, which show that the popes also granted indulgences outside the time of the Jubilee, either themselves or through others.

- a. The Cardinals of Avignon letter of indulgence for the church at Untergreislau not far from Weissenfels. 1331.

From the "innocent news and continued collection of old and new theological things," 1709, p. 201.

To all the sons of the Holy Mother, the Church, to whom the present letter will reach, we offer by God's grace William, Archbishop of Antivari, Alamannus in Suana, John of Verben, Laurentius of Arianna, Jacobus of Sagona, Wilhelmus of Bethlehem, Peter of Montimat, Wilhelmus of Acerne, Paulus of Alba, Benedictus of Candien, John of Servien, Bonifacius of Salatan, and Salmannus of Worms, bishops, constant salvation in the Lord.

The Holy Mother, who cares for the salvation of souls, is in the habit of encouraging the devotion of the faithful by some spiritual gifts, namely forgiveness and indulgences, so that they may pay due honor to the service of God and the Holy Church, that the more often and devoutly the Christian people gather there to implore the grace of the Savior unceasingly, the more they may become worthy to obtain forgiveness of their sins and the glory of the eternal kingdom. Because we want the parish church in Untergreislau, Naumburg district, to be visited with due honor and to be diligently honored by all believers in Christ: we remit to all truly penitent and penitent who come to the said church on all feasts of its patron saint and on the consecration (or on the church feast day) of the same church, as well as on other feasts mentioned below, for example Christmas, New Year's Day, Epiphany, Easter, Ascension Day, Pentecost, Corpus Christi, the invention and exaltation of the cross, on all and every feasts of the Holy Virgin Mary, St. Michael the Archangel, the Nativity and Beheading of St. John the Baptist, the Holy Apostles Peter and Paul, and all other holy feasts.

Apostles and Evangelists; also Saints Stephen, Lawrence, Vincent, Pancrat and George the Less; Saints Martin, Nicolai, Gregory, August, Ambrose and Jerome; St. Mary Magdalene, St. Catherine, St. Margaret, St. Cecilia, St. Lucia, St. Agatha, St. Agnetis, St. Anne, the Mother of Mary, the 11,000 virgins, in memory of all the saints and souls, and through the octaves of such feasts, who have such octaves, as well as all Sundays, come for devotion, prayer or pilgrimage, or who at masses, when the bell rings, will say Hail Mary three times with bent knees; likewise who will lend a helping hand for the construction, lights, church decoration or other necessities of such a church; or who in their wills or otherwise will donate, bequeath or bequeath and have donated by others gold, silver, clothes or other gifts of love to the said church; or who will attend the masses of the priest and his sermons and contribute something out of love; or who will transform the churchyard of the said church with prayers for the souls of all deceased believers: as often as they do the aforesaid things or any of them in devotion, we shall all (I say), by the grace of Almighty God and trusting in the power of St. Peter and St. Paul, his apostles, graciously grant them in the Lord a 40-day indulgence from the penances imposed on them, if only the will and consent of the bishop of the district is given. In witness whereof we have caused this letter to be printed with our seal. Done Avignon the 18th of December Anno 1331, and of the papacy Pabst Johannis XXII. in the 16th year. 1)

We Henry, by the grace of God Bishop of Naumburg, consider all the indulgences mentioned above from the most venerable fathers, the above-mentioned archbishops and bishops, to be good and right, and confirm them by our episcopal power; and, by the grace of Almighty God and in reliance on the intercession of the Holy Apostles Peter and Paul, graciously grant 40 days' indulgence in the Lord from the penances imposed on them to all those who are truly penitent and confessed and who devoutly attend the above-mentioned church on the feasts named in the above-mentioned letter, or who will do a work contained in such letter. Done Zeitz, Anno 1332 2) the 7th of March.

1) In the old edition of Walch: "in the 6th year"; but John XXII became pope in 1316 and died in 1331.

2) It will read 1332 instead of "1331" in the old edition, since this letter of confirmation must be later than the previous writing.

b. Letter of indulgence for the parish church at Bernstadt in Upper Lusatia, dated Anno 1339.

From the "innocent news," 1728, p. 3.

To all who will see the present Brref, Martinus, by the grace of God and the Apostolic See, Amelinian Bishop, Bonus, by the same grace Calunensian Bishop, Arnoldus, by this grace Figeran Bishop, and Thomas, by this same grace Hemnensian Bishop, wish constant salvation in the Lord.

Since, as the apostle says, we all stand before the judgment seat of Christ and will receive what we have done in life, whether good or evil, we must prepare for our last day by works of mercy, and sow on earth in view of the eternal, so that when the Lord distributes the reward, we may gather multiplied fruit for it; because he who sows sparingly will also reap sparingly, and he who sows bountifully will also reap eternal life bountifully. If then on the part of the most beloved man Conrad Albrecht, from the city of Bernstadt, Meissen diocese, it has been humbly requested from us, that we may grant all those who make a pilgrimage to the church of St. Urbank,....the Virgin of this diocese: we also, trusting in the mercy of Almighty God, and in the prestige and authority of the holy apostles Peter and Paul, remit to all truly penitent and penitent persons, of both sexes, who visit said church on its feast days or other solemn times of the holy Virgin Mary, the Nativity of the Lord, the Circumcision, the Epiphany, the Resurrection, the Ascension, Pentecost, the Trinity and the Consecration of the Church, the Holy Cross, the Holy Angels, John the Baptist, the Blessed Apostles Peter and Paul, and the other Apostles, Evangelists and Holy Martyrs, Stephani, ...as well as the holy church teachers, Hieronymi, and other teachers and holy confessors, Nicolai and Martini; not less the blessed Mary Magdalene, Agnetis, Lucia, Catharina, Margaretha and Elisabeth; likewise on the feast of all saints, and through their Octavas; on the feast of all souls and on all Sundays; also those who follow the Venerabile, when it is carried to the sick; or who, at the sound of the bells, devoutly pray three Hail Marys; or who, for the building, lights, ornaments, and other things necessary to the said church, will offer a helping hand, to each one of you (thus) mercifully in the Lord 40 days of the penances imposed upon them, provided the ordinary bishop thereof is satisfied therewith. In confirmation of this

We have preserved the present letter with our seal attached to it. Given at Rome in our palaces, in the year of our Lord 1339, on the seventh Roman numeral of interest, the papal dignity of the Lord Benedicti, Pope, the 12th day of the month of Martii, in the fifth year of the same.

And we Withigo, by the grace of God the Bishop of the Churches of Meissen, consider the said indulgence of the venerable fathers in Christ to be valid and approved, and confirm the same by virtue of the authority ... in the name of the Lord, add also for us 40 days of indulgence and a carenam, for those who will find themselves willing and ready for the said feast days and the above-mentioned good works.

And we John, by the grace of God Bishop of the Churches of Meissen, also confirm the letter of indulgence of the venerable Fathers in Christ, in the name of God by our attached seal, also add 40 days of indulgence together with a carena, for all who will come to the above.

c. Letter of indulgence for the church at Lommatsch, from Anno 1359.¹

From the "innocent news" 1722 n. 169

To all the holy Mother, the Church, sons to whom this present letter will come, we wish by divine permission Raphael in Arcadia, Angelus in Calamia, Franciscus in Lapsaco, Lazarus in Botrosta, Guido in Sosopoli, Bertholdus in Hadrian, Maternus in Casana, Lucas in Salubrica, Richardus in Bisacio, Peter in Valona, Peter in Calia, Richardus in Thermopolis, and Richardus in Pistoria, constant salvation in the Lord.

The brilliance of the divine light, which illuminates the world with its ineffable clarity, makes the godly desires of those who hope in its most gracious majesty enjoy its peculiar grace especially when their devout humility is assisted by the merits and prayers of the saints.

Since we desire that the parish church of St. Wenceslas in Lommatsch, Meissen District, be visited with due honor and diligently venerated by believers in Christ, we, and each one of us, want all truly penitent and penitent who go to said church on all feasts of its patron and on all subsequent feasts, namely Christmas, New Year's Day, Epiphany, Char Friday, Easter, Ascension Day, Pentecost, and the Feast of the Holy Trinity, to be able to attend the church of St. Wenceslas in Lommatsch with due honor.

¹ In Walch: "1339". In the years 1352-1362 Innocenz VI was pope. Pope.

The saints of the Holy Trinity, Corpus Christi, the invention and elevation of the cross, St. Michael the Archangel, the birth and beheading of St. John the Baptist, all the feasts of the Blessed Virgin Mary, St. Peter and Paul, apostles and evangelists, the four teachers of the churches, the feast of all the saints and the commemoration of souls. Peter and Paul, apostles and evangelists, the four teachers of the churches, on the feast of all the saints and the memorial of the souls, and on the said church consecration, the saints Stephani, Laurentii, Martini, Severi, Severini and Gregorii; the saints Catharina, Barbara, Elisabeth and Lucia, and through all octaves of all feasts that have octaves, and on all Sundays and Sabbaths of the whole year, come for devotion, prayer and pilgrimage, and who come for building, lights, books, chalices, clothes or other things, chalices, clothes, or other ornaments of said church, or attend mass, sermons, matins, vespers, and other services, or go into said church with devout invocation to God, or walk around its churchyard, or say Hail Mary three times with bent knees at the evening chimes and the striking of the bell, or follow the body of Christ or the holy oil when they are carried to the sick, or give or bequeath gold, silver, or something of their property to said church, or have others give or bequeath the same, or who will also devoutly pray to God for the venerable Father and Lord, the Bishop of Meissen, who confirms this letter: as often as, when or where they shall do the like or any of the like, by the grace of Almighty God, and trusting in the power of St. Peter and St. Paul, His apostles, they hereby graciously grant 40 days' indulgence in the Lord from the penances imposed upon them, if only the bishop's consent and approval shall be given thereto. In witness whereof we have affixed our seal to this letter. Given Anno 1359, the 1st of March, in the XII. Indiction, and of the Pabbacy of our Lord Pabst Innocentii VI in the 7th year.

d. Letter of indulgence for the church at Memleben, 1359.

From the "innocent news," 1712, p. 783.

Brother Albertus of Bycheligen, by the grace of God Bishop of the Church of Ippus, of the Most Reverend Lord Gerlach, Archbishop of Mainz, Vicarius in spiritual matters, to all to whom this letter is addressed, constant salvation in the Lord. We, who gladly urge all believers in Christ to the works of godliness on a and God-pleasing manner, hereby, out of heartfelt trust in the mercy of Almighty God and the blessed Apostles Peter and Paul, as well as in the gracious benevolence of blessed Martini, by virtue of the authority granted to us, grant to all truly penitent and confessing persons who make their charitable contribution to the Dominical parish church and others in Memleben, who will make a pilgrimage to the said church on each of the main feasts, namely the Nativity, Easter, Ascension, Pentecost, Corpus Christi, the Glorious Virgin Mary, the consecration of the church, to all the saints and to all the souls, eight days in succession, to keep their devotion and to perform their prayers; not less also those who will go around the churchyard and pray three paternosters for all the deceased saints; who, when the Venerable and the holy chalice are carried to the sick, will devoutly pray, as well as those who, at the ringing of the evening bells, out of reverence for the glorious Virgin Mary, will pray the Hail Mary three times on their knees with devotion, as often as they are not present, mercifully in the Lord for 40 days of indulgence and forgiveness of sins, together with a carena. Above this, by virtue of the present letter, in the name of the Lord, we transfer the feast of the consecration of the church, so far celebrated in the week of St. Martin, to the next Sunday after the feast of St. Martin, where it will be held at all times in the future. Given in the year of the Lord 1359 on the day of the Ascension of Christ, with attached seal.

e. Letter of indulgence granted to the new hospital at Halle in Saxony, Anno 1381.

From the "innocent news," 1728, p. 319.

We Albrecht, of the Order of the Fratrum Minorum, by the grace of God and the Apostolic See, Bishop of the Ebeonensian Churches, announce that in the year of the Lord 1381, by order of the venerable in Christ Father and Lord, Lord Peter, Archbishop of Magdeburg, we have erected a new hospital in the city of Halle, together with the Fratribus of the Order of Predicants, a church and graveyard together with two altars, under the gracious assistance of the Holy Spirit, and hereby grant to all those who visit said church, graveyard and altars, as often as they wish, for the sake of devotion, pilgrimage or prayer, or alms from the property given to them by God for the poor who are there,

They shall offer them, if only they are truly penitent, sorrowful for their sins, and confess the same; but especially to those who, on the feasts dedicated to the patrons of the church and altars, as well as on the feasts of the Resurrection of Christ, the Ascension, Pentecost, Corpus Christi, the blessed apostles Peter and Paul, and others; on the four feasts of the most blessed Virgin (Mary), on St. Crucis, on All Saints, on the Feast of the Nativity of Christ, the Apparition, and by their octaves, in firm reliance on the mercy of Almighty God, and on the merits of the blessed Apostles Peter and Paul, and the patrons of above-mentioned churches and altars, 80 days' indulgence, two carenas, from the penances imposed on them, mercifully in the Lord; which indulgence shall henceforth apply at all times. Given in the year of the Lord, as above, on the 6th day before the Feast of the Circumcision of the Lord immediately, with our seal attached for the confirmation of the above.

f. Indulgence for the renovated Sonnenfeld Monastery, Anno 1384.

From the "innocent news," 1728, p. 494.

We, Brother John, by the grace of God and the Apostolic See, Bishop of Ebrancio, Pontifical Governor of the Venerable in Christ Father and Lord, Mr. Erhard, Bishop of Würzburg, announce by the present that in the year of the Lord 1384, on the evening before the feast of St. Laurentii the Martyr, we consecrated a small altar in the choir of Sonnenfeld, near the town called Hofstädt, diocese of Würzburg. Laurentii the Martyr, we consecrated a small altar in the choir of the Sonnenfeld Monastery, near the town called Hofstädt, Würzburg Diocese, in honor of St. Andrew the Apostle, St. Erhard the Bishop and the Confessors, as well as the Blessed Virgin Otilia and ... have placed indulgences on said altar, as we mercifully grant 40 days of remission of mortal sins and one year of remission of sins of weakness from the penances imposed on them to those who, for the sake of devotion, make a pilgrimage there on the days of the dedication of this monastery, as well as the aforementioned altar and the patrons thereof, repentant and confessing. Given in the nunnery Sonnenfeld, of the Cistercian Order, Würzburg diocese, in the year of the Lord 1384, on the evening before St. Laurentii the Martyr, under our attached seal.

The letter was written on the day of St. Lawrence the Martyr.

g. Pabst Bonifacius IX's letter of indulgence for the Hospital Martini at Nordhausen, Anno 1391, 1) together with Pabst Alexander V's bull for an altar portatile, so the founder of this monastery was allowed 1409.

From the "innocent news," 1720, p. 875.

Bonifacius Bishop, servant of the servants of God. Greetings and apostolic blessings to all believers in Christ who will read this letter!

Although he, from whose grace it comes that he is served worthily and praiseworthy by his faithful, out of the abundance of his goodness, which surpasses the merits of the supplicants, also repays the desires of those who serve him rightly much more than they deserve, we, who gladly want to prepare a people pleasing to the Lord and eager for all good works, entice the faithful with all kinds of gifts, namely indulgences and pardons, to please him all the more, so that they may thereby become all the more skilled in divine grace.

Because we then desire that one altar of the Holy Spirit, another of all the saints; likewise others St. Matthiä, St. Johannis the Baptist, St. Andreä, St. Laurentii; and another St. Mariä, St. Annä, St. Elisabeth, St. Bonifacii, St. Vincentii and his companions, who are in the hospital of the poor St. Martini, outside the walls of the city of Nordhausen, Mainz district, which, as it is said, have been built anew, are visited with due honor and the poor of Christ are duly entertained in said hospital; that also the believers in Christ gather the sooner for devotion to said altars and lend their hand to the maintenance of said poor the more willingly, the more they see that they enjoy there abundantly the gift of heavenly grace: so we want, out of the almighty God's grace and of the holy Sts. Peter and Paul, his apostles, authority and trust in it, to all truly penitent and confessed, who at Christmas, New Year, Epiphany, Easter, Ascension and Corpus Christi feast of our Lord Jesus Christ, also Pentecost; likewise on pem feasts of the Nativity, Annunciation, Purification and Ascension of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and Nativity of John the Baptist, and of the said Apostles Peter and Paul, and the consecration of the same altars, and celebration of all the saints, and by theirs of Christmas, Epiphany, Easter, Ascension and Corpus Christi, also the Nativity and Ascension of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and the Nativity of St. John, and of the Apostles Peter and St. Paul's feasts, and then for the six days immediately following the feast of Pentecost, devoutly visit the aforesaid altars annually and lend their hands for such maintenance: each such feast and holiday 2 years and so many quadragens; but those octaves and the aforesaid 6 days, when they shall visit the altars and lend their hands, have 100 days of the penances imposed upon them graciously remitted herewith; but so that this shall not continue after 10 years. We also want that if otherwise those who visit the said altars, or give their hand for their construction and maintenance of the poor in the said hospital, or otherwise any indulgence has already been given and granted by us for perpetuity or for a certain time not yet expired, this present letter shall neither apply nor mean anything. Given in Rome at St. Peter's the 3rd of June [1391] of our papacy in the 3rd year.

1) Walch by mistake: "1301".

The lead seal Instead of Benencasa
Pabst's Bonifacii IX. Franciscus.

Pope Alexander V. Bull for an altar por tatile, so the founder of the aforementioned hospital has been allowed Anno 1409.

On parchment documents.

Alexander Bishop, servant of the servants of God, the beloved son Simon, surnamed Segemonde, citizen of the city of Nordhausen, Mainz district, greeting and apostolic blessing!

The honest devotional zeal that you bear towards us and the Roman Church justly deserves that we graciously grant your request, especially the one that we see going out of fervent devotion, as much as we can with God. Therefore, out of affection for your devout petition that you may have an altar of worship with proper awe and veneration, in order to have mass and all other services held on it in your or your household's presence in appropriate and Christian places, by your own or other appropriate priests: we permit your devotion by this letter. It shall therefore not be lawful for any man to break this leaf of our permission, or to oppose it. And if anyone dares to do so, let him know that he will fall into the disfavor of Almighty God and of St. Peter and St. Paul, his apostles. Given in Bologna (Bononia) the 10th of April [1409] of our Papacy in the 1st year.

(The lead seal Umsonst ausgefertigt Pabst Alex. V.) Joh. de Crivellie.

h. Letter of indulgence for the Church of All Saints at Mühlhausen, from Anno 1423.

From the "innocent news," 1728, p. 841.

To all believers in Christ and to the Holy Mother, the Church, Sons, who are reading our letter or will hear about it, salvation in Him who gives true salvation to all.

We, Brother Heinrich, by the grace of God and the Apostolic See, Bishop of the Adriatic Churches, in pontifical ordinances Vicarius of the Most Reverend in Christ the Father and of our Lord, Lord Conrad, Archbishop of the Holy See of Mainz, publicly announce by the present letter that we have regained the God's Acre and the Church of All Saints in Mulhouse, and that we have consecrated the high altar in the choir of said church in honor of the Holy Cross, the Blessed Virgin Mary, the Blessed Apostle Bartholomew, the Blessed Sebastian the Martyr, the Blessed Augustine the Confessor, and the Blessed Virgins Catharina and Barbara, with all due and customary ceremonies, and as much as he permits, to whom it is due that the faithful serve him worthily and commendably in perfect holiness, and whose merits far exceed our request; who, therefore, also repays those who righteously adhere to him much more than they may desire and deserve. Nevertheless, since we want to present a people pleasing to the Lord, to attract believers in Christ by some charming gifts and by the remission of sins, so that they may become pleasing to him and therefore more capable of divine grace: We therefore grant to all those who do true penance, recognize and confess their sins, and lend a helping hand to the said church and its building, lights, chalice books, ornaments, or to all other godly works or services; or on all feast days, namely the Nativity, the Circumcision, the Epiphany, the Passion of Christ, Easter, Ascension, Pentecost, Corpus Christi, the feast days of the Blessed Virgin Mary, of all the Apostles, of all the Saints, also on the memorial day of all believing souls, on the feasts of the patrons of the church and on the feast of the consecration of the church, which will henceforth be celebrated annually on the Sunday following St. Bartholomew's Day, the day of the Apostles, and throughout the said feasts, the Octavas will gather for devotion or prayer, or visit the churchyard and the altar; or hold a meeting and pray five paternosters and as many Hail Marys for all the faithful departed; or pay homage to the Venerable and to the holy oil when it is too late.

or who faithfully attend the masses, early sermons, vespers, or other holy funerals and burials of the deceased, in order to ask the Lord for the grace of reconciliation; or who, when all the bells are rung in the evening, pray three Hail Marys on their knees out of reverence for the Blessed Virgin Mary: if and as often as they will devoutly perform one of the above-mentioned pieces, trusting in the mercy of the Almighty God and in the grace of the blessed Apostles Peter and Paul, by virtue of the power communicated to us, of the penances imposed upon them 40 days' remission of the penalties and one carenam, mercifully in the Lord. In confirmation of all that has been said before, we have caused this letter to be kept with our seal attached. Given and done in the year of the Lord 1423, on the Sunday of Lent, on which the Judica is sung in the Church of God.

(L. S.)

i. Pope Martinus V's letter of indulgence for the church of St. Mary at Geithen, together with the bishop of Merseburg's confirmation and a letter of indulgence. 1422.

From the "innocent news," 1714, p. 22.

Martin Bishop, a servant of the servants of God, wishes salvation and apostolic blessing to all believers of Christ who will see present letter.

When we devoutly contemplate the very high and glorious merits with which the Queen of Heaven, the glorious Virgin and Mother of God, is resplendent in the starry abode as a shining morning star; if we also consider in our soul that she, as a mother of mercy, a mother of love and grace, a kind comforter of the human race, a diligent and vigilant intercessor, intercedes with the King whom she begot for the salvation of the faithful who are pressed by the burden of sin: In our opinion, it is fitting, indeed we consider it a duty, that we honor and adorn the churches dedicated to her and other saints by graciously granting forgiveness and indulgences. Thus, we want that the parish church of our dear women outside the walls of the city of Geithen, in the Merseburg area, be given due honor.

and that Christ's faithful prefer to gather for the sake of devotion, so that they may be all the more abundantly filled with the gift of heavenly grace: we graciously, trusting in the mercy of Almighty God and in the reputation of His blessed Apostles Peter and Paul, remit to all truly penitent and penitent who will devoutly visit this church annually on the feast of the Visitation of Blessed Mary, two years and as many quadragenas of the penalties imposed upon them. We also wish to enclose that this letter shall be of no force or validity with the faithful who visit said church, or lend a helping hand for its building and repair, or otherwise give godly alms there, if another indulgence should have been given to them by us for perpetuity or for a certain time not yet elapsed. Given at Rome at St. Peter's the 2nd of December [1422], 1) in the 5th year of our papal government.

(Seal.) Martin the Fifth, Pope.

Pro B. et pistorio
R. de. Valentin.

To all and every believer in Christ to whom our present letter will reach, Nicolaus, by the grace of God and the Apostolic See, Bishop of Merseburg, wishes constant salvation in the Lord. You will perhaps know that we have truly sealed the letter of the most holy Father in Christ and of our Lord, Martin, by the grace of God the Fifth, Pope, according to the custom of the Roman court, with his leaden bull and attached red and blue cords (cordulis), quite unharmed, not obliterated, not scraped, nor in one piece suspect, but without all fault and suspicion, received, seen, read, and carefully examined with due reverence, the following contents: Martin 2c., as above. Having respectfully received this letter, as is proper, and having perused, read, and diligently examined the same, we hold this apostolic letter, by virtue of unferior ordinary power, approved, justified, approved, and affirmed, as much as is in us, by virtue of said power, by present. And because the Blessed Virgin Mary, as we have learned from credible and true news, was ordained in the said parish church of the town of Geithen in our territory, by divine power, the Holy Virgin Mary has been ordained in the parish church of the town of Geithen.

1) Inserted by us. The year 1422 is the fifth of the pope Martin V.

We think it is right and just that the faithful should be encouraged to visit more eagerly the places where such miracles take place, since the Mother herself cannot be praised and honored enough by the orphans. So that this angelic queen may consider those who serve her worthy to be a pious intercessor and helper for her at the last judgment, at which each one will be rewarded according to his works, be it good or evil, but we seek to spread the glorification of this God-bearer and redeemer of the lost world: By virtue of our aforesaid ordinary power, trusting in the mercy of Almighty God and His blessed Apostles Peter and Paul, as well as in the power of Blessed Lawrence, our most glorious martyr-patron, we give to all the truly penitent, contrite and confessing, who every year on the feast of the Visitation of the Virgin Mary devoutly visited said parish church outside the walls of the town of Geithen, or otherwise gave alms for its building, mercifully in the Lord 40 days of indulgence from the penitential penalties imposed on them, which shall apply permanently in the future. To confirm all the above, we have had the present letter affirmed with our greater seal. However, we want this letter of ours to remain with the said parish church and not to be taken out of the city of Geithen by profiteers or other people, in which case we deprive it of all force. Given and done at Merseburg in the year 1423 after the birth of Christ, on the first Roman numeral of interest, on the middle week, the 24th of the month of March, or on the holy evening before the Annunciation of the blessed Mary.

[Letter of indulgence from Bishop Nicolaus of Merseburg. 1415.]

¹⁾ Nicolaus, by God's grace Bishop of Merseburg, wishes to all and everyone in our city and area everywhere ordained laymen, priests, their vicariis and churchwardens salvation, constant grace and the peace of the Lord. We hope to show obedience to God when we stimulate the minds of people of both sexes to offer their alms for the name of Christ and the praiseworthy Virgin Mary. Since we have been told by reliable persons that the leaders of Our Lady's Church outside the walls of the town of Geithen in our area have begun to build a new choir for the praise, glory and honor of the Mother of God, and have had a wall built on a few cubits, but without a charitable contribution from the faithful we would not be able to complete such a building, and because we have a special esteem for this church because of the public reputation that has rung out before us from the various miracles and signs that have taken place there through this praiseworthy God-bearer, as they say: We also grant the special grace and honor of indulgences to this church. Therefore we exhort you, laymen, priests, your vicars and ecclesiastics, appointed and unappointed chaplains, to whom the present letter will reach, in the Lord, and command you, with the forgiveness of your sins, that when the rulers of the said church have come to you with our present letter, you receive them graciously, that you accept them without forcing them to give any gift, and that you may be faithful and emphatically supportive of the church entrusted to you, so that they may contribute their share to the alms, and that you may merit eternal joy through these and other good works that you and they will have done. For we, trusting in the mercy of Almighty God, and by the command of His holy apostles Peter and Paul, give to all and every truly penitent, confessing, and contrite, who have given their alms to the said church, or its building, or for the increase of the worship in the said church, 40 days of the penance imposed upon them; but the year immediately following, reckoned from now on, shall no longer apply. Given in Merseburg in the year of the Lord 1415 on the day of St. Andrew the Apostle, with our seal attached.

¹⁾ The following letter of indulgence, as the date indicates, is to be placed earlier than the two preceding documents. This letter speaks of miraculous deeds and signs, which, "as they say", were performed by the God-bearer. In the previous letter it is said that this is based on "credible and true news". Here an indulgence is granted that is to be valid for only one year, but there an indulgence "that is to be valid permanently in the future".

k. Letter of indulgence for a chapel at Hofstedt near Coburg, Anno 1442.

From the "innocent news," 1728, p. 1015.

Hermann, by the grace of God and the Apostolic See, Bishop of Accon, of the Most Reverend in Christ Father and Lord, Lord Theodorici, of the Holy See of Mainz, Archbishop, of the city and diocese of Würzburg, in pontifical and sacramental matters and in all cases concerning the conscience, (conveys) constant salvation in the Lord. The splendor of the glory of the Father, who illuminates the world with his ineffable light, and the sincere prayer of the faithful, who place their trust in his gracious majesty, is considered especially gracious and inclined when their humble devotion is supported by the meritorious intercession of the saints. Since we now wish that the choir of the chapel in the city of Hofstedt, Würzburg diocese, which was built in honor of St. Mauriti, Laurentii, Christophori, Clementis, Nicolai, Mariä Magdalenä, Annä and the 11,000 virgins, whose relics we have enclosed in the choir altar, and in honor of St. Pauli the Apostle, Urbani and the 11,000 virgins, the 14 Helpers and Panthaleonum, whose relics we have kept in a safe place on the altar on the right hand side outside the choir, like the above, sanctified and consecrated by us, and to be kept in due honor with the first-mentioned altars of the saints in the choir, may be visited often, and the believers in Christ may all the more gladly turn to this church for devotion: we grant to all who do true penance, recognize and confess their sins, and on the feast days of the aforementioned patrons and on the day of the consecration of said choir, namely the next Sunday before the Virgin Mary's Assumption, will reverently visit the aforementioned chapel for the sake of devotion, trusting in the mercy of the Almighty God, and in the merits and power of the blessed Apostles Peter and Paul, for each altar especially 40 days of criminal sins and one year of sins of weakness, together with a carena indulgence from the penances imposed on them, mercifully in the Lord. Which indulgence we also grant to all those who celebrate the said chapel on Sundays throughout the year and on the most noble feast days, namely the Nativity, the Circumcision of the Lord, the Epiphany, Green Thursday, Charlemagne, Easter, the Ascension of the Lord, Pentecost, Corpus Christi, and on all feasts of the blessed Virgin (Mary) and St. Crucis, as well as on all feast days of the Apostles and Evangelists, St. John the Baptist and all the Saints, will devoutly attend the Octavas, whenever it may be, and pray three Hail Marys at the evening bell out of reverence for the most blessed Virgin Mary, or will keep a threefold company around the graveyard of the church, trusting in the power of St. Peter and St. Paul and said Lord of Mainz.

and make a gift. For the clear confirmation of this, we have had this letter kept with our attached seal. Given and done in the year after the Incarnation of the Lord 1442, on the Day of All Saints.

I. Pabst's Nicolaus V letter of indulgence, which he gave to the chapel at Ziegenhain Anno 1453¹).

From the "innocent news," 1731, p. 681.

Nicolaus, the bishop, a servant of the servants of God, wishes salvation and apostolic blessing to all believers in Christ who will read this letter. Although, according to the Prophet, one should glorify the Lord in his saints, it is fitting that one should praise especially in the one through whom eternal salvation has appeared to the human race, namely in the highly praised blessed Mary, the constant Virgin and Christ-bearer, praise and glorify God all the more gloriously, and the faithful in Christ, the chapels founded in His honor, worship Him all the more devoutly, the more this sanctified Virgin, who became a mother of our Savior, deserves to be highly honored before other saints in heaven and to be duly exalted above the angelic choirs. If, as we have heard, because of very many, even innumerable miraculous works, which the great and merciful God performs daily in praise and honor of the exalted Mother, namely the aforementioned Virgin Mary, in the faithful of Christ, when they devoutly call upon her in their needs, there is a great and popular pilgrimage of the faithful of Christ to the chapel of said Our Lady in Ziegenhain, Naumburg diocese, for the sake of devotion and to obtain remission of their sins, but we want that such devotion may blessedly increase from time to time, and that the faithful themselves may all the more gladly gather to invoke this glorious Virgin and to visit the said place for the sake of devotion, so that they may therefore see themselves all the more abundantly filled with the heavenly gift of grace: we graciously grant, trusting in the mercy of Almighty God and in the power of His blessed Apostles Peter and Paul, to all truly penitent and penitent persons who, on the feast of the Nativity of the blessed Virgin Mary, devoutly make a pilgrimage to the said chapel every year, and help in its construction and increase of the divine service.

1) In the old edition of Walch: 1454. But in the text it says 1453, and the latter is the seventh of Nicolaus V.

We have decided that those who will offer a helping hand, seven years and as many quadragenas of the fines imposed on them, but in such a way that after 20 years the present letter shall no longer be valid. We wish to add, however, that if for those who otherwise go on pilgrimage to the said chapel and offer a helping hand for the building and increase of the divine service, or otherwise give godly alms there, another bull of indulgence, which is to last permanently or for a certain time, perhaps not yet expired, had been issued by us, our present letter shall no longer be of any force and emphasis. Given at Rome at St. Peter's in the year after the birth of the Lord 1453, July 21, in the seventh year of our papal dignity.

(l. 8.)

Marcellus.

This letter of indulgence, together with the following and another letter of indulgence issued by Pope Paul II to this chapel in 1466, which has the same content as the one mentioned above, can still be seen in the original at the church in Ziegenhain, which lies near Jena; under this there is still a seal, on which Peter and Paul are written, with the inscription: SPASPE probably: 8.8. Uktru8f. A foreign hand has added outside: Nicolaus Pabst, the Fifth, mercifully grants indulgence for 7 years and as many quadragenas from the penances imposed on them.

m. Letter of indulgence from the Bishop of Naumburg for the chapel at Ziegenhain, Anno 1426.

From the "innocent news," 1731, p. 688.

John, by the grace of God and the Apostolic See, Bishop of Naumburg, wishes all and every believer in Christ, who will see or hear about this letter, salvation in Him who is the true power and the true salvation of all. The more she, as the Mother of God, deserves to be placed high above all the saints in heaven, the more pleasing it is to God, who rejoices in His saints when they are glorified, to pay homage to the blessed Mary, the constant Virgin. Therefore, as we wish that the chapel in the village of Ziegenhain, located in our diocese, which is named after the highly praised Virgin Mary, the comforter of all the abandoned, and has her as patroness, be visited often and much with due honor: we grant to all truly penitent and confessing persons who make a pilgrimage to the said chapel for the sake of devotion, perform their devotions there, serve at the masses, if any are to be read, and offer their sacrifices; also, under the ringing of the evening bells, with bended knees, three times the Ave Maria.

and will give their other alms for the building, ornaments, lights and other necessary things, in whatever way it may be done, trusting in the mercy of Almighty God and in the power of His blessed Apostles Peter and Paul, if and as often as they have done the things mentioned above, or one of the things mentioned above, 40 days' remission of the penances imposed on them, mercifully in the Lord; The apostolic bulls of indulgence, which have been granted by countless previous lords, archbishops and bishops to the said chapel, and which should still be granted in the future, are, as far as we are concerned, approved and valid in our diocese. Given in the year of our Lord 1425, the 28th day of October, with our seal attached to the present letter below.

(l. 8.)

n. Copy of a letter of indulgence issued under the papal government of Eugenii IV. [1431-1447].

This copy was first published by the Hamburg pastor M Nie. Hardkopf in 1617 in Latin and German. It is also found in both languages in the "Sammlung von alten und neuen theologischen Sachen", 1726, p. 187.

Dearest brothers in Christ! You have no doubt that God can do whatever He wills in heaven and on earth, so now we announce to you and know that God, through His marvelous omnipotence, sent a box, made by the disciples of the apostles from imperishable wood, full of God's glorious wonders, from Jerusalem to Africam, especially to the city of Carthaginem, from there to Hispalin, and again from there to Toledo in Asturiis to the holy church of St. Salvatoris. Salvatoris, in the place called Ovetum. In the opened chest, many more boxes of gold, silver and ivory were found, in which, when they were opened with great reverence, fear and trembling by holy men, they immediately saw several reports, information and registers about the inserted sanctuary. There they found Christ's palm, a jar full of Christ's blood, placed about to the side of an image that the Christians had made in Christ's image, and the old stubborn Jews had hung on a wood and opened its sides with a spear, from which water and blood flowed to strengthen the faith of Christ's suffering all the more. There they found of the right cross of the Lord, of the thorns the crown of the Lord, the tomb of the Lord, the robe of the Lord, the swaddling clothes in which the Lord lay wrapped in the manger, the bread of the Lord's supper, the bread with which the Lord fed 5,000 people, the manna which God rained on the children of Israel, the earth of the Mount of Olives on which the Lord stood when he was about to ascend to heaven and when he raised Lazarus; of the tomb of Lazari himself, of the milk of the mother of the Lord, of her hair and clothes; one of the thirty pieces of silver for which the Lord of Judah is sold; the mantle given by the Queen of Heaven (Mary) to St. Alphonso, Archbishop of Toledo; of the mantle of the prophet Elijah; the garment of St. Tyrso the Martyr, the hand of St. St. Stephen, the first martyr, the right slipper of St. Peter the Apostle, the forehead of St. John the Baptist and his hair; the bones of the holy innocent (children), limbs from the fingers of the three holy boys Ananiä, Azariä and Misael; the hair with which Mary Magdalene dried the feet of the Lord; the stone with which Christ's tomb was sealed, the olive branch which the Lord had in his hand at the Palm Festival; of the rock of Mount Sinai, on which Moses fasted; of the rod, so that Moses might divide the Red Sea for the children of Israel; the basket of Peter and Andrew, a piece of roasted fish and honey, and many other bodies of the holy martyrs and bones of the prophets, confessors and virgins, the number of which is known to God alone. Besides the above-mentioned box, there are the bodies of the holy martyrs and martyrs' daughters, Eulogii and Lucretiä, and St. Eulalia and the virgin Emerentia, St. Pelagii and St. Vincentii, martyrs and abbots, St. Pope Juliani, and the body of King Casti, who founded and endowed the church. There is shown a cross made by the angels; there is one of the six stone water jars in which the Lord made water into wine.

But whoever is called by God to visit, by divine inspiration, such precious and glorious jewels of the holy martyrs, he shall know that the third part of his sins shall be remitted to him by the bishop of the place or his authorized representative, by apostolic power granted to the bishop and his own (by the pope); but with imposition of due satisfaction and penalties.

The brethren of the same church also have a plenary indulgence to be granted by the pope to any man who desires it, for a thousand and four hundred years, six quarters and a half. Yes, also

The present pope, Eugenius IV, and other Roman popes, by their apostolic letters of bull, wish to give true penance and confession to all those who attend the above-mentioned church, and to offer a helping hand for the further edification of the church, on the day which will come before the feast of the Exaltation of the Cross of Christ, in addition to the preceding and following fifteen days, perfect forgiveness of all their sins, and especially in the last hour, indulgence herewith for eternity.

†

So the red cross is talking:

The devils depart from me swiftly, Even fever, pestilence and great wind, I am a protection in all danger, In childish distress even so hard.

o. Pope Boniface IX's letter of indulgence for the Church of Our Lady in Dresden.

1398. 1)

From the "innocent news," 1714, p. 375.

Bonifacius Bishop, a servant of the servants of God, wishes salvation and apostolic blessing to all believers in Christ who will receive this letter. If we devoutly contemplate the great glory of the merits with which the Queen of Heaven, the Virgin, who is a praiseworthy God-bearer, is resplendent in the sky as a shining morning star; if we also consider in our hearts that she, as a mother of mercy, grace and piety, a kind comforter of the human race, a diligent and vigilant intercessor, intercedes with the King whom she begot for the salvation of the faithful who are pressed by the burden of sins: In our opinion, it is proper, indeed we consider it a duty, that we should entice the faithful to the constant veneration and perpetual remembrance of this Virgin, as it were by gifts, and stimulate them by indulgences and forgiveness of sins, so that they may thereby become more capable of divine grace. Since we have heard that this venerable Virgin has performed many miracles in the Chapel of the Holy Cross by divine power, and in this

1) The date of this document in the old edition of Walch "1458" is in any case incorrect. Bonifacius IX was pope from 1389 to 1404. The tenth year of his pontificate was 1398: we have also put this in the text below. The error will have arisen by reading the Latin number MCCCXCVIII.

In addition, in honor and out of reverence for the highly praised Virgin, a chant in two choirs of this praiseworthy Virgin, which begins: Salve Regina misericordiae, is to be solemnly and devoutly sung by the clergy of said city every day, namely at evening time, and that at this singing a large number of people from this city are present with devotion: We want the faithful in Christ to gather all the more gladly for the sake of devotion at this singing, so that they may be filled all the more abundantly with the heavenly gift, and, trusting in the mercy of Almighty God, and by the command of His blessed Apostles Peter and Paul, we mercifully grant an indulgence of 40 days from the penances imposed on them to all truly penitent and confessing persons who visit this chapel at the time of the devotional singing; which is to be understood from each day in which they will visit this chapel and be present at the singing, as mentioned above. We also intend that if any other indulgence should be given by us to the believers in Christ who will attend this absolution, either in perpetuity or for a certain time not yet elapsed, the present letter shall be of no force or effect. Given at Rome by St. Peter, April 30 [1398] in the 10th year of our papal reign.

We Caspar, by the grace of God and the Apostolic See, Bishop of Meissen, consider the indulgence copied to be valid, accept it, ratify and confirm it presently, and mercifully grant for us in the Lord another 40 days' indulgence from the penances imposed on them to all truly penitent and confessing persons who have complied with the above. Our seal is attached herewith to confirm the letter. In the year of our Lord 1398, July 5.

(4., 8.) Johann von Pempelvorde.

p. Letter of indulgence from 1470.

This letter of indulgence has been printed twice by Walch by mistake, which Walch has already noted, namely here and sub No. 10. We leave it out here.

q. Letter of indulgence for the church at Weickershahn, 1470.

From the "innocent news," 1711, p. 935.

Guilielmus of Ochen, Philip of Albano, Richardus to St. Eusebio, Angelus 1) to St.

1) Here and in the following, in the old edition of Walch, there is always a pleonastic "and" between the names of persons and places. We have omitted this.

Cross in Jerusalem, Bartholomew to St. Clement, Jacobus to St. Chrysogono, Oliverius to St. Marcellino and St. Petro, Rodericus to St. Nicolai in the Tullian Prison, Franciscus to St. Eustachio, Franciscus to St. Maria Nova, by divine mercy of the Holy Roman Church bishops, priests and deacons, cardinals of Rouen, Boulogne, Coutance, Rennes, Ravenna, Pavia, Naples, vice-chancellors of Siena and Mantua, all and everyone constant salvation in the Lord.

Considering reverently and attentively the sublime and excellent merits by which the glorious Virgin Mary gives off her radiance like a bright morning star, and finding that she, as the Mother of mercy and source of all godliness, pleads diligently with her Son, whom she bore, for those who are hard-pressed with sins, we deem it just and right that we grant a rich indulgence to the churches consecrated in her honor. We therefore wish that the church of our Lady in Weickershahn, Merseburg diocese, be visited by the faithful with due reverence, and that the faithful themselves gather in the same devotion all the more willingly and gladly, the more abundantly they will see themselves filled and refreshed with the heavenly gifts of grace; and out of heartfelt trust in the mercy of Almighty God, and in the majesty and power of His blessed Apostles Peter and Paul, grant to all and everyone truly penitent and confessing, the said church on the feast of the Annunciation, Ascension, Nativity and Visitation of the Blessed Virgin Mary, The Cardinals of the Holy See; we the aforesaid Cardinals, and each one of us in particular, for each such day, out of mercy in the Lord, for 100 days' indulgence from the penalties imposed upon them, which shall last the present and future time. For the authentication and testimony of all and each of the aforesaid bishops, we have executed the present letter, and have caused the same to be kept with our attached seal. Given at Rome in our ordinary palace, in the year following the birth of the Lord 1470, January 1, of the papal dignity of our Lord Paul, by divine providence of Pabst the Other, in the sixth year.

r. Letter of indulgence from the church at Pfafroda in Meissen, issued in 1480.

From the "innocent news," 1712, p. 688.

Guilielmus at Ostia, Oliverius at Albano, Marcus at Preneste, bishops; Stephen at St. Mary in Transsiberinis, John at St. Cecilia, John at St. Marcello, Jerome at St. Sergio and Bacho, Gabriel at St. Chrsogono, priests; and Franciscus at St. Eustachio, and Raphael to St. Georgio, Diaconi, by divine mercy of the Holy Roman Church Cardinals, to all and every believer in Christ who will read or hear of this letter, constant salvation in the Lord. The more we encourage the minds of the faithful to devotion, the more salutary we also provide for their souls' blessedness. We therefore wish that the Parochial Church in Pfafenroda, Meissen diocese, for which, as we have heard, Caspar de Schonenberg, beloved to us in Christ, in said diocese, bears a special respect, be visited with due honor, always held in high esteem by the believers in Christ, and properly maintained in its adornment and construction, and handled, as well as duly provided with missals, chalices, lights and other church ornaments, not less the service therein be more frequently performed; and that the Christian faithful themselves prefer to assemble there for worship, or to lend a hand for its construction and other aforementioned things, so that they may see themselves all the more richly filled with the heavenly gift of grace: and out of heartfelt trust in the mercy of Almighty God and the high authority of His blessed Apostles Peter and Paul, grant to all and every believer of both sexes who do true penance, confess their sins, and visit the said church on the second day of Pentecost and the eighth day of the Feast of Corpus Christi, also on the feast of the consecration of the church from the first evening until the next inclusive every year with devotion, and give assistance to the building and other works mentioned before; We, the said Cardinals, and each of us in authority, for each of the feast days mentioned, on which they will do this, graciously grant the Lord a 100-day remission of the penances imposed on them, so that the same shall be valid at all times in the future. To certify and attest all that has been said, we have had the present letter drawn up and sealed with our Cardinal seals. Given at Rome in our palaces, in the year following the birth of the Lord 1480, on the thirteenth of the Roman Kalends (indictione), on the twelfth day of the month of May.

Month of April [1480], of the Pontificate of Lord Sixti, Pope IV, in the ninth year.

And we John, by the grace of God and the Apostolic See, Bishop of Meissen. lish See, Bishop of Meissen, consider the aforementioned most reverend fathers' letter of indulgence in Christ to be valid, accept it in the aforementioned ordinary form by virtue of our sovereignty and power, confirm and affirm it also by present letters, and nevertheless graciously grant, on our behalf, to all and every penitent and confessing faithful of both sexes who comply with the above, as often as they will do so, a 40-day indulgence from the penances imposed on them, so that the present one shall be permanently valid in the future. Given in our castle Stolpen, in the year of the Lord 1480, on Friday, July 12. [From the Pfafenrod original, which is preserved in the Schönberg archives, this letter has been communicated

Johannes Frider. Gauhe, Past. Ober-Neu-Schönb.]

s. A letter of indulgence for the church St. Kiliani at Westhausen, from Anno 1500.

From the "innocent news," 1720, p. 183.

Oliverius of Salina, and John of Portua, George of Alba (Aube), and Jerome of Penestre, bishops; Ludovicus John of the title of the Four Crowned, Dominicus of the title of St. Clement, John Anthony of the title of St. Nerei and Archilei, Bernardinus of the title of the Holy Cross in Jerusalem, Raymundus of the title of St. Vitalis, John of the title of St. Priscæ, and Wilhelmus of the title of St. Pudencianæ, Cardinal Priests by the Grace of God of the Holy Roman Church; Franciscus to St. Eustachii, Raphael to St. Georgii of the Golden Curtain (Veli), John to St. Maria in Dompinca, Fridericus to St. Theodore, Julianus to St. Cosma and Damiani, Cardinaldiaconi, to all and every believer in Christ who will read this letter, constant salvation in the Lord.

Among other churches of the saints, those consecrated to the honor of St. Kilian the Martyr deserve to be venerated more solemnly, because the fighter of Christ for his name's confession fought in fervent love in the Lord, endured suffering, and gloriously completed martyrdom, triumphing with other saints in heaven.

Because we then request that the parish church of said Saint Kilian the Martyr, in Westhausen, Würzburg district, be visited with proper honor and diligently venerated by the faithful and properly maintained and protected in buildings and shelter, and also properly provided with books, chalices, lights and other church decorations, The more they find the gift of divine grace there in abundance, the more willingly they will offer their hands for its preservation and other things we have said above: We, the above-mentioned Cardinals, and each one of them, by the grace of Almighty God and trusting in the power of St. Peter and St. Paul, his Apostles, want all and every believer in Christ, of both sexes, to do true penance and confession, and to celebrate the said Chapel at Christmas and Easter of our Lord Jesus Christ, likewise on the feast of the said St. Martyr Ciliano, and the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and on the consecration of this church, from the first to the second vespers, and to lend a helping hand to the above, for all and each of the said feasts and days, when they do so, 100 days of the penances imposed upon them are hereby graciously remitted in the Lord, to apply from now on to all future times. In witness whereof we have caused this letter of ours to be executed, and have caused our seal to be affixed thereto. Given in Rome in our houses, Anno 1500, the 7th of July, of the Papal Government of the Most Holy in Christ the Father and of our Lord, Lord Alexandri, by Divine Providence Pope VI, in the 8th year.

A. Binenperger.

To all and every believer in Christ who will read our present letter, salvation in the Lord, by the grace of God, Bishop of Wuerzburg and Duke of Oriental Franconia. We have seen and found the letter of indulgence of the most reverend in Christ fathers and lords cardinals and bishops, which is sealed with their true oblong seals, which, as you can see here, are attached to it, to which our letter is also attached, completely and unharmed, nowhere crossed out, or otherwise suspicious in any place, but completely without any defect, injury or suspicion. Therefore, we, the same Cardinals, for the following of all and every believer in Christ, of both sexes, who are quite penitent, repentant and confessed, and who devoutly visit the parish church of St. Kilian the Martyr at Westhausen, of our Würzburg district, on the feasts and days contained in said apostolic letter, and which

If they do so often, by the grace of Almighty God, and of St. Peter and St. Paul, His apostles, and of the holy martyrs Kiliani, Colonati and Totuani, patrons of our Wuerzburg churches, and by virtue of their merits, and by virtue of their authority and trust therein, we graciously grant a 40-day indulgence from the penances imposed on them in the Lord, so that it may remain so now and at all future times. In witness whereof we have caused to be affixed to this letter the seal of our Vicariate, which we require for this purpose. Given in our city of Würzburg, Anno 1500, on the day of St. Augustine, bishop and martyr. Joh. Hickerich, Procurator Fisci, wrote it.

t. Memlebian letter of indulgence. 1503.

From the "Innocent news," 1712, p. 923.

We John, by the grace of God and the Apostolic See, Bishop of the Sidonian Churches, Professor of the Holy Scriptures, of our in Christ blessed Prince and Lord, Lord Bertholdi, by the grace of God, Archipräsulis of the Holy See of Mainz, in spiritual matters Vicarius General, know beforehand, by the grace of God the Holy Spirit, which is always with us and cooperates with us, that the Parochial Church of the Parish of Memleben has been rebuilt with ordinary and due solemnities and provided and preserved with a graveyard. We hereby publicly declare and confess to all and every believer in Christ who, for the sake of devotion, with true contrition and sadness over their sins, visit said church on the feast days of the Nativity and Circumcision of Christ, the Three Kings, Palm Day, Green Thursday, Easter, the Ascension of the Lord, Pentecost, the Feast of the Holy Trinity, Corpus Christi and the Day of All Saints, as well as the memorial days of other saints of the true Church, St. Michael the Archangel, and others. etc, or on any feast day of the blessed Mother of God and on the church consecration feast, which is celebrated annually on St. Martin's Sunday for eight days. Also those who, for the salvation of the departed souls of the faithful, pray around the churchyard five paternosters and as many Hail Marys, and when the church bell is rung in the evening, say the angelic greeting three times with devotion and bent knees, or follow the Venerable when it is carried to the sick; not less those who, for the preservation of the divine service and increase of the church ornaments, are helpful to the church.

The Holy Spirit shall grant them an indulgence in the Lord for eleven days, out of heartfelt trust in the grace of the Almighty God and in the majesty of the Holy Apostles Peter and Paul, and shall also remit a fast from the penitential exercises imposed on them. This was done in the year of the Lord 1503, June 26, under our attached seal.

u. Letter of indulgence granted by Pope Leo X to the large parish church of St. Mary in Gdansk in 1516.

From Schelwig's "Prüfung des Pabstthums," p. 419.

Leo, the bishop, a servant of the servants of God, wishes salvation and apostolic blessing to all believers in Christ who will read this letter. In devoutly contemplating the excellent merits of the unspeakably praised Virgin and Mother of God, Mary, we deem it just and right that we grant a rich indulgence to the churches sanctified in her name, and honor her with an indulgence and a bull of grace. Now we have already at other times granted indulgences to all and every believer in Christ of both sexes, where they have done true penance, confessed their sins, or presented themselves for confession, and to the parish church of St. Mary in the city of Gdansk. St. Mary's of the city of Gdansk, Vladislav diocese, belonging to the beloved son, Mauritio Ferber, the superior of this church and of the disputes occurring in the papal palace, Notario, our acquaintance, on all feast days, the Visitation, the Ascension, the Nativity, the Purification and the Annunciation of St. Mary, from the first evening until the setting of the sun on the aforementioned feast days, The saints, who would devoutly make a pilgrimage every year, and also offer a helping hand for its construction, preservation, handling and safekeeping, would be mercifully granted a remission of 50 years and so many quadragenas from the penances imposed on them, as is more extensively contained in our bull issued on this matter. In order that the Feast of the Conception of the Blessed Virgin Mary may be kept and celebrated with equal importance, we wish to have the above-mentioned Bull, with all and every clause contained therein, extended and enlarged to this feast as well. Given in Rome at St. Peter's, in the year after the birth of the Lord 1516, April 14, in the fourth year of our papal dignity.

v. The diploma of indulgence, with which Pope Leo X adorned the Church of Trier, especially in the presentation of Christ's skirt. 1515.¹)

Leo, bishop, servant of Christ's servants, to all believers in Christ who will see this letter, salvation (greeting) and apostolic blessing!

Our Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, in order to reconcile the human race, which was condemned to eternal death by our first father's transgression, to the heavenly Father, wanted to descend from the high heavenly seat on the earth of this world, to take on flesh from the virgin body, and finally to suffer temporal death voluntarily on the altar of the cross, in order to lay down the burden of sin. Therefore we, who, though by insufficient merits, administer his place by his holy providence on earth, following his footsteps, provoke the sheep of his flock, so commanded to our care, to sincerity, devotion and holy works of love by spiritual gifts, namely indulgences and forgiveness of sins, so that they may thereby attain the fruit of the suffering of Jesus and the salvation desired by all, and become worthy to come to the joy of eternal blessedness.

Since (as we have heard from the venerable brother of ours, Richard, Archbishop of Trier, through his ambassadors dispatched to us and to the apostolic see to take the oath of allegiance) the church of Trier first received the faith under St. Peter, the prince of the apostles, before all the churches in Germany and France, from the teachers Eucharion, Valerio and Materno, and received the supreme see over all the churches lying beyond the Alpine mountains because of its venerable antiquity; Also, in the following time, by the blessed Helena, Constantine Magni's mother (who consecrated her royal house, which she had in Trier, magnificently built and endowed, and with various relics (after she herself, the blessed Helena, came back from Jerusalem, after the invention of the holy cross and nails of the Lord, with the consent and favor of the most holy Pope Silvester), namely the unsewn skirt of our Lord Jesus Christ, and one of the nails with which the same our Savior was crucified, likewise with the head of St. Cornelius the Pope and Martyr, and other holy relics. Cornelius the Pope and Martyr, and other holy relics, and was made so famous by said Constantino and other emperors' gifts, that it was considered and deserved to be called the other Rome and a ruler of the lands, and among all the churches of Germany and Gaul (France) the first; but alas! Afterwards, since it stood firm in defense of the Roman Church and the Catholic faith, it suffered the terrible persecution of the tyrants for a long time, and was finally brought to ruin by Attila, the Huns, Greeks, Wends, Norsemen and other enemies of the faith, devastated and devastated, also deprived of gold, silver and precious jewels and jewels (iocalibus et clenodiis), and brought to such poverty that they can be maintained and maintained in their buildings, ceremonies, services after dignities impossible: We, who desire that the said church of Trier be diligently attended with due honor, and (as its reputation and the unseamed skirt and nail of our Lord's most venerable devotion, and of St. Peter, prince of the apostles, and St. Corneli, bishop of Rome, should be) that the church of St. Peter should be maintained in its buildings, ceremonies, and services according to dignity. Corneli, bishop and martyr, whose and many other saints' relics are known to rest there, require merit) be well provided and adorned with befitting and splendid buildings, quantity of clergy, variety of ceremonies and other necessities belonging to the divine service, and the congregation of the Christian faithful, whose assistance the said church at Trier needs at such time, the more willingly, for the sake of devotion, approach it and the sooner extend their hand to the said things, the more abundantly they find the grace extended, out of the very same almighty God's grace and the most holy Peter's and Paul's, his apostles', power, and in trusting in it decided, all and everyone of both sexes to be justly penitent and confessed, or who intend to repent and confess, the said church at Trier and the relics kept there every seven years, if the Palladium at Aaken, of the episcopal district of Liège, so every seventh year on the 7th day of July. of the month of July and is celebrated 14 days in succession, from the 7th day of the same month of July and the 14 days in succession.

1) The old edition of Walch has the date "1511", which is incorrect. Leo X was installed as pope on April 1, 1513, therefore this document, which is dated January 26, is to be placed in the year 1515. Cf. 1^o601118 X. iLsMstn, edited by Cardinal Hergenröther, Freiburg im Breisgau, 1884, tasooulj xriini, x. 3.

We are pleased to inform you that we will visit you once in the next few days and extend our hands to you for the above, to grant you complete indulgence and forgiveness of your sins, which we hereby grant.

But those who on one day of the feasts of Christmas, Easter, Pentecost, and the Assumption, and on the day of the consecration (or Kirchmeß) of such a church of Trier, and on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday in the great week (Marterwoche) every year [will do so], to them we grant 100 years and so many quadragens of indulgence. But those who visit the said church every day and offer their hands; likewise those who will attend the singing of the mass, the brotherhood of the faithful, established under the name of said relics, in the very church of Trier every day, likewise the annual days and commemorations of the deceased brothers of said brotherhood, which are solemnly celebrated every four seasons (Quatember), and will extend their hands in the same way, to them we grant 1 year and 1 quadragen of indulgence in the Lord, from the penances imposed on them. And that the believers in Christ, who come to the church at Trier in time to obtain such indulgences, become the more skillful for it (we want) that said Richard, the time archbishop in Trier, and said son's chapter of the Trier church, as many in the same church are common (secular) clergy, or also all, also the mendicant order monks, as much as seem good or enough to him; and the same believers in Christ, who come to the said church in Trier to obtain this indulgence, after diligently hearing their confession, from all and every sentence of excommunication, suspension and interdict, and what church sentences are more; also from excommunication and punishments, which are inflicted by law or by men, on whatever occasion and for whatever cause, in which they might have been imprisoned at the time; likewise of all sins, transgressions, and vices or crimes, however grave and great they may be, and otherwise belonging to the apostolic see alone (except in cases of infringement of the liberty of the church, heresy, insurrection, or conspiracy against the person or state of the Roman Pontiff, or the very see); forging apostolic letters, petitions and commissions, invading, plundering, taking countries and lakes directly or indirectly subject to the said Roman Church, tampering with the person of a bishop or prelate, forbidding things that have fallen to the Roman court, bringing weapons or other forbidden things to the infidels), absolving them and imposing sanctions for the sins committed.

1) In Walch's old edition, "Passadium ^or perhaps Palladium."

The church may be converted into a penitential church, likewise all vows for the work and benefit of the said church and its construction, and the reported relics ornamentation, and have the power to order freely and without hindrance.

And that the offerings, revenues and alms, and everything else given by the said faithful in the said 7 years and otherwise, to obtain this indulgence, to the said church at Trier of the time, shall be used for the building and adornment of the church at Trier and the said relics, and to no other use, we command by virtue of this; We also order and expressly testify that this present letter does not include or include under any revocation (or withdrawal), inhibition or restriction of any indulgence, even the plenary indulgence, which we and the said See have also omitted for the building of the cathedral church of the very same Prince of the Apostles in the city, with some points of annulment, also other stronger and more powerful means of inhibition (or articles) hitherto and according to time, but shall be entirely exempted therefrom, and if it should often appear to have been included and enclosed thereunder, shall at all times be restored to its former state and to such a state as it was before, and shall be completely replenished and exempted, and shall be respected therefor, without any apostolic statute and order, or anything else contrary thereto, ever being able to or being intended to do anything against it, from now on, at all future times. Given in Rome at St. Peter's, A. C. 1515, the 26th of January, in the 2nd year of our papacy.

[This letter of indulgence was communicated by the said Prince Richard, as Metropolitan Archbishop, and made known through the subordinate districts of Metz, Tulle and Verdun; as is evident from the letter which I find written to Hugo Hajardi. For thus he writes:]

Venerable in Christ Father, dearest friend! Our most holy Pope Leo X, on account of the most holy unsewn skirt of our Lord Jesus Christ and other holy relics, which are kept in our Church of Trier, of praise, glory and veneration, has given and made known to our Church, through our district and country, a total indulgence 2c. Therefore, we ask him, 1) to kindly hear, accept and handle the ambassadors (whom the apostolic commissarii, and the venerable, strict, our faithful and dear ones, the provost, dean and chapter of said church, send through your districts for the same indulgence proclamation).

so that they may proclaim the indulgences themselves, the contents of the apostolic letters, all the more easily, erect the cross at the proper places for the end, and carry out everything else that is required for the matter without hindrance. In this, your paternity will not only show God a pleasing and the supreme pope a pleasant work, but also me a special favor.

Eilenberg letter of indulgence. 1518. 2)

Raphael of Ostia, Bernardinus of Salina, Dominicus, but afterwards also Franciscus at Preneste, bishops; Peter of the title of St. Eusebii, Adrianus of the title of St. Sabinä, Scaramutia of the title of St. Cpriaci in Thermis, and Ferdinandus of the title of St. Pancratii, presbyters; 3) Alexander St. Eustachii, Marcus [of] St. Mary novae, Amaneus of St. Nicolai in the Tullian dungeon, and Sigismundus St. Mary novae, by God's grace of the Holy Roman Church' Cardinaldiaconi, to all and every believer in Christ who will read this open letter, constant salvation in the Lord.

The more often we move the minds of the faithful to works of love, the better we counsel the salvation of their souls. Because we then desire that the parish church of St. Nicolai in Eilenberg, 4) Magdeburg district, be visited with due honor. Nicolai in Eilenberg, 4) Magdeburg district, be attended with due honor and be diligently honored by the faithful and duly improved, preserved and maintained in its construction and buildings, also with books, chalices, lights, church decorations, The more they see that they enjoy the gift of heavenly grace there more abundantly, the more willingly the Christian faithful will go there and lend a helping hand for the renewal, preservation, maintenance and care of the same: Thus we, the Cardinals, each one of us for himself, have received from our beloved in Christ M. Hermann Rabs, of the Order of Friars Preachers, and Provincial of the Land of Saxony, according to the use of such Order, which in this case has fallen to us.

2) Walch did not specify the source from which this writing flowed.

3) In Walch's old edition: "Pbit." which we have resolved by "Presbyter."

4) In the old edition of Walch it says here: "Eulenberg", but it will probably mean the town of Eilenburg, which is in Prussian Saxony.

1) "him" and the immediately following "he" are the person addressed, not the third.

The Holy See, by the grace of Almighty God and in reliance on the authority of St. Peter and St. Paul, His Apostles, has decided to grant the petition of the Holy Father, and has decreed that all and every believer in Christ, of both sexes, who do true penance and confession, shall attend the said church on all the holy evenings of St. Anne and the feast of the same saint, including the three days immediately following the feast of St. Anne, from the first to the second Vespers, shall devoutly attend the said church every year. Anne, and the feast itself of the same saint, as well as on the three days immediately following the feast of the same saint Anna, from the first to the second vespers included, devoutly visit the said church yearly and lend a helping hand to the aforesaid things, for each of the said feast and days, when they will do so, 100 days of the penances imposed on them by this present letter, which shall henceforth be perpetual. In witness whereof we have caused this letter to be executed and our seal to be affixed thereto. A. D. 1518, the 25th of the month of May, of the Pabbacy but of our most holy in Christ Father and Lord Leonis, by divine providence of the X, in the 6th year.

B. The pope has exorcised money by pretending to pay the Turk tax.

6 Pabst's complete indulgence against the Turks, written out by Nicolaus V. 1453.

From Lüttig's Oerm. äiplomat. saera, pars I, p. 338. Translated into German.

Nicolaus V. for future remembrance of the cause.

Long ago a very fierce enemy and very cruel persecutor of the church of Christ arose, namely Mahomet, the child of the devil, the child of perdition, the child of death, who at the same time wants to devour the souls together with the bodies, with his father, the devil, thirsting for Christian blood, a very fierce and bloodthirsty enemy of the redemption made by our Saviour Christ Jesus, who is to be taken for that great red dragon, having seven heads and ten horns, and on his heads seven crowns, which John saw in Revelation; who with his tail drew the third part of the stars and threw them on the earth, taking over almost all the Orient, together with Egypt and Africa, and forced to imitate his ungodliness by taking the holy city

Jerusalem was desecrated, the holy places were torn down, and the believers of Christ were scolded, scourged, imprisoned and tortured with the most humiliating ways of death. Nevertheless, Divine Providence has preserved the church of those believers who are pleasing to Him in His most hidden judgment, and has not allowed the enemy to play the master over them until this day.

Recently, however, another Mahomet arose in our times, a follower of that godlessness who burns with the heat of an all too great thirst to shed Christian blood, who, raging against the name of Christ, like a wild, raging beast, forgetting all humanity, when he could rage against our head with nothing but empty words, against its members, that is, against its believers, to spit out, pour out and spit out his rage and nonsense, as if the stomach wanted to throw up. He has recently taken control of the city of Constantinople, which was defeated by the Christians in a hard siege and war, desecrated all the temples and holy places there, and trampled underfoot the relics of the saints, the holy images of our Lord Jesus Christ and of His most glorious Mother and of the life-giving Cross, after they had been thrown to the earth, devastated, destroyed, covered with shame and disgrace, and defiled with dung and impure matter for mockery and ridicule. This true harbinger of the Antichrist, and as it were the other Sennacherib, boasts in his strength and the multitude of his people, that with his power he can assert the whole Occident and wipe out the Christian name from the earth, completely furious and mad, as if he could exceed God's power. Therefore we, who are the, though unworthy, governors of the one to whom Christ entrusted his church; for he promised that the gates of hell should not overpower it; and to whom he gave the command that he should strengthen the weak brethren by his conversion, saying: "I have prayed for you, Peter, that your faith may not cease, and when you are converted one day, strengthen your brethren, for the present, that the service of our ministry may be required by the church. Therefore, with our venerable Cardinals of the Holy Roman Church, we have deemed it good to advise and consent to the matter as follows.

First and foremost, we admonish all Christian princes, they may be emperors, kings, queens, princes, or other secular rulers; ver-

By virtue of the confession made in holy baptism, and by virtue of the oath they have taken, they decree and command that they may, to the best of their ability, truly contribute to the defense of the Christian religion and faith as the islands of their dignities. They have taken the isles of their dignities, that they may truly and unceasingly do their part in defense of the Christian religion and faith with good and blood, according to their ability, as those who will receive the eternal reward from Him whose cause they lead, both in this present life and in the life to come; because we believe at present that everyone is concerned with the necessity of welfare, it being such a necessary thing from which no one can lawfully withdraw. We likewise admonish, demand, remind and command the other lords, or communities, or whatever other lords they may have, in virtue of the faith which they have once professed, that they may bravely and persistently contribute their share to the defense of religion and faith with all their strength and with all their power, than those who will have that protector who in one night by his angel killed 185,000 in the army of Sennacherib, and who otherwise in great dangers did not leave his church and did not allow his enemies to boast of their godlessness. To all, however, of whatever rank, dignity and order they may be, who are personally present in such great distress to the church and the faith, and who will remain six months from the beginning of the present February, they may be clergy or laity, or they may possess ecclesiastical or secular dignities, we, by authority of Almighty God and the blessed Apostles Peter and Paul, and also by authority of the power conferred upon us from above, grant complete remission and pardon of all their sins, such as were granted by our forefathers to those who journeyed to the Holy Land for help, and such as were also granted by them and ourselves in the Jubilee Year of Christendom.

He adds that also those should share in the indulgence who, since they themselves cannot go to the field, would provide a soldier in their place, as well as the monasteries of monks and nuns who would provide one man for every ten who lived in the monastery for the whole half year, should enjoy this benefit. So he writes about the acceptance of the Krennzeichen:

By apostolic power we command that as many as have committed themselves to the holy work announced beforehand shall put the salutary sign of the life-giving cross on their garments and carry on their shoulders the memory of him through whose suffering they were redeemed from eternal damnation, and follow the one whom, since he started on the way to our salvation, his dominion was on his shoulder, and who, reminding us to follow in his footsteps, says: Whoever wants to follow me, deny himself, take up his cross, and follow me.

But since, in order to bring this about, it is necessary to spend almost innumerable sums of money in order to provide what is necessary for the cause, since this is a work of faith and of the entire Christian religion, to which all, no one excepted, are obligated according to the requirements of welfare: We decree and decree in particular that all benefits and revenues of our apostolic chamber, of all and every benefice, whether large or small, whether archbishopric, bishopric, abbey, or other benefice, and by whatever name they may be called, which belong to us, shall be kept exposed to this holy work, whole, intact, and without any abridgement.

And further down it says:

Moreover, the venerable Cardinals of the Holy Roman Church, our brothers, for which they offered themselves voluntarily and out of a free spirit, will pay a whole tithe of the common revenues of the chapel, as well as of all churches and their benefices, for such a holy and good work, entirely and without any deduction. And because it is contrary to the law, to which the head of the church is committed for the love of Christ, that one of the lower degree or order should arbitrarily withdraw, but it is indeed proper that all, whether prelates or people of lower order, should submit to this burden: We wish, and by this present decree we establish, that the tenth part of the income of all offices of the Roman Court, they may have whatever names they wish, even those held by the Vice-Chancellor, Chamberlain and Majorem poenitentiarum, of the Holy Roman Church Cardinals, to which these same Cardinals voluntarily offered themselves, be paid in full for such a sacred work. Which, in order that it may be taken into account by all of the lower order, we will and decree that all who embezzle and do not pay the reported tithes in full shall be subjected to banishment and the removal of their offices.

And because all this, as a small part, would not be sufficient for such a great cause, if the prelates and other clergy of the churches, who are scattered throughout Christendom, did not give their help and contribution, we, with the advice and consent of our brothers, the venerable Cardinals of the Holy Roman Church, set up a new church, the tenth part of all benefits, according to the true value, of all ecclesiastical benefactors in the whole world, of patriarchates, archbishoprics, bishoprics, abbeys and all other benefactors, they may have names as they like, either large or small, ecclesiastical, free or not free, regularium and not regularium, whatever their rank, order and nature, without any exception, by authority of our apostolic power, for such a holy work.

Which, in order that it may be carried out all the more forcefully, we want to subject to excommunication those who contradict, disobey, or withhold.

After a few interjections, he forbids not to supply the enemy with provisions and arrows, and he threatens such false Christians with severe punishments. Finally, he adds:

But because we see that it is especially necessary for the execution of this holy work that kings and princes, and whatever rulers possess in Christendom, may have and keep peace, we decree by the power of Almighty God that general peace be kept in the whole of Christendom: So that by the prelates of the churches the unpeaceful may be brought to peace; or, if peace could not take place at all, only the standstill (treugae) may be observed without interruption; and, if some do not know how to keep the peace, the individual persons may be enjoined by banishment, but the communities may be enjoined to observe it by an interdict. No one for this reason 2c. Given at Rome in 1453, the last of September, in the 7th year of our papal dignity.

7. an old letter of indulgence from the first papal commissary of general indulgences, Marinus de Fregeno, dated 1457.

From Löscher's Reformation Acts, Vol. I, p. 361.

Translated into German.

To all and everyone who reads this letter, we, Marinus de Fregeno, experienced in canon law, Subdiaconus in the Diocese of Parmen, and by the Most Holy Father in Christ and our Lord, Lord Calixtus, according to the providence of God, the third Roman Pontiff of that name, for the sale of the indulgence granted by this most holy Father and Pontiff for the defense of the Christian faith against the Turks in Norway, Gothland and Lithuania, as well as in the provinces and regions of the Holy Roman Empire.

I, the appointed commissioner of the bishoprics of Middelburg and Lemberg, as well as in the cities and towns belonging to the bishoprics of Bamberg and Münster, declare and know that Sophia von Emenckin, as she confirms in her conscientious statement, has contributed to the aforementioned blessed business of defending the true Christian faith, and has given her indulgence at the designated place in accordance with the ordinance. Accordingly, any secular or ordained priest whom she shall choose as confessor shall, by virtue of apostolic sovereignty, have the power and authority to absolve her from all sins and such cases as the Roman See has reserved for itself, as well as from all ecclesiastical censure, if he has first directed her to salutary penance according to the nature of her transgressions, and to do that which a sinner should reasonably observe, but to grant her, on her deathbed, a complete remission of all her sins, which she will repent of and confess, and that, as such is expressed in the Papal Manifesto which we have at hand, this shall be done in life under this formula: Our Lord Jesus Christ be gracious to you, and count you worthy to be absolved from your sins; and I, according to the papal authority given me in this piece, absolve you from all public punishment of banishment, suspension and interdict, no less also from all your sins recognized, known and forgotten. In the last hour of death, however, the confessor may add the words: And I also remit to you all the punishment that you would have to endure in purgatory because of your sin, and hereby grant you a plenary indulgence, which the Church is accustomed to grant only to those who undertake a crusade to Rome in the great year of jubilee, or to the Holy Land marked with a cross, in order to conquer it again, in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, amen. The aforesaid confessor shall also be at liberty to change any and all vows made into other works of godliness, depending on what seems to be beneficial and profitable for the souls, with the exception of the vow to go by sea to the holy land, as well as the vow of constant chastity, the monastic vow, and whatever else is vowed to the apostles Peter, Paul, and James. So that this may be fully believed and no one may doubt it, we have issued the present letter of indulgence and had it sealed with our seal. Given in the year of Christ 1457, the fifth of November.

8. another indulgence letter sold by Marinus de Fregeno Anno 1458 to Annen von Czorba, prioress, and fourteen nuns.

From Kapp's "Nachlese nützlicher Reformationurkunden," Theil III, p. 66.

To all and everyone who will see the present letter, we, Marinus de Fregeno, scholar of canon law, Sub-Diaconus of the Diocese of Parma, by the Most Holy Father in Christ and our Lord, Lord Calixto the Third, Roman Pontiff, by divine providence, for the granting of the indulgence given by our most holy Pontiff for the defense of the Christian religion against the Turks, in the kingdoms and principalities of Norway, Gothland and Lithuania, as well as in the provinces and bishoprics of Middelburg 1) and Lemberg, and also in the Bamberg and Münster bishoprics, towns and villages, and to know that the devout and God-fearing Lady Anna of Czorba, Prioress, for herself, and Anna Belerin, Elisabeth von Ossenbrig, Catharina Mussebach, Margaretha von Wissenbach, Catharina Grist, Barbara Heldorfs, Gertrud Heldorfs, Elisabeth Gladis, Margaretha Dorothea Heldorfs, Catharina Gresindorf, Margaretha Stromans, Margaretha Posern, Margaretha Nemans, as they confirmed in their conscientious testimony, contributed to the intended work of defending the true faith.

The rest is in all respects the same as the previous letter of indulgence.

9. Reimar Kock's account of an accident encountered by Marinus. 1463.

From Kock's Lübeck Chronicle in Löscher's Reformation Acts, vol. I, p. 400.

Translated from Low German into High German.

In this very year (1463), around Martinmas, the Pope's legate, Marinus, came back from Sweden, where he had been trading with his indulgences for three years, and had made a lot of money and property.

1) In the old edition of Walch: "Magdeburg", but also here as in the previous writing Ä16<161burA6N86ui will have to be read, what the old translator has rendered there by "Middelburg".

without what the king had received for his share. Although this legate sent his goods by ship to Lübeck, he still had four thousand two hundred and forty florins with him in a bag, which he used to keep in his own safekeeping so that he would not be without food. It happened, however, when the holy legate was driving from Wismar to Lübeck, that the bag, in which the holy money was, fell off the wagon not far from Grevesmühlen, without the legate knowing anything about it. A poor woman found this bag, carried it home, and brought it to her husband. They were poor people, and were pleased to become rich so soon; they paid their debts, bought clothes, and provided themselves with food, far better and differently than before. But when it became known that the legate had lost the sacred money, the neighbors immediately became suspicious of these poor people, because their previous poverty was known to everyone. And they did not deny it when they were approached about it, they said freely how they had come by the money. Duke Heinrich of Mecklenburg did not delay long, but sent for the money and, as a lord of the land, sent for the money. When the legate learned that the prince had received the money, he traveled to the prince in good hope and requested that the money be returned to him because it belonged to the holy pope and he wanted to pay warriors against the Turks with it. The prince answered the legate: for what reason could he ask him for money, since he had not handed over any money to him? The legate needed 2) many good and bad words, but the prince gave nothing for it, and the legate got nothing back.

10 A letter of indulgence from Heinrich Sletstater, a Dominican, subaltern of the General Indulgence Commissarius Rudolph, Bishop of Breslau, dated Anno 1470.

From Löscher's Reformation Acts, Vol. I, p. 363.

Translated into German.

Let it be known to all and sundry, and especially to the confessor who is to be notified by the present letter, that because the devout son in Christ, Caspar Seywath, for himself . . .

2) In Löscher: "beukede" instead of: "brukede".

to the so holy and godly work of defending the true Catholic religion against the faithless heretics and their followers, according to the nature of his fortune and according to the requirement of confession, he therefore, by virtue of the authority of the Holy Apostolic See and of our most holy Lord, Mr. Paul, by the divine providence of the second Roman Pontiff of that name, and according to the mandate of their holiness, the most reverend Father in Christ and Mr. Rudolph, Bishop of Breslau, his legate hereunto authorized, the grace to choose for himself a suitable confessor, who, either in life or at his end, may absolve him from all spiritual punishments and sins, they may be as great as they please, even in such cases as the apostolic see has specially reserved for itself, and grant and confer upon him plenary indulgence according to the formula below; but without interruption of restitution and pardon, if restitution or pardon should be granted to anyone.

The form of the indulgence either in life or in the hour of death shall be this: Have mercy on you 2c. Our Lord Jesus Christ absolve thee; and I, by virtue of his authority and that of the blessed apostles Peter and Paul, and also of the holy apostolic see, in this matter granted to thee and entrusted to me, absolve thee from the bonds of banishment, suspension, and interdict imposed by men, or founded in law in general; no less from all your crimes, sins and transgressions, even in such cases as the Apostolic See has specially reserved to itself; and grant you plenary indulgence and pardon of the same; and as far as the power of the keys entrusted to the Church extends, I remit to you the punishment which you should justly have endured for it in Purgatory, in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, Amen. For the confirmation of which Magister Heinrich Sletstater, of the Order of Preachers, by virtue of the general authority communicated from above by said Lord Legate to all Commissariis and Confessors deputized and to be appointed in the matter concerning this Crusade, has deemed it good to issue the present Letter of Indulgence, sealed with his seal. Given in the year of our Lord 1470, the 5th of February.

11. Johann Nixstein's, Minoriterordens de observantia, letter of indulgence, which he granted under Sixtus IV Duke Wilhelm of Saxony and his wife Catharina, April 21, 1482.

From Kapp's "Nachlese," Theil III, p. 73.

Translated into German.

Hereby it is manly made known that the most noble Prince and Lord, Lord Wilhelm, Duke of Saxony 2c., with his wife, the Highborn Duchess and Lady, Catharina, who both profess the Roman Church, have made their due contribution to the Crusades decreed and to be instituted by our most holy Pope Sixto, according to the prudence of God the Fourth of that name, against the Turks, as renounced enemies of the Cross of Christ and of the faith founded upon it. Therefore, by virtue of papal sovereignty, he is hereby granted the authority to choose a suitable man, be he an auxiliary bishop or a lay priest, as confessor for himself and his spouse, who will absolve them after hearing confession, and by premeditated apostolic authority and power from all her sins and transgressions committed, be they as great and as important as they may be, even if they are of such a nature that the apostolic see should be consulted about them; likewise from every penalty, and from all kinds and degrees of excommunication, which are expressly named in ecclesiastical law, are also founded in other statutes, and which the Roman See has reserved to itself to administer, not more than once; but from those which the papal see has not reserved to itself, as often as it shall require, or shall ask for, to be counted loose; besides proclaiming, giving and granting them, once in life and in the last hour of death, plenary indulgence of all their sins, without regard to all those cases which the said pope or his predecessors, according to the 1480, 4 Nov. Nov, issued in 1480, Nov. For greater certainty and confirmation of this matter, I, Brother Johann Nixstein, of the so-called Order of Friars Minor de observantia, and Subcommissary appointed for the work of the Holy Crusades by virtue of apostolic sovereignty and authority, have had this letter of indulgence issued and kept with my usual seal. Given in the year after Christ's birth 1482, April 21.

Formula of absolution.

The Lord have mercy on you 2c. Our Lord Jesus Christ, according to his heartfelt mercy, absolve you, release you and set you free; and I, by the power and authority of him and of the blessed apostles Peter and Paul, and also of our most holy pope, which have been given to me and communicated to you for your good, grant you a plenary indulgence for the penalty of banishment of which you have been guilty, and hereby receive you back into the communion of the church, of the sacraments entrusted to it, and of all the faithful members thereof; I also absolve you, by virtue of this power, from all and any crimes, faults, and sins, however grave, great, and terrible they may be, and even if they were such transgressions that the apostolic see would have to be consulted by right. For this reason, by virtue of the authority given to me, I grant you complete indulgence, and forgive you the same in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, amen.

By the way, I reserve the right, if I have to absolve you in mortal weakness with this clause, if you should come back from this illness and recover, to then give you complete indulgence and forgiveness of your sins according to this authority of mine.

The pope has driven out money through milk and butter letters.

12 Letter of butter issued to the Würtembergers by Pope Nicolaus V.

From Crusius annul. Kuevie. purs III, lilr. 7, eap. 7, p. 387.
Translated into German.

Nicolaus, the bishop, a servant of all servants of God, for the constant remembrance of the cause, a successor decreed by God of Him who has the keys of the kingdom of heaven, Roman pope, who received from God the power to bind and loose; who, as much as there is in him, gladly and willingly provides for the benefit and indemnity of all believing Christians, and restrains and restrains the severity of the law with apostolic gentleness.

The Lord is willing to mitigate, as it seems good and salutary to each according to the circumstances of the place, the time and the person in the Lord. Our beloved sons, the noble Counts of Würtemberg, in their name and in the name of their descendants of both sexes and of their subjects, have recently sent us a letter of request to the effect that they, together with their ancestors, are for the most part still in possession of their property: that they, along with their ancestors, for the most part still remember people, because of a lack of oil, oil trees and fish, according to the example of the neighboring countries, which have received the privilege and permission from the papal see, as it is believed, may eat milk food during the forty-day fast and also on other fast days, and have been accustomed to do so up to now, and have made use of it at such times up to this hour. Since, however, as was stated in the petition, the counts, count's children and their subjects are concerned about this, since they would not receive permission from the apostolic see, they have humbly requested that we, in accordance with our apostolic love and kindness, consider this point and take care of it for them. Accordingly, in consideration of such reasonable and humble request, we absolve and absolve the aforementioned Counts, their children and subjects all together, not only those presently living, but also their descendants, together with their ancestors, from all transgressions and trespasses of which they have since been guilty in every way, by our apostolic authority and power, and hereby declare them free and absolved from the same; We also grant them, notwithstanding any other mutual ordinances, by present letters, by virtue of our authority, for want of oil and fish, as long as the feast days prescribed by the church last, to eat milk food and to help themselves to it without propriety according to their pleasure. Therefore, let no one undertake to offend this indulgence and privilege granted to us in writing, or to oppose it boldly: but if anyone should take the liberty of attempting this, let him know that he will thereby incur the displeasure and wrath of Almighty God and of His blessed Apostles Peter and Paul. Given in Rome at St. Peter's, in the year of the Incarnation of our Lord 1448, June 18, of our papal dignity in the following year.

13. Spenlins, Doctor of Medicine and Theology, and Provost of St. Mary's in the town of Herrnberg, objects to this Papal Indult.

From Crusius uurml. Kuevie., Mr8 III, Iil>. 7, eup. 7.

This man claimed in the writing contrary to the above indulgence letter: "the pope would have been deceived by false news, considering that 1. in the Würtembergerland there was neither a lack of rivers nor water ditches, which could provide fish in abundance on the prescribed fast days. 2) There would be no shortage of olive oil there, if it were brought there every year during Lent; the cities in Württemberg as well as in the surrounding neighborhood would be provided with it themselves, and in these regions there would also be nut tree oil, poppy seed oil, 1) linseed oil and turnip oil, not to mention other types. Thus it is also without reason that these noble lords, the Counts of Württemberg, together with their children and subjects, have been using milk foods for the forty-day Lent since time immemorial". With this he provoked the pope to anger against himself and brought it about that he was led captive to Conftanz and would even have been deprived of his office, if he had not revoked his opinion.

14. the papal bull of Anno 1490, in which it is allowed to eat butter and dairy.

From the "innocent news", 1713, p. 723. This bull was given by Innocenz VIII to the Elector Frederick of Saxony for the construction of the bridge over the Elbe and the chapel near Torgau.

Innocentius, bishop, a servant of the servants of God, his greeting and papal benediction to his dear sons, the noble men, Frederick, Prince of the Holy Roman Empire, and John, brothers, dukes of Saxony. If we, not sufficiently meritorious, are placed by divine providence in the holy city of St. Peter's, are gladly inclined to those things 2) by which your and your subjects' and of other believers in Christ who wander to your lands and dominions may be blessed with usefulness and health of the body and purity of conscience: So then, for your sake, we have received a request that in Saxony and other principalities and lands subject to your temporal government and protection, the cold half of the land, olive trees do not grow, therefore oil in the fast and other times, We, ready to promote your and the aforementioned subjects' harmlessness and usability, and that of others who migrate to your princedoms, are inclined to your diligent request, You, the aforementioned your subjects and others, also those who go to the lands and dominions, you, and also others of yours, subject to such principality, for twenty years only, from this date on, that in the fast and other times and days, in which dairy products, by right of ancient custom, are forbidden, you may eat, and you may eat butter and other dairy products freely and fairly and without any burden to your conscience, by papal authority, here at present, by the gift of special grace, we permit. And so, after you have confessed that near the city of Torgau, Meissen diocese, where you commonly reside and keep your farm, situated under your temporal government, to which a large number of the people, also of the nobles, both of the horsemen and pedestrians with wagons and horses must daily come by necessity, a large water, called the Elbe, flows; On which water, especially near the so-called city, there is no bridge, so that the people, horsemen and pedestrians, who desire to come to the same city, are urged to cross in ships, and often because of the water and storms, especially in winter time, the people who approach the above-mentioned city in large numbers, not without great danger to their lives, and often in many days may not get across, therefore it is useful, for the safety of the people, also for the sake of your umbrella. Therefore, it is useful for the safety of the people, and also for the protection of your principality, that a stone bridge be built over the same water, which bridge may not be completed in a short time and at little cost, so that 3) for the sake of cold, snow and storms, construction on such bridge may not take place except in a short time of the year, so that it may be fortified.

1) "Poppy seed" put by us instead of "Mag seed" in the old edition.

2) Here we have erased "we".

3) Here we have deleted "such". The meaning is: because cold 2c. half only a short time in the year can be built on it.

and remain strong. Have also the will, out of mild devotion, to have a chapel built at the same bridge for the increase of divine service and for the bliss of the souls of the believers in Christ who wander there: That all and any persons, spiritual and secular, of both sexes, or bold, who want to use such milk works, shall pay the twentieth part of one Rhenish guilder every year for the next ten years for the building of the same bridge and chapel; After that, when the same ten years are over, for the other ten years, excluding the fourth part, which is to be used for the building of the church of the Prince of the Apostles Peter and Paul in Rome, but the above for the completion of the aforementioned bridge and chapel; and when these are completed, in the same and in the parish church of the same city, abstention, and not to be turned into any other use, are to be paid. In the foregoing authority we establish and ordain it without hindrance of papal and in provincial and synodal councils commonly and especially set constitution and order, and all others who might be contrary to it, as they would be; therefore it is quite lawful for no man to disturb this writing of our will granting, statute and order, or to come contrary to it unlawfully. But if any man should fail to do so, let him know that he shall come into the disfavor of Almighty God, and of the holy apostles Peter and Paul. Given at Rome at St. Peter's, baptizing the Incarnation of Christ four hundred and ninety years, Quinta Calend. Augusti [July 28], in the sixth year of our papacy.

Meanwhile, as indicated here before, this freedom and grace shall be renewed with proclamation each of the twenty years with you and subsequent officials and councillors: Our request is that you, the magistrate, have the Latin and German copies of the bull, together with this document of ours, written in your office book, and that you, the council, have them written in your city book, unforgotten, so that new copies may be written on them every year and that there will be no lack of them; Also you, bailiff, let our heirs, in and around your care, decided and not decided, know that the copies of the mentioned liberty and grace, together with this our writing, are posted with you, which they want to use with theirs, that they have to find them and act according to them. Date ut supra.

15 The Electoral Proclamation referring to this bull. 1491?)

From ellronio DorZav. in Mencke, tönn II scriptoruni reruli OorManieuum, n. 572, and in the "innocent news," 1713, p. 719.

Frederick, by the Grace of God Duke of Saxony, Archmarshall of the Holy Roman Empire and Elector 2c, Landgrave of Thuringia and Margrave of Meissen.

Dear faithful! You and men in our and other surrounding countries, who are in the habit of hiking and building roads, are unaware of the noticeably large need for a bridge over the Elbe here in Torgau, over which many people, both local and foreign, are required annually and daily, for the sake of their need, to travel unmeantime, on horseback, 2) on foot and on wagons, on every occasion, which up to now had to be done by ship, and often due to water and thunderstorms, also especially in winter time with great danger and heaviness, when people, belongings and goods often may not get over, to harmful delay 3) and misdeeds: And as in former times with the highborn prince, Mr. Friedrichen, at that time Elector, Duke of Saxony 2c., our dear lord and ancestor, blessed and laudable memory, there at Torgau over the Elbe a wooden bridge of no small cost was erected: so it did not remain standing for long, but by great ice journey broke again and went down. If we now, for the benefit of ourselves, our lands, people, other inhabitants, also foreign and wandering people, are inclined, out of princely consideration, to erect a permanent stone bridge across the Elbe at Torgau with divine help, we can nevertheless consider that this is difficult to accomplish without the common support and presentation of ours and many other devout Christian people. So that ours and others, through honest and sincere causes, will be moved and willing to do so; for considering that tree oil is difficult to obtain in these lands, that the local oil is very repugnant and harmful to many people because of their nature and complexion, or weakness, and that it also gives birth to illness in many people, during the holy fasts and on the required feast days.

1) The old edition of Walch has in the caption: "of the same year", thus 1490; but the text says: "anno Vor 1400 im Ein und neunzigsten Jahre".

2) In the old edition of Walch: "Paths".

3) "Samptniß" in the old edition resolved by us by "Säumniß".

For years, if one avoids using butter and dairy according to Christian order and commandments, and obediently, without the special permission of the supreme spiritual power, does not pass over this, although with difficulty: By our most holy father, Pope Innocentio the Eighth, we have obtained such freedom and grace for all our people, spiritual and secular, male and female, as well as those who are subject to our protection and who may wander or come to the same, to be granted for twenty years from now: As, whichever of such people in each of the same years shall pay and give for itself the twentieth part of a Rhenish florin for the building of the said bridge and a chapel thereat, it shall and may freely eat and use the fasting and all the feast days of the same year, butter and dairy, with such papal permission, without sin and burdening of the conscience, according to the papal bull, which says so; We hereby send you a true transcript or copy of the papal bull, in Latin and German, requesting that you publicly proclaim it in all parish churches, through the pastors in the cities and villages of the care, to all in the pulpits, after the proclamation has been made, such transcript or copy, together with the copies of this our writing, on the church door in your town, where everyone has access to read it, and then have a tightly fastened and well-enclosed box placed in the parish church, in which every person may put money for himself; for this purpose three keys are to be made, one of which is to be held by the priest, the other by the magistrate, and you, the council, the third; not to exclude any part behind the other, for every month you three parties will open the box with the three keys; you, bailiff, take the fallen money counted and recorded to you, how often it is needed between here and Easter, and in the Easter week the fallen money is all brought to us against Torgau, or whoever is ordered to approach and build the bridge, [over]answers without restraint; You are also to direct, manage and carry out all this, as indicated and expressed before, for the next twenty years, especially with the new proclamation of the bull and others, without any delay and behavior, so that the construction of the bridge is not delayed, find yourselves sincere and diligent in this, and let this be done by your subsequent officials and councillors, also unchanged, in actual command and management, with avoidance of any delay.

We are sure that you will not be punished in any other way. We leave this to you without any doubt, and it is our entire intention to do so. Given at Torgau on Wednesdays, Vigilia Epiphaniä [Jan. 5] anno Oni. 1400 in the one and ninetieth year 2c.

16: The Elector Frederick and Duke John, brothers, sent a letter to the von Einsiedel that the bull granted to them by Pope Innocent VIII had been renewed by Pope Julius II, with the order to publicize it and to keep it in force. 1513.

From Ootlia äixüomatia in Löscher's Reformation Acts, Vol. I, p. 98. In Walch, this document is already placed here with an incorrect title, while it should have been placed under No. 26 of this section. There Walch has corrected his error.

By the Grace of God Frederick, Elector 2c., and John, Brothers, Dukes of Saxony 2c.

Dear faithful, since it has not been disclosed that we have previously acquired from Pope Innocentio the Eighth, for movable and frugal causes, such freedom and grace for twenty years for all of our people, spiritual and secular, male and female, also those who are subject to our protection and umbrella, and who would like to migrate or come to the same, that every man, who gives the twentieth part of a Rhenish florin for the building of the bridge at Torgau over the Elbe, and a chapel thereon, may happily and safely eat and use the fasting days and all the fasting days of the same year butter and milk works, without sin or burdening of the conscience; As the bulla given about it indicates and says. Since the same twenty years have now "appeared, the building of the bridge and chapel at Torgau, which was undertaken for the praise and common benefit of God, has not been completely accomplished with stones; we have also come to know that many people use milk works during special vacations, in disobedience to the Christian Church, according to the old usage, to the detriment of their consciences and salvation, to the extent that tree oil is difficult to obtain in these lands: Therefore, we have first of all to praise God, so that no one may disobey in the use of dairy, for the common good and all our subjects and relatives, by our most holy father, Mr. Julio II., now reigning pope, that his holiness be renewed to all our people, spiritual and secular, male and female.

The following shall be paid for by us: 1) the children of our family, also those who are subject to our protection and umbrella, and who may come and wander to the same, shall again pay a twentieth part of a florin Rhenish, and, for the completion of the marriage bridge and chapel, shall be taxed and deposited for them, that 1) shall and may eat and use the fasting days and all fasting days throughout the year, butter and dairy, on such papal bower, without sin and burdening of the conscience, purely and happily, according to the papal bull, of which we send you a true copy. However, if anyone has enjoyed and used butter and dairy products in the past year, he may cleanse his conscience with the deposit of the twentieth part of a Rhenish florin, as for another year, so that this will not be a burden to him. Therefore, our request to you is that you publicly proclaim the copy of the bull in all parish churches, through the pastors in villages belonging to you, in the pulpits, and after the proclamation has taken place, have such copies of the indult, and of this letter of ours, posted on the churches, so that everyone has free access to read them, and order that locked boxes with two keys, of which the priest keeps one and you the other, be placed in the parish churches at the same ends, in which each one puts the money as mentioned above, as it was used in the past, and that it be kept in a safe place until we order it to be removed. In addition, remind the priests that they and the confessors should take care that they do not absolve anyone from confession who has used the indult and has not put it in, and order all of this with diligence as we provide; this is done to please us, and to be recognized in grace. Date at Weimar, on Sunday Laetare Anno Domini 1513.

17 Letter of butter issued by Pope Innocent VIII, at the request of Duke Albrecht of Saxony, for the benefit of the Freiberg Cathedral, which burned down in 1484, for a period of 20 years. 1491.

From Andreas Möller's "Freiberg, tksatr. ollronio." part. II. p. 131.

Translated into German.

Bishop Innocentius, the servant of the servants of God, for the constant remembrance of the cause.

According to the office of servitude that we have assumed, we direct, among other things, our office-

1) To "that", as can be seen from the previous rescript, is to be added: "man".

We are also constantly concerned about how we may promote the reconstruction of churches that have been miserably destroyed by misfortune and have become funeral pyres, and how we may also assist and help persons who are faithful to us and zealous in religion in their need, as we deem it good and salutary in the Lord for the damage suffered by the churches and the burdensome circumstances of such persons. The request recently made to us in the matter of our beloved son, the noble Lord Albrecht, Duke of Saxony, was to the effect that the said Duke Albrecht, after the praiseworthy example of his forefathers, should fight with all his might against the faithless rage and the ungodly undertakings of the heretics in Bohemia, who rage against the believers in Christ without ceasing. He has not only made every effort to curb their raging fury with force and power, as he still continues to do every day, but he has also built up the former parish church, which is still in use today, but also the former parish church of the Holy Virgin Mary in the city of Freiberg, Meissen diocese, has been designated by apostolic sovereignty as a cathedral church, and it is dined at one table with a dean, twelve canonicis and just as many perpetual vicarii or caplains, who live together, who live together, dine at one table, and officiate in the aforementioned church day and night, so that, when the said city is entrusted to such faithful, zealous, honest and learned men, they may fortify and establish the faithful in the unity of the church and in the power of the true faith by word and example, and counter and resist the deceitful wiles and errors of these heretics, and also faithfully instruct and teach them, so that they may all the sooner abandon their errors and confess the universal truth. And although our beloved sons, the dean and caplains of the first-mentioned church, which has recently been miserably reduced to ashes, are thinking with all diligence and care about its reconstruction, so that, if it remains under the ashes and the canonicis and caplains have to look at it with their backs, the wicked cunning and malice of the reported heretics will not become even more fierce and powerful: Nevertheless, the income of this church is so poor and small that it cannot possibly be rebuilt and restored to its former condition, but rather the honest assistance of the Christian faithful is most necessary. Since, according to the aforementioned request, this country is very cold and the aforementioned city is situated on the Bohemian mountains, the citizens and inhabitants of this city of the city and many other subjects of this duke, also those who have him as their patron, work diligently in the mines on the Bohemian mountains and barren oers, which are indeed outside the duke's land, but nevertheless border directly on it, where one could not have sufficient food, if it were not brought from other places, and yet with their supply because of much snow often great danger arises, that therefore many miners and other poor people, especially during the great Lent, would have to suffer indescribable shortages; not less also other subjects of this duke live in very cold places, where no oil trees grow, and consequently no olive oil is to be had, where it is not brought there from remote countries with great effort and expense; Nevertheless, if the duke, his subjects and those under his protection were allowed to enjoy such butter and dairy products during Lent and also on other days on which it is forbidden to eat butter and dairy products, provided they contribute from their wealth to the reconstruction of the church mentioned, it could indeed be hoped that this church building could be carried out and completed in a short time: So on the part of the said Lord Albrecht, Duke of Saxony, Margrave of Meissen and Landgrave in Thuringia, we have been humbly requested that, according to our apostolic grace, we would provide counsel in the above circumstances in due time. Accordingly, we, who gladly give all possible support to the reconstruction of the torn down churches, first want to exempt Duke Albrecht from all church censures and punishments of banishment and exclusion from the communion of the church and the Lord's Supper, which either the right or a certain person, on whatever occasion, may have done, or a certain person, on whatever occasion or in whatever matter it may have occurred, if he should be involved in any way, only so that the present letter may have its force and force, absolve him and consider him absolved: Therefore we, who are inclined to hear such supplications, by virtue of our apostolic power, by the present indult, decree and order that the said Duke Albrecht, and all and every of his subjects, and others under his protection, whether ecclesiastical or secular of either sex, who are in such mines and elsewhere, and others who come to such places, shall, during Lent and other days mentioned, receive butter and milk food for the next twenty days.

However, those who want to use such food, as long as the said twenty years last, shall be obliged to contribute annually the twentieth part of one Rhenish florin for the reconstruction of the above-mentioned church, of which the fourth part is to be sent to Rome for the construction of St. Peter's Church. And if in the meantime the church itself has been repaired, then the said contribution shall be used for the preservation of this and other parish churches of the city, and not for other things, and always the fourth part of it shall be given for St. Peter's Church, as reported, regardless of the apostolic and in provincial and synodal councils drawn up general or special decrees and conclusions, also other such statutes contrary to these. Therefore, no one shall dare to offend this written absolution, order, ordinance and will of ours, or to oppose it in a thoughtless and audacious manner. But if anyone should dare to do so, let him know that he will thereby fall into the disgrace of Almighty God and of His blessed Apostles Peter and Paul. Given in Rome at St. Peter's, in the year after the birth of Christ 1491, July 10, in the seventh year of our papal dignity.

18 Pope Innocence VIII, June 14, 1492, publicized confirmation of his aforementioned Butter letter.

From Andreas Möller's "Freiberg" 2c. I. c. Translated into German.

Pope Innocentius the Eighth.

After we have been told by our beloved son, the noble man Albrecht, Duke of Saxony, how he, after the example of his predecessors, has continued to resist with all diligence and zeal the faithless rage and ungodly undertakings of the heretics in Bohemia, who rage and rage without ceasing against the faithful members of Christ, with all diligence and zeal, bravely and undauntedly, and not only by external means of coercion and force to put a stop to their senseless rage, but also to destroy the former parish church of St. Mary of the city of Freiberg, Meissen. Maria of the city of Freiberg, Meissen diocese, which is under his secular rule, into a cathedral church, and appointed a dean, twelve canonicos and twelve vicarios perpetuos.

or chaplains, who were to live together in common, and the godly intention was conducted in such a way that, if the said city were provided with righteous, pious, well-mannered and learned men, the faithful might be fortified in the unity of the Christian church and might be able to resist the devious wiles of the first-mentioned heretics. And even though the cathedral dean, the cathedral chapter and the clergy of this church, which was miserably consumed by the fire and turned into a funeral pyre, were diligently striving for its reconstruction and were working on it, so that it would not perish after the misfortune that had come upon it and that the cunning malice and the fury of said heretics against the believing Christians would become so much greater, after the reported canonici and clergy had been forced to look at such a church with their backs because of the fire they had suffered; However, the income and the incomes of this church were far too small and insufficient for it to be rebuilt and restored to its former state; rather, the unanimous will and the generous contribution of godly and faithful Christians were highly necessary; Since it is also included in the story that the country is very cold, the city of Freiberg lies on the Bohemian mountains, and both the inhabitants of the same, as well as other subjects of this duke, and those who live under his protection, work diligently in the mines on the Bohemian mountains and desolate oersterns, which, although outside the lands of said duke, but still directly about the same, where the necessary foodstuffs would not be sufficiently available, unless they were brought from other places, and yet in their supply, because of much snow, there would often be a not insignificant danger that many would be plagued with too great famine during the forty-day fast, and others would live in too cold mountains, where no oil trees would grow, nor would olive oil be found, unless it were brought there from distant lands, and that at great expense: so that we might better promote the building of said church, we decreed last year by our other letter of indulgence, by virtue of apostolic majesty, that said Duke Albrecht and all his subjects, also all who are under his protection, of both sexes, no less others who come to these places, may freely eat butter and milk food on the forty days and other fast days mentioned, until the next twenty years, without doubt of conscience; but in such a way that those who

We are obliged to pay the twentieth part of a Rhenish guilder annually for twenty years for the building and renewal of the said church, of which we have intended to dedicate the fourth part for the building of the main church of the most noble of the apostles; and if in the meantime the church itself comes to a stand, the money is to be used for the protection and preservation of this and other parochial churches of the said city, without breaking off the fourth part, as is contained in this letter with more. However, because, as the letter recently sent to us by our beloved son, the noble man, Georgen, eldest prince of this Duke Albrecht, at the time when said letter was handed over, the aforementioned Duke did not take up arms against these heretics, nor did he wage war against them, although, as a devout Christian, he always had in mind and was willing to repulse them, as he could have done; also in the said district oil is beaten from various kinds of legumes and seeds, which the faithful can enjoy; but nothing of this was mentioned in the letter referred to, and therefore it is claimed by some, 1) as if this letter had been secretly executed: Our will, which we gladly wish to prevent that this letter may not be accused of a vitii surreptionis, and are inclined to hear Duke George's humble request in this matter, is that the statute and ordinance and oft-stated letter, with all and every clause contained therein, have had and still have their validity, and that they have had and shall still have their full force and weight, and in virtue thereof the above-mentioned persons and subjects of the counts, barons and noblemen, as the said duke's vassals, even if they are subjects from other fiefs of foreign dominion, as well as the above-mentioned arrivals, may eat butter, cheese and other dairy products on the days in question; And this shall be valid in all and after all, just as if in this letter what Duke Albrecht had in mind and intended to repel the above-mentioned heretics to the best of his ability, and that in the country mentioned oil be struck from some kinds of legumes and seeds, which the faithful may make use of,

1) This probably refers to the writing reported in the next number, which may have caused the pope to confirm his bull. The Bishop of Meissen had also opposed the Bull. (Löschner, Ref.-Acten, Vol. I, p. 100.) Cf. the following No. 20.

The letter would have been written in explicit words, and other intended subjects in this letter would have been mentioned by name. Notwithstanding the apostolic statutes and all other ordinances contrary thereto 2c. Given at Rome at Peter under the Fisherman's Ring, June 14, in the eighth year of our papal dignity.

19. Johann von Breitenbach's, Prof. jur. canon. at Leipzig, expert opinion against the Papal Butter letters.

About the beginning of 1492. 1)

Breitenbach's writing, in which he gives his opinion, is found in the Pauline Library in Leipzig and is printed in Kapp's "Nachlese nützlicher Reformationurkunden", Theil III, p. 81. The title reads: "Gutachten Johannis von Breitenbach, beider Rechte Doctor, auf der berühmten Academie zu Leipzig, Merseburgischer Diöces, ordentliche Lehrers des Kirchenrecht: ob diejenigen, so nach dem Inhalt der apostolischen, durch den gegenwärtigen Herrn Pabst Innocentium VIII. Innocentium VIII, for the reconstruction of the cathedral church of St. Mary in the city of Freiberg, Meissen diocese, may eat butter and other dairy products during the Great Fast and also on other days on which it is forbidden to eat butter and other dairy products, without any scruples of conscience" in quarto. Without year. It is noteworthy that the author, a strict papist, brings proof from canon law that the power of the pope to "grant graces" is very limited.

Translated into German.

The factum is this:

The Most Holy Father in Christ and our Lord, Mr. Innocentius VIII, according to the providence of God, the present reigning pope, for certain reasons, has permitted and given freedom to the most noble prince and lord, Lord Albrecht, Duke of Saxony, Landgrave of Thuringia and Margrave of Meissen, together with all and every one of his subjects, and others who are under his protection, whether spiritual or secular, male or female, that if they give the twentieth part of a Rhenish gold guilder annually for the reconstruction of the cathedral church of St. Mary, the city of Freiberg, and the diocese of Meissen, they shall then pay the Lent of one year for the reconstruction of the cathedral church of St. Mary, the city of Freiberg, and the diocese of Meissen. Marien, the city of Freiberg, Meißnischer Diöces, they could then enjoy such butter and milk dishes freely for twenty years during Lent, as well as on other days on which butter eating and other milk dishes are forbidden, without any doubt in their conscience; as such is contained and expressed more extensively in the apostolic letters issued about this, the content of which from word to word is as follows:

1) Because of this time determination compare our note to the previous writing.

Innocentius, the bishop, the servant of the servants of God, for the constant remembrance of the cause. According to the office we have taken 2c.

See the 17th document.

According to this, some have doubts whether the said Duke and his subjects, who according to the Apostolic Letters contribute their share, could and may freely eat butter and other dairy products on the said days without any scruples of conscience?

And since many Clerici and Laici have asked me to open up and explain what my opinion is on this doubtful point of law, I therefore, for the sake of the welfare of the illustrious republic of my fatherland, which I live to serve and am bound to obey, will, according to the L. veluti ff. de justitia et jure, and according to the L. postliminii, § filius quoque ff. de captivitate, also for the benefit of my masters of both rights, and especially of the canon law, I will briefly indicate what seems to me in the first-mentioned doubtful puncto juris.

Having previously invoked the most glorious name of Christ, our Lord, God, Creator and Redeemer, and of His holy and always unharmed Mother, the Virgin Mary, and having well seen and carefully examined what is contained in the narrative of the above-mentioned Facti: then, as it seems to me at first sight, one must answer with yes, namely that the obedient Duke and his subjects, who according to the contents of the said apostolic bull do their part, can freely enjoy butter and other milk foods on the said days without any scruples of conscience. Since this is implied by the expression of the said bull, one must not deviate from the literal meaning of it, according to L. non aliter ff. de legatis III. can. ad audientiam, dedeci; indeed, it is better to stick exactly to the words of an edict in a doubtful point, since one must stick to the words of the law itself in doubtful cases, according to L. I. § si is qui etc. ff. de exercito actio, unb ἡαφ bem L. prospexit ff. qui et a quibus manumissi cum simili.

This is also confirmed by the fact that the Lord Pope can dispense from the right over the right, C. proposuit, where the text applies according to the letter de conces. praebeben. Yes, even in the statutes of general councils of the Lord Pope, his power and authority suffers an exception, c. Significasti, where the text beautifully reads as electione; and therefore it comes that the Lord Pope can dispense against a general council.

The pope is still in charge of the council; as the strange gloss has c. ex parte de Capell. Monach. unb in c. ubi periculum in principio in verbo consilio, de elect. libr. VI. moreover, the Lord Pope is able to dispense from the right everything, so, as God himself, according to Osti. ut ipse notat in c. quanto de translat. prelati. Therefore, according to Bal. in lege fi. codic. de senten. rescin. non pos. a rightfully elected pope holds God's office on earth. On the other hand, he who has not been duly elected is a devil, and therefore has not the keys of the kingdom of heaven, but of hell. Therefore it is said that the Lord Pope has perfect power, II. q. VI. decree. c. ad honorem de autori. et usupal. c. unico, ut ecclesiasti, be- nefi. et dic. c. proposuit, and the same is the governor of God and thus represents the place of our Lord JEsu Christ allhie on earth, c. inter corporalia de transla. prelato. c. per venerabilem § rationibus, qui filii sint, legit, et c. I. de homici. 1. VI. where in the text, which deserves to be written with golden letters, the reason is given why our Lord, the Son of God, entrusted his place and the care of his army to the blessed Petro and his successors, and for this very reason spoke to the blessed Petro and to his successors: What you bind on earth shall be bound in heaven 2c. c. Solite, de mayo. et obedi, et die § Rationibus, et XXIV. q. I. Quocunque; therefore we must also accept it with meekness and humility, even if the Lord Pope should burden us with something unbearable, XIX. dis. in memoriam. Just as we kiss his feet as a sign of his highest dignity, as the gloss says. In 1.1. s. äs äorns. st prots. I. XII. Incidentally, the Lord Pope is not bound by the laws and rules, but is free from them. IX. q. III. cuncta per mundum et I. princeps, ff. de legi, et XXV. q. I. his ita, et notatur in c. I. de constitutionibus. Now, however, since the aforementioned former pope, against the law, according to which the eating of butter and other milk foods are forbidden during Lent, has made and dispensed a decree, as he could do according to the above, therefore 2c.

This is also, thirdly, confirmed by this. For if the causes mentioned in the aforementioned apostolic bull were not legitimate, the indult or letter of freedom of the pope would nevertheless have its force, so that the aforementioned duke and his subjects, if they had as much as is mentioned in this apostolic bull, would have the same right to the freedom of the duke and his subjects.

The pope can freely enjoy butter and other dairy products during Lent and other days, without any scruples of conscience. Which I therefore prove, because, although the Lord Pope cannot dispense against what is founded in divine law, without important and reasonable causes, he can at least dispense against what is established according to human law and in jure positivo, according to his mere and free will, because for this his will alone, without any other cause, is already sufficient; as notes Inno, in c. cum ad monasterium de stat. Monach. et sequitur specu. ti. de legato § Nunc breviter dicendum est, ver. et nota, quod nisi Papa. And herein has instead the well-known saying: 8ie volo, 8io znkso, 8it pro rations volnntas. But since this, that one is not allowed to enjoy butter and milk food during Lent, does not have its reason in divine law, but only juris humani unb positivi ifi, as in c. denique IV. dis., then the Lord Pope can, and can also really pardon against said human law, according to his mere and free will; for which reason one does not have to ask about the reasons given, whether they are true or false, nor to dispute about them because of the circumstances mentioned above.

This is also proved, and fourthly, in this way. For if one or the other of the causes mentioned were not true, such an indult or pardon would still be valid if only one of them had a cause. Art. eorum, quae in simili dicuntur, de sententia, because then, if two causes are stated in the sentence itself, one of which expressly disputes with the general law, while the other does not, the sentence has its force; as especially noted Inno, in c. in praesentia, de renuntia, et Io. An. in c. Cum inter de re judica. For there the sentence itself becomes strong, by virtue of this circumstance, which does not run expressly against the general law, pro quo fa. c. per tuas, qui filii sint legitimi. The judge, in stating two causes, does not base himself praecisely on the other alone, and it is therefore already enough that the judicial pronouncement can stand for the cause that does not expressly conflict with the general law; to which belongs Ratio c. causam de re judica, where it is said that the mind of a judge is not always directed to a particular kind of proof; and this is also noted by Mr. Nico, alias Panor. in s. 1. s. ti. So, according to the foregoing, it seems to be already enough and sufficient that such begnadigung und Indult Stich halten kann, vermöge desjenigen Grunds, der nicht falsch ist, wofol auch streitet fa. quia in dubio interpretandum est, ut potius res et dispositio valeat, quam pereat, c. Abbate de verbo significa, et 1. quotiens, ff. de rebus dubiis cum simili.

But on the other hand and pro parte negativa, that the said Duke and his subjects, who according to the contents of the said apostolic bull do their part, cannot freely enjoy butter and other milk foods during Lent without conscience scruples, is stated: Because such causes are falsely stated, such an indult and pardon is also invalid, because a supplicant who commits fraud has no right to enjoy what he has been granted. c. sedes apostolica de rescript. et 1. et si legibus c. si contra jus vel utili, publi. Therefore one must consider these words, which indicate that letters of grace received in this way would be invalid, according to what 1. et no. per lo. An. et doc. de ea dictione penitus in C. Romana § fin. de sententiis excommunicata. 1. VI. fa. 1. ambiguitatem c. de usu et habita. Yes, in the papal scripts or bulls this condition is always to be understood under it, although it is not put to it, namely, where the request is based on truth, or where it is so, c. II. de Rescript. et 1. universa C. de diversis rescript..., where it is also stated that whoever asks for something and presents falsehoods shall not enjoy the answer received. Next to this, the matter is proved thus: The vitium surreptionis, or when one presents untruths, or conceals and suppresses the truth, deprives not only the scripts, or bulls, issued for the attainment of certain benefits, as is noted in Cie. 1. de praeben. of their force, but also the letters of grace granted over certain liberties or dispensations; as such is recalled by Inno. in c. Constitutus de rescriptis. Yes, also the grace becomes invalid by this act of corruption, c. I. et II. defin. presbi. lib. VI. et fa. c. ad audientiam II. de rescriptis et notant doc. communiter, in dic. c. Ceterum. Similarly, the secret effect weakens the grace with the deed itself, if it also consists in the fact that one has a foreign kaetnni, of which the one who has been made theilhaftig has probably known nothing, according to the text dio. c. Constitutus quemd. Nico, ibi dicit pro hoc menti tenendum; and this is especially true when there is fraud under the surreption. Where under the surrept

If there is a deception in the statement, and either the truth is concealed, or unfounded things are stated, then this invalidates the whole Rescript; which happens not only when disputes are to be settled, but also when privileges and pardons are granted, according to what has been noted in dic. c. Ceterum, which is also noted by d. Nico, in c. super litteris de rescript. , allwo auch nach der Glosse 08ti. 6t lo. ^n., if and when one who states false things or withholds the truth in obtaining a rescript, or an apostolic letter of grace, does this maliciously or out of simplicity. And according to the aforementioned document, this same Nico. also states that a judge must discern from various circumstances and assumptions whether there is fraud or simplicity; and when the judge has taken care of all the circumstances, he must consider whether the one who obtains grace is simple-minded or diligent, and whether the fact concerns him or another; whether he is near or far; whether his letters are substantial or not, and so on, for the inner deceit cannot be brought out otherwise than by mere speculation. 1. dolum Cod. de dolo, et c. II. de renuntia. li. VI., baoon in dicto c. super litteris plene per doc. et maxime moder. Yes, the apostolic bulls issued over certain privileges and pardons, if they have been secretly executed, are null and void according to the laws themselves, as in C. dudum. II. de elec. et. 1. I. ff. de natali restituere. et notat. lo. An. post Compostel. in dicto c. ad audientiam, ad quod dic. c. I. et c. II. de fi. presb. lib. VI. et notat, d. Nico, indic, c. dudum. who says that the pardon issued per vitium surreptionis would be void according to the law itself; and this same one holds that this would also be said of all letters of pardon in general. Furthermore, surreption offends the apostolic bull, not only if it was a final cause of the pardon or of the rescript; but also if it was a moving cause of it; thus, because the pope or the prince would otherwise have issued letters of pardon, where one did not secretly ask for it, in this case surreption was the moving cause of it; as the beautiful text has in c. postulasti de rescript..., which text must be remembered because it is nowhere else, secundum d. Nico, ibi, which also adds that in this text one encounters a peculiar and special casum, according to which, where the moving cause cessirt, or is wrong, also the decree falls over a heap; whereby to our intended cause the gloss

The most remarkable is in c. post translationem in verbo cessante, de renuntia, the content of which is that, if a dispensation occurs from any cause, this cessante causa should also cessare. Of this, there is a wide-ranging discussion by D. Anth., who examines: whether and if, cessante causa, the effect should also cessare, what one calls a final and a driving cause, to which one must answer, as is done there by him. Of this also Io. de Ymola et d. Nico, in c. cum cessante de appell. et per Gloss. in 1. 1. § sexum ff. de postulant. and more extensive Bar. in 1. 2. § fin. ff. de donationibus. So also about the preservation of apostolic rescripts or bulls one gives this rule, namely, that everything must stand in the letter with express words, what is able to direct the heart of the lord pope or the prince to grant grace, and to grant the same not at all or reluctantly; as the gloss notes in verbo litteras, and there doc. in the before mentioned c. super litteris. § iergu bñt c. postulasti unb c. si proponente de rescriptis unb c. si motu proprio, de preben. libr. VI. Therefore, since it is claimed that in the said apostolic bull the untruth has been expressed, and the truth suppressed and concealed, since nothing is said therein about the fact that olive oil can be had almost in all the said lands subject to Duke Albrecht's dominion for almost the same price and as frequently as butter; and that the oil of certain fruits, of which our parents and forefathers availed themselves, some of which brought their lives from a hundred and more years, can be procured for a more moderate price than butter usually is. Since it is not thought that people of male and female sex have reverently and certainly abstained from eating butter and other dairy foods, which are forbidden during fasting and on other days, from time immemorial, it is also not thought that people of male and female sex have reverently and certainly abstained from eating butter and other dairy foods, which are forbidden during fasting and on other days; Since it is not further reported that from the eating of butter and other dairy foods, which takes place during the said days, as well as from the omission of the said praiseworthy and godly custom, a very great annoyance has arisen among the Christian believers, who reside in the said Duke's own and other surrounding lands and provinces, as in Bohemia, Saxony, in the Mark, in Silesia and in Lusatia 1); as well as that almost everywhere in said lands there are as many fish as are needed, and these are bought for a fair amount of money; and it is in that if our ancestors, citizens and inhabitants of these lands had one fish thirty years ago, we have two or three nowadays, as experience teaches, and therefore it is to be presumed that the people should observe and celebrate the holy Lent, which, as it has been salutary ordained by the law and the holy prophets for the welfare of souls and bodies, and sanctified by our Savior through his holy fasts, should be observed and celebrated with the greatest reverence, de consecra. dis.V. quadragesima, eat butter and other milky foods more for pleasure and lust than for necessity: so, alas, I hold that the very last perilous times are approaching, to which, according to the testimony of the apostle 2 Tim. 3 will be men who think of themselves as stingy, boastful, hopeful, blasphemers, unthankful, unspiritual, who love pleasure more than God; and consequently, since the truth has been suppressed and concealed, the apostolic bull, according to the foregoing, cannot have, nor retain, its force and validity.

This is also strengthened by this important reason, because where a law is abolished, not at the same time the custom is to be considered abolished, by which the observation of this law was introduced in particular places, if it would cause annoyance in a place that the ancient law was no longer observed; and therefore, when a law is repealed, it is not thought that the usage and custom by which the law itself was observed is abolished at the same time, if an offense should arise from their omission; as the strange text proves in c. super eo, and the gloss in verbo consuetudo, de cogna. spu. unb anmerfet d. domi, in c. I. de constitu. lib. VI. which says that it is necessary to keep it. Ad quod c. cum oli. de cleri, conjuga. et c. nihil de praescriptio. And so also in the foregoing case, although the lord pope, by permitting butter and other dairy foods to be eaten on said days, abrogates the general law, or grants a liberty and grace contrary to it: yet he does not abrogate the custom, the omission of which would cause offense, or dispense against the established custom, Ar. eorum quae le. et no. in dictis iuribus. But that the omission of this very good custom, which has been observed sacredly since time immemorial, causes great and grave trouble among the believers in Christ in the said lands, daily experience teaches. For this, take what Bal. notes in 1. fin. c. si contractus vel util.

1) In the old edition: Lausnitz.

pub. 1. where he says very strangely that many pardons could lose their power if one does not especially consider the custom which the pardon is contrary to: cum de ipsa consuetud. ne fieri debeat specialis mentio, and he says: hoc teneri per doc. et menti esse tenendum. Nor would the clause ex certa scientia be sufficient to abolish the custom, if the Lord Pope did not otherwise make an explicit and special report of it. Because, as the Bal. says in 1. fin. c. de sentent. rescind. non poss. the clause ex certa scientia would not be sufficient.

sel ex certa scientia is of no help, except in such matters where the prince is presumed to have knowledge and science, as in matters concerning a point of law; but in matters where it can be presumed that the prince knows nothing about it, where good and praiseworthy customs of certain countries or countries belong, this clause has no force. From what has been said, it is clear that it is not so easy to give a decisum in this doubtful casu, considering also that it concerns a praerogativa and the high authority of the Lord Pope, about which one cannot dispute without danger; because he who makes the same disputable is guilty of criminis sacrilegii c. de diver. rescript.

Neque lingua transiens super terram, os ponere debet in caelum XXI. dis. in tantum.

Therefore, before proceeding to a more detailed elucidation of this matter, which in modern times, when avarice, as a handmaiden of idolatry, is very prevalent, and money and goods are lured out of the bag in a subtle and cunning manner, 1. 2. c. de commere, et mercato, et in cie. abusioibus de poeni- tent. et remissio. If the dispensation, which often occurs, gives rise to a rash, it must be remembered above all that the dispensation or disbursement is so much as a balancing of expenditures with all circumstances, hence a steward is also called a manager, and the one who manages the treasury must pay attention to all circumstances, and must well estimate the work and its wages. For dispensing means nothing other than paying out this and that. And we need such an administrator who, for certain reasons, sometimes enacts a law that is useful in itself; although such a dispensation must not be granted to everyone without distinction, but only to those who make laws and can also repeal them, and should therefore be performed only by the pope or by the prince, or in their name. Accordingly, he who has the administration must direct his eye to the account,

Why he dispenses, which is based on three things: utility, necessity, and the particular preference of the persons; and where a steward has these three in mind, he cannot be said to act against the common good and to prefer his own interest to that, but to abate the general statute for the sake of the common welfare, which is added in a special case. In this way, the dispensation is not to be made for a private matter, but for the sake of the common and obvious benefit. For the pardon is a dispensation of the general right, which is made after exact insight into the matter by one to whom the right of pardon belongs, as in nisi rigor. l.

VII; or it is a prudent indulgence of the common law, having first well considered the utility or necessity; or it is a remission of the severity of the right, which has been regularly done by the one to whom such is due; as noted Specui. tit. II. § dispensatio est, in prine. But if a steward were induced to do this merely by his will and his own pleasure, without any intention of predestined pieces, this would by no means be called a pardon, but rather a waste. Therefore St. Bernard says that if a pardon were to happen without reasonable causes, it would then have to be called a waste; as Osti. states in c. Quia in tantum de praebeand, and such a one who grants a pardon without reasonable cause would not be considered a wise and faithful steward. In the Gospel of Luke 12:42, 43 it says: "How great a thing is a faithful and prudent steward, whom the Lord sets over his servants to give them their due. Blessed is the servant whom his lord finds doing so when he comes 2c. But such a steward is unfaithful who does not consider the common good; he is unwise and careless if he has no reasonable cause for himself. From this follows that he who has dispensed without reasonable cause is not safe from God; as the curious gloss reports in c. Non est de voto; and although it seems as if the gloss, which speaks in terms of desire, were referring to what is founded in divine right, this is also true in matters that have their basis in jure positivo, or in human right, as is nicely noted by Io. An., whose statement is to be found almost from word to word in c. de multa de praebeand. which alida d. Anthon. Io. de Ymola d. Nico. follows and likewise teaches this; and as just the-fer d. Nico, in dic. c. This is not hindered by what, from what has been said before, in dic. c. de multa roiber Theoricam concludes Inno, in c. cum ad monasterium de stat, monacho. and says that the pope can grant grace against human law according to his mere and free will and pleasure. For although this, according to the opinion of this same d. Nico. applies to the contending church, in which the opinion and pronouncements of the pope no one may master, XI. q. III. Nemo, it does not apply in the sight of God, because even the Lord Pope may not, without cause, abate a right built on the common welfare, he is rather bound, according to his office, to feed his sheep, and to act as a righteous steward; as he speaks there and dic. c. Non est, and so has d. Nico, in c. quae in ecclesiarum de constitu., and says that where there is no lawful cause to depart from the jure positivo, a prince sins when he violates the same, because he has the power to feed his flock, but not to confuse or weigh it down; and therefore he must act according to justice and equity, but not according to his particular inclination and pleasure. And this I consider to be an indisputable truth, that the Lord Pope in foro poli. or of God does not have the power to slacken the jus positivum without reasonable cause, because its resolution and regulation must be based on the same reason, according to what stands le. et no. in regula I. de regulis juris et in l. nihil tam naturale ff. c. tit. But since no positive law is to be made unless it is based on reason and natural equity, and where this is the case, the name of right or law is not even deserved, c. erit autem lex IV. dis, hence law is called the art of what is just and equitable, l. I. ff. de justitia et jure; so likewise it may not be abrogated again without reasonable cause and natural equity. This, that the pope, if he wants to dispense contrary to the positive laws, must have natural equity for himself, is beautifully proved by the text c. manet XXIV. q. I., where it is said that the privilege deriving from Blessed Petro remains unaffected, even if a pronouncement is made in accordance with its equity. Therefore it is said that the pope is able to do everything, so that he is unconfessed in his power, which he exercises, namely after previous judicial investigation; just as the power which the church has is called a key. And in fact there is only one key, or One

But the fact that one sometimes speaks of keys in the number of multiplicity is due to the fact that a prelate, in addition to the power, must also make an investigation and decision, so that there are two keys, one of the power, the other of the investigation and decision; as we therefore rightly say that the pope is able to do everything without erring in his executive power, namely after previously made investigation and decision. This is noted by d. Nico, in c. tanta de excess. praelato. Take to this what the gloss has in c. Quanto de jurejurando, where the gloss also mentions the clavis discretionis, and says that the pope can absolve someone from the oath for legitimate and well-founded reasons, if he first uses the clavem discretionis properly. Inno. also says there that although the pope can do everything, he must often use the clavis discretionis before he makes the pronouncement. Here belongs a beautiful dio. Bal. in l. II. in IX. colum, c. de servi- tut. etaq., where it is said that no power, neither of a prince nor of the council, can make the prince cease to be a rational and mortal creature; nor can it make him free from the law of nature, or from the instruction of sound reason and the eternal law; and thus, although the prince himself is not subject to the laws, he is not free from what sound reason instructs him to do, according to the saying of this same Bal. ibi, quod est perpetuo menti tenendum. Moreover, in every dispensation, if it especially concerns divine right, the pope must pay attention to three things, namely: what he may do according to justice and equity; what he should do according to respectability, and what may be good in view of the benefits and advantages; as the beautiful text reads c. magnae de voto. Yes, the pope must sometimes abstain from many things that are not unlawful, according to the apostle's saying (1 Cor.6,12.): I have it all power, but it is not all pious; as in c. Aliud quod decet c. XI. q. I. From this it is concluded that, although the power and authority of the pope is of a very great extent, and is endowed with an immense number of privileges and privileges; of which in dic. c. proposuit de concess. praeben., unb in dic. c. Cum ad monasterium de sta. monach. unb in c. litteras de restit. spolia., also per gloss. et doc. in c. I. de transla. praelat. and in c. quod translation. de offi. lega. and in c. sicut unire de excess. praelat., and more extensively per specu, tit. II. § Nunc ostendendum and § Nunc breviter dicendum, per totum, and per Bal. in l.

rescripta c. de preci, impera, offeren., also per d. Nico. in his disputation, which begins: Episcopus et quidam Rector etc., and per d. Andre, alias Barbatium in dic. c. quod translationem: yet he may not prove this his high power and authority without reasonable causes; whereto the peculiar saying Innoc., in c. Innotuit de elec., which expressly says that the pope may not use and exercise his complete power without reasonable causes.

On the other hand, it must be noted that regardless of someone committing a pagan sin, who wants to be a Christian, and yet is disobedient to the apostolic see, c. si qui presbyteri LXXXI. dis. even to obey the papal commands is necessary for salvation, as in extravagant. Bonifa. VII Unam sanctam, and the gloss notes in cie. Ad nostrum § tertio de heretic., this is to be foreseen: as long as it is not to be assumed that by the papal command the church will be put into extreme unrest, or that other mischief will arise from it; as is nicely noted by Innoc. and after him in c. Inquisitioni de sentent. excommunic., where it is stated whether and to what extent one is obliged to obey the pope or the prelate who gives unjust orders. See the gloss, and just there Innoc. in c. ad aures de tem- por. ord. together with the note of Nico, in c. si quando de rescript, where he also has quite strange words, namely that a subject, if the regent, be he pope or emperor, should order something, whose compliance and observation could cause trouble in the city, is not bound to obey, which must be especially noted. This is also what Nico means in c. quae in ecclesiarum de constitut. He says: "One does not have to obey the prince and regent if one has to fear a future offense from his command, or disorder in Christendom, or otherwise a great sin. But also this is noted by the said Nico in c. accepimus de fide instrum, where he says: the pope must be obeyed in a command, although hard, which he lets go out from enlightened knowledge, if only such command has nothing sinful in it, or one has to fear an offense from it; whereby one conferire, what has been noted per doc. post Osti. and Io. An. in c. significavit de offic. ordin. and in c. Cum adeo de rescript. From this it is further concluded that where the prelate in a place presumably foresees that the observance of the apostolic order or the apostolic bull could bring about an annoyance, he should not let it happen that Rather, he shall report it to the pope and present to him the resulting annoyance and all other circumstances arising from it, and then expect a different order from the pope himself, after he has been well and sufficiently instructed in everything.

And so the matter is also proved in dic. c. si quando, after the said d. Nic., which concludes from this text: that the magistrate, or another to whom the prince gives a written order, has the power not to obey it for this time, but to write to the prince and expect another order; although the prince, because of the too great impetuosity of the one who asks, or because he wants to effect something secretly, or because of his too many affairs, does and permits what he should not and should not do and permit. In this connection, this same D. Nico, in c. causam II. de Testi. remarks and says that an official in the execution of liberties and privileges, which seem to dispute with reason, or under which there is a fraud, or which run contrary to the common interests, must not proceed immediately, but first ask the prince for advice and expect a different command, whereby the text to confer in c. ad nostram and c. porrecta de confirmatione utili, vel inutili; et in authentico, ut nulli jud. § Et hoc vero coi. IX, and what the curious text has in c. ordinarii § si vero de offic. ordin. lib. VI, where it is stated that if there were any doubt as to whether the dispensation granted was correct and sufficient, the apostolic see should be consulted. And what has been said before is confirmed by what is noted per doc. in c. cum venissent de judi. where they claim that a subject can examine whether the privilege of the prince has been secretly exercised or not. Here is to be looked up c. super litteris de rescript, and what notes Io. An. in c. l. de litis contest. lib. VI, therefore it is said that those prelates would be miserable who were immediately afraid. For they must not fear at all when they deal with the truth, in that they thereby make themselves pleasing to God and the pope, as the curious gloss reads in 1. puniri c. si contra jus vel utilit. public. And Bal. says there: this should be noted against such wretched prelates, who accept the papal bulls so strictly that they do not even want to admit to examining them and objecting to them. For according to the Bal. they must let this happen; and the gloss also notes this in authentico de mandatis principum in § deinde in verbo nuntians coi.

III, where the gloss also says: this should be noted against the wretched prelates, who are so afraid of the papal bulls that they do not have the heart to object to them; which they should not do, according to this very gloss. Indeed, that the apostolic letters should be carefully read and examined by every local bishop is proven by the text in cie. II. de poenitent. et remiss.

Thirdly, it must be considered that although the pope can dispense against the law if he has a substantial and useful cause for it, and especially if he wants to dispense against the divine law; against which he could also dispense on the impulse of a very important cause, according to what has been noted per doc. post Inno, in dic. c. quae in ecclesiarum and per glossam in c. a. nobis de deci. and per gloss. et doc. in 1. fin. C. si contra jus vel util. publi. fa. c. quanto de translat. praelat., but the good text excludes certain cases in which the pope can by no means dispense; of which with more per gloss. et doc. in prae al. c. proposuit and in dic. c. cum ad monasterium and in dic. c. litteras, and per specui, in dic. § Nunc breviter dicendum est. And among other cases is also this, if the pope wanted to dispense against the general state of the church, so that after such dispensation and change the same would gain a completely different form: so he could not then dispense; as the text proves in c. et si illa, 1. q. VII. tenet Archidia. in c. sunt quidam, XXV. q. 1. and so must be understood the gloss, which wants just this, in dic. c. proposuit unb in dic. c. litteras according to d. Nico. who also asserts it in dic. iuribus. From this it follows that the pope cannot grant a secular prince the power 1) to judge and condemn the clergy in his territory on all matters without distinction, because this would reverse and change the general state of the churches. Not to think that this conflicts with the divine will and law, XCVI. dis. si imperator, where the peculiar text deals with it; and note doc. after Inno, in c. II. de majori et obedient. And just that, that the pope cannot do this, asserts d. Nico, in prae al. c. litteras and d. Floren. in c. perpendimus de sentent. ex- commun. Therefore, according to divine law, the clergy are exempt from jurisdiction or lordship.

The laymen are free to create, as it is written in dic. iuribus. And so the clergy may be altogether fearless, because the word of God speaks for them and says: Do not touch my anointed ones [Ps. 105, 15]. Therefore they are quite calm and secure in this, as stated gloss. in authenticico, de non alienando aut permutando ec- cles. re. § 1. in verbo degenerari, coi. II. however, for this reason the clerics, and especially the priests, should not offend anyone, but be ready to serve all, XIV. q. Y. denique et c. fin. de Postul. There is also another case exempted from this, namely, marriage contracted between faithful persons and already consummated by conjugal cohabitation, which bond the pope is by no means able to sever and dissolve; as the gloss notes in c. ex publico, de conver. conjugato, et Io. de Ymo in c. fi. de transaction. and d. Nico, in dic. c. ex publico. But it is different with a marriage that has not yet been consummated by the carnal union, in which case the pope can dispense for important reasons, as note doc. in prae al. c. ex publico and Io. de Ymo in dic. c. fi., which says that this would be accepted by everyone. From this one can draw a conclusion to the abominable and cruel injustice which the most unjust king in France, if he still deserves the royal title, is said to have inflicted on our most glorious lord, the Roman king, by abandoning the daughter of said our lord and king, who was betrothed to him, and the Great British princess, who had been promised to our lord and king, has been chosen as his wife, about which all your faithful and especially the German subjects of the Holy Roman Empire have reason to be justly grieved and to heartily regret their chief. 2) Therefore, all German princes, dukes, margraves, counts, barons, and nobles in general, would like to show prudence and prevent that, through the malicious plots and clandestine attempts of the said French king and other barbarians, the Holy Roman Empire, for which the honest Germans and righteous nobles, who are called Theotunici, as is noted in XXXIV. dis. Quorundam, and by Io. An. in c. venerabilem in verbo germanus de elec., have so merited by their bravery, as the gloss affirms in c. Ego Lu- dovici LXIII. dis. unb Io. An. in dic. c. ve-

2) King Carl VIII of France turned his fiancée, the heiress of Brittany, away from the German King Maximilian I and married her.

1) "not" put by us instead of: "with" in the old edition.

nerabilem, be snatched from them, and after its loss, which God wants to avert, they might fall into servitude. Therefore, the aforementioned Duke Albrecht, having considered, according to his high and enlightened insight, how to counteract the apparent danger that the Germans would face, has sent his sweet wife, noble sons, wise councillors, obedient subjects, his country and everything else dear to him in his duchy, and what else was dear to him in his duchy, and exposed himself to the greatest danger in the lower part of Germany, because he would rather die than see the Germans deprived of this incomparable crown and the Republic ruined to the ground. For this reason, the memory of this wise and honest prince, and of the other highborn princes and lords, the Dukes of Saxony, the Landgraves of Thuringia and the Margraves of Meissen, should remain in constant blessing among all nations. For of such it must be said that they live unceasingly for the sake of their acquired fame; as is stated in § 1. institut. de excusat. Tutorum. Therefore, if this marriage with the princess of our king had been consummated by carnal cohabitation, the pope could by no means dispense with it. But if this had not happened, and the marriage between our king and the English princess had not been consummated by conjugal cohabitation, the pope could dispense with it for important reasons. And if there were no probable suspicion that from such a dispensation great annoyance, or some other great mischief might arise, why then should the pope hesitate to dispense? Ar. eorum quae no. per doc. post Inno, in dic. c. Inquisitionem de sentent. excom. et per d. Nico, in dic. c. si quando de rescript. et in dic. c. quae in ecclesiarum de constitut. ad quod nota per gloss. in re. Qui scandalizaverit de re jud. et in c. sane de tempor. ordin., where it is noted that although one should not abandon the truth of a pious and righteous life because of the arousal that has arisen, the truth of justice and the truth of doctrine suffer a great blow because of the arousal.

Provided this, I give my decisum pro parte negativa, and say that the aforementioned Duke Albrecht and his subjects, who do their part according to the decree issued in the apostolic bull, cannot eat butter and other dairy products during Lent and on other forbidden days without scruples of conscience. And this is what drives me, in addition to what I have learned in this

The first point is that in doubtful matters one must take the safer way. c. ad audientiam and c. significasti II. it. c. penit. de homicid. and c. Illud de cleri, excom. ministrat. Therefore, in matters that are doubtful, and in which the soul can be put in danger, we must always choose what is more certain, and what can be done without danger to the soul, and in this respect the power that takes the safe path is also to be considered better, less severe, and more benevolent, as the curious gloss reads in c. 1. de scrutin. in ord. facien. et text. in cie. Exivi de verbo signif. ad quod c. juvenis de sponsal. et ibi per doc. Moreover, it is incumbent upon honest hearts to be afraid of sins where no oversight is to be found, v. dis. ad ejus et c. consilium de observan. jejun. Thus also this power serves to preserve and promote religion and abstinence; although there must already be an important reason which serves to preserve religion, 1. sunt personae ff. de religione. Yes, if the said apostolic bull had not been received secretly, and therefore not per vitium surreptionis, I would nevertheless advise the contributors to abstain from eating butter and other milk foods during Lent; For this reason, because one should abstain from that which one can do and refrain from without mortal sin, in order to prevent only the offense, and should make use of it, according to the circumstances, to prevent the offense. Therefore the apostle says 1 Cor. 8, 13: If the food offends my brother, I would never eat meat; and the Lord in the Gospel Match. 18, 7. and Luc. 17, 1.: Woe to the same man by whom trouble comes. Of which the text is very curious in c. cum ex injuncto de no. ope. nuntia. Ad idem text. cum gloss. verbo distinguendum in c. Nisi cum pridem pro gravi quoque de renuntiat, where the gloss says that the blessed Gregory in the VII homily on Ezekiel would have made the distinction: whether or not we can avoid the offense without sin; for insofar as we can avoid it, we are obliged to do so; whereby to read what has been noted in dic. regula qui scandalizaverit de regul. juris. It is quite certain that whoever contributes according to the regulation founded in the apostolic bull can abstain from eating butter and other dairy foods without sin, since no one is obliged or required to do so, and yet, if such foods were consumed on the aforementioned days, great annoyance would result.

as experience teaches. Therefore, to prevent this, one must abstain from such foods, per praedicta, et fa. c. illa in f. XII. diss. et c. cavendum X. q. III. et c. nolite recedere XI. q. III. ad idem gloss. notabil. in 1. in laqueum ff. de acquirendo rerum do- min. et in § apium. Institut. de rerum divis. where it is nicely remarked that one should fear the annoyance even more than the judgment. And as I hear, also the venerable and devout fathers, Mr. Gregorius 1) de Frickenhausen, S. Theol. Prof., and Mr. Jo. de Bomberga, S. Theol. Baccalaureiis, both preachers in this famous city of Leipzig, have decided the deal, and agree with my opinion, which is evicident from the above.

Now it remains that I also answer the reasons that one puts forward pro parte affirmativa. To the first I answer thus: Although it is necessary to stick to the words of a law or indult and a letter of grace, and not to depart from the letter, it is also true that if such letters of grace or indults are executed secretly, that is, in such a way that false things are stated or the truth is concealed, then they no longer have validity and force, and one must then depart from the letter, and the rights must agree with each other, and one law must agree with the other. c. cum expediat de elec. lib. VI. cum simili. Moreover, the rights and laws must also be conciliated per subauditiones tacitas, as the gloss notes in c. cupientes § quodsi per viginti, in verbo petere de elec. c. li. fa. 1. non possunt ff. de legi. Also, one must limit the words of such pardon bulls that hold hostile, burdensome and vexatious dispensations, as in can. odia cum concor. de regul. juris lib. VI.

On the other point, I must remind you that although the pope is still above the law and can dispense against it, it only applies when there is a legitimate cause, and therefore he should not do anything without prior investigation. And if his pardon bull had been issued secretly, it would then have no force, as was previously thought; and thus old and new laws must harmonize with each other.

Coming to the third argument, that is not approved in rights, that the pope can contradict the leges positivas according to his mere and

The Pope's own free will, so that neither he who accepts the dispensation has to undergo punishment in divine judgment, nor the Pope himself who grants it, sins; rather, the opposite is asserted in it, as I have explained above. Therefore, the statement of the Inno. and Specu. must be abandoned if it is not founded in rights, since the words of a certain teacher have only a probability, and one remains with them insofar as they are affirmed in rights; as is noted per gloss. in 1. 1. C. de legi, ad quod glos, in c. 1. de postuland. praelato. Hence it is that a teacher, though a great one, may not be trusted and believed unless he proves his propositions from credible writings; as is beautifully noted by Archi. in c. nolite eos, in verbo in scripturis XI. q. III. III. And so it is also permitted to depart from the common opinion of a teacher, if the same cannot be proven from the laws; as notes d. Nico, post d. Antho. in c. Tua nos, de usuris, which one must well keep, and take to it what Jo. An. notes in e. l. 66 oon8tit. With this one does not argue, if one wanted to say, what pleases the prince is valid as much as a law, 1. I. ff. de constitut. principum and in § sed quod principi, Institut. de jure naturali et gentium et civili. For the word placet presupposes the will and expert opinion of a righteous man, and so we take the popularity of it, - what seems good to a righteous and reasonable man, 1. Tahys. § sorore ff. de fidei commiss. libertat. notat Bar. in ex- travagante ad reprimendum, in verbo videbitur et d. Nico, in c. I. de constitut. But a righteous and reasonable man will not put up with anything without cause. Nor does it stand in the way that in the case of a prince, as far as human law is concerned, the well-known saying: Sic volo, sic jubeo, sit pro ratione voluntas, ftati^at, per gloss. in c. si gratiosae de rescript. lib. VI, for this is not to be understood of the mere and free will, but of the will tempered and governed by reason, as is clear from the above.

To the fourth and last point, it serves as an answer that this is well in science, which, if the disputes are thereby raised and settled, becomes favorable; and thus the thing on which this science goes, where it does not expressly dispute with the general right, protects and affirms science itself. But it is different in pardons or privileges, which, in so far as they are in conflict with the general

1) In the documents No. 20 and 23 he is called "Georgius".

The pope is to take and interpret them in an unpleasant way and in a narrower sense, yes, the secret effect invalidates even such privileges, as has been said above. Therefore, when the pope has first been presented with the great annoyance, the long-established custom, and other obscure circumstances, and thus has a certain infallible science and a reasonable reason for himself, he should grant such a papal favor or privilege: no one will doubt the validity of such a favor or privilege; although it is not to be presumed that the pope, whose office entails increasing the service of God, C. ex parte de Constitut. to promote religion, to keep fast, to practice godly and praiseworthy habits, c. ad apostolicam de Simo. would grant such a letter of favor only for a minor and unworthy cause. And even if an indult had been issued secretly and without the knowledge of the pope, it would still have to be reclaimed and rescinded in the event that an annoyance arose from it and the matter amounted to a sin. C. suggestum de aeci. where the text is very strange and shows that one would have to reclaim a letter of freedom because of an offense that arose over it; Jo. An. just there, who presents twelve cases in which a privilege is overturned, and in the tenth case says that such annoyance occurs halfway; likewise, so that many inconsistent things do not arise from an inconvenience or impropriety in a granted liberty, 1. Ratas. C. de rescind. vendit. in the beginning, and follow Ovidii saying:

Principiis obsta, sero medicina paratur.

Nam mala per longas convaluere moras. As the gloss notes in c. ad haec de re- script. where Tullii words convention: Every evil is damped in its first beginning with slight effort; but where it grows, it commonly becomes stronger, and therefore it cannot be remedied so easily. Hence blessed Jerome also says: "As long as your enemy is still small and has no strength, rub him up, so that his evil may be stifled in its first beginning.

Now, what has been presented by me so far, in total and in particular, I hereby want to submit to the censorship of our aforementioned Most Holy Lord Pope and the Holy Mother, the Church, also of the aforementioned Duke Albrecht, and of the Highborn Prince and Lord, Duke Georg zu Saxony, Landgraves in Thuringia and Margraves in Meissen, my most gracious lords, and all well-meaning, submit; testify also hereby publicly that I assert and accept what you and each of them in particular accepts, and that I reject what he rejects; in this no reasonable person will be able to reprove me, per ea, quae le. et no. in c. Haec est fides XXIV. q. V. et in c. damnamus in fin. de sum. trini, ad idem glossa in prooemio. VI. in principio. Nor have I wished to present and write this to anyone for harm or favor, but for the welfare of this flourishing fatherland, also for the benefit and advantage of the Lords Studiosorum of both rights, and especially of the Papal right, which I publicly testify evenly to the glorification and praise of God, Amen.

20. of the Bishop of Meissen, John VI a Saalhausen, protestation and other acts against this indulgence. About the beginning of 1492.

From the Georg Fabricius aimal. urd. Msaio., lid. III, p. 171.

Bishop John VI had to overcome many difficulties before he reached this dignity, and in the beginning of his office the priests in Bautzen and Meissen were his most important opponents. In addition, he was plagued by foreigners. For the indulgence merchants from Liefland had obtained letters of indulgence from Pope Alexandra VI and Julio II, and also wanted to distribute their goods in his cities, under the name and authority of the archbishop of Magdeburg; but he rejected this altogether and protected the freedom of his church, which would be a free one. Therefore, from all places of his diocese, he severely restrained these merchants who carried such dissolute goods, and finally won the case before Julio II. His opponent was Christian Baumhauer, quasi dicas, arborum Caesor, aut eversor, who made money out of this indulgence, and needed two swindlers, Philipp Scirpen and Hermannen, a priest of Hildesheim, for it. He rejected many superstitious things in his time, and said that as often as he read the Bible, he found a different religion in it than was practiced in public. When he saw the people paying money to Tetzels for indulgences, he cried out: "Oh, how foolish people are that they put money into the box for which they have no key! Georgii von Frickenhausen, a Dominican in Leipzig, when who preached against the papal butter letters, he took up, and in his defense against the Freiberg canons used these words: nam quod Romae palam et impune per totum anni tempus venditur, id Germanis sine aere permittere, aut sine poena edere, non licebat? that is, what one sells in Rome freely and publicly, without incurring a penalty, year after year, should we Germans not be allowed to concession this without payment, or to esen with impunity? Whenever he saw a monk, he used to say: There would be no more insolent animal than the one peeping through the cows.

21st Duke George of Saxony's order to the dean and chapter of Freiberg, as well as to the monks of the Barfüßer and the preachers of Leipzig, as both disputing parties, to send their mutual reasons in writing to the prince within a certain time, so that these could be sent to a university for pronouncement. 1492.

From Kapp's "Nachlese nützlicher Reformationurkunden," Theil III, p. 113.

By the Grace of God, we George, Duke of Saxony, Landgrave in Thuringia and Margrave of Meissen, confess that [due to the disagreement] 1) between the worthy, our dear devotees, dean and chapter of our Lady Church at Freiberg, on the one hand, and the Order of Preachers and Barefooters at Leipzig, on the other hand, because of the afflictions which have arisen between them, concerning 2) the promulgation of the Papal Bull concerning the milk diet: So that the lords of the chapter at Freiberg shall send their consilium and all their justice to the affected monasteries, which shall then have such three weeks, and see whether they may accept and find from it to reject their authority. But if this does not happen, the affected brothers and monasteries shall also send all their justice or mobility causes to us again, which we want to have conveyed to the chapter, who shall then also have such three weeks, and shall see whether they may reject themselves from it, but if this also does not happen, we shall then be informed after the end of the three weeks. 3) The monasteries shall send their consilium and all their justice causes to us again, which we want to have conveyed to the chapter, who shall then also have such three weeks, and shall see whether they may reject themselves from it.

1) inserted by us, and "held" deleted before "talked about".

2) "raised" inserted by us and "um" put instead of: "and" in the old edition

We will send this to Leipzig in our university to the doctors of holy scripture and law, commonly and no person therein extracted, or to other foreign high schools, in the form as indicated; and in doing so, to look at nothing but God and justice in the letter, and to open their opinion and mind to us. And what is thus recognized and declared by the same doctors shall be held and recognized by every part willing to accept them. In witness whereof we have hereunto set our seal. Given at Dresden on the Saturday after Dionysius 1492.

22 Duke Albrecht and his first-born son, Duke George, wrote to Pope Alexander VI, requesting that, because both some monks and John Breitenbach had preached against the indulgence granted by Innocentius VIII and had asserted erroneous and vexatious propositions, he either take this matter to Rome or assign it to the bishop of Schleswig.

From Kapp's "Nachlese," Theil III, p. 115.

Translated into German.

Which prescribed process, which we have indeed complied with, they have not observed at all, but rather have traveled to court, and have stated us falsely, unjustly and shamefully to the apostolic see, in respect of the Cardinals and the entire public Consistorii, blasphemously as follows: 4)

Most Holy Father! Innocentius VIII, Pope, then of most blessed memory, the ancestor of your Holiness, had by various letters, at the humble request of the sons of your Holiness and of the Holy Roman Church, Albrecht, Duke of Saxony, and George, his firstborn, for the need of his subjects and some other persons named at that time, also for the reconstruction of the church of the Holy Virgin Mary in his city of Freiberg, in the Meissen district, which said Duke Albrecht, out of devotion and zeal of faith, has made into a collegiate church with an excellent foundation.

4) The preceding introductory words are to be regarded as a complaint of the Leipzig Order of Preachers and the Order of the Barefoot against the dean and the chapter of Freiberg.

(Collegio) had been erected on apostolic benefits, and which had been miserably devastated by a conflagration: It is hereby established, decreed and granted that until the next twenty years from then on, both Duke Albrecht and all his subjects, along with some others who were named at that time, may eat cheese and such dairy food freely and without hindrance during Lent and other feast days, when the eating of butter, cheese and other dairy food is forbidden; However, those who wish to make use of this freedom shall pay the twentieth part of a Rhenish guilder annually for the reconstruction of the church in question, in such a way that the fourth part of such tax shall be used for the construction of St. Peter's Church in the city. St. Peter's Church in the city should be deducted from it.

Nevertheless, some preachers dare to destroy the authority and power of their holiness and the apostolic see, and pretend by false speeches and lying doctrines in their sermons: that the duke, his subjects and other reported persons, by virtue of such letters, are not allowed to eat butter, cheese and milk on said days, because in those regions oil is made from all kinds of seeds and legumes, which the faithful otherwise eat in those places; And their holiness could not, against the custom of such places, ordain another for the people, by which they would cause great offence, and, as it were, excite a riot and a new sect; and because they are not under the ordinary spiritual jurisdiction, and are not afraid of our punishment, preach all the more freely that of which I have already reported; from which it is even probable to fear that there might result many annoyances and dangers to souls. As then a child of perdition, Joh. Breitenbach, has fallen in with such preachers, and has publicly advocated some annoying and erroneous propositions of said things, and has endeavored to have them printed almost in a thousand copies in quarto 1). So that what we have said about this sect, that it seems to be disrupting the religion and the Catholic faith of this country, does not continue to eat away at it and spread, their Holinesses Albrecht and George humbly ask that it be respected by any judge, that they deign to order and command some judge of the Roman court to order the Ordinarii of the same region, in whose cities and districts this is going on, by way of punishment and banishment, as it may be well for the said Commiffario, thereupon to diligently

To take care, and to forbid said preachers and Joh. Breitenbach, under equal curses and church punishment, seriously, that they do not dare to preach or even to advocate such things before the believing peoples from now on. And that whoever has preached against your Holiness and the Apostolic See's authority and prestige, or has asserted or advocated something, recant it, be he of whatever status, order, or even prelature and dignity he wishes. And that he also summons and summons the said preachers and Johannem Breitenbach in a summary and extrajudicial manner to appear personally before him at the Roman court for curses, spiritual punishments and fines, which he himself, the judge, may name at will; both that they justify themselves for what they have already committed, as stated above, and that they clear themselves of the strong suspicion of heresy that has arisen against them as a result of the above-mentioned things, and also certify that they hereby recant all of the above; But otherwise (if they have not done so, but have despised or neglected to do so), that they may be condemned and sentenced to the curses, penalties, and fines above mentioned, and others which have been decreed against the resisters of the authority of the apostolic see, and to which they are liable. Likewise, that he also summons and warns others according to their transgressions, and stops and punishes the crimes; and that he also had and has everyone tear up and burn the above-mentioned printed sentences, where they are only expelled, contents of other letters omitted about it, with the above-mentioned curses; and that they do and execute everything that they consider necessary or useful in the aforementioned matters and in addition, regardless of all other exceptions, liberties, letters and privileges that the apostolic see, in whatever form and according to whatever description, may grant or still grant to any person, place or order, even of its own accord and good knowledge; All of which shall be of no avail against the same, notwithstanding all apostolic ordinances, statutes, and other things contrary thereto, in whatever manner they may be deemed expedient.

By order of our Lord Pope, the Bishop of Schleswig shall hear, and after summary extrajudicial interrogation, after the testimony on reported matters, order and request that one appear in person, and proceed with excommunication and other reported punishments, as requested, and establish justice, even if from above reported liberties something would be in the way.

1) In Walch's old edition, Lill's "uatsrnis Uttvri" 6tL. is given here by: "in 1015. letters"; in the next following writing by: "in 1015. lines".

23 Pabst Alexander VI's other letter, issued in this dispute, in which he has drawn the whole matter, which he had ordered the bishop of Schleswig, after the Dominicans and Franciscans had been presented, to the Roman court, to which a Dominican's note is prefixed and a Franciscan's memory is buried to the end.

From Kapp's "Nachlese," Theil III, p. 115.

Translated into German.

Upon which adverse complaint the most holy pope (although in our part the procurator or attorney, as he is called, of the order of preachers, all of which was contradicted in the same full consistory), and after he had been instructed to the contrary, assigned the matter to the venerable father, the bishop in Schleswig 2c. But after the Holy Spirit had been further informed of many great upsets and various mischiefs, he took the matter to himself in the following form:

Since it was formerly presented to us that Innocentius VIII, our ancestor, of blessed memory, by various apostolic letters, granted to his beloved sons, Albrecht, Duke of Saxony, and Georgio, his firstborn, for the need of his subjects and some others who are under their protection and belong to their dominions, and for the reconstruction of a certain church, under the name of the Blessed Virgin Mary, of the city of Freiberg, in the Meissen district, which said duke, out of devotion, ordered to be a collegiate church, with an excellent collegio or foundation, and which afterwards should have been burned down by conflagration, had decided, ordered and granted that for twenty years from then on, both the duke himself, as well as all his subjects, and other persons included in said letters, may eat butter, cheese and other such dairy food freely and unhindered during the great fast and other days (where otherwise butter, cheese and other dairy food would have been forbidden to be eaten because of the church statutes); but so that those who wanted to use such freedom should pay the twentieth part of a Rhenish guilder annually for the renewal of said church, and that a fourth part of it should go to the building [of the church] of the prince of the apostles in the city:

And that, on the other hand, when the said letters of freedom were made known in the same regions, some

Preachers took upon themselves to diminish the authority of the apostolic see, and to assert in their sermons, with false persuasions and lying doctrines, that the said duke, his subjects, and other reported persons, by virtue of such letters, were not permitted to eat butter, cheese, and such dairy foods; that in such regions an oil is beaten from various legumes and seeds, which the faithful of the same places otherwise enjoyed on the said days, and that therefore no decree should have been issued against this old custom; and that many would be annoyed by this, and that they would thereby, as it were, create a new sect, whereupon it would be to be feared that many souls might suffer mischief and annoyance from it; and that also the beloved son Joh. Breitenbach, has joined in with the aforementioned preachers, and has not shied away from publicly advocating various annoying and erroneous statements about the aforementioned things, and from having them printed in almost a thousand copies in quarto:

Thus, at the request of the said Albrecht and George, we ordered the most venerable brother Egard, bishop of Schleswig, a 1) steward from the apostolic palace, that he emphatically forbid the said preachers and John, with church punishments and banishment, from henceforth preaching or advocating such things to the believing peoples, and that all who have so far preached, asserted and advocated the opposite, revoke it; The said preachers, however, and John, at his request, appear in person at the Roman court, under the same penalties, and apologize on account of the above-mentioned things, and on account of the grave suspicion of heresy which they have thereby given against us, as it was said, and also certify that they recant what they preached and advocated before; or otherwise, and there see that they are declared to be people who have carried out and forfeited the penalties, curses and fines I have announced against those who resist the authority of the apostolic see. How he would therefore have to remind and demand them, also to punish them according to their offense and crime, and have the above thousand copies torn into quarters and burned.

And what was further added, on the part of the dean and chapter of said collegiate church: that although on the venerable brothers, the archbishop in Magdeburg and other of his suffragan bishops, will, so in said letters kund-

1) In the old edition of a.

In certain neighboring countries their people, according to the apostolic liberty, needed butter and other milk food in the fasting without annoyance; nevertheless the beloved sons, Brother George of Frickenhausen, Master in Theology, and Brother John of Bamberg, Baccalaureus in Theology, the Order of the Friars Preachers and Minorites, and the above-mentioned John, Doctor, 1) because they intended to destroy the power and authority of the said apostolic see and to interpret the same's letters of grace and liberties for the renewal of the said collegiate church in an annoying manner, with apparent censures and false doctrines, not to be afraid to preach publicly that the said duke and his subjects, and other persons mentioned, by virtue of these apostolic letters, are not free to eat butter, cheese and dairy food on the said days: And that our forefather, having given liberty over the express right, and having abrogated it, does not use the key of understanding in the said matters; and that the people in such places, having accepted such liberty, contrary to their former use of their fatherland, would be greatly annoyed, and, as it were, stirred up to a right sedition and new sect; but that the said collegiate church would remain without renewal and rebuilding, and that it would be daily to be feared that no greater annoyances would arise therefrom:

At the request of the dean and chapter, we have instructed the same bishop, our administrator, to order the ordinaries of the same places to take diligent care of the aforementioned matters, and to expressly forbid the aforementioned Georgen, Johannem and Johannem, in the event of such a ban and fine, from preaching or advocating such things to the faithful people, but rather to revoke what is preached and advocated in such matters; that the people may use the said liberty without hindrance; that the said Georgen, Johannem and Johannem, brethren and doctor, nevertheless appear before them personally, and apologize in the said matters, be charged with the same penalties, and that everything else be decreed, as is contained in various commissions issued by us concerning this matter with more.

But since, as we have heard through credible (people's) report, this matter is becoming more and more annoying in such places, and gives more cause to depart from the statutes of the church than to go to the sea-

The reason for this is that it seems as if the salvation of souls is being bought with money, and thus our honor and the prevention of the souls' aggravation are at stake here, so that it is an important matter, and there is more to consider than what has recently been feared in the manner indicated:

Thus, moved by these and some other causes in our minds, we have brought the matter and similar matters before us, such to our venerable brothers, Oliverio and Cs. Bishops of Sabina and Alba, the Holy Roman Church of Naples and Lisbon priests, out of their own impulse and good sense, that they order and grant to the parties on both sides due dates, which they may set at their pleasure, and where it is necessary, further suspend, in order to enforce their rights and grounds on both parts; and that they, after due hearing has been held, the rights of the parties have been recognized, and their arguments and reasons have been maturely considered, present them to us in secret council, so that we may take due precautions, both with them and with other venerable brethren, our holy Roman Church Cardinals, in such a way and manner, so that we may be able to prevent the annoyances of the nations and to counsel the salvation of souls, with the power to require and prohibit, in the Roman court and outside of it, also with ecclesiastical punishments and excommunications and other penalties, as seems good to them, without being hindered by any other statutes and apostolic orders, or others that are contrary to it.

Which dragging of the matter to Rome the supposed bishop, since he was no longer judge, no doubt bribed by gifts, did not respect.... against us, who had been warned and, if necessary, summoned: that, against God and law and all due process, indeed, against the content of said ... warning and, if necessary, summons, since we never refused to appear to them in person, and they could come to our homes without any danger, they nevertheless, to our greatest shame and that of both orders, had such things publicly posted and posted on the doors of the churches of our monasteries, on the day of the seraphic teacher, our father Francisci, at a great sermon and procession, before a populous assembly, and thus heaped injustice upon injustice. By which

1) In the old edition instead of "Doctor" only "D". It refers to Doctor Johannes Breitenbach.

We have publicly contradicted, and exposed their deceit, cunning, falsehood and lies, both in schools and pulpits, and that they cannot continue to revile or insult us in our honor, appealed to the Holy Apostolic See.

On August 25, 1496, Pope Alexander VI issued a bull imposing silence on both parties.

From Möller's "Freiberg tteivtr. olironie.", Theil II, p.37.

Translated into German.

Alexander the Sixth, Roman Pontiff, to the beloved sons, dean and the cathedral chapter of Freiberg St. Mary's Church, Meissen Diocese.

Beloved Sons! My greeting and apostolic blessing beforehand. Our predecessor Innocentius VIII, Roman Pontiff, of blessed memory, to our beloved son, the noble man Albrecht, Duke of Saxony, and to all persons of both sexes in his country, likewise to those who are subjects of his feudatories in secular matters, who are also under his protection, and who at present live under it, at their request, that they may eat butter, cheese, and other dairy foods, during the forty days of fasting, and on other days on which meat-eating is forbidden to the faithful of the Christian church, for the next twenty years without scruple of conscience; if only those who want to eat such things contribute the twentieth part of a Rhenish gold guilder annually, as long as the twenty-year period lasts, for the reconstruction and improvement of your Freiberg Church of Our Lady, the Meissen parish, which burned down, and other churches named at that time; and therefore also decided that this very indulgence, regardless of some doing the opposite, at the request of the beloved son and noble Lord Georgii, as the eldest Prince Albrecht, and present Duke of Saxony, shall have its validity, and extend as far as such is contained in all letters of our predecessor, which were issued at that time, more extensively. And we have also subsequently, since our beloved sons, Brother George Frickenhausen, and Brother John of Bamberg, from the order of the mendicant monks, as preachers of the divine word in the same places, in their speeches to the people, did not shy away from asserting that the aforementioned indulgence was not valid, and also our beloved son Johannes Breitenbach, a doctor of both rights, who held it with the aforementioned preachers, took the liberty of publicly disputing about the aforementioned, and thus, while disputing about it, to assert some annoying sentences and conclusions because of the aforementioned, to have one thousand five hundred 1) copies of the same printed; In order that we may prevent the aggravation which we fear may arise from such a dispute, we have ordered the venerable brother Egerdo, bishop of Schleswig, who by virtue of our order is to hear the parties in the papal palace, that, after having received notice of such matters, he should admonish the aforementioned preachers, as well as the doctor of mutual part, in a certain manner, that they desist from their intention and present themselves before him personally. Then, because of certain causes, we also ordered some Roman Cardinals by and by, and finally our beloved son Bernardino, Cardinal of the Holy Cross in Jerusalem, that they should inquire about what had been cited on the part of the preaching monks and the same Doctor for the rejection of what was contained in said letters, as well as for your vindication and defense, and bring it to us. Since, however, the aforementioned Cardinal, after having been fully instructed in the matter, has honestly told us everything that has been said by both parties, we have, in order to prevent all opportunity for offense and unrest among the believers in Christ, also to cut off all cause for dispute, which has already arisen because of the aforementioned deal and could still arise in the future; to provide for the salvation of most souls as well as for the physical needs and comfort of the first-named subjects of Dukes Albrecht and George, and of all others who are reported; also to take care of the reconstruction of the said church, which is considered to be of undoubted use for the suppression of the Bohemian heresy and the protection of the Catholic faith of the said lands, to take care of the said trade, together with other disputes that have arisen between you and the said brothers Johanne and Georgio, and Johanne Doctore, or others, whoever they may be, as well as all other disputes that have arisen on the occasion of the aforementioned

1) Thus the old edition, while in the two previous writings only one thousand copies are mentioned.

We are aware of the fact that the matter has arisen in the course of our business, and we wish to appeal to the said Bernardino and other Cardinals, and also to those who have to hear the parties in dispute in the papal palace, as well as to the judges at the Roman court and outside it, wherever they may be, by virtue of our duty and after requesting the complaints submitted to us by each party, by virtue of the present edict, and to have them settled completely and in all respects. And lest any doubt remain in the minds of the faithful as to the validity, force, and observance of the indulgence mentioned, which was granted by Innocentio, our ancestor: We therefore resolve and decree that this very letter of indulgence, and that which is contained in it by apostolic authority, shall have its full force for twenty years, counting from the day of the first concession granted in such letter, which was executed at the request of the aforementioned Duke Albrecht, and shall be observed according to its contents without any error of conscience; We impose a complete silence on the said brothers, Johanni and Georgio, as preachers of the divine word, as well as on Doctor Johanni, with regard to their objections, sermons, disputations, and everything else that has been brought forward by them, both in and out of court, against this indulgence and its observance. However, our opinion here is that the use of such milquetoast, which shall take place during these twenty years, shall not benefit anyone to establish any custom, or to advance any excuse for such use, after the elapsed twenty years, nor give the said Dukes Albrecht and Georgio, nor the subjects of their lands, and other places aforesaid, any excuse or pretext that they should not be deemed to be in the state as to the use of dairy products in which they were before the said letter was executed by our ancestor; We hereby declare invalid and void anything which, knowingly or through ignorance, shall be done in any way contrary to our decree, without regard to the foregoing, including apostolic decrees and orders, and everything which our predecessor in his bull did not wish to be considered, and everything else which may seem contrary to our letter. Given in Rome, at St. Peter's, sealed with the Fisherman's Ring, August 26, 1496, in the fifth year of our papal reign.

25: Pope Julius II extends the butter exemption for Electoral Saxony for another twenty years. 1512.

From Kapp's "Nachlese," Theil III, p. 156.

Julius, Bishop, a servant of all servants of God. To our dear sons, the noble men Frederick and John, Dukes of Saxony, blessedness and papal benediction.

Your devotion, goodwill, and loyalty, so that you may have us and the Holy Roman Church in honor and dignity, require that we favorably bestow upon you the means [that] your own, your subjects, and other believers in Christ who wander and come to your region, dominion, and principality, may be blessedly preserved and cared for in benefit, prosperity, health of body, and purity of conscience. Because in the past, Pope Innocentius the Eighth, of blessed memory, our forefathers, has stated that in Saxony and other dukedoms, principalities and regions subject to your temporal authority, protection and protection, for the cold of the same region, no tree oil grows, and therefore the oil in the fast and at other times, where the use of the dairy is forbidden by law or custom, would be very difficult to obtain, has named Pabst, our ancestor, out of gracious inclination and papal authority, has granted you, your subjects, and all others who come into the country and region subject to your duchy's authority or protection and shield, twenty years, to be counted from the issuance of the same papal letter, to use and eat butter and dairy freely, safely and without any burden of conscience, during fasting and at other times and days when dairy is forbidden by law or custom. Since also, according to your report, a considerable amount and number of people, nobility and other people would have to come to your city Torgau, Meissen diocese, your most common court camp, daily on horseback and on foot, and that over the great water, called the Elbe, flowing there, there would be no bridge, and therefore the people who wanted to enter your city on horseback or on foot, would have to let themselves be carried in ships, would have to be driven across in ships, and on several occasions, due to the outpouring of the waters, the turbulence of the air and other storms, especially in winter, would not be able to get across without great danger to their lives, and for this reason it would be useful, for the sake of safety and for the protection of your principality, to build a stone bridge across the Elbe.

stirred water to build. What bridge could not be built in a short time and with little expense and presentation, by preventing the cold, the rising of the waters, the storms, and other ways, also that one would build on the same bridge a little time of the year for the continuance and fortification; with attached indication, how you would be willing to erect a chapel at the same bridge out of kind devotion for the increase of the divine service, and for the blessedness of the people's souls, who would pass over said bridge. Thereupon our ancestor, by papal authority, decreed and ordered that all persons, spiritual and secular, male or female, who wished to use such milk works, should pay the twentieth part of a Rhenish guilder for the construction of said bridge and chapel for the next ten years, and after sparing the first ten years, the fourth part of the same money, the fourth part of the same money to the building of the main church of the Prince of the Apostles in Rome, and the rest to the construction of the said bridge and chapel, and after the erection and construction of the same bridge and chapel, the remaining money to the said building and the many-named city of Torgau parish church preservation to give, give and deposit, as is further understood in the said letter of our ancestor Pabst Innocentii. If now, after your next request to us has been reported, the same twenty years have passed, the causes that existed at the time of the grant still exist, and the named bridge is barely half built, and your subjects and other persons believe that Pabst Innocentii's grant or freedom still exists, and have therefore needed dairy works after the passage of the said twenty years, we humbly request on your behalf, out of papal benevolence, that such be conveniently provided and preserved. So that you and your subjects may show yourselves so much more devout, willing to serve and inclined towards the Roman church, as much as you feel and know more and higher grace and handling towards you from the same Roman church, therefore we confer out of special grace on you, thought your subjects, and all those who at this time come into the territory and principality subject to you, For twenty other years, to be reckoned from the issue of this letter, during the fast and other times and days of the year on which dairy products are forbidden by law or custom to eat butter and other dairy products without burdening the conscience. But so, that all persons or people who eat such dairy products each shall deposit for itself the twentieth part of one Rhenish guilder annually, of which money the fourth part shall be paid for the next ten years to the above-mentioned supreme principal church in Rome, but the other three parts, the same for the first ten years, and then for the following ten years, all parts and the same money shall follow for the completion of the said bridge. We also decree and acknowledge that if the said fourth part of the past papal charter forfeited to the aforesaid building of the supreme principal church in Rome has not been paid in whole or in part until now, that the said fourth part shall not be remitted or forgiven in any part by this papal grant. And this grant shall be in dignities and powers, unhampered by prior and all other papal, also special or common conciliation, suspension and order, and everything else that is contrary thereto. Therefore, it is not lawful or permitted for any man to break this letter of our indult and grant, and to act contrary to it with boldness and audacity. But if anyone should presume and dare to do so, let him know that he will come under the disfavor of Almighty God and of His holy apostles Peter and Paul. Given in Rome at St. Peter's, after the Incarnation of the Lord one thousand five hundred and in the twelfth year, on the third of the Kalends of April, that is, on the thirtieth day of March, in the ninth year of our Papacy.

26 Elector Frederick and Duke Johannis, brothers, letter to the von Einsiedel on Sunday Lätare 1513..

This letter, which Walch has accidentally already set well) No. 16, belongs to the just preceding bull. See Col. 63.

D. The pope finally dispensed with and permitted everything for money, so that a formal trade was made of it.

27: The Würtemberg envoys to Rome request complete freedom and exemption from all church ordinances, church discipline 2c., as well as complete absolution of all sins, freedom from fasting 2c. 1517.

From MSNtoralül . 'iVoltii, tom. II, p. 104, printed in Löscher's "Reformation Acta," Vol. I, p. 189.
Translated into German.

Most Holy Father! In order that the welfare of the souls of your subject petitioners, the Highborn Ulrich, Prince of Württemberg and Teck, also Count of Mömpelgard, of the Diocese of Constance, and twelve other persons, who are to be named only once by him, and their associated wives and children of both sexes, may be more salutary advised: the said Supplicants humbly request your Holiness, inasmuch as you grant them and each of them special grace, that a suitable confessor, whether he be a secular or any religious priest, whom each of them wishes to choose, exempt them and each of them from all ecclesiastical ordinances, disciplines, and penalties of banishment, suspension, and interdict, which may have been inflicted on them by law or by any man on any occasion, also transgressions of all and any vows and ecclesiastical ordinances, of the guilt of perjury, both actual and contemplated manslaughter, forcible manslaughter of all and any ecclesiastical persons, except prelates, because of the past, of interdictions, also total or partial neglect of fasts, horae canonicae, divine offices and imposed penances; also of all and any of their sins, vices, excesses and crimes, they may be as grave and as great as they always wish, if they heartily repent of them and confess them with their mouths, they should also be of such a nature that the Roman See would be justified in asking counsel for them; to absolve themselves from the reserved exceptions contained in the bull Coena domini, once in life and at the hour of death, but from others not reserved to the Roman See, as often as may be necessary, and to expound a salutary penance for what they have committed; to change any vows, including the vow to cross the sea to visit the thresholds of the apostles Peter and Paul in Rome and Jacob in Compostella, with the exception of the vow of monasticism and chastity, into other works of love; also to remit any and all oaths, without prejudice to a foreign right; also to be able to communicate once in life and at the hour of death the redemption and absolution of all sins by apostolic authority.

And that the prince and the nobles or graduates or priests to be named by him, and also each one of them, shall be permitted to have a funeral altar, on which they shall stand with due reverence and honor, in the places fitting and honorable for that purpose, even if such places are not and are subject to the ecclesiastical interdict by ordinary authority, if only they have not given cause for such interdict, even before daybreak, but at daybreak, in their presence and that of their relatives and household members, mass and other holy offices, themselves, who are priests, or have them performed by other priests, and may attend such services at the time of the interdict, as well as receive the holy night meal and other holy sacraments, without detriment to anyone, except on the Easter feast of the resurrection of the Lord.

And that the bodies of such deceased may be given a church burial, without funeral pomp.

Moreover, that by visiting one or two churches, or two or three altars, in the places where they take up their residence, at Lent or other times, and the days for visiting the stations of the city of Rome, which church or altars each of them shall deem good to choose, may receive as much and the same indulgence, also forgiveness of sins, as they would obtain if on each of these days they personally visited any church in this said city and outside of it, which the faithful of Christ are accustomed to visit in this way for the sake of the stations.

Furthermore, during fasting and other forbidden times, they may, on the advice of both physicians, help themselves to eggs, butter, cheese, and other dairy products and meat, and eat them freely, without any scruple of conscience. Incidentally, each of the aforementioned supplicants, together with four other respectable women, whom each of them may choose, may go four times a year to any nunnery, they may belong to any order, including that of St. Clare, with the permission of those who are the superiors there, and may and may keep company with these nuns, if only they do not spend the night there themselves.

He was granted permission and indulgence by special grace, without regard to the apostolic constitutions, the apostolic ordinances, the rules of the apostolic chancery, and the other things contrary to these:

Also because of the reserved, excepted, previously set [cases], once in life and in the hour of death, as above.

Also because of the cases not reserved for the aforementioned chair, as often as it will be necessary.

Also because of change of vows, and because of remission of oaths, as said above.

Also because of the complete remission and absolution once in life and at the hour of death.

Also because of a Tragaltar along with Celebrirung before day, and in places that are under the Interdict, as above.

Also that at the time of the interdict the bodies of the supplicants can be part of the ecclesiastical burial.

And for indulgences of the stations of the city [Rome], by visiting the churches or altars, as above.

Also because of eating eggs, butter, cheese, also other dairy food and meat, as above.

Also because of entry into the nunneries for above said supplicants, as above.

Also with the abrogation of the rules of the apostolic chancery, which state the opposite.

Also that the present indulgence lasts and is not considered revocable as long as the supplicants live.

And that only the sealing of the present letter of indulgence is sufficient, without issuing other letters.

And that also present copies of the letter, which have been made out for each supplicant in particular, since no other notification is made, signed by a notarius publicus, and confirmed with the seal of a person standing in an ecclesiastical dignity, are given full credence.

28 Answer to the previous letter, in which Pope Leo X grants everything requested. 1517.

From Löscher's "Reformation Acta," vol. I, p. 192. Translated into German.

Let it be done as requested. 1)

Alexander, called Farnesius, by the grace of God Cardinal Diaconus of the Most Holy Roman Church of St. Eustace, eternal salvation in the Lord to all and everyone who will see, read or even hear about this letter.

We declare and testify that we have seen, read, kept and diligently examined the original letter of confession, the copy of which is given above, and have found that it was, and still is, inscribed in the hand of our most holy father, Lord Leo X, Pabst: Fiat ut petitur.

1) Leo X put these words on the previous letter of petition.

Therefore, for the sake of the above-mentioned most illustrious Lord Ulrich, Prince of Württemberg, who has been primarily named in the above original letter, we have ordered to take and copy the necessary, without expression of the other names, which are to be named once by him, and will, just as our most holy lord, the pope, in the same letter willed and commanded that such a copy be given full credence in and out of court, also in all places, if such is shown, as the said original itself. To authenticate all and any of the above, and to attest to the superior, we have commanded the present letter to be executed and signed by the end-signed Notarius publicum and to be published, and also to certify the same with the affixing of our seal. Given at Rome in our ordinary residence, in the year of the birth of the Lord 1517, in the fifth indiction, on the 10th day of April, in the fifth year of Pontificate. April, in the fifth year of the Pontificate of the aforesaid in Christ most holy Father and Lord Leo, by the grace of God the tenth Pope of that name, in the presence of the venerable men, Mr. Stephano Rosino, of the Cathedral Churches of Freisingen and Padua Canonicus, and Caspar Witth, Prepositus of the time, Episcopal Collegiate Church, and Ernst Banf, Canonicus of the Collegiate Churches of Georgii and Martini at Tübingen, as witnesses especially required and requested for this act.

29. three indults of Pope Clement VI, which he granted to John, King of France, and Joan, Queen. 1350.

From Lucas d'Achery ZpioilsZium 8ivs eollsetion. vstsrui "eriptorum, tom. III, p. 723, after the Paris edition of 1723; with German translation in Kapp's "Sammlung einiger zum päbstl. Ablass gehörigen Schriften," p. 1.

Translated into German.

By M. Joh. Erhard Kapp.

a. Permission that the King and the Queen may celebrate on monasteries that have been imposed with the interdict.

Clement, Bishop, a servant of the servants of God, wishes salvation and apostolic blessing to his son, beloved in Christ, John, Serene King in France, and Joan, Serene Queen in France. Your uncolored devotion deserves that we follow your wishes mainly in those things that can contribute to your blessedness, as much as we can in the sight of God.

We are pleased to be able to do so. Now that we have been moved by your humble petition, we grant you and your successors, the kings and queens of France who will be at this time, and each one of you and them, by apostolic power, that, where you may come into places which are subject to an ecclesiastical interdict, you and they may be permitted, to have mass and other divine offices said aloud in your presence and in the presence of your councilors and also of other persons who follow you, where you or they have not given cause for the interdict, nor has the same been specifically forbidden to you or them. Therefore, no one shall be allowed to break this charter of ours or to contravene it by a bold undertaking. But if anyone should undertake this, let him know that he will fall into the disfavor of Almighty God and the holy apostles Peter and Paul. Given at Avignon the 29th of April s1350P of our Papal Government in the ninth year.

b. Allow them to choose a confessor.

Clement wishes salvation and apostolic blessing to his beloved children in Christ, John, the noble King of France, and his noble wife Joan, Queen of France. Those things are to be graciously granted to you, by which, as it appears that you demand them out of piety, you may obtain peace of conscience and salvation of souls by God's grace. Hence it comes that we have been moved by your devout and footsteps pleading, and by virtue of this we grant to you and your successors, the kings and queens of France, who will be at this time, and to you, and to each one of them, by apostolic power, for ever, that each one of you and them may choose as his confessor an able and skilful clergyman, who, as often as it shall be convenient for you and your successors, after having diligently heard your and their confession, may grant proper absolution from your and their sins, and impose wholesome penance, though it may be such things as the apostolic see may be justly asked to advise. Therefore 2c. But if any 2c. Given the 20th of April in the ninth year.

c. Permission for the confessor to change their vows and oaths.

Clemens 2c. wishes salvation and apostolic blessing to the most beloved Son in Christ, John, the Serene King in France, and Joan, Serene Queen in France. We gladly grant your wishes, but especially those by which you may obtain peace and blessedness with God's grace, just as it appears that you are asking for it out of piety. Therefore, by your humble petition, we have been moved to permit you, and your successors, the kings and queens of France, who will be at this time, and each one of you and them, by apostolic authority, by virtue of which, for ever, a spiritual or secular confessor, whom each one of you and them will deem it good to choose, to hear the vows that may have been made by you, and may be made by you and your successors in the future (except for those made across the sea and to the holy apostles Petro and Paulo, as well as the vow of chastity and abstinence), as well as the oaths made by you and may be made by you and them in the future, which you and they cannot comfortably keep, may be changed for you and them into other works of godliness, as it may be useful according to God, your and their souls' blessedness. Therefore, 2c. Whereas 2c. Given at Avignon the 20th of April in the ninth year.

30. collection of some of the most distinguished indulgence formulas as they were formerly found in the English Officiis. 1526.

From the Horas of the Blessed Virgin Mary, for Godly Use, printed in Paris Anno 1526. Gilbert Burnet has included these indulgence formulas in his dmotoriu rotorirmt. oeciosiuo ^nMcmmuo, p. 89, and p. 91 in English added some prayers that one must say after having obtained indulgence. Kapp brings this in the "Collection of Some Writings Belonging to Papal Indulgences"; the indulgence formulas in Latin, the prayers in English and German, p. 493. The page numbers given refer to the Paris edition.

Folio 38.

To all those who are in the state of grace, and daily devoutly recite this prayer before our Blessed and Compassionate Lady, she will show them her holy face, and indicate to them the day and hour of their death. Also, at their last end, the Angels of God bring their souls to Heaven, and he shall receive 500 years and as many quadragens of indulgence as have been given by five Holy Fathers to the Roman Popes.

Folio 42.

Our Holy Father Sixtus VI, Pope, has given a sum of 11,000 year indulgence to all who will devoutly recite this prayer before the image of Our Lady.

Folio 44.

Our holy father Sixtus, at the request of the noble Princess Elizabeth, late Queen of England and wife of our sovereign prince, King Henry VII (whose dear soul and all Christian souls may God have mercy on), has decreed that the person who is to be blessed every morning at dawn, after the Hail Mary bell has been struck three times, is to be given the right to be blessed. (on whose dear soul and on the souls of all Christians may God have mercy), has decreed that he who early every morning, after striking the Hail Mary bell three times, shall say the entire greeting of Our Lady: Hail Mary 2c., three times, namely at six in the morning three Hail Marys, at noon three Hail Marys, and at six in the evening the same number of Hail Marys, shall each time receive for such action 300 days of indulgence toties quoties [as often as he does it] from the spiritual treasury of the Holy Church. Likewise, our holy father, the archbishop of Canterbury and York, along with other bishops of this kingdom, has given forty days' indulgence three times a day to all those who are in the state of grace and are sent to receive forgiveness. This began March 26, 1492, in the 7th year of Henrici, and the summa of indulgence for each Hail Mary is 860 days toties quoties. This prayer is to be prayed at the ringing of the Hail Mary bell.

Folio 47.

Our holy father Pope Boniface has given seven years and forty quadragens or carenas of indulgence to all those who devoutly speak this lamentable contemplation of our Blessed Lady, who stands under the cross with tears, and has compassion on her dear Son JEsu. Likewise, Pope John XXII gave 300 days of indulgence.

Folio 50.

These are the 15 Oo, 1) which the holy virgin Brigitta used to say daily before the holy cross in the church of St. Pauli in Rome. Whoever prays this for a whole year, shall get fifteen souls from his nearest blood friends from the feg-.

fire and convert fifteen sinners to a pious life. There shall also be fifteen other pious men of his lineage who shall continue in a pious life, and whatsoever ye shall ask of God, that shall ye have, if it be for the salvation of your souls.

Folio 54.

To all those who pray five Our Fathers and five angelic greetings before this compassionate image, as well as once devoutly praying the faith and compassionately contemplating these arms of the suffering Christ, 32.755 years of indulgence are given. Sixtus IV, Roman pope, also made the fourth and fifth prayers and doubled his predicted indulgence.

Folio 56.

This letter of our Savior was sent by our Holy Father, Pope Leo, to Emperor Carl the Great, of whom we find written: He who wears this blessing on his body and pronounces it once a day shall have 40 years of indulgence and 80 carenas, and shall not die a quick death.

Folio 57.

This prayer was made by St. Augustine, who assures that the one who says it on his knees every day will not die in sins, but will enter eternal joy and bliss after this life.

Folio 58.

Our Holy Father, Pope John XX, has given 3000 days of indulgence from mortal sins to all those who devoutly recite this prayer after the annulment of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Just there.

Our holy father, Pope Boniface VI, has given 10,000 year indulgences to all those who devoutly recite this following prayer between the annulment of our Lord and three Agnus Dei (O Lamb of God).

Folio 61.

Our holy father, Sixtus IV, has given to all those who are in the state of grace and say this following prayer immediately after the lifting up of the body of our Lord, complete and eternal forgiveness of all their sins, also John III, Roman Pontiff, at the request of the Queen of England, has given to all those who pray this prayer before the image of our crucified Jesus as many days of indulgence as there were wounds in the body of our Lord at the time of his bitter suffering, which were 5465.

1) Probably "Oo" means orutiones, prayers.

Folio 65.

St. Gregory made these five petitions and prayers, and gave 500 years of indulgence to all those who prayed these five prayers, with five Our Fathers, five angelic greetings, and the faith devoutly.

Folio 66.

These three prayers are written in the Chapel of the Holy Cross in Rome, which is otherwise called Sacellum Sanctae Crucis septem Romanorum. Whoever prays them devoutly will receive 1,000,000 year indulgence from mortal sins. This indulgence was given by John XXII, Roman Pontiff.

Folio 68.

Whoever will devoutly contemplate these arms of our Lord Jesus Christ shall receive 6,000 years of indulgence from our holy father St. Peter, the first pope of Rome, and from thirty other popes of the Roman Church, his successors. Also, our holy father Pope John XXII has given 3000 years of indulgence from venial sins to all those who are truly contrite and have sincerely confessed, and say these following devout prayers in memory of the bitter Passion of our Lord Jesus Christ, but they must first pray an Our Father and an angelic greeting.

Folio 71.

Our most holy father, Pope Innocentius II, has given 4000 days of indulgence to all those who devoutly say this prayer while adoring the wounds that our Lord had in his blessed side when he died and hung on the cross.

Folio 72.

This devout prayer was spoken by the holy father Bernard daily kneeling at the adoration of the most holy name JEsu. It is also believed that St. Bernard, by invoking the most excellent name of Jesus, received a special word of perpetual comfort from our Lord Jesus Christ. These prayers are written on a tablet, and in St. Peter's Church next to the high altar, where our holy father, the pope, usually reads the mass. But whoever says this prayer devoutly and with a contrite heart every day, and in the same day is in the state of eternal damnation, then the eternal punishment shall be changed into the temporal punishment of the purgatory. But if he had deserved the punishment of the purgatory at that time, it shall be forgotten and forgiven by the infinite mercy of God.

31 Seven Roman Jubilee Calendars of the Inexpressible Indulgence of Sins, through all the months and on all the days of the whole year, communicated from Papal Scribes.

These seven jubilee calendars are found in des Elias Ehinger fiist. eoolss. sooul. XV, p. 108 and in Kapp's "Sammlung," p. 519.

On the elevationem poli.

1. veneti, printed in 1532.
2. ingolstadiensis 1596, Archfraternity with the knitted belts.
- 3rd Viennensis 1629, for the Brotherhood of the Holy Rosary.
4. Constantiensis 1603, the Blessed Virgin Mary Rosary.
5. constantiensis 1630, the souls rainbow.
6. augustensis 1630. rosetum or little rose garden.
7. coloniensis 1603. rosarium.

1. Venice 1532.

Of the indulgences granted for the churches of the city of Rome through all the months of the year.

In the month of Jenner.

On the Feast of the Circumcision there is plenary indulgence at St. John Lateran, and likewise at the Altar of Heaven.

On the day of the Three Kings is full indulgence at St. Peter's, and forgiveness of all sins at St. Mary Major.

In the Octave of the Magi full indulgence at St. Peter's.

Des Felix in Pincis 1000 year indulgence at St. Sebastian.

The Holy Five Martyrs and the Order of Minorites, and St. Marcelli, Pabst and Martyr, forgiveness of all sins and 1000 year to St. Sebastian.

St. Antonii, Abbot, forgiveness of the third part of sins, daily at St. Mary Major.

Fabians and Sebastians, full indulgence and forgiveness of all sins at St. Sebastian, and 158,968 years and 28 days.

The Virgin and Martyr Agnes, forgiveness of all sins and 200 year, and every day 1000 year indulgence to St. Mary Major.

On the first Sunday after the feast of Antonii, Abbot, Veronica appears, and is full of indulgences at St. Peter's, and the Romans have 7000 years, but those over the mountains 14,000 and so many quadragenas, 1) and is forgiveness of the third part sins.

1) A "quadragena", that is, forty-day indulgence.

Des Vincentii and Anastasii, 40,000 year indulgence at St. John Lateran.

Pauli conversion day, full Ahlaß and 10,000 year to St. Pauli.

The Agnes full 1) forgiveness of sin, as on the first, at St. John Lateran.

Cyri and Johannis, forgiveness of the third part of the sins at St. Sebastian.

In the month of Februarii.

On the day of the Purification of Mary the Virgin, full indulgence to St. Mary de populo and 155,293 year and 285 days.

Agatha, virgin and martyr, full indulgence to the Holy Cross.

Of the Chair of St. Peter, full indulgence and 1000 year to St. Peter, and 158,968 year and 289 days.

Of St. Matthew the Apostle, full indulgence at St. Mary Major, where her body rests, and 159,290 years and 285 days.

In the month of Martio.

On the day of St. Thomas Aquinas, full indulgence to St. Mary in Minerva and 158,958 year and 2832 days.

Gregory, the Pope, full indulgence and daily 40 years indulgence and so much quadragenä and forgiveness of the third part of sins, likewise 10,000 years to St. Peter.

Joseph the Confessor, full indulgence at St. Mary Major.

In the vigil St. Benedicti, the abbot, full indulgence to the Holy Cross, in the chapel, so called Jerusalem, on which day the dedication of the same is celebrated.

St. Benedicti, the abbot, 100 year indulgence at St. Peter's and 159,154 year and 40 days.

Annunciation of the Lord, full indulgence and 1000 years and so many quadragens, and forgiveness of a third part of sins; and again 1000 years at St. Mary Major, and 158,958 years and 285 days.

In the month of April.

Georgii, the martyr, 1000 year indulgence and 154,913 year and 260 days.

Marci, the Evangelist, full indulgence at St. Peter's and 154,990 year and 200 days.

Peter, the Martyr, Order of Preachers, full indulgence to St. Mary in Minerva.

In the month of May.

On the day of Philippi and Jacobi full indulgence to St. Mary Major and 158,978 year and 285 days.

All Sundays in this month full indulgence to St. Sebastian, and 186,039 year and 100 days.

Holy Cross invention, full indulgence to the Holy Cross, and 186,039 year and 100 days.

Similarly, on the third day of this month full indulgence, because it is the consecration of St. Mary Rotunda.

St. John's before the Latin Gate, Indulgence of the Redemption of a Soul from Purgatory at St. Mary Major.

St. Michael's Epiphany, plenary indulgences at St. Mary's, likewise from that day until Aug. 1, three plenary indulgences daily at St. John Lateran.

Nerei, Achillei and Pancratii, 100 year indulgence at St. Pauli.

Bernardini, the Confessor, from the Minorite Order, full indulgence to St. Mary at the Altar of Heaven.

At the Ascension of our Lord, full indulgence at St. Peter's and 158,968 years and 285 days.

On the Feast of Corpus Christi, full indulgence at St. Peter's, and 259,968 year and 45 days.

Petronillä, the Virgin, 1000 year and so many quadragenen indulgence to St. Peter.

In the month of Junio.

Marcellini, Petri and Erasmi, 1000 Year Indulgence at St. Peter's.

Barnabas, the Apostle, 600 year full indulgence to St. Mary at the Altar of Heaven.

Paulini, the Confessor, and Crescentiä, 100 year indulgence and so much quadragenen to St. Pauli.

Paulini, the Confessor and Pope, 7000 year indulgence at St. John Lateran.

On the feast of the birth of St. John the Baptist, full indulgence in the Lateran Church and 154,989 year and 45 days.

St. John and St. Paul, 1000 year indulgence at St. John Lateran.

Leonis, the Pope, 1000 years and so much Quadragenä to St. Peter.

Peter and Paul, full indulgences in both churches, and 159,964 year and 45 days.

The commemoration of St. Paul, full indulgence and 1000 year in his church.

In the month of Julio.

The Octava St. John the Baptist, full indulgence to St. Mary de populo, and 158,958 year and 285 days.

Bonaventure, the bishop and confessor, of the

1) "full" put by us instead of "2." in our template. The latter will probably be a printing error instead of: "v." January 1 is "plenary indulgence"; so also in the other jubilee calendars for the day of St. Agnes.

Minorite Order, full indulgence at St. Peter's and 158,997 year and 285 days.

Division of the Apostles, 2000 year indulgence at St. Peter's.

Alexii, the Confessor, full indulgence and 1000 year at St. John Lateran.

Margarita, Virgin and Martyr, 100 years to the Holy Cross.

Praxedis, the Virgin, 2000 year indulgence at St. Peter's.

Magdalen, full indulgences and 100 years to St. Mary Major.

Apollinaris, the martyr, 100 years at St. John Lateran.

Christinn, the Virgin and Martyr, 40 year indulgence at St. Mary Major.

Jacobi, the apostle, full indulgences in his church and at St. Mary Major.

Anna, Mother of Mary, full indulgence to St. Mary Major.

Pantaleon, the martyr, 40 year indulgence at St. Mary Major.

Nazarii, Celsi, Victoris, 300 year indulgence to the Holy Cross.

Simplicis and Faustini, 5000 year indulgence at St. Sebastian.

In the month of August.

On the day of St. Peter in bands and eight following days, full indulgence in its church, and 158,968 year and 285 days.

On the feast of the Consecration of St. Mary de Angelis or Portiunculă, as the first church of the Minorite Order, full indulgence to St. Mary Major.

Invention St. Stephani, full indulgence to St. Laurentii.

On the feast of St. Mary de Nive, full indulgence to St. Mary Major and 159,790 year and 285 days.

Dominici, the Confessor, full indulgence to St. Mary in Minerva, and 158,958 year and 285 days.

Sixti Felicissimi and Agapiti, many indulgences to the Holy Cross.

Cyriaci, Largi and Smaragdi, 1000 year to St. Sebastian.

Laurentii, the martyr, full indulgence through the whole Octav and 158,958 year and 285 days, and every day 1000 year and so many quadragens and forgiveness of the third part of sins, in his church.

Clară, the Virgin, full indulgence to St. Mary Major, and 100 year indulgence to the Holy Cross.

Eusebii, the Confessor, 1000 year indulgence to St. Mary Major.

The holy evening of the Ascension of the holy Mary, at vespers, full indulgences to St. Mary de populo.

On the day of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and the whole Octava, full indulgence and forgiveness of all sins, and 40 years and so many quadragenă, and forgiveness of the third part of sins, at St. Mary and at St. Peter's, 185,162 year and 100 days.

On the Sunday after the Octave and Ascension forgiveness of all sins at the altar of heaven.

Louis the Confessor, of the Minorite Order, full indulgence to St. Mary at the Altar of Heaven.

In the Octava after the Assumption of Mary, forgiveness of all sins to St. Mary over the Tiber.

Bartholomew, the Apostle, full forgiveness of all sins and 7000 year indulgence at St. John Lateran.

Augustini, bishop, full indulgence in his church, and 1000 year to St. Mary.

Beheading of St. John the Baptist, full indulgence, and forgiveness of all sins. Similarly, 100 years and so many quadragens, and forgiveness of the third part of sins, at St. John Lateran.

In the month of Septembris.

On the holy evening of the Nativity of Our Lady, at Vespers, full indulgence to St. Mary Rotunda, and 159,709 year and 185 days.

Adriani, the martyr, 200 year indulgence to St. Mary Major.

Holy Exaltation of the Cross, full indulgence and 1040 year, and forgiveness of the third part of sins, to the Holy Cross, and 159,064 year and 45 days.

Euphemia, Lucia and Geminiani, 1000 years at St. John Lateran.

Eustachii and his companions, 130 years at St. Sebastian.

Matthäi, the Apostle, full indulgence and 130 year to St. Laurentii.

Cosma and Damiani, 7000 year indulgence to St. Sebastian.

Michaelmas, the Archangel, full indulgence at St. Mary Major, and 154,991 year and 200 days.

Hieronymi, the Confessor, full indulgence at St. Mary Major, where his body is. Likewise of 2000 years, and 158,790 years and 285 days.

In the month of October.

On the feast of our most holy father Francisci and through his Octave, full indulgences in his church above the Tiber and at St. Paul's and 158,968 years and 285 days.

Lucă, the Evangelist, full indulgence and 1000 year to St. Mary Major.

Simonis and Jude, apostles, full indulgence at St. Peter's and 40 years and so many quadragens, and forgiveness of the third part of sins and 158,968 years and 285 days.

In the month of November.

On the feast of All Saints, full indulgence to St. Mary Rotunda, and 185,662 year and 100 days.

On the memorial of the souls, full indulgence, and the eight following days, at St. Mary Major and in the church of St. Gregory, and 154,991 year and 200 days.

In the Octave of All Saints at St. Peter's.

Of the four crowned, much indulgence at St. John Lateran.

The consecration of the Cathedral Church of the Savior, full indulgence at St. John Lateran. Likewise 100 years and 300 days, and 154,983 years and 285 days.

Triphonis, Respitii and Nymphä, much indulgence to St. Laurentii.

Martini, the bishop, 300 year and so much quadragenen to St. Sebastian.

The consecration of the Cathedral Church of the Prince of the Apostles St. Peter, full indulgence and 11,000 years and so many quadragens, and forgiveness of the third part of the sins of St. Peter, and 159,964 years and 285 days.

Elizabeth, the daughter of the king in Hungary, 100 year indulgence to the Holy Cross.

The Presentation of St. Mary, full indulgence in her church and to St. Mary at the Altar of Heaven, and 20 year indulgence and 150,190 year and 285 days.

Clementis, Pabst and martyr, full indulgence in his church and at St. Peter's, and 185,966 year and 250 days.

The martyr Felicitas, 40 year indulgence to the Holy Cross.

Grisonis, the martyr, 1000 year indulgence to St. Mary Major.

Catharine, the Virgin and Martyr, 1000 year indulgence to St. Mary Major.

Saturnini, the martyr, 100 year indulgence at St. Sebastian.

St. Andrew the Apostle, 1000 year indulgence and forgiveness of the third part of sins, and full indulgence at St. Peter's and 159,974 year and 45 days.

In the month of December.

Bibiană, the Virgin and Martyr, 9000 year indulgence to St. Mary Major.

Barbara, virgin and martyr, 1000 year indulgence in her church and to the Holy Cross, and 154,991 year and 200 days.

Ambrosii, the bishop, 1000 years and full indulgence at St. Peter's.

On the holy evening of the Conception of the Blessed Virgin, at Vespers, plenary indulgence to St. Mary de populo.

On the feast of the Conception of the Blessed Virgin, full indulgence at St. Mary de populo, 158,968 years and 285 days.

In four times [Quatember], 40 years of indulgence and so many quadragens, and forgiveness of the third part of the sins at St. Mary Major.

St. Thomas the Apostle, 30 years and forgiveness of all sins, and full indulgence at St. Paul's.

On the feast of the Nativity of our Savior JEsu Christ, full indulgence at all three Masses, and 1000 year at St. Mary Major.

On the day of St. Stephen, full indulgence at St. Laurentii, where his body is; likewise two thousand years and indulgence and forgiveness of the third part of sins; and more indulgence in his church on the high mountain.

St. John the Evangelist, full indulgences at St. John Lateran, and 100 years at St. Paul; and redemption of One Soul from Purgatory and 158,790 years.

Of the Holy Innocents, full indulgences and 40 years and so many quadragenen to St. Paul.

Sylvestri, Pabst's, full indulgence and 10,000 year at St. John Lateran.

2nd Ingolstadiensis 1596.

Papal Bull, Indulgence and Indulgence of the Archfraternity with the Knitted Belts of St. Francisci, Barfüsserorden.

By many Popes notified Order on all the same feast and days in the year 2c. And later by Pope Sixto, the fifth of the name, confirmed, confirmed again, and abundantly gifted over all brotherhoods.

1596. Ingolstadt by Wolfgang Eder.

Follow the indulgence and indulgence, so monthly to acquire.

January.

On the New Year Day 365 year, 112 quadragen, given by Gregory IX, Innocentium IV, Clementem IV, Gregory X, Martinum V, Nicolaum IV and Urbanum V. On the Holy. Three King Day also so much, näm-lich 365 years, 112 quadragen, a) awarded by first-registered popes.

On the day of the five holy martyrs of the Order of the Barefoot, which falls on the 16th of this month, named Berardi, Petri, Accursii, Adjuti and Othonis, it is decreed by several popes, as Innocentius IV, Alexandri IV, Clementis IV, Gregorii X, Nicolai III and Nicolai IV, Urbani V, Benedicti XI, Martini V, Johannis XXII, to obtain indulgences 446 years, 100 days, and 40 quadragen.

February.

On Our Lady's Candlemas, indulgences are granted for 406 years, 40 days, and 112 quadragens. Gregory IX, Innocentius IV, Clement IV, Gregory X, Nicolaus III, Martinus V, Nicolaus IV, John XXII, Urbanus V.

On the day of the elevation of the holy confessor Antonii, Order of the Barefoot, held the 15th of the month, one obtains indulgence 356 years, 150 days and 12 quadragen.

March.

On the 14th of this month, the elevation of the holy confessor Bonaventure, Order of the Barefoot, is held so the 15th of the month.

The 18th of this one holds the feast of the Holy Angel Gabriel, is earned indulgence 356 years and 10 quadragen. Nicolaus IV, Gregory VI, Innocentius IV, Clement IV, Gregory X, Nicolaus III, Alexander IV.

On the feast of the Annunciation of Our Lady, the indulgence is the same as on Candlemas Day in February, namely 406 years, 40 days, 112 quadragen.

May.

On the 8th of this month, the feast of the Epiphany of St. Michael, indulgence is 306 years and 10 quadragen.

The 17th of this one celebrates the elevation of the holy confessor Bernardini, Order of the Barefoot, and obtains indulgence 256 year, 12 quadragen.

The 20th on the feast of St. Bernard, is again 356 years of indulgence, 150 days, 12 quadragen. At the same time Gregory IX gave 100 years and 50 years and so many quadragen, also on each day in the eighth 2) 10 years and 50 days. Sixtus V granted plenary indulgences.

The 25th This is St. Francisci elevation and indulgence 356 year, 150 day, 12 quadragen.

1) It seems to us that here, and every time "confessor" is found in this writing, it should be read "confessor"; in Latin, cofvtssoris will probably be found.

2) "in the eighth" will probably mean: in the octave.

Junii.

The 13th of this month falls the day of St. Anthony of Padua, Order of the Barefoot, indulgence 466 years, 122 cron, 150 days, and on any day in the eighth 10 years, 50 days. Sixtus V gives plenary indulgence.

On St. John the Baptist's Day, one obtains indulgences as on the New Year, namely 365 years, 112 quadragen.

On the day of Peter and Paul is indulgence 286 year, 12 quadragen. Innocentius IV, Gregory X, Nicolaus IV, Urbanus V, Martinus V.

Julii.

On the Feast of the Visitation of Our Lady, one earns indulgences as on the Feast of Candlemas, and Urbanus VI has granted all indulgences above it, as Urbanus IV and Martinus V did on the Feast of Corpus Christi of our Lord, and by the eighth to the Office of the Holy Mass and the Holy Days; see above the movable feasts.

On the 14th of this month, the feast of St. Bonaventure, the Order of the Barefoot, is celebrated, earning indulgences for 466 years, 112 quadragen, 150 days, and for every day in the eighth 10 years, 50 days. Julius II gives in addition 40 years, and Sixtus V even plenary indulgence.

August.

The 2nd of this month, called our Lady's Day to the Angels or Portiunculæ, about the indulgence, which is 446 years, 100 days and 24 quadrants, recorded in the Jenner, on the Holy Five Martyrs' Day, one obtains plenary indulgence, which has been pronounced by Christ Himself with a living voice, and declared by Pope Benedictum XII.

On the 5th of this is our women's feast with the snow, and indulgence as on Candlemas Day in February.

The 6th of this the declaration of Christ, indulgence as on the New Year's Day in Jenner.

On the 12th of this St. Clare, the Virgin, Feast, Order of the Barefoot, one has indulgence 256 year, 150 day, 12 quadragen, and every eighth 10 year, 50 days. But from Sixto, the fifth, plenary indulgence is given.

On the Feast of the Assumption of Our Lady there is indulgence as on Candlemas Day in February. And John XXII still pardoned on this day in the eighth 10 year, and 50 days.

The 19th of the holy bishop and confessor Ludovici day, Order of the Barefoot, indulgence is to be obtained as on the day of the holy five martyrs in the Jenner, and on each day in the eighth still 10 years, 50 days of Johanne XXII. Sixtus V gives plenary indulgence.

On the 25th of this, St. Louis' Feast, King elect in France, Order of the Barefoot of the Third Rule, is indulgence as well as on the day of the Holy Five Martyrs in Jenner.

September.

On our Lady's birthday one acquires ablution as on Candlemas Day in February, and on every day in the eighth 10 year, 50 day, given by Johanne XXII.

On the day of St. Francisci Mark, the 17th of this month, all indulgences are forgiven, as on the day of the five martyrs, in the Jenner, and in addition by Gregorio IX 30 years. Summa 476 years, 100 days and 24 quadragen.

The 27th of this. St. Elzearii the Confessor's Day, from the third order of the Franciscans, on which one gets indulgences, as on the day of the holy five martyrs in Jenner.

October.

The second of this month, St. Clare the Virgin's Exaltation, indulgences are given 356 years, 150 days, 13 quadragen.

On the feast of St. Francisci, founder of the Order of the Barefoot, which falls on the 4th of this, one obtains indulgences as on the New Year's Day in January, in addition to which Alexander IV granted 40 years, John XXII 10 years, 50 days, Sixtus IV a hundred years and so many quadragen; to those who say mass on this day 50 years and so many quadragen. Again, John XXII granted on each day in the eighth indulgence 100 years and 50 days. Sixtus V granted plenary indulgences.

On the 13th of this, St. Danielis, Angeli, Samuelis, Donuli, Leonis, Nicolai and Ugolini day, Order of the Barefoot, 446 year, 100 days and 24 quadragen indulgence is given, as on the day of the five martyrs in the Jenner.

The 27th, St. Ivonis Confessor's Day, from the Third Order of Franciscans, is indulgence 446 year, 100 days and 24 quadragen.

November.

On All Saints' Day Gregory IX gave a hundred year indulgences and so much quadragen.

The 8th of this month is the elevation of St. Louis, the Bishop, Order of the Barefoot, Indulgence 356 year, 150 days and 12 quadragen.

On the 9th of this falls Salvatoris or our Beatific Father's church consecration in Rome; indulgences are to be obtained, as on New Year's Day in Jenner.

The 18th of this, St. Peter and Paul's church consecration, indulgences are granted, as on their feast in June, 286 year, 12 quadragen.

The 19th of this, St. Elizabeth's day, most elect queen in Hungary, of the third order St. Francisci, indulgence as on the day of the five holy martyrs. Gregory IX has also given 100 years and so many quadragen. Summa 546 years, 100 days, 124 quadragen.

The 21st of this, our women's sacrifice in the temple, one acquires indulgences like Candlemas Day in February.

December.

On the 8th of this month is the Feast of the Conception of Our Lady, and indulgences as on Candlemas Day in February. In addition, Sixtus IV grants all the indulgences obtained on our Lord's Corpus Christi, and what Urbanus IV also granted Martinus V by the eighth at all times of the day; those who hear the sermon have 150 days of it. Leo X gives plenary indulgence to those who hear the Feast of the Conception of Mary read, confessed, and repent of sin, and also ask for papal sanctity and the general Church.

On Christmas Day one acquires indulgences as on New Year's Day, namely 356 year, 112

3. Viennensis 1629.

From JEsu Maria Archfraternity of the Holy. Rosary Instruction by Fratrem Eustachium Mayr, Order of Preachers, Generalem Praedicatorum, and Subpriorem. Vienna by Matthão Formica.

Pag. 19 Calendar for the Fraternity of the Holy Rosary. Rosary of Our Lady.

In it, certain indulgences to be obtained in the Preacher's Church are listed for all days, taking into account that v.

1) means plenary indulgence, which is the quadragen.

Jenner.

1. circumcision of Jesus Christ, plenary indulgence and 25,000.

2. macarius abbot 6000 year.

3. genovefa virgin 6000 year.

4. titus bishop 6000 year.

5. telesphorus pope and martyr 6000 year.

6. hail, three king to cologne, fully comm.

7. Raymundus Confessor, 2) Order of Preachers v.

1) Here in the original it says "V". However, when setting, the large V seems to have run out soon and then is continued with the small "v".

2) For "confessor," see note Col. 122.

8. erhard bishop 8000 year v.
 9. martiana virgin and mart. 10,000 year v.
 10. paul the first hermit 10,000 year v.
 11. higinus pabst and mart. 10,000 year v.
 12. satyr and arcad. Mart. 12,000 year b.
 13. Hilarius Bishop 1000 year, also v.
 14. felix priest and mart. 3000 year and Q.
 15. the feast of the sweetest name of JEsu v. and much.
 16. marcellus Pabst and Märt. v.
 17. antonius abbot v.
 18. chair celebration to Rome v. and much.
 19. mar. 2c. Mar. 100 year and Q.
 20. sebastian mart. v.
 21. agnes virgin and mart. v.
 22. Vincenz Levit and Märt. v.
 23. john allmuser 15 year.
 24. Timothy Bishop and Mart. 1000 year and Q.
 25. Paul the Apostle Conversion v.
 26. polycarpus bishop and mart. 7 year.
 27. john to the gülden mouth v.
 - 28th Margarita Queen in Hungary, Order of Preachers, 12,800 year and Q.
 29. valerius bishop 12,800 year and Q.
 30. adelgund virgin 3000 year and Q.
 - 31 Vigilius Bishop and Mart. 3000 year and Q. v.
- Hornung.
- 1st Ignatius Bishop and Mart. 1000 year.
 - 2nd Candlemas of Mary v.
 3. st. blasius bishop and mart. v. Year. 1)
 4. veronica 1000 year.
 5. agatha virgin and mart. 120,000 year b. Q. v.
 6. dorothea virgin, mart. 1000 year.
 7. richardus king 6000 year.
- The eighth day has been omitted from the printed version.
9. scholastica 8000 year.
 10. Apollonia Virgin and Mart. v.
 11. euphrosyna monastic virgin 6000 year.
 12. eulalia virgin and mart. 6000 year.
 - 13th Castor priest 10,000 year.
 14. valentine priest and fair. 12,000 year.
 - 15 Faustinus and Jovita Mart. 6000 year.
 16. julians virgin and mart. 12,000 year and Q.
 17. constantia virgin 8000 year.
 - 18th Concordia Virgo 6000 year.
 19. gabinus priest and fair. 1000 year.

20. eustochia monastic virgin 1000 year.
 21. leonora 8000 year.
 - 22 Peter's Chair Celebration at Antioch v.
 23. serenus abbot and mart. 10,000 year.
 24. Matthias Apostle v.
 25. walburg cloister virgin 120,000 year and
 - 26 Victor Mar. 12,000 year and Q.
 - 27 Julianus Mart. 10,000 year.
 28. romanus abbot 8000 year.
- On Sunday Septuagesimä 11,000 year, 48 Q., remission of the third part of the sins. † 2) v.
- On Sunday Sexagesimä 12,000 year, 18 Q., remission of part of the sins.
- On Sunday Quinquagesimä 28,000 year and v.
- Marzenablaß.
1. albinus bishop 12,800 year and Q.
 2. Simplicius Pabst 3000 year and Q.
 3. cunigund empress 100 year and Q.
 4. lucius pabst and mart. 15 year.
 5. gulielmus bishop 12,800 year.
 6. fridolinus abbot 3000 year and Q.
 7. Thomas Aquinas, Order of Preachers, Leh-
8. Philemon and Apollo. Mart. 100 year and 100
 9. forty martyrs 7 year.
 10. alexander mart. 15 year.
 11. humbertus bishop 1000 year and Q.
 12. Gregory Pope and Doctor of the Church v.
 - 13th Desiderius Bishop and Fair. 1000 year.
 14. mattildi's widow 12,800 year.
 15. longinus bishop and mart. 3000 year.
 16. cyriacus and his companions, mart. 100 year and Q.
 17. Gertrudis virgin 6 year.
 18. gabriel archangel v.
 - 19 Joseph Confessor v.
 20. Ambrose of Senis, Order of Preachers, v.
 21. benedictus v. and 100 year.
 22. paul bishop 7 year.
 23. theodoricus bishop 121,000 year and Q.
 24. Simon, Knab zu Trient, 1000 year.
 - 25 Annunciation of Mary v.
 26. ludgerus bishop 12,000 year.
 - 27th Rupertus Bishop 12,000 year.
 28. felix bishop 12,000 year.
 - 29th Eustace abbot 12,000 year.
 30. Quirinus Mart. 12,000 year.
 - 31 Balbina Virgo 12,000 year.

1) So in our template.

2) The cross (†) means the release of a soul from purgatory.

Merk, the fasting station and indulgences that can be obtained daily in the Preacher's Church, I have decided to add to this.

On Ash Wednesday of 3000 year.

The next day after that 10,000 years.

The third day 10,000 year.

The first Saturday in the fasting 10,000 year v.

On the first Sunday of 18,000 year.

Monday v. 10,000 year.

Erchtag 1) v. 28,000 year and Q.

Wednesday 28,000 year and Q.

Thursday v. 20,000 year.

Friday v. 18,000 year and

On the second Sunday in the fasting 28,000 year.

Monday, 11,000 year, remission of the third part of sins.

Erchtag, Wednesday, Thursday, twelve thousand year and much.

Friday ten thousand year.

Saturday † v. ten thousand year.

On the third Sunday in Lent, ten thousand year, 48 Q. f.

Monday, Erchtag, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday 10,000 year.

Saturday twelve thousand year †.

On the fourth Sunday in Lent v. †.

Monday ten thousand year.

The day of the remission of the third part of the sins, 10,000 years.

Wednesday like yesterday.

Thursday ten thousand year.

Friday ten thousand year.

Saturday v.

The fifth Sunday in the fast 28,000 year and tz-, remission third part of sins.

Monday, Erchtag, Wednesday, Thursday 10,000 year.

Friday twelve thousand year †.

Saturday thirteen thousand year †.

On Palm Sunday v. five and twenty thousand year, and 25,000 Q.

Monday, remission of third part of sins, five and twenty thousand years.

Erchtag, eighteen thousand year v.

Wednesday, eight and twenty thousand year and v.

Thursday, twelve thousand year, 48 Q., and v.

On H. Char Friday, Saturday v.

On H. Easter Day 33,000 year, and so much Q. and v.

Easter Monday eight and twenty year v.

Erchtag two thousand year, 18 Q. v.

Wednesday † v. 18,000 year and so much.

1) "Erchtag" - Tuesday.

Thursday v. fifteen thousand year.

Friday fifteen thousand year.

Saturday fifteen thousand year.

On Sundayfifteen thousand
Year v.

Indulgence in the month of April.
12,000 year indulgence:

1. hugo bishop.

2. Mary of Egypt, penitent.

3. florentius bishop.

4. Ambrose Bishop and Doctor of the Church v.

5th St. Vincent Order of Preachers v.

6. Sixtus Pabst and Märt.

7. alexandrinus mart.

8th Dionysius Bishop.

9. procorus bishop and mart.

10. Apollonius priest and mart.

11th Eustorgius Fair.

12. Pius Pabst.

13. euphemia virgin and mart.

14. Tiburt. and Valerius Mart.

15 Isidore Bishop.

16. Albinus Archmarch. in England.

17 Rudolphus Mart.

18. eleutherius bishop and mart.

19. Wernerus Fair.

20. Victor Pabst and Märt.

21 Anselmus Archbishop.

22nd Gajus Mart.

23 Georgius Mart.

24. Adalbertus Bishop and Mart.

25. marcus evangelist, 28,000 year and Q. and v.

26. Cletus Pabst and Märt.

27th Anastasius Mart.

28 Vitalis Fair.

29. Peter of Milan Mart. Order of Preachers v.

30 Eutropius Mart.

Here, the following festivals, graced with rich indulgences, are to be taken into account and have been placed here by me, because they are usually held in the following month.

As first in the cross week, Sunday, Erchtag, Wednesdays, 28,000 year and Q., also v.

On H. Ascension Day v. and 28,000 year.

On the evening of Pentecost 15,000 year v.

Pentecost day, Whit Monday, Pentecost eighth day, eighteen thousand year and full.

Wednesdays ten thousand year v.

Thursday eighteen thousand year and f v.

Friday eighteen thousand year and v.

Saturday eighteen thousand year and v.

2) In our template: "eighteen thousand † year".

On H. Corpus Christi Day v.
Friday, Saturday, Sunday, Monday, Erchtag,
Wednesday, Thursday v.

Indulgence of the month of May.

12,000 year indulgence:

Mark, every Sunday of this month is plenary indulgence.

On the Sunday after S. Cross invention is celebrated the feast of S. Virgin Catharine of Senis, Order of Preachers.

On the Sunday after the Ascension of Christ the feast of St. Jacob, confessor, preacher. Jacobi, confessor, order of preachers.

1. philip and jacob apostle v.
2nd Anthony Archbishop, Order of Preachers, v.
3. invention of the holy cross v.
4. monica whiting, much, and twelve thousand year.

5. gotthardus bishop v.
6. John of the Lat. porten full †.
7. the feast of the dry crown of Christ v.
8. apparition St. Michaelis v.
9. Gregorius Bishop of Naz.
10. gordianus and epim. Mar.
11. Stanislaus Bishop and Mart.
12. Pancratius Mart.
13th Servatius Bishop.
14th Victor and Corona Fair.
15. Robertus Count Palatine on the Rhine.
16. peregrinus bishop.
17 Bruno Bishop of Würzburg.
18 Dioscorus Mart.
19. potentiana virgin and mart.
20 Bernardinus, confessor, Order of the Barefoot, v.

21 Constantinus the Great, Emperor, v.
22. helena empress.
23. sulphitius and servil.
24. elevation of the holy father Dominici. Father Dominici, Order of Preachers.
25. urbanus pabst and mart.
26. beda priest.
27 July Mart.
28. gulielmus duke.
29 Maximinus Bishop.
30. Felix Pabst and Märt.

Indulgence of the fallow month.

Full c. and 12,000 year indulgence:

1. vincent. Lirinens. Priest.
The other Sunday of this month plenary indulgence.
2. Marcellus and Peter Märt.
3. erasmus bishop and mart.

4. the feast of the five wounds of Jesus.
5. Bonifacius Archbishop and Mart.
6. Nortbertus Archbishop, the Premonstratensian founder.
7. paul bishop and mart.
8. medardus bishop.
9. primus and felician.
10. getulius and his companions, mart.
11 Barnabas Apostle.
12th Nazarius and Celfus Fair.
13. Anthony of Padua, barefoot.
14th Basil bishop and teacher.
15 Vitus Mart. 6000 year and v.
16 Aureus Archbishop of Mainz.
17. botulphus dept.
18. marina virgin and mart.
19. Gervasius and Protasius Mart.
20 Abagarius King.
21 Albanus Priest and Mart.
22. paulinus bishop.
23 Ediltrudis King, virgin.
24. John the forerunner of Christ.
25. prosper bishop and mart.
26th John and Paul Fair.
27. the seven sleepers mart.
28. leo magnus pabst.
29. Peter and Paul, apostles.
30th Martialis Bishop.

Indulgence of the hay month.

Perfectionist and 12,000 year indulgence:

1. rumoldus bishop and mart.
2. Visitation of the Virgin Mary v.
3. land francus bishop.
4. Ulrich Bishop of Augsburg.
5th Wendelinus Abb.
6. goar priest and confessor.
7. wilibald bishop.
8. kilian bishop and mart.
9. agilolph archbishop and mart.
10. the seven brothers with their mother Felicitas.
11. Pius Pabst and Märt.
12. margaretha virgin and mart.
13. Heinrich Kaiser.
14th Bonaventure Card. and Barefoot.
15 The apostle's division.
16th Eustace bishop and confessor.
17. alexius confessor.
18. symphorosa sammt ihren Söhnen und Märt.
19. arsenius dept.
20. Joseph, one of the 72 disciples of Christ.
21 Praxedis Virgo.
22. Mary Magdalene, penitent, v.
23. brigitta, princess and widow, v.

24. christina virgin and mart.
25. iacobus apostle, the greater, v.
26. Anna, Mother of Mary, v.
27. hermolaus priest and mart.
28. Pantaleon Fair.
29. Martha, virgin and hostess of Christ.
- 30th Abdon and Senna Fair.
31. germanus bishop.

Indulgence of the month of August.

12,000 year indulgence, remission of the third part of sins:

1. peter chain celebration v.
2. Stephan Pabst and Mart. 6000 year.
- 3rd Stephen of the first mart. Invention v.
4. Dominicus Order of Preachers Founder v.
5. maria to the snow v.
6. sixt Pabst and Mär. v.
7. Afra zu Augsburg, penitent and mart. 8000 year.
8. Hilgerus Prior, Order of Preachers, 10,000 year.
9. romanus mart. 10,000 year.
10. Laurentius Diacon. and Mar.
11. susanna virgin and mart.
12. Clara Virgin, Order of the Barefoot, v.
13. Hippolytus Mart. 280,000 year and
14. eusebius confessor.
15. Assumption of Mary, GOD's Childbearer, v.
16. rochus, pilgrim and confessor, v.
17. liberatus abbot and mart. v.
18. agapitus Mart. v.
19. sebaldu confessor v.
20. bernardus abbot v.
21. Anastasius Mart. v.
22. Simphorianus Mart. v.
23. zacchaeus bishop and disciple of Christ v.
24. bartholomew apostle v.
25. ludovicus king v.
26. Zepherinus Pabst and Mär. v.
27. bishop Gebhardus.
28. Augustine Bishop and Doctor of the Church v. and 1)
29. John the Baptist beheading v. and 1)
- 30th Felix and Adauchus Fair.
31. Paulinus Bishop and Mart.

Indulgence of the autumn month..

NB. 12,000 year indulgence, third part of sins.

Is to note that in this month the Quatember thun fall, since on Quatember Wednesday 18,000 year and

- On Quatember Friday v. 18,000 year.
- On Quatember Saturday 28,000 year.
- 1st Verena Virgo 6000 year.
- 2nd Antonius Mart.
3. emericus duke in Hungary 10,000 year.
4. marcellus bishop 1000 year.
5. victorinus bishop and mart. 8000 year.
6. magnus abbot 121,000 year and
7. regina virgin and mart. 1000 year.
8. our Lady's Nativity v.
9. sergius pabst and confessor 12,800 year and

Q.

10. Nicolaus of Talentin, Augustinian, v.
11. protus and hyacinthus mart. 3000 year.
- 12th Niceta Fair. 100 year and
13. Maternus Bishop.
14. holy cross elevation v.
15. Ludmilla widow in Prague 15 years.
16. euphemia virgin and mart. 1000 year and
17. lambertus bishop and mart. 5 year.
18. methodius bishop and mart. 7 year.
19. january and his journeymen mart. 100 year and Q.
20. Eustachius Mart. 3000 year and Q. and v.
21. Matthew Apostle and Evangelist v.
22. mauricius and his journeymen 128,000 year and Q.
23. Tecla virgin and fair. 1000 year.
24. Rupertus bishop 121 year and Q.
25. cleophas disciples 8000 year.
26. cyprianus bishop and mart. 7000 year.
- 27th Cosmas and Damianus Fair. 7000 year.
- 28th Wenceslaus Duke in Böhme, Mar., 1000 year.
29. michael archangel v.
30. Jerome Doctor of the Church v.

Indulgence in the month of wine.

The first Sunday of this month is the glorious feast of the Rosary of the Blessed Virgin Mary with plenary indulgence.

1. remigius bishop 8000 year.
2. leodigarius bishop and mart. 6000 year.
- 3rd Candidus Fair. 6000 year.
4. Franciscus Founder Order of the Barefoot v.
5. Placidus Mart. v.
6. Bruno Carthäuser Founder v.
7. justina virgin and mart. v.
8. pelagia penitent v.
9. dionysius bishop and mart.
10. Gereon and his journeymen Mär. v.
11. Jacobus Alemannus Order of Preachers v.
12. Maximilianus Bishop and Mart. v.
13. Simpertus Bishop of Augsburg 6000 year.

1) There seems to be "Q" omitted.

14. burcardus bishop 6000 year.
15. Hedwigis Duchess in Poland 6000 year.
16. gallus abbot 8000 year.
17. heron bishop 10,000 year.
18. lucas evangelist v.
19. Ludovicus Beltram Order of Preachers v.
20. Caprasius Mart. 10,000 year.
21. ursula and her company 8000 year.
22. cordula virgin and mart. 8000 year.
23. Severinus bishop 10,000 year.
24. euergistus bishop and mart. 8000 year.
25. crispin and crispinianus mart. 121,000 year.
26. amandus bishop 121,000 year.
27. jvo, lawyer, 121,000 year.
28. Simon and Judas, apostles, v.
29. narcissus, knight and mart., 1000 year.
30. marcellus knight and fair. 1000 year.
31. wolfgangus bishop 10,000 year.

Indulgence in the winter month, plenary indulgence.

1. all saints day v.
2. All Souls' Day v.
3. Jta Countess in Swabia.
4. Irenaeus, teacher, bishop.
5. Zacharias, John's father.
6. leonhardus abb.
7. florentinus bishop.
8. the four crowned mart. v.
9. theodorus mart. v.
10. ermegar. Countess 10,000 year.
11. martinus bishop v.
12. cunibertus bishop 10,000 year.
13. brictus bishop 8000 year.
- 14th Serapion Fair. 6000 year.
15. Albertus Magnus, Bishop and Order of Preachers, v.
- 16th Ottmarus abbot 12,800 year and
17. hugo bishop 12,800 year and Q.
- 18th Gelasius Pabst 10,000 year.
19. elizabeth landgravine 8000 year.
- 20th Eadmundus King Mart. 8000 year.
21. sacrifice of Mary v.
22. caecilia virgin and mart. v.
23. Clemens Pabst and Märt. v.
- 24th Chrysogonus Mart. 8000 year.
25. catharina virgin and mart. v.
- 26th Conradus bishop 10,000 year.
27. wrgilius bishop 12,800 year and Q.
- 28 Sosthenes, disciple of Paul, 3000 years.
29. saturninus bishop and mart. 100 year and Q.
- 30 Andrew Apostle v.

Indulgence of the Christian month, plenary indulgence.

Mark, favorable reader, wett in this month the H. Advent of our Lord is celebrated, are in it the following indulgences to receive:

On the first Sunday 28,000 year and v.

The other Sunday 11,000.

On the third Sunday of Advent 28,000 year and H-.

Fourth Sunday.

On Quatemb. Wednesday v. 28,000 year and Q.

On Quatember Friday v. and 10,000 year.

On Quatember Saturday 12,000 year and Q.

1. Eligius bishop, eight thousand year.

2. bibiana virgin and mart.

3. lucius king and confessor 6000 year.

4. barbara virgin and mart. 6000 year.

5. crispinga virgin and mart. 8000 year.

6. nicolaus bishop v.

7. ambrose bishop and teacher v.

8. conception of the Virgin Mary v.

9. joachim, father of mary, v.

10. Melchiades Pabst, Mar.

11. Damasus pope and confessor.

12 Epimachus, Mar.

13. lucia virgin and mart. v.

14th Nicasius Bishop.

15. valerianus bishop.

16. adelheidis empress 10,000 year.

17. lazarus bishop 8000 year.

18. Wunibaldus abbot 121,000 year and Q.

19. nemesius mart. 10,000 year.

20 Tecla Virgo 12.800 year and Q.

21st Thomas Apostle v.

22. theodosia virgin and mart. 3000 year.

23. victoria virgin and mart. 3000 year.

24. jrmia Virgo 28,000 year and Q.

25. birth of Christ the Savior at the first Mass on Christmas Eve v.

At the second in the morning 28,000 year and Q., also v.

In the third measuring 28,000 year, so much Q. and plenary indulgence.

26. Stephen the first mart. 28,000 year, and Q. and

27. evangelist John 28,000 year, and

28. innocent children 15,000 year and

29. thomas bishop and mart. 8000 year and Q.

30. sabinus bishop and fair. 3000 year.

31 Sylvester Pabst and confessor v.

4. constantiensis 1603.Rosarinin,

On the Origin and Advocacy of the Rosary of the Blessed Virgin Mary 2c.

By Mr. Conrad Sittardum, the Heil. Schrift Professoren und Provincial Predigerorden durch Hohes Deutschland und Oesterreich.

Pag. 124. follow the Roman indulgences, so the whole year out, at different times, in different places are to be gained:

Januarius.

1. on the new year's day at S. Maria trans Tiberim, majori unb ara coeli, a thousand year plenary indulgence.

6. on H. three King's Day and the whole Octave, at St. Peter's twenty-eight thousand years, and so many quadragen, and plenary indulgence.

16. at St. Marcello Pabst at St. Antonio Abbot

18. at St. Peter's Chair in Rome

20. at St. Sebastian's.

21. at St. Agnes

22. at St. Vincent and Anast.

25. at St. Paul's Church plenary indulgence.

27. at St. John Chrysostom at St.

Mary Scala coeli

31. at the Heil. Cross at St. Cyro and Johanne

Februarius.

2. to light masses at St. Mary major, and otherwise three other churches, plenary indulgence.

3. in St. Blast Church

5. in St. Agatha church- fully com-

9. st. apolloni, st. ludwigskirchen? mener

22. in St. Peter's Church Cathed. s indulgence.

24. at St. Matthia, Twelve Messenger, /

On the Sunday of Septuagint at St. Lawrence outside the city wall, a thousand years and 48 quarters of indulgence, remission of the third part of all sins, and the release of one soul from the third purgatory.

On Sunday Quinquagesimä, at St. Peter 28,000 year and plenary indulgence.

Martins.

7. at St. Thomas Aquinas.

12. at St. Gregory Pabst at St. Peter's plenary indulgence.

19. at St. Mary Major

20. at St. Sylvester's Chapel,

21. at St. Peter's, on St. Benedict's day, one hundred year indulgence.

25. on the day of the Annunciation in the church, called Annuntiatae, plenary indulgence, and from these days until August 1, one has in this church every day 12,000 year indulgence.

Fasting, Stationes and Indulgences at Rome.

On Ash Wednesday visit St. Sabina, Order of Preachers, church, in it are 300 years and plenary indulgence.

The other day in the fast at St. George's are 10,000 year indulgences.

The third day at St. John and Paul are 1000 year indulgences.

The first Saturday in Lent at St. Trifon 10,000 year and plenary indulgence.

The first Sunday in fasting.

At St. John. Lateran, item at St. Peter eighteen thousand years and plenary indulgence.

Monday at St. Peter's in bands ten thousand years and plenary indulgence.

Tuesday St. Anastasia twenty-eight thousand, and so many quadragen, and the release of a soul from purgatory.

Wednesdays St. Mary major twenty-eight thousand year and so much quadragen indulgence.

Thursday St. Laurentii in Palisperna twenty thousand year plenary indulgence.

Friday St. Apostle twelve thousand year and plenary indulgence.

The second Saturday St. Peter eighteen thousand years and so much quadragen, also plenary indulgence.

On the second Sunday in Lent.

At S. Maria della Nanicella, and at S. Maria major twenty-eight thousand year indulgence.

Sunday St. Element eleven thousand year indulgence, and remission of third part of sins.

Tuesday S. Balbina.

Wednesdays S. Caecilia.

Thursday S. Maria trans Tiberim.

Friday S. Uval..

† The third Saturday at St. Peter and Marcellina ten thousand years, also plenary indulgence, and the release of a soul from purgatory.

Third Sunday.

† At St. Lawrence extra innres, 88 quadragen, and the release of a soul from purgatory.

Monday St. Marcus 10,000 year indulgence.

Tuesday St. Potentia 10,000 year indulgence.
 Wednesdays St. Sixtus 10,000 year indulgence.
 Thursday St. Cosmas and Damianus ten thousand year indulgence.

Friday St. Lawrence in Lucina 10,000 year indulgence.

† Saturday St. Susanna 12,000 year indulgence.

The fourth Sunday in Lent.

By the Holy Cross of Jerusalem, plenary indulgence and the release of a soul from purgatory.

Monday the H. four crowned 10,000 year indulgence.

Tuesday St. Lawrence in Damaso, remission of third part of sin, 10,000 year indulgence.

On Wednesday, St. Paul, the third part of sins is forgiven, and 10,000 years of indulgence.

Thursday St. New Year 10,000 year indulgence.

Friday St. Eusebius 10,000 year indulgence.

Saturday St. Niclas in carcere,, plenary indulgence.

The fifth Sunday in Lent.

At St. Peter's twenty-eight thousand years and so many quadragen indulgence, also remission of third part of sins.

Monday St. Chrysogonus 10,000 year indulgence.

Tuesday St. Quirinus 10,000 year indulgence.

Wednesday St. Marcellinus 10,000 year indulgence.

Thursday S. Apollinaris 10,000 year indulgence.

Friday S. Stephano rotundo Redemption of a soul from purgatory.

Saturday St. John before the Latin Porten 13,000 year indulgence, and the release of a soul from purgatory.

Palm Sunday.

At St. Johan. Lateran. 25,000 year indulgence, so much quadragen, and plenary indulgence.

Monday St. Praxedis 25,000 year indulgence, and remission of third part of sins.

Tuesday St. Prisca eighteen thousand year, also plenary indulgence.

Wednesday St. Mary Major 28,000 year, also plenary indulgence.

Thursday St. Johan. Lateran. 12,000 years, 48 quadragen, and two plenary indulgences.

On S. Char Friday at S. Cross of Jerusalem plenary indulgence.

Saturday St. John. Lateran. 12,000 year indulgence, 40 quadragen, also plenary indulgence.

On Holy Easter Day.

Monday at St. Peter's twenty-eight thousand year and plenary indulgence.

Tuesday at St. Paul's twenty thousand year indulgence, 18 quadragen and plenary indulgence.

Midweek St. Lawrence extra innro8 18,000 year and so much quadragen. Discharge of a soul from purgatory, and plenary indulgence.

Thursday St. Apostle fifteen thousand and plenary indulgence.

Friday 8. Maria rotunã 15,000 year indulgence.

Saturday St. John. Lateran 15,000 year indulgence.

On Sunday Quasimodo.

5. at St. Pancraz fifteen thousand years, also plenary indulgence.

Aprilis.

5. at St. Vincent's Order of Preachers plenary indulgence.

23. on St. George's Day at St. Peter's plenary indulgence.

Twenty-eight thousand year indulgences at St. Mark's and at St. Peter's, and so many quadragen, plenary indulgences.

Majus.

Mark, every Sunday Maji is to earn plenary indulgence at St. Sebastian's.

1. at St. Philip, and Jacob Apostles plenary indulgence.

3. Cross of Jerusalem plenary indulgence.

4. at St. Augustino on the day of S. Women St. Monica much indulgence.

† At St. Johan. before the Latin Porten plenary indulgence.

At St. John's. Lateran, plenary indulgence and release of a soul from purgatory.

St. Michael's Appearance.

12. by St. Nereus and Achilles.

19. at St. Pudentiana.

20 In ara coeli St. Bernardini day.

21. at St. Helena.

H. from St. Bernardini day to August 1 at St. John. Lateran, all day plenary indulgence.

H. in the Weeks of the Cross, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday at St. Peter twenty-eight thousand year, and so much forty-day penitential indulgence.

On S. Pentecost evening at St. Johan. Lateran. fifteen thousand year, also plenary indulgence.

On S. Pentecost at St. Peter's, and Monday at St. Peter's in vincula plenary indulgence.

Tuesday St. Anastasia eighteen thousand year indulgence.

Wednesdays St. Mary Major, eighteen thousand year, also plenary indulgence.

Thursday at St. Lawrence extra muros, 18,000 years, and so much quadragen indulgence, release of a soul from purgatory, and plenary indulgence.

Friday St. Apostle eighteen thousand year and plenary indulgence.

Saturday St. Peter eighteen thousand years and plenary indulgence, also the release of a soul from purgatory.

On Corporis Christi day, that is, on S. Sacrament day, plenary indulgence, and the whole octavo off.

Junius.

The next Sunday of June, at Maria de Consolatione, plenary indulgence.

11. at St. Barnaba Apostle plenary indulgence.

13. at S. Antonio de Padua plenary indulgence.

15 St. Vitus and Marcellus six thousand year plenary indulgence.

24. st. johan. Lateran, John the Baptist. Baptist's plenary indulgence.

28. St. Peter's and Paul's Eve, plenary indulgence.

29. on S. [Peter and Paul] day plenary indulgence.

30th St. Paul's Commemoration.

Julius.

Visitation of the Virgin Mary in two churches de populo et pace, the whole octavo out, plenary indulgence.

17 St. Alexius plenary indulgence.

20 St. Mary Magdalene plenary indulgence.

21. s. Praxedis plenary indulgence.

22 St. Mary Magdalene plenary indulgence.

23 St. Apollinaris plenary indulgence.

25 St. Jacob Apostle plenary indulgence.

26 St. Anne plenary indulgence.

30. on the day of Saints Abdon and SennonJ) plenary indulgence.

August.

1. st. peter in vinsla plenary indulgence.

3. St. Lawrence extra muros plenary indulgence.

5 St. Mary the Greater plenary indulgence.

8. maria supra Minervam a plenary indulgence.

H. Day Dominici plenary indulgence.

6. at S. Johan. Lateran. Transfig. plenary indulgence.

1) In the old edition: "der heiligen Abden und Sennen".

10th St. Lawrence day, and the whole Octav, extra rnrro8 plenary indulgence.

12. at St. New Year's Eve, on the day of St. Clare, plenary indulgence.

1. and the whole Octave of the Assumption of Mary is plenary indulgence in five places, 8. Mariainazor, rotnnaa, de populo, ara coeli unb S. Maria Angelorum.

From our Lady's Ascension Day to her birthday, the pilgrimage or station is at St. Mary the Greater, and there are indulgences every day for 12 years, and remission of the third part of all sins.

16. at St. Rocho plenary indulgence.

14. at St. Bartholomew Apostle plenary indulgence.

26. at St. Augustine, teacher, plenary indulgence.

28. at St. John Lateran, plenary indulgence.

St. John's beheading plenary indulgence.

September.

8. on our Lady's birthday is plenary indulgence in the following churches, S. Maria major, S. Maria rotunda, Ara coeli, via lata, de pace et populo.

10th On St. Niclaus Tolentini day plenary indulgence, at S. Maria de populo, at St. Augustino.

14. on the day of the holy cross, and the eighth day after that, at the holy cross in Jerusalem, plenary indulgence.

On Quatember Wednesdays at 8. Mary inajor eighteen thousand years and so much forty-day penitential indulgence.

On Quatember Friday at St. Apostle 18,000 year and plenary indulgence.

On Quatember Saturday at St. Peter 28,000 year indulgence.

21. on Matthäi Apostle's Day plenary indulgence.

29. at St. Michel, Archangel, plenary indulgence.

30th At 8 Mary Major, on St. Jerome's Day, plenary indulgence.

October.

4. on St. Francisci day, and the whole Octav, plenary indulgence.

18. at St. Lucă, evangelists, plenary indulgence.

28. perfect indulgence on the day of Simonis 2c. at St. Peter's.

November.

On All Saints' Day and the whole Octave at 8. Maria rotunda plenary indulgence.

2. on the day of all souls at St. Gregory, Camaldolese Order, plenary indulgence of the whole Octave, and it is also taken for the deceased.

8. at St. Peter and Paul plenary indulgence.

9th At St. John Lateran, consecration of the Salvatoris Chapel, plenary indulgence.

11. St. Martin's Day at St. Peter's plenary indulgence.

21. at S. Maria major praesentans plenary indulgence.

22. perfect indulgence at St. Cecilia's.

23. at St. Element plenary indulgence.

25. perfect indulgence at St. Catharine Martyr.

30. St. Andrew in St. Peter's Church plenary indulgence.

December.

On the 1st Sunday in Advent at St. Peter's plenary indulgence, at S. Mary major twenty-eight thousand year indulgence.

On the second Sunday of Advent at the Holy Cross of Jerusalem 11,000 year and plenary indulgence.

On the third Sunday at St. Peter 28,000 year and quadragen, also plenary indulgence.

On the fourth Sunday at St. Peter's and St. Paul's plenary indulgence.

2. St. Bibiana Church plenary indulgence.

6. St. Niclas in carcere, plenary indulgence.

7th St. Ambrose plenary indulgence.

8. the Assumption and the whole Octave in five places plenary indulgence.

13th St. Lucia plenary indulgence.

On Quatember Wednesday at S. Maria major twenty-eight current year, and so much quadragen, that is, forty-day penitential indulgence.

21 St. Thomas the Apostle plenary indulgence.

24. on Christmas Eve S. Mary major twenty-eight thousand year and quadragen indulgence.

25. also on S. Christ Day S. Maria major plenary indulgence, at S. Anastasia, the Early Mass twenty-eight thousand years and quadragen, also plenary indulgence at the office in S. Maria major and Ara coeli, a thousand years and quadragen, also plenary indulgence.

26. at St. Lawrence outside the city wall, and at St. Stephen's. rotundo, 28,000 year and quadragen, also plenary indulgence.

27. at St. John Lateran. 28,000 year and plenary indulgence.

28. at St. Paul fifteen thousand years and plenary indulgence.

31. perfect indulgence at St. Sylvester.

5th Neoburgensis 1630.

The souls rainbow, in it to see beautiful sky colors of Catholic devotion.

M. Leonhard Mair, parish priest at St. Peter's and provincial dean.

Neuburg on the Danube by Lorenz Danhauser.

63. to note, the v. means plenary indulgence, the † release of a soul from purgatory, the quadragen.

In the Jenner.

1. on the New Year's Day v.

6. on the holy three king day v.

14. st. felix v.

16. st. marcelli v.

17. st. antoni v.

19 Peter chair celebration to Rome v.

20. st. sebastian v.

21. st. agnes v.

22nd St. Vincent v.

25. st. paul conversion v.

26th St. Chrysostom v.

31. on the holy day of the cross and at St. Cyron. v.

In the horn.

2. Candlemas v. †.

3. St. Blasii v. †.

4. st. agathä v. †.

9. apollonia v. †.

22 St. Peter's Chair Celebration at Antioch v. †

24. st. Matthiä v. †.

Sunday Septuagesimä v. † 48 Q. , Sunday Sexagesimä 12,000 year.

Sunday Quinquagesimä † 28,000 year.

In the March.

8. st. thomas of aquino v.

17. st. gregorii v.

19. st. josephi v.

20. in St. Silvester's Capell v.

21st St. Benedicti 100 year.

24th Vigil. Annunciation v.

25th Feast of the Annunciation v.

From that day until August 1 daily 11,000 year.

Lenten Station.

Ash Wednesday 3000 year v.

Thursday 1000 year v.

Friday 1000 year.

Saturday thousand year v.

On the first Sunday in Lent eighteen thousand year v.

Monday ten thousand year.
 Erchtag eight and twenty thousand year.
 Wednesday eight and twenty thousand year v.
 Thursday two thousand year v.
 Friday two thousand year v.
 Saturday eighteen thousand year.
 On the other Sunday in the fast eight and twenty thousand year.
 Monday, remission of the third part of the sin and eleven thousand years.
 Erchtag, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, Saturday ten thousand year v. †
 On the third Sunday in Lent 88 †
 Monday ten thousand year.
 Erchtag, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday ten thousand year.
 Saturday twelve thousand year.
 On the fourth Sunday of Lätare v. †
 Monday ten thousand year.
 The first day and Wednesday, remission of the third part of the sin, ten thousand years.
 Thursday and Friday ten thousand year.
 Saturday v.
 On the fifth Sunday remission of the third part of the sins, eighteen thousand year, eight and twenty thousand Monday, Erchtag, Wednesday, Thursday ten thousand year.
 Friday †
 Saturday thirteen thousand †
 On Holy Palm Sunday five and twenty thousand v.
 Monday Remission of the third part of sins.
 Erchtag, Wednesday, Thursday v.
 On holy Friday and Saturday v.
 On the Holy Easter Day, Monday, Erchtag and Wednesday v. †
 Thursday v.
 Friday fifteen thousand year.
 Saturday also so much.
 Sunday Quasimodo. v.

Aprilen.

5. St. Vincent Order of Preachers v.
 24. st. gregorii v.
 25. st. Marci eighteen thousand Q., eight and thirty thousand year v.

In Mayen.

All Sunday in Mayen v.
 1. philippi and jacobi v.
 3. cross invention v.
 4. monica v.
 6. s. Iohannis ante portam Latinam v.
 7. corona domini v.

8. st. Michaelis apparition v.
 9. nereï and achillei v.
 19. st. Potentiana v.
 20th St. Bernardini v.

From this day until the month of August is daily v. In the cross week on Monday, Erchtag, Wednesday 28,000 Q., eight and twenty thousand year.

On Ascension Day also so much.
 On the holy day of Pentecost fifteen thousand year v.
 On the holy day of Pentecost and Monday v.
 On the day of Pentecost eighteen thousand year.
 Wednesday eighteen thousand year v.
 Thursday nineteen thousand eighteen thousand year.
 Friday eighteen thousand year v.
 Saturday eighteen thousand year † v.
 On Corpus Christi Day and through the Octav v.

In June.

All Sunday this month v.

2. st. marcellini thousand year.
 11. st. barnabä v.
 13. st. Antonii of Padua v.
 15. st. Vitus six thousand year v.
 24. s. Iohannis Baptistae v.
 28 Vigil. St. Peter and Paul v.
 29th St. Peter's and Paul's Feast v.
 30. St. Pauli Gedächtniß v.

In the Julio.

1. eve of the Visitation of Mary v.
 2. Visitation feast, and by the Octav v.
 14. st. bonaventure v.
 17th St. Alexius v.
 20th St. Margaret 200 year v.
 21. st. Praxedis v.
 22nd St. Mary Magdalene v.
 23. st. Apollinarius 100 v.
 25. st. jacobi v.
 26. st. annä v.
 30. 8000 year v.

August month.

1st St. Peter's Vol. v.
 3. st. Stephen's invention v.
 4. St. Dominicus founder of the Order of Preachers and the Brotherhood † v.
 5. st. mary to the snow v.
 6. transfiguration of Christ v.
 8th St. Cyriaci v.
 10. St. Laurentii and the Octav v.

11. st. clara v.

14th vigil. Assumption v.

15. Assumption and the Octav v.

From this day until the birthday of the Virgin Mary, daily remission of the third part of sins and 12,000 years.

16. st. rochus v.

24. st. bartholomew v.

25. st. Zepherinus v.

28. st. augustine v.

29th St. John's beheading v.

In the autumn month.

7th vigil. Nativity of the Virgin Mary v.

8. Nativity of the Virgin Mary v.

1V. St. Nicol. Tolentin. v.

14th H. Cross Increase v.

Quatember Wednesday 18,000 Q., 18,000 year.

Friday 18,000 year v.

Saturday 28,000 year v.

21. st. Matthew 14,000 year v.

27th St. Cosmas and Dam. 4000 year.

29. st. michaelis v.

30. st. hieronymi v.

In wine month.

On the first Sunday they hold the great feast of Holy Rosary v.

4. franciscus v.

18th St. Lucas v.

28. st. Simon Judas v.

In the winter month.

1. of All Saints and the Octav v.

2. all souls and the octave by f v.

8th St. Salvatoris church consecration v.

11. st. martin v.

18th St. Peter's church consecration v.

22nd St. Cecilia v.

23. st. clement v.

25. st. catharina v.

30. st. andrews v.

In the month of Christ.

On Sunday in Advent 28,000 year v.

On the 2nd Sunday 11,000 b.

On the 3rd Sunday 28,000 Q. 1) v.

On the 4th Sunday v.

2. st. bibianä v.

4. st. barbara 10,000 year v.

6. st. nicolai v.

7. st. ambrosii v.

1) From here on, the original says (probably because the writing was not enough) "q." instead of: "tz."

8. mariä Empfängniß and the Octav v.

13. lucia v.

Quatember Wednesday 28,000 v.

Friday 1000 year v.

Saturday 28,000 Q., 28,000 year v.

21. st. thomas v.

24. h. Christmas Eve 28,000 year, 28,000 q-

On High Christmas Day twice 28,000 Q. v. v. and three masses.

26th St. Stephen 28,000 † v.

27th St. John 27,000 year v.

28th Kindleinstag 15,000 year v.

31st St. Silvester v.

6th Augustensis 1630.

Rosetum,

This is: Beautiful rose garden, in which all kinds of beautiful flowers, so full of great graces, indulgences and freedom, can be found in the gracious brotherhoods of the Holy. Rosary and sweet name of Jesus.

Augsburg, 1630. by Michael Stör, in Verl. Georg Miller's.

Pag. 30. mark, the † significant discharge of a sea! from purgatory, the v. plenary indulgence, the Q. Quadragen.

In Jenner Indulgence.

1. circumcision of Christ or New Year's Day v.

On this day the Brotherhood of the Most Holy Name of Jesu has a jubilee with the preachers, v.

6th H. three King and Octav v.

14. st. felix v.

16. st. marcelli v.

17. st. antoni v.

18. chair celebration St. Peter's at Rome v.

20. st. sebastiani v.

21. st. agnes v.

22nd St. Vincent v.

25. st. paul conversion v.

26 St. John. Chrysostomi v.

27. at St. Mary Scala coeli.

31. on the day of the cross and at St. Cyron. v.

In the horn.

2. Candlemas v. †

3. st. blasii v. †

4. st. agathä v. †

9. apollonia v. †

22nd St. Peter chair celebration at Antioch v. 's

24 St. Matthiä v. †

Sunday Septuagesimä 48 Q. v. † Sunday
Sexagesimä 12,000 year.
Sunday Quinquagesimä 28,000 year †

In Merzen.

8. St. Thomas Aquinas v.
9. st. joseph v.
12. st. gregorii v.
20. in St. Silvester's Capell v.
21st St. Benedict 100 year.
24. vigil. on Annunciation of Mary v.
25th Annunciation of the Virgin Mary, from this day until August 1 daily 11,000 year.

Lenten Station.

Ash Wednesday 3000 year v.
Thursday 10,000 year v.
Friday 1000 year.
Saturday 1000 year v.
On the first almost. Sunday 18,000 year v.
Monday 10,000 year.
Tuesday 28,000 Q.
Wednesday 28,000 year v.
Thursday 2000 year v.
Friday 2000 year v.
Saturday 18,000 year.

On the second almost. Sunday 28,000 year.
Monday remission of third part of sins 10,000
year.
Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and
Saturday 10,000 year v. †

On the third Fast. Sunday 88 Q. †
Monday 1000 year.
Tuesday 10,000 year.
Wednesday 10,000 year.
Thursday 10,000 year.
Saturday 12,000.

On the fourth Fast. Sunday v. †
Monday 10,000 year.
Tuesday Remission of third part of sins 10,000
year.
Wednesday as on Tuesday.
Thursday 10,000 year.
Friday 10,000 year.
Saturday v.

On the fifth Fast. Sunday remission of third part of the sins and 28,000 year and 28,000 Q.

Monday 10,000 year.
Tuesday 10,000 year.
Wednesday 10,000 year.
Thursday 10,000 year.
Friday ß
Saturday 13,000 †

On Palm Sunday 25,000 Q. v.
Monday, remission of third part of sins and 15,000 year.
Erchtag, Wednesday, Maundy Thursday v.
Char Friday v.
Saturday v.

Easter Day, Easter Monday, Easter Tuesday v.
Wednesday v. †
Thursday v.
Friday v. 15,000 year.
Saturday also so much.

Sunday Quasimodogeniti v.

April.

1. St. Vincent Order of Preachers v.
24. st. george, v.
25. st. marx 18,000 and 28,000 year v.

In Mayen.

All Sunday at the Majo v.
2. st. philrppi and jacobi v.
3. cross invention v.
4. st. monica v.
6. Johan. ante portam Latinam v.
7. corona domini v.
8. st. Michaelis apparition v.
12. nereï and achillei v.
19. prudentianä v.
20. bernardini v.
From this day until the month of August is daily v.
In the H. Cross week on Monday, Erchtag,
Wednesday 28,000 H., 28,000 year.
On Ascension Day also so much.
On H. Pentecost 15,000 year.
On H. Pentecost and Monday v.
Tuesday 18,000 year.
Wednesday 18,000 year v.
Thursday 19,000 Q., 18,000 yr.
Friday 18,000 year v.
Saturday 18,000 year v. †
On the Holy. Corpus Christi Day and by the Octav v.

In June.

All Sunday this month v.
2. st. marcellini 1000 year.
11. st. barnabä v.
13. st. Antonii of Padua v.
15. st. Vitus 6000 year v.
14. st. john baptistä birthday v.
28 Vigil. St. Peter and St. Paul v.
30. to St. Pauli Gedächtniß v.

In the Julio.

- 1st Vigil. of the Visitation of Mary v.
- 2. visitation of the Virgin Mary and the Octave by v.
- 14th St. Bonaventure v.
- 17th St. Alexius v.
- 20. st. margaretha 200 year v.
- 21. st. Praxedis v.
- 22nd St. Mary Magdalene v.
- 23rd St. Apollinaris 100 year v.
- 25. st. jacob v.
- 26. st. anna v.
- 30. st. Abdon and Sennon 8000 year v.

August month.

- 1st St. Peter's Vol. v.
- 3. st. Stephen's invention v.
- 4. St. Dominicus, founder of the Order of Preachers and the Brotherhood of Founders, v.
- 5. st. mary to the snow v.
- 6. transfiguration of Christ v.
- 8th St. Cyriaci v.
- 10. St. Laurentii and the Octav v.
- 11. st. clara v.
- 14th vigil. Assumption and the Octavus by v.
- From that day until the birthday of the Virgin Mary, daily remission of the third part of sins and 12,000 years.
- 16. st. rochus v.
- 24. st. bartholomew v.
- 25. st. Zepherinus v.
- 28. st. augustine v.
- 29th St. John's beheading v.

In the autumn month.

- 7th vigil. Nativity of the Virgin Mary v.
- 8. Nativity of the Virgin Mary v.
- 10. st. Nicolai Tolentin. v.
- 14th cross increase v.
- Quatember Wednesday 18,000 Q., 18,000 year.
- Friday 18,000 year v.
- Saturday 28,000 year v.
- 21. st. mathew 14,000 year v.
- 27th St. Cosma and Damiani 4000 year.
- 29. st. michael v.
- 30. st. hieronymi v.

In wine month.

- On the first Sunday of this one holds the feast of the Holy Rosary of the Glorious Virgin and Mother of God Mary, with plenary indulgence, conferred by Gregory XIII.
- 4. st. francisci v.
- 18th St. Lucas v.
- 28. st. Simonis and Jude v.

In the winter month.

- 1. all saints octav by v.
- 2. all souls and octave by v. †
- 8. st. salvatoris church v.
- 11. st. martini v.
- 18th St. Peter's church consecration v.
- 21. sacrifice of the Virgin Mary v.
- 22nd St. Cecilia v.
- 23. st. clement v.
- 25. st. catharina v.
- 30 St. Andrew v.

In the month of Christ.

- On the first Sunday in Advent 28,000 year v.
- On the other Advent Sunday 11,000 year v.
- On the third Sunday 28,000 and v.
- On the fourth Sunday v.
- 2nd St. Bibiana v.
- 4. st. Barbara 10,000 year.
- 6. st. nicolai v.
- 7. st. ambrosii v.
- 8. mariä Empfängniß and the whole Octav v.
- 13. st. lucia v.
- Quatember Wednesday 28,000 H. v.
- Friday 1000 year v.
- Saturday 28,000 year and so much v.
- 21. st. thomas v.
- 24th H. Christmas Eve 28,000 year and so much (P
- 25th H. Christmas Day twice 28,000 v. v. in three Masses.
- 26 St. Stephen's Day 28,000 year v. †
- 27. st. john. 27,000 year v.
- 28th Kindleinstag 15,000 year v.
- 31 New Year's Eve v.

7th Coloniensis 1603.

Rosarium,

Or Rosary of the Holy Virgin. Virgin Mary, of whose origin and highest use, by Conradum Sittardum, the H. Script L., 2ro. 1) Order of Preachers through high Germany and Austria.

Cöln 1603.

Januarius.

On the New Year's Day at 8. Narla kraus VII-eriru, ruasor and ara eoeli twenty-five thousand years and plenary indulgence.

6. On H. three Kings' Day and the whole Octave, at St. Peter's twenty-eight thousand years, and so many quadragen, and plenary indulgence.

1) According to the Constance Jubilee Calendar, which Sittardus also procured (see Col. 168), "I. kro." will have to be resolved by: Lector, Provincial.

16. at St. Marcello Pabst
17. at St. Antoni Abt i
18. at St. Peter's Chair at Rome i
20. at St. Sebastian/
21. at St. Agnesv more perfect
22. at St. Nincenz and Anast. / Indulgence.
25. at St. Paul's Church v
27. at St. John Chrysoftomo i at St. Mary Scala oosli k
31. at St. Cyrus and John /

Februarius.

2. full indulgence for light masses at St. Mary Major and three other churches.

3. in St. Blasius Church
5. in St. Agatha church/ full com-
9. in St. Peter's OatBsära > mener

22. at St. Matthias, Twelve Messengers, I Indulgence.

24. st.apollonia, st.ludwigskirchen/
s On the Sunday of Septuagint at St. Lawrence outside the city wall, eleven thousand years and 48 quadragen indulgence, remission of the third part of all sin, and the release of one soul from the third purgatory.

On Sunday Sexagesimä at St. Paul 12,000 and 18 quadragen indulgence, and remission of part of the sin.

On Sunday Quinquagesimä, at St. Peter's twenty-eight thousand years and plenary indulgence.

Martius.

7. with St. Thomas Aquinas
12. at St. Gregory Pabst / at St. Peter's
19. at St. Mary Major
20. at St. Silvester's Capelle /
- 21 At St. Peter's, on St. Benedict's day, 100 year indulgence.

25. on Annunciation Day in the church, called ^.nnnneiaka, plenary indulgence.

From that day until August 1, this church has twelve thousand year indulgences every day.

Lenten stationes and indulgences at Rome.

On Ash Wednesday visit St. Sabina, church of the Order of Preachers, in it are 3000 years and plenary indulgence.

The other day in the fast at St. George are 1000 year indulgences.

The third day at St. John and Paul are 1000 year indulgences.

The first Saturday in Lent at St. Trifon 10,000 year and plenary indulgence.

The first Sunday in fasting.

At St. Johan. Lateran. Item at St. Peter's eighteen thousand years and plenary indulgence.

Monday St. Peter in bands ten thousand year and plenary indulgence.

Tuesday St. Anastasia twenty-eight thousand years and so many quadragen indulgences, and the release of a soul from purgatory.

Wednesday St. Mary Major twenty-eight thousand year and so much quadragen indulgence.

Thursday St. Lawrence in Palisperna 20,000 year and plenary indulgence.

Friday St. Apostle 2000 year and plenary indulgence.

Saturday St. Peter 8000 year and so much quadragen, also plenary indulgence.

On the second Sunday in Lent.

At S. Maria della Nanicella and at S. Maria major 28,000 year indulgence.

Monday St. Element 11,000 year indulgence and remission of third part of sins.

Tuesday St. Balbina.

Wednesdays St. Cecilia.

Thursday at S. Maria trans Tiberim

† The third Saturday at St. Peter and Marcellus ten thousand years, also plenary indulgence and the release of a soul from purgatory.

On the third Sunday in Lent.

† At St. Lawrence extra muros, 88 quadragen and the release of a soul from purgatory.

Monday St. Marcus 10,000 year indulgence.

Wednesdays St. Sixtus 10,000 year indulgence.

Thursday St. Cosmas and Damianus ten thousand year indulgence.

Friday St. Lawrence in Lucina 10,000 year indulgence.

† Saturday St. Susanna 12,000 year indulgence.

The fourth Sunday in Lent.

By the Holy Cross of Jerusalem, plenary indulgence and the release of a soul from purgatory.

Monday the H. four crowned 10,000 year indulgence.

Tuesday St. Laurence in Damascus, pardon of the third part of the sin, 10,000 year indulgence.

Thursday St. New Year 10,000 year indulgence.

Friday St. Eusebius 10,000 year indulgence.

Saturday St. Niclas in carcere,, plenary indulgence.

The fifth Sunday in Lent.

At St. Peter's twenty-eight baptizing years and so many quadragen indulgences, also remission of third part of sins.

Monday St. Chrysogonus 10,000 year indulgence.

Tuesday St. Quirinus 10,000 year indulgence.

Wednesday St. Marcellinus 10,000 year indulgence.

Thursday S. Apollinaris 10,000 year indulgence.

† Friday S. Stephano rotundo, Redemption of a soul from purgatory.

Saturday St. John before the Latin Porten 13,000 year indulgence and the release of a soul from purgatory.

Palm Sunday.

At St. Johan. Lateran. 25,000 year indulgence, so much quadragen, and plenary indulgence.

Monday St. Praxedis 25,000 year indulgence and remission of third part of sins.

Tuesday St. Prisca eight thousand year, also plenary indulgence.

Wednesday St. Mary Major 28,000 year, also plenary indulgence.

Thursday St. Johan. Lateran. 2000 year, 48 quadragen, and twice plenary indulgence.

On S. Char Friday at S. Cross of Jerusalem plenary indulgence.

Saturday St. John. Lateran. 2000 year, 48 quadragen, also plenary indulgence.

On S. Easter Day at St. Mary Major 33,000 year and so much quadragen and plenary indulgence.

Monday at St. Peter 28,000 year and plenary indulgence.

Tuesday at St. Paul 20,000 year, 18 quadragen and plenary indulgence.

Midweek St. Lawrence extra iriuros, 8000 year, so much quadragen. Redemption of a soul from purgatory and plenary indulgence.

Thursday St. Apostle 15,000 year indulgence.

Friday 8. Maria rotunāa 15,000 year indulgence.

Saturday St. John. Latergn. 15,000 year indulgence.

On Sunday Quasimodo. at St. Pancraz twenty-five thousand year, also plenary indulgence.

Aprilis.

5. at St. Vincent, Order of Preachers, plenary indulgence.

23. on St. George's Day at St. Peter's plenary indulgence.

25. at St. Marcus and at St. Peter 28,000 year and so much quadragen, plenary indulgence.

Majus.

Merk, every Sunday is to earn plenary indulgence at St. Sebastian.

1. St. Philip and Jacob, apostles, plenary indulgence.

3. by the Holy Cross of Jerusalem, plenary indulgence.

4. at St. Augustine, on the day of St. Monica, many indulgences.

6. at St. John in front of the Latin Porten plenary indulgence.

† At St. John. Lateran, plenary indulgence and release of a soul from purgatory.

8th St. Michael's Appearance.

12. by St. Nereus and Achilles.

19. at Pudentiana.

20 In Ara coeli St. Bernardine's Day.

21. at St. Helena.

H. from St. Bernard's day to August 1 at St. John. Lateran, all days plenary indulgence.

H. in the week of the cross Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday at St. Peter 28,000 year and so much forty-day penitential indulgence.

On S. Ascension Day at St. Peter's 28,000 year and so much forty-day penitential indulgence.

On H. Pentecost evening at St. Johan. Lateran. 15,000 year, also plenary indulgence.

On S. Pentecost at St. Peter, and Monday at Peter in vincula plenary indulgence.

Tuesday St. Anastasia eighteen thousand year indulgence.

Wednesday St. Mary Major eighteen thousand year, also plenary indulgence.

Thursday at St. Lawrence extra muros 18,000 years and so much quadragen indulgence, release of a soul from purgatory, and plenary indulgence.

Friday St. Apostle eighteen thousand year and plenary indulgence.

Saturday St. Peter eighteen thousand years and plenary indulgence, also the release of a soul from purgatory.

On Corporis Christi day, that is, on S. Sacrament day, plenary indulgence, and the whole octavo off.

Junius.

The other Sunday of June, at Maria de Consolatione, plenary indulgence.

11. At St. Barnabas Apostle plenary indulgence.

13. at 8. Antonius äs kaäua complete indulgence.

15 St. Vitus and Marcellus six thousand year plenary indulgence.

24 Johan. Lateran, John the Baptist's plenary indulgence. Baptist's plenarv indulgence.

28. St. Peter and Paul ^Vigilie^s plenary indulgence.

29. total indulgence on S. s^Peter and Paul's day.
30th St. Pauli Commemoration.

Julius.

2. Visitation of the Virgin Mary, in two churches de populo et pace, the whole octavo also plenary indulgence.

17 St. Alexius plenary indulgence.

20 St. Margaret's plenary indulgence.

21 St. Praxedis plenary indulgence.

25 St. James the Apostle plenary indulgence.

26 St. Anne plenary indulgence.

30. On the day of S. Abdon and Sennon 1) plenary indulgence.

Augustus.

1. saint Peter in vincula plenary indulgence.

3. St. Lawrence extra muros plenary indulgence.

5. saint Mary the greater plenary indulgence.

S. Maria supra Minervam a plenary indulgence.

6. at S. Johan. Lateran. Transfig. plenary indulgence.

10th St. Lawrence's Day, and the whole octavo, extra innres, plenary indulgence.

12. at St. Silvester on the day St. Clara plenary indulgence.

15. and the whole Octave of the Assumption of Mary is plenary indulgence in five places, S. Maria major, rotunda, de populo, ara coeli and S. Maria Angelorum.

And our Lady's Ascension Day until her birthday is the pilgrimage or station at St. Mary the Greater, and there are indulgences and remission of the third part of sins every day.

16. perfect indulgence at St. Roch.

24. at St. Bartholomew Apostle plenary indulgence.

28. at St. Augustine, teacher, plenary indulgence.

29. st. john. Lateran. plenary indulgence.

St. John's beheading plenary indulgence.

Septemb er.

8. on our Lady's birthday is plenary indulgence in the following churches, S. Maria major, S. Maria rotunda, ara coeli, via lata, de pace et populo.

10. on St. Niclas and Tolentinus day plenary indulgence in the following churches, at S. Maria de populo and at St. Augustine.

1) In the original: "Abden and Senner".

14. on the day of the holy cross exaltation, and the eighth day after that, at the holy cross in Jerusalem plenary indulgence.

On Ouatember midweek at Mary major eighteen thousand year and so much forty-day remission of penance.

On Ouatember Friday at St. Apostle 18,000 year and plenary indulgence.

On Ouatember Saturday at St. Peter 28,000 year indulgence.

21st On St. Matthew the Apostle Day plenary indulgence.

29. at St. Michel, Archangel, plenary indulgence.

30th At S. Maria major, on St. Jerome's day, plenary indulgence.

October.

4. on St. Francis day and Ockav plenary indulgence.

18. at St. Lucas Evangelists plenary indulgence.

28. perfect indulgence on the day of Simonis 2c. at St. Peter's.

November.

1. on All Saints' Day and the whole Octave at 8. Maria roturiäa plenary indulgence.

2. on All Souls' Day at St. Gregory's, Camaldolese Order, plenary indulgence the whole Octavian, and it is also taken for the deceased.

8. perfect indulgence at St. Peter and Paul.

9. at St. John's. Lateran. Consecration of the Chapel 8alvatoris plenary indulgence.

11. perfect indulgence on St. Martin's day at St. Peter's.

21. at 8. maria mazor prasssiit. plenary indulgence.

23. at St. Element plenary indulgence.

25. perfect indulgence at St. Catharine Martyr.

30. St. Andrew in St. Peter's churches plenary indulgence.

December.

On the 1st Sunday in Advent at St. Peter's plenary indulgence. At S. Mary major twenty-eight thousand year indulgence.

On the second Sunday of Advent at the Holy. Cross of Jerusalem 11,000 years and plenary indulgence.

On the third Sunday at St. Peter 28,000 year and quadragen, also plenary indulgence.

On the fourth Sunday at St. Peter's and St. Paul's plenary indulgence.

2nd St. Bibianä Church plenary indulgence.

6. St. Niclas in oarcere, plenary indulgence.

8. total indulgence in five places for the Assumption and the entire Octave.

13 St. Lucy's plenary indulgence.

On Quatember Wednesday at S. Maria major twenty-eight thousand year and quadragen, also plenary indulgence.

On Friday St. Apostle ten thousand year and plenary indulgence.

On Saturday St. Peter twenty thousand year and so much quadragen, that is, forty-day penitential indulgence.

21st St. Thomas the Apostle plenary indulgence.

24. on Christmas Eve S. Mary major twenty-eight thousand year and quadragen indulgence.

25th On S. Chrism Day S. Maria major plenary indulgence at S. Anastasia, the early Mass twenty-eight thousand years, and 1) quadragen, also plenary indulgence at the office in S. Maria major and Ara coeli, twenty-eight thousand years and quadragen, also plenary indulgence.

26. at St. Lawrence outside the city wall, and at St. Stephen's. rotundo, 28,000 year and quadragen, also plenary indulgence.

27. at St. John Lateran. 28,000 year and plenary indulgence.

28. at St. Paul fifteen thousand years and plenary indulgence.

31. perfect indulgence at St. Sylvester.

32 Alexander de Neronibus, apostolic protonotary, preceptor of the Hospital of the Holy Spirit in Rome. Spirit in Rome, plenary indulgence for the dead and the living. 1516.

From Kapp's "Nachlese", Theil III, p. 213. Walch remarks that this document is not in the right place here, but should have been postponed further.

Translated into German.

The most holy Father and Lord in Christ, Nicolaus V, by the Grace of God, of blessed memory, Pope, has granted indulgences, absolved from sins, and given to all and every believer in Christ of both sexes who, from the goods granted to them by God, donates to the apostolic Hospital of the Holy Spirit in Saxia in the city a papal gold florin or an equivalent, either according to their wealth, according to the valuation of the preceptor, brothers and commissaries of the named hospital, for the maintenance of the poor, the infirm, and children who have been laid off. gold florins, or an equivalent, either according to their wealth, according to the assessment of the preceptor, the brothers and commissaries of the named hospital, for the

1) "and" put by us instead of: "an" in the old edition, according to the parallel Constance Jubilee Calendar.

The saints, who are a large number in the hospital, are to be given alms, and all penalties imposed on them at the hour of death, and after death all punishments which they deserved to suffer in purgatory for the cleansing of sins, are to be remitted: For we, by the mercy of God Almighty, and of His blessed Apostles Peter and Paul, and out of that authority which the Lord bestowed upon us, grant to all and every believer in Christ of both sexes, who from their goods given to them by God, a papal gold florin, or an equivalent, either according to their fortune, as may be deemed proper by the Preceptore, friars, nuncios and procurators, or the commissaries, shall give alms to the said hospital, for the maintenance of the poor, infirm, and abandoned children who are in the said hospital, if only they have heartfelt remorse for their sin and confess it with their mouths, remitting all penance imposed on them for their sin in the last hour of death, mercifully in the Lord. That if perhaps one of them will deliver the said quantum to the intended hospital for the souls of the father and mother or other deceased, who have departed from this life in the sincerity of faith, and the unity of the Holy Roman Church, and in our obedience and that of our successors, the Roman Pontiffs, in repentance and full confession, if it is otherwise time and possible to confess: We absolve and remit all such who die in Christ, trusting in God's mercy, in which we trust more and more in heaven. By whose power we absolve from all punishment on earth, which they deserved to suffer after this time for the purification of their sin, by virtue of foreknown power, mercifully in the Lord absolve and remit at the same time. Which remission of sin and absolution from punishment all Roman popes, as ancestors of Nicolai V, have approved and confirmed; and recently also the most holy Father in Christ and Lord, and our Lord, Mr. Leo X, by the grace of God Pope, has approved and confirmed this same remission and absolution, and has conferred it anew. Therefore, we have Alexander de Neronibus, de Florentia, apostolic protonotarius, preceptor of the aforementioned apostolic hospital, and magister of this entire order generalis, our saint's sten Herrn Pabsts magister domus, our below designated Commissair assigned to this and other duties; wanting, as we are held, that to all and every believer of Christ of both sexes, living and dead, this treasure

The church is to be distributed and allocated in the manner of an intercession. And because the believer(s) of Christ gave and deposited with our apostolic hospital this alms named in the preceding letter and assessed at the discretion of our commissioner reported below for the believing soul(s) of the deceased: therefore, by virtue of the present, we certify and attest that such souls have obtained complete remission and release from all the punishments they deserve to suffer for the purification of their sins in Purgatory. In the name of the Master, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, Amen. Given under our round seal of the apostolic hospital, and our below named Commissarii signature. On the day of the month ... in the 1516th year. In the fourth year of the Pontificate of the Most Holy Father in Christ and Lord, our Lord Leo X, by the Grace of God Pope.

A letter of indulgence from the papal nuncio Raymundus Peraldus, which he issued in 1489, since he had been sent to Germany, Denmark, Sweden and Liefland as commissary general of indulgences and nuncio to the pope.

From Lünig's Oerinin. Diplom, kuer., park I, p. 361 reprinted in Löscher's Reformation Acta, Theil I, p. 364.

Translated into German.

To all and everyone who will see the present letter, Raymundus Peraldi, Alnisian Archidiaconus in the Xanctonensian Church, professor of the holy divinity, protonotarius of the apostolic see, and of our most holy Lord Pabst referendarius domesticus, with full power of a legatus a latere envoy, ambassador and apostolic commissarius to Germany, also all and every province, city, country, and territory of Germany, the Holy Roman Empire, its Electors, and here and there its subjects, also the kingdoms of Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Liefland, Prussia, and Russia, and islands and provinces, also other dominions, countries, and territories bordering the same, Hail! We wish you to know that the Most Holy Father in Christ and our Lord, Mr. Innocentius VIII, the contemporary pope, have granted all and every believer in Christ of both sexes, who for the protection of the Orthodox faith against the Turks, enemies of this faith, according to our decree, assistance to the Orthodox faith.

The Holy Father has also granted, in addition to the Jubilee, other indulgences, pardons, and privileges which the faithful of Christ themselves may obtain by attending the churches, through us or our commissioners to be deputized, as if they had attended the main Roman churches at the time of the Jubilee, as is more fully contained in the apostolic letter issued for this purpose; that they may choose a skilled confessor, whether of a religious order or not, who may once in their lives grant them complete absolution from all and any sins, excesses, vices and crimes, even those which the apostolic see has reserved to itself in general or in particular, but to absolve those whom this same See has not reserved for itself, as often as it pleases them in their time of life, even on their deathbed, as often as one is doubtful about their life, even if they should not die then, be able to grant complete forgiveness of all their sin. Our most holy Lord has also granted indulgence on his own initiative, so that all and every believer in Christ and their deceased parents and benefactors, who have departed with love, may always share in all petitions, intercessions, masses, alms, fasts, prayers, disciplines, and all other spiritual goods that are and can be done in the whole holy contending Church of Christ and all its members. And lest anyone should raise any doubt about the foregoing, our most holy Lord himself has willed that our present letter be accorded as much credence as would be accorded to it if it were issued under a leaden bull. Neither should this letter be included among the general or special revocations or annulments that might be issued with respect to such pardons and benefits. And because the devout in Christ N. N. N. have contributed from their goods to this faith of Godly help and defense, according to the will of the pope and our decree, as we confirm by the present letter, which has been handed over to them by us as a testimony of this, then we grant and permit out of apostolic power entrusted to us, by the present, that they may and can make use of and enjoy said pardons and indulgences. Given under our seal ordained for this purpose on the first of the month of August in the year 1489.

34. of the same Raymundus, Cardinal of Gurk and Envoy of Indulgences, two diplomas of the relics to be found at the University of Paris, together with enclosed indulgences. 1502.

From ʿoũ. lʿnuoji nanck. knris. illustrnt. torri. I, x. 222 and 224.
Translated into German.

Raymund, by divine mercy of the Holy Roman Church and of St. Maria Nova Cardinal Priest of Gurk, to all Germany, Denmark, 1) Sweden, Norway, Friesland, Prussia, and all and each of the same countries and cities, regions and places, even those subject to and bordering on the Holy Roman Empire in Germany itself, of the Apostolic See Legatus de Latere, in perpetual remembrance of the cause 2c. Just as the accepted office of our and the Holy See's Legation always reminds us: so we take care of the salvation of all believers in Christ willingly and gladly. And that what has therefore been done may remain the more firm, the more it is confirmed by the power of the Holy Apostolic See: so we confirm it by the power of our office, and, to promote the divine service the more, awaken the faithful of Christ themselves by spiritual gifts to greater devotion, as we, by the impulse of the Lord, deem it wholesome and serviceable to be. Now, the petition presented to us by our beloved brother in Christ, John Capel, of the Minorite Order, named by the Observance, of the Divine Right Professoris, contains that Because, having some holy relics of St. Anne, the most glorious mother of the Virgin Mary, and Mary Jacobi and Salome daughters, likewise of Mary Magdalene, and the holy virgins and martyrs Cecilia, Agatha, Agnes, Barbara, Ursula, Constantia, the sister of her bridegroom, and Apollonia, and the holy martyrs, Sebastians, Blasii, and the confessors, bishops, Nicolai at Mire, Huberts at Liège, Sulpitii at Burges, Germani at Auxerre, and Eligii at Noviomum; by the most venerable in Christ Father John, bishop of Liège, granting and permitting, out of special favor from various places of the said city and district, and communicated to the College of the excellent University of Paris and certain other places, for the awakening of the devotion of the faithful: It would increase daily the devotion of the Christian faithful, which everything has been done to increase, and would immensely promote the divine service, by which the honor of the name of Jesus would be elevated, if we, as was enclosed in the petition, confirmed the withdrawal and the approval of the matter with the letters of the most venerable in Christ John of Horrues, bishop of Liège, with the authority of our legation, with the granting of his own indulgence; he, the said brother John, humbly requested us to assist him in all the above-mentioned matters: We, who recognize the said letters and the seal attached thereto, and who in the said Parisian Studii Collegio, which is called Navarre, have learned the Holy Scriptures, which we teach, the first reasons and letters, for the increase of all the devotion of the faithful of Christ, and out of gratitude to the persons attached to the said Studii and Collegio, out of the obligatory duty of our legation, have wholeheartedly promoted all this. And accordingly, by virtue of our said Legation, which we hereby administer, we affirm, confirm, and approve the foregoing letters, and what is contained therein, and all that follows therefrom, in so far as it pertains to such letters, by this present writing and the perpetual validity thereof, in such a manner that any and all defects of right or deed are as good as superseded. And want that, if some by trickery or deceit oppose, nevertheless one has to pay attention to the care and effort of the aforementioned brother Johann Capel to promote the devotion of the faithful, and that consequently his reasonable request is to be given room. And that furthermore the said and all other holy places, to which some of the reported relics, for the increase of the Christian faithful in their devotion, are duly brought and kept therein, are visited with due honor and diligently venerated by all the Christian faithful, and duly preserved and protected in their buildings and services, also well provided and supplied with books, chalices, lights and all church ornaments necessary for worship, and the divine service therein increased. So that the believers in Christ themselves may come to the said places of worship all the more willingly for the sake of devotion.

1) "Denmark" put by us instead of: "Dacien" in the old edition, because we assume that vaolia was read from vania. Likewise in the following documents. Once, Col. 229 of the old edition, even Walch has added to "Dacien" as explanatory word: "(Dännemark)". Nevertheless, it is said ibid. Col. 238 that the king of "Dacien" wars with Lübeck.

2) In the old edition: "only" instead of now.

and for their renewal, preservation, protection and support, or whatever else has been thought of, the more quickly they offer their helping hand, the more they feel the rich heavenly gift of grace there: so we, who are inclined to the said brother John, who is beloved to us in Christ, herewith want all and every believer in Christ, who do true penance and confession, and visit the very same holy places and churches on each of the four most distinguished feasts of the year, likewise the holy Virgin Mary, and St. Anne, her mother, and Francisci, and other aforementioned saints' days, from the first to the last vespers. Anna, their mother, and Francisci, and other aforesaid saints' days, from the first to the second vespers, and who lend a helping hand to the same or to some of the same, for all days and times on which and as often as they do the aforesaid or something of the same, have graciously remitted 100 days of the penances imposed on them, that it may remain from now on always for future times. In witness whereof we have executed this letter and affixed our seal thereto. Given Erford, in the district of Mainz, Anno Christi 1502, Nov. 3, of the Papacy of our most Holy Father in Christ, Lord Alexandri, by the divine providence of Pabst VI in the 11th year.

The other diploma reads like this:

Raymund, by divine providence of the Holy Roman Church of the title of St. Maria Nova Cardinal Priest of Gurk, to all Germany, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Friesland, Prussia, and all other their lands, cities, regions, and also the places subject to the Holy Roman Empire in Germany itself and adjacent to them, of the Apostolic See Legatus de Latere, to all and everyone who will see this letter, constant salvation in the Lord! We hereby announce and testify that we have received from the Vicar of the Monastery of St. Anastasii at Three Wells, outside the walls of the city of Rome (who, instead of the most reverend in GOD Father and Lord, Mr. Raphael, by divine providence, has named St. Georgii to the Golden Fleece of the Holy Roman Church Cardinaldiaconi, and permanent appointed Commendatarii of the same monastery) by virtue of an apostolic breve of our most holy Lord Pope, which allows us to accept all relics in and out of the city, and so has been conferred upon us; and still further below some of the holy 10,000 martyrs, hidden in the so-called Celestial Ladder Chapel, which is next to and near said monastery.

Relics, which the same vicarius gave us charitably and free of charge, humbly and with due reverence (in the presence of the venerable fathers, Mr. Rupert, bishop of Trecor, Marcelli de Clodiis, canon of St. Laurentii in Damaso in the city, and Sebastiani de Bonis, and many credible persons who were there at that time). Laurentii in Damaso in the city, and Sebastiani de Bonis, the apostolic see protonotaries, and many other credible persons who were there at that time; also some relics of the 11,000 virgins, which we received from the monastery of the 11,000 Cologne virgins, since we were present in person, in the month of April of the present A. D. 1502. year, with the consent of the abbess and the convent of the same monastery) by virtue of the same breve. Of which relics (both of the 10,000 martyrs and of the 11,000 virgins) we have given a part or a small piece to Brother John Capel, beloved to us in Christ, public teacher of the Holy Scriptures, of the Minorite Order of the Observance, who was in Provence; that he would like to present it to the excellent one beloved in Christ, Grand Master, Provisor and Magistris of the Burgariorum in the arts and basics of grammar, to the students and chaplains of the world-famous Royal Navarrese College of the noble University of Paris, where we otherwise stayed as a bursar and were not as diligent in the holy teachings of God; Therefore, he should accept the said relics on our behalf, and place them in the chapel of the same world-famous college, for God's and the said holy ten thousand martyrs and eleven thousand virgins' honor and veneration, and for the Christian faithful's devotion, to be kept there always and respectfully, with due shyness and reverence. For we, so that henceforth all believers in Christ of both sexes, who do true repentance and confession, may come together in said chapel all the more devoutly in God's honor and veneration of said holy relics, the more they see that they are attaining salvation for their souls, hereby wish, trusting in the almighty God's grace and the holy power of His apostles, Peter and Paul, all and every believer of both sexes, so do right penance and confession, and the chapel of said Collegii on the day when the aforementioned holy relics will be delivered by the very same brother Johann Capel, said Grand Master, Provisor, Bursario and Chaplains of said Collegii, and when the very same relics will be reopened and placed (or placed) by them again in said chapel with honor.

The saints, Louis and others, shall also devoutly attend three days or feasts to be appointed by the same magistrates, provisors, bursars and chaplains, from the first to the second vespers included, and for all the said days, when they shall do so, they shall graciously remit 100 days of the penances imposed upon them in the Lord, that it may henceforth always remain so in the future.

But the content of the above-mentioned breve is as follows:

Alexander Pabst, the VI.

Beloved Son, greetings and apostolic blessings! We gladly comply with your sincere request, in which especially the relics of the saints are honored, and, as much as we are able with God, we gladly accept them in grace. Since we have appointed you as a legate de latere nostro (from our side) to Germany and other countries bordering it, and are willingly inclined to everything by which you can show mercy to the believers in Christ, as well as to the churches and holy places: Then we give you that you accept all of the holy relics, which are in and out of the city somewhere, from those, who want to give you something mildly of it, joyfully and lead on to all places, and to the churches and other holy places, or also princes and other Christ-believers of both sexes, who you will recognize as devout and ready for the same preservation, freely and without hindrance, so that no prohibition (whether it has already happened in ban and in provincial and synodal conciliation, also apostolic, against it), nor any statute and ordinance, or what can otherwise be contrary to it, hinder you, thereby from apostolic power complete power. Given in Rome at St. Peter's under the Fisherman's Ring, October 27, 1500, in the 9th year of our Papacy.

To our beloved son Raymund, of the title of St. Mary Novice, Cardinal Priest of Gurk, our and the Apostolic See's Legate.

In witness whereof we have caused the present letters to be executed and confirmed with the affixing of our seal. Given Erfurt, of the Mainz district, Anno der Menschwerdung Christi 1502 den 5. Novembris, des Pabstthums unseres aller horigsten in Christo Vaters und Herrn Alexandri, durch divine Vorsehung gemeldten Pabst, im 11. Jahr.

35. a letter from the Cardinal of Gurk to the Mayor of Leipzig, Wolfgang Peilike, the Letter of indulgence issued January 10, 1502.

From the "innocent news," 1706, p. 299.

Translated into German.

Raymundus, by the divine mercy of the Holy Roman Church sanctae Mariae novae Cardinalpresbyter, Bishop of Gurk, of the Holy Apostolic See Protonotarius and of our most holy Lord Pabst Referendarius domesticus, to Germany and all and each of its provinces, cities, lands and lands in Germany, which belong to the Holy Roman Empire, and the Churfürsten, Herzogen, Fürsten, Count and Baron, wherever they may be, as well as to the Danish, Swedish, Norwegian, Livonian, Prussian and Russian kingdoms, islands, provinces and other surrounding dominions, countries and lands, Oerter, Legatus de Latere, Apostolic Orator, Nuncius and Commissarius, to all and everyone who will read or hear of this letter, salvation in the Lord and Savior! We declare and know that the Most Holy Father in Christ and our Lord, Mr. Alexander, present Pope, has granted to all and every believer in Christ of both sexes manifold indulgences, pardons and benefits, which should be offered either by us or by our commissaries, also in such cases which the Apostolic See has reserved for itself either in general or especially, and which concern the hour of death, so that we may give them the most perfect forgiveness of all our sins, eternal blessedness and the Kingdom of Heaven. Our most holy Lord has also granted grace by His own motion, so that their parents, children and whole family may also be granted such indulgences, pardons and benefits and all spiritual goods. And lest there should be any doubt about the above, our most holy Lord has willed that our present letter be given as much credence as if it had been issued under his leaden bull; not less that the same should in no way be included among all general and special revocations and annulments which might go forth on account of such pardons and benefits. And because the devout and faithful in Christ, Wolfgang Peilike together with his wife, to the service of God, the Catholic religion and

We are also very humbly concerned, out of fear of purgatory and hell, that we may grant them and their family grace so that they may not burn and suffer torment in limbo for a long time: We hereby grant, give and bestow upon them and their entire family, by virtue of the apostolic power vested in us, that they may enjoy and enjoy the said pardons, indulgences and benefits. To certify this, we have executed this letter and have affixed our seal to it. Given in Leipzig, in the year of the Lord 1502, the 10th of January, of the papal dignity of our most holy in Christ Father and Lord, Mr. Pabst Alexandri, by divine providence of the sixth, in the eleventh year.

The letter of indulgence granted by this Cardinal of Gurk to the Church of the Holy Cross in Dresden. 1502.

From the "innocent news" 1714, p. 909.

Translated into German.,

Raymund, 1) by divine mercy of the Holy Roman and the New Holy Mary Church Priest-Cardinal of Gurk, of the Apostolic See Legatus a Latere to all German The Holy Roman Empire, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Friesland, Prussia, and to all and every province, city, country, and region thereof, even those in Germany itself under the Holy Roman Empire, and bordering on the same, wishes to all and every believer in Christ, to whom the present letter will come to view, constant salvation in the Lord! The miraculous sign of the holy cross, which will be in heaven when the Lord comes to judgment, and by which he who died on the wood will himself save the

The story of the cross that redeems the world, as well as the story of the disciples, remind us that on the sea of this world, when the storm arises, we must take refuge in the sign of the cross. Because the salvation of the world depends on it, we consider this sign worthy of devout contemplation and deepest attention; indeed, we consider ourselves bound to venerate with praiseworthy pardons of sins and to bestow indulgences on those who are adorned with the name of this holy and wondrous cross. We therefore wish that the Holy Cross Church of the city of Dresden, in the Meissen region, be given due honor, be honored by the faithful of Christ at all times, be properly rebuilt together with its buildings, be preserved and protected, as well as be properly provided with books, chalices, candlesticks, and other ornaments necessary for the service, and also that the service be increased in it. And so that the faithful of Christ may the more readily assemble there for the sake of worship, and the more willingly lend a helping hand for its erection, preservation and protection, support and other aforementioned things, so that they may thereby more abundantly enjoy the gift of heavenly grace there: We have been moved in this matter by the request of our fathers (vitricorum) of the said Church, beloved in Christ, trusting in the mercy of Almighty God and in the will of His blessed Apostles Peter and Paul, to give to all truly penitent and confessing believers in Christ of both sexes, who are in the said Church all and every day, namely, the exaltation and invention of the Holy Cross, the conception and proclamation of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and the dedication feast of the same church, have met annually in congregation from the first evening until the next inclusive, and have made a helpful contribution to the aforementioned, for all and each of the aforementioned feast days for one hundred days; Who will devoutly and reverently attend the procession on the sixth holy feast day, when the venerable is carried, for all and each of the aforesaid days, having done so, for 600 days, remit to the Lord the penalties imposed upon them, both now and in all times hereafter continuing. To assure this, we have issued the present letter and affirmed it with the affixing of our seal. Given at Magdeburg in the year of the Incarnation of the Lord 1502, the 8th of February, in the 11th year of the most holy Pope, in Christ the Father, and of our Lord Alexander, by the grace of God the VI.

1) "Raymund" put by us instead of "Johann" in the old edition, because the titles prove that it is the same person as in the previous documents. The name "Johann" will probably have come here from the following confirmation letter of the bishop "Johann von Meißen".

As an aside.

And we John, by the grace of God and the Apostolic See, Bishop of Meissen, have deemed it good to accept this letter with its entire contents, because it does not seem to be suspect or altered in any way, and to consider it valid; we also accept it, approve it, consider it acceptable, and introduce it into our territory and into the place indicated in it. And we nevertheless give to all our truly penitent, confessing and contrite believers, who have shown themselves in accordance with the foregoing, as often as they have done so, out of mercy 40 days' indulgence on account of the penalties imposed upon them, both now and in the time to come. Given and done at Stolpen, in the year 1503, the 11th of April, with the seal of our court attached for multiple authentication.

37. two other letters of indulgence from Raymundus, detached from him by Daniel von Buren and Heinrich Grashof. 1502.

From the "innocent news" 1713, p. 1045 and 1716, p. 187.

So the first one is German:

Raymundus, out of divine mercy tituli sanctae Mariae novas of the Holy Roman Church Cardinal Presbyter of Gurk, of the Apostolic See Legatus a latere in all Germany, in Denmark, 1) Sweden, Norway, Friesland, Prussia, also all and every province, city, country, and other countries also subject to the Holy Roman Empire in Germany itself and bordering the same: To all and every one to whom the present letter comes to view, salvation in the Lord! To know and to know that the Most Holy Father in Christ, and our Lord, Mr. Alexander VI, by the Grace of God Pope, has permitted all and every believer in Christ of both sexes, who for the protection of the Orthodox faith against the Turks, as enemies of this faith, lend a helping hand according to our decree, that they may apply for public indulgences, also this and that indulgence, as well as graces and benefits, which the faithful of Christ themselves may receive by attending the churches,

1) In the old edition: "in der Wallachey". Here again, vaiuu will probably be read instead of vaeia, compare Col. 162.

by us or our deputized commissioners, just as if they had visited the main churches of the city at the time of the jubilee year, as the apostolic letters issued about it moreover state, can choose a skilled confessor, be he a secular priest or a religious priest, who, once in their lives, may grant them complete pardon for any and all sins, transgressions, crimes and misdeeds, including those which the apostolic see reserves for itself in general or in particular, with the exception of those contained in the letters which are customarily read on the day of Cena Domini; But of other sins, which this same See has not reserved to itself, it may absolve them during their life, as often as they wish, and at the hour of death, as often as one is in doubt about their death, even if they should then arise again, it may grant complete forgiveness of all their sins. Our most holy Father has also, of his own accord, granted indulgence, so that all and every such believer in Christ, together with their deceased parents and benefactors, who have departed from the world with love, may eternally partake of all petitions, intercessions of the saints, mass, alms, prayers, disciplines and other spiritual goods, which are and may be done in the whole holy contending Church of Christ and all the members thereof. And so that no one may be in doubt about the above, our most holy Lord has willed that the present letter be accorded the same faith that would be accorded to it if it were issued under a leaden bull. Not less, that the same should not be included among all and any general and special revocations and annulments which might go out because of such pardons and approvals. 2) And because the devout in Christ would have the same faith as it would have if it had been issued under a bull of lead. And because the devout in Christ, Daniel von Buren, with his wife Beeke, contributed to the same faith good help and defense, according to the will of the pope and our decree, as we prove by the present letter, which we handed to him to testify this, from their fortune; therefore we, from the apostolic power granted to us, allow and grant him by the present that he may and can use and enjoy reported pardons and indulgences. Given under our seal prescribed for this purpose, on the Saturday of the month of June, the 25th, in the year of our Lord 1502.

2) "Not" inserted by us. Compare Col. 161.

Formula of absolution to be used in life as often as necessary.

He has mercy on you 2c. May our Lord Jesus Christ absolve you through the merit of his suffering. By virtue thereof, and of my apostolic authority committed unto me, and well communicated unto thee, I absolve thee from all thy sins, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen.

Form of absolution and total remission, once in life and at the hour of death.

He has mercy on you 2c. Our Lord Jesus Christ absolve you through the merit of his suffering; and I, by virtue of this, and the apostolic authority given to me in this piece and communicated to you, absolve you, first, from all banishment, great or small, if you are under it. Then from all your sins, which you repent of, confess, and of which you no longer remember, granting you complete forgiveness of all your sins, remitting to you the penalties of purgatory, as far as the keys of the Holy Mother, the Church, extend. In the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit. Amen.

The other one to Heinrich Grashof and his wife Margaretha, dated 8 Mart, 1502, agrees in everything with the previous one.

38 A letter of freedom for Duke George's court chaplain, from the same. 1502.

From the "innocent news" 1713, p. 368.

Translated into German.

Raymundus, by the mercy of God of the Holy Roman Church, title of Sanctae Mariae novae Cardinalpresbpter of Gurk, Legatus a latere of the Apostolic See in the whole of Germany, through Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Friesland, Prussia, also all and each of the same provinces, cities, countries and lands, also those which are subject to and border the Holy Roman Empire in Germany itself: To Balthasari Thomel, beloved of us in Christ, presbytero Capellano of the Highborn Prince George, Duke of Saxony, Capellan of the Meissen Diocese, salvation in the Lord! The sincere devotion which we owe to the Roman Church

If you consider us good witnesses, we are not unworthy to be at your beck and call. Therefore, because we are inclined to your most humble request, it may happen that you may choose a skilled priest, be he a secular priest or a religious priest, as your confessor, who, during your life, in the cases which the papal see reserves for itself, with the exception of those contained in the bull coenae domini, will give you complete confession only once in your life and at the hour of death, but in other cases, which this same See does not reserve to itself, as often as it may be necessary, after diligently hearing confession, to grant you due absolution for what you have committed and for your crimes, and to impose upon you a salutary penitence, and all your vows, the vow across the sea, likewise to the churches of the blessed apostles Peter and Paul in Rome, and to St. James in Compostell. Jacob to Compostell, as well as to transform the vow of chastity and the monastic vow into other good works. And that you are allowed to keep a altar with due reverence and honor, on which you can say mass and other divine services in your and your trusted companions' presence, or have them said, in places that are suitable for this action and where it is honorable, but without prejudice to a foreign right, and if the nature of the business requires it according to the occasion. In addition, by virtue of the legation which we have brought upon us in this matter, we grant you, by virtue of this letter, a special dispensation that during Lent and other times in which dairy foods are forbidden, you may help yourself to butter, cheese, and other dairy foods, and eat the same, without causing yourself any scruple of conscience, together with your trusted household members and those who are present at your table to dine. To certify this, we have ordered the present letter to be executed and affirmed with our seal. Given at Magdeburg, in the year of the Incarnation of the Lord 1502, February 8, in the eleventh year of the Pontificate of the Most Holy Father and Lord in Christ, our Lord Alexandri, by the Grace of God Pope.

39. of the most reverend in GOD Father and Lord, Lord Raymundi, of the Holy Roman Church of the title of S. Mariae novae Priest, Cardinal of Gurk and Legate 2c. Orders and Pa-

The first part of the book is a series of documents that have been distributed and made known to the poor and other believers in Christ who want to earn the Most Holy Jubilee. 1502.

From Kapp's "Nachlese nützlicher Reformationurkunden," Theil IV, p. 372. This writing is printed at Erfurt in 1502 under the title: Reverend, in Oüristo putris et dolnini, domini Ruvmuridi etc., nmndutu et deelurutiones, in tuvorein xuuperuni uliorum^ue Oüristi üdelium, saeratissilnulu jubileum xronereri volentium, novissime editue et deelurutue.

Translated into German.

Raymundus, by the grace of God of the Holy Roman Church, of the title of S. Mariae novae Cardinal of Gurk, to all Germany, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Friesland, Prussia, and all the countries, cities and towns subject to the Holy Roman Empire in Germany itself and bordering thereon, delegate legate a latere of the Apostolic See, to all and everyone who will read the present letter, everlasting salvation in the Lord! We hereby announce that the Most Holy in God the Father and our Lord, Mr. Alexander, by Divine Providence Pope, the VI, before Anno 1500, in the beginning of the month of September, as soon as their holiness and the holy college heard, not without tears and heartfelt pain, that Modon, 1) Coronna and many large and small cities of the Christians were conquered by the arch-enemies of the Christian religion, and miserably executed and destroyed, many thousands of men murdered, the women tempted with fornication or killed, or with nursing children, maids and virgins, unfortunately genothzüchtigt, captive led away, and that therefore, if not soon help would happen, to fear that not the perjured and shameful mad dogs, the Turks, sworn and cruel enemies of the Christian name and of our holy right faith (if they saw that the Catholic kings, princes and potentates were divided among themselves, seeking only their own self-interest, but the common good of our faith and of all Christendom), their own honor and duty to God and said our faith, out of forgetfulness of their high dignity, for nothing), finally inflicted more and incurable harm on Christians, as they have already done in previous years to various countries and places in Germany, Hungary, Poland, Croatia and other neighboring places.

The people of the Holy Roman Empire have not refrained from inflicting, have not refrained from inflicting in the present year, and unfortunately! still do not fail to inflict daily, to the greatest insult of the Divine Majesty and Her Holiness, and of the Holy Apostolic See, of the Emperor, of the entire Empire, and of all Catholic kings and princes and other believers in Christ, disgrace, dishonor, and harm.

And their holiness further considered, since they delegated us as their legate to this highly famous German nation, and various other cardinals to other kingdoms and countries, in the month of October, now two years ago:

That at that time the end of the Jubilee proclaimed in the city would be at the door, and that the Christian believers of different nations during the said Jubilee year, both because of the dangerous roads, as well as because of poverty, old age and war unrest, and also for other various reasons, could not easily come to the city of Rome to acquire this holy Jubilee (indulgence), and could not visit the designated churches in person. And their holinesses have nevertheless agreed with God to launch a great campaign against those perjured and shameful Turks (by uniting the princes of Christendom with their holinesses), and not to expect their invasion, but rather to hinder and advance such invasion with all their might, without sparing temporal goods or the Church, yes, not even their person, and to risk their blood with the above-mentioned princes, if necessity requires it, as their Holiness has solemnly pledged to God in the Consistorio, in our presence; and thereby also to win over the souls of the believers in Christ, who for the above-mentioned reasons do not deserve the announced Jubilee or cannot come to the city, to God, which is the most noble cause of the granting and announcement of the announced Jubilee.

Therefore, with the advice and consent of the most reverend of our lords, the Holy Roman Church Cardinals, you have decreed us a legate a latere to the whole of Germany, Denmark, Norway, and other aforementioned countries, first of all to make peace, if possible, among all princes as well as all other persons belonging to our legation who disagree among themselves; then also to proclaim or cause to be proclaimed the aforesaid most holy indulgence, together with other pardons and liberties of the Jubilee and the Jubilee itself. Likewise, the Roman and Danish kings, the highborn lords, princes and other sovereigns, and all the people of the empire.

1) In the old edition: Modra. - "Coronna" is Koron.

and other countries in our charge to take up arms against these same perjured and shameful Turks, enemies of the name of Christ, and to bring the said people to direct and invest some of the fortune given to them by God for the above-mentioned campaign against the reported Turks and for the salvation of their souls, as well as for the defense of the true faith.

Although we have had the most holy jubilee and other pardons and liberties announced in various cities, countries and places of Germany and Denmark, according to the letter and content of the letters given to us about them: Nevertheless, considering that many believers in Christ of both sexes, some because of the harvest of grain, grape harvest and other fruits, have had to do with it; some also because of the remoteness of the cities and places where the indulgences have been posted or proclaimed; partly also because of the plague, which prevails almost everywhere in large cities, where the Jubilee was scheduled (especially on the Rhine and in many other cities of Germany), the Jubilee could not well have acquired and enjoyed; others, however, due to the instigation of the enemy of the human race, may not have asked much to acquire such a Jubilee:

And that also, since the winter is at the door, since because of rough weather, danger and inconvenience of the way, frequent rain and snow, so everything is by the winter, reported Christian believers, who have not been part of the jubilee festival itself, also for the acquisition of the same without great harm to their persons, goods and households, can not well have gone away from their houses and villages in which they live.

And therefore, for the salvation of the souls of the faithful in Christ, and to save them from much trouble, expense and danger, it has seemed much more salutary and better to us that the little that the poor of means might want to spend, if they were to travel for the acquisition of the said jubilee from such villages and towns that are far away from the cities in which the jubilee is or will be, The poor, who have nothing, should not be able to pay for the jubilee, and that the poor, who have nothing, should not be able to pay for the jubilee, and that the poor, who have nothing, should not be able to pay for the jubilee, and that the poor, who have nothing, should not be able to pay for the jubilee, and that the poor, who have nothing, should not be able to pay for the jubilee. And that the poor, who have nothing, are also the more likely to participate in the reported jubilee, with whom one has to bear more pity than with the rich:

We hereby declare and wish that henceforth, due to the suspicion of the plague and obange

We have been moved and urged, in addition to the above-mentioned causes, to have the jubilee festival established in the above manner in small towns and large villages (hamlets), so that all subjects of our Legation may acquire such grace as they would otherwise acquire, if they, after having heard of our will and decree, do not commit any evil against it and prevent themselves. But we have been especially moved and urged, apart from the above-mentioned causes, to establish and have established the Feast of Jubilee in the above manner in small towns and large villages, because we read that Christ (whose deeds are our doctrine), when he was in this world and preached his law, did not so much preach his law in Jerusalem and large towns in Judea, as also in small towns and castles (villages), as Luc. 8, as he went about cities and towns; in which places it is thought that Christ won more of the people than in Jerusalem and large cities, in his measure, and that because of the envy and blasphemy of the chief priests and Pharisees and other rulers of the Jews in Jerusalem and other large cities, who feared that Christ's preaching and deeds and miracles that he did would weaken their prestige; Therefore they misinterpreted all the speeches and deeds of Christ, saying that he cast out devils in Beelzebub, the chief of the devils, according to Jn. 8, and in another place: Do we not say rightly that thou art a Samaritan, and hast the devil? (ib.) As we know that in the same way many things have been said against the pope, us and our commissaries, at the proclamation of the jubilee, to the destruction of the souls of those who spoke such things, and especially in some large cities, by instigating the devil, because they were afraid, because they feared that the proclamation of the Jubilee would cause them harm and damage to their authority and reputation, looking more to their own benefit and purse than to the salvation of souls, and were not afraid to fall under the ban contained in the apostolic bulls by such unjust interpretations, which prevented many from obtaining the Jubilee grace. Yes, which is even worse, some even wanted the Jubilee to end before the proper time, perhaps out of fear that the people (for what cause is not known, except an evil one; since said Jubilee can bring nothing but salvation, and consequently also to those who look more to divine than temporal benefits) might want to do something for the protection of faith and salvation.

give more of its temporal goods than it would have given if it had granted longer.

And because of the lack of proper announcement, and negligence of otherwise good commissioners, who are not experienced enough in this matter (although we think we have appointed only the most worthy prelates, doctors and other honest men), and also because of the fear of the plague and the need of the people, who then do not have much before the harvest of grain, wine and other fruits, many have not been able to obtain the said jubilee in the places where it was laid and ended before the time: We consider the salvation of souls to be of benefit, especially of those who at that time had not yet harvested grain, wine or other fruits, and because they do not want to be counted among the poor out of shame, have now refrained from acquiring the jubilee, hoping that after such a harvest they would be more able to acquire the said jubilee, as they are now without two. So that such would not be deprived of the so great spiritual treasure, which we have worked out for free for the highly famous German nation, which helped us unworthily to the Cardinals dignity, and for all other subjects of our legation, in such a way that no money, which is given or may be obtained for such a jubilee, outside Germany (unless a crusade and real war against these perjured Turks takes place, which we have desired and urged from our youth, and always strive for and still strive for, as God, the highly praised Lord, who knows that we do not lie, is witness to us; in which case the said money will be given and distributed to the brave and sturdy soldiers and other fighters who want to fight for the faith against the most perjurious and shameful Turks, and also, without doubt, more will be given by many godly persons of both spiritual and secular standing of this godly and powerful German nation): Which so high grace of the most holy jubilee, which we, as said, have obtained in vain, and which her holiness, our Lord, has bestowed, as far as is known, has not yet happened to any other people than the Hungarian nation, in view of its constant wars against the faithless Turks and the whole clergy of the highly famous German nation, through us in particular: Since we also had a sacred commission from the pope to distribute tithes throughout Germany, as has been done in all the kingdoms and countries of all Christendom, and since they have been levied and freely enjoyed without any objection; nevertheless, by God's grace, we have been able to

We have succeeded, by letters and messengers, in persuading our most holy Lord that His Holiness would have been satisfied not to write out the tithes in Germany, in view of our representation, by letters and messengers, that the money received from the Jubilee would be quite enough to raise a mighty army against the said cruel Turks; As they would have been, if we had been able to visit all the places of our legation, as we hoped, and would have visited them, if we had not been prevented from doing so by important tragedies, and if those who belong to the clergy as well as to the world had not wanted to support us in the proclamation of the holy jubilee.

So it seems necessary to us (I say) that the jubilee should again be instituted and proclaimed without much ado and ceremonies (except on feast days), even with or without the erection of the cross, at least in large cities, where the said jubilee has been suspended and ended before the end of the harvests and grape harvests against our council, which we mean by this nothing but the glory of God and the Holy See, and the salvation of souls, and the campaign against the bloodhounds, the Turks. For to such and no other end we have been sent by our most holy Lord and the holy college to the famous German nation as a legate, and have accepted such a legation for this purpose, and not for the sake of gain, as will become more and more apparent in the near future.

And since the end of the said jubilee, which we are charged with in the said Germany and other countries of our legation, is approaching, as is known, and we nevertheless wish that the believers in Christ of both sexes under our legation, who have not yet acquired it, or if they have acquired it, have fallen again through human infirmity or incitement of the enemy of the human race and its servants, may acquire and obtain it, and not be deprived of such spiritual treasure of salvation: We hereby declare and command, by virtue of the apostolic authority which we administer in these regions, that henceforth the Jubilee shall be established and proclaimed at the future Advent, or even earlier, without ceremonies (except on feast days), also with or without the erection of the cross, at the discretion of our commissaries, at least in the large cities in which the said Jubilee has been suspended before the harvest and grape harvest, as aforesaid. And that this jubilee, to save trouble and expense and for the greater convenience of the Christian people, is to be celebrated in the cities where the harvest and grape harvest have been abolished.

The faithful, by our in Christ beloved commissioners, the of the proclamation costs in said places, half to the archpriests and deans in the countryside, in which district construction of the churches of each place in which the of our legation they are staying, where the indulgences jubilee is proclaimed and the money paid in cash, and the proclaimed before did not take place, are to be same [jubilee] is over, and the third part has also been established and proclaimed, namely in the large and delivered or will be delivered into our commissaries' small towns, also in large villages and parish churches, hands before the jubilee is proclaimed again in said where, as said above, there is a number of about 500 places. Since then, we have not been able to hand over communicants, as such commissaries find it good to do, anything from the funds received in the said places for the and to proclaim such grace and liberty there, and to said construction of the churches for various reasons, appoint other blameless and conscientious people in their especially because for 24 months we have had great stead in their districts and borders, and to execute all that expenses, partly in legation matters, partly in the the apostolic letters entail, hereby giving power until the proclamation of the jubilee, with our commissioners, future feast of the Nativity of our Lord JEsu Christ, messengers and printers; of which funds it is the will of excluded. the pope, emperor and said most considerable council

And lest, at the instigation of the devil and his that account be taken of them as well as of the two other instruments, who with grumbling and blasphemy seek thirds. Therefore, those who seek or complain about the only gladly to hinder the salvation of souls and the work funds of the Jubilee in any other way than stated in the of proclaiming this most holy jubilee, thereby probably Bull, may note that no one can demand or take anything hundreds and hundreds of thousands of souls in from said funds, under penalty of banishment, as Germany, who before were on the way and in danger of contained in the Bull of said Jubilee. However, we are not eternal damnation, should have been brought back on the prevented from giving it away, and from honestly way to blessedness, as the commissars, preachers and rewarding the effort and assistance we have received in confessors know, who had to work at this Jubilee, know, or because of the proclamation of this jubilee. The other so that if the prelates and princes, as zealots for the faith two thirds, however, which will be left in the places where and salvation of the souls of the people entrusted to them, the jubilee has been proclaimed or will be proclaimed, knew and understood what spiritual fruit the indulgence after the end of the said jubilee, which shall last until of the Jubilee created, they would drive much more to it, Christmas, excluded, may be combined with the other and help so that there would be no one in their districts two thirds of the jubilee money, which has already been and dominions who would not acquire the Jubilee grace, received and paid, in the said places where the jubilee where there was some possibility; which may well be, if has ended. In other small places, however, where there these patents of ours are duly announced and posted. are not more than 1000 communicants, and the said

Lest it be said that we have omitted these commands jubilee has not yet been instituted and proclaimed, we are and patents, which are more apostolic than ours, not for satisfied that, after deduction of the costs incurred and the salvation of souls, but for gain (which is remote); still to be incurred in the said places on proclamation of because the Supreme Pontiff, as a most godly and the jubilee from the total sum of the jubilee and benevolent Lord, to whom the care of all the souls of the confession money, half of the third part of all the said both whole world is incumbent as a general shepherd, and we jubilee and confession money shall be applied to the seek nothing but primarily the salvation of souls, but not building of the churches of the reported places; But the remote profit in our legation; to the extent that such other half of the said third part shall be delivered into the blasphemers are not afraid to stone us over the good hands of our commissaries, to defray other great and work and to interpret the good evil, thus falling into the various expenses of our legation. For it is written that wrath and curse of Almighty God:

Christ and the apostles, when they preached the law, took Thus we order and will, and make known by these the necessities of life and had bags. Although the most letters, besides the curses and high penalties contained praised God is our witness, that if we could get what we in the apostolic bulls of this Jubilee, that of the whole third need for the proclamation of the Jubilee from somewhere part assigned to us for many causes, after deducting else, we would not spend a penny for it.

The costs incurred for this purpose, so that it will not be said to us even at the last judgment: Truly, I say to you, you have your reward! as is to be feared that it will be said to those who, in proclaiming this most holy Jubilee, serve primarily for the sake of profit, but not out of zeal for the blessedness of souls and the protection of our pure faith. However, in those places where the Jubilee has not yet been arranged, where there are more than 1000 communicants, the third part, both of the Jubilee and of the confessional fees, shall be taken for the expenses incurred here and there, as it has been taken in other places, according to the settlement made between the kingdom and us. In the larger places, however, we want the third part to be levied as well, after deduction of the costs, in the same way as above in the places where the Jubilee is now being proclaimed. As it is now proclaimed in the cities of Cologne, Liège, Maastricht (Trajectum), Münster and Speyer, also in this great city of Erfurt and many other places where it is to last until Christmas. As we then wish and command that it last until this time, for the salvation of souls, so that everyone may better prepare himself for the acceptance of God's grace and celebrate the aforementioned Christmas as befits, and St. Ambrose exhorts in a sermon on Advent, where he says;

We exhort you to do more almsgiving these days, to come to church more diligently, and to make confession of your sins in the purest manner, so that when the day of Christmas comes, you may celebrate it wholesomely. And the same thing Ambrose says in one of his sermons on Advent: "So then we must be pure in holiness, clean in discipline, and right in respectability, so that when we see the approach of the feast day, we may walk all the more properly. For if the women, when they celebrate any feast, are wont to wash out their garments, why should we not rather, when we want to celebrate the birthday of the Lord, wash out the stains of our souls with tears? Therefore, dear brethren, since Christmas is at hand, let us cleanse our consciences of all uncleanness, and cleanse ourselves not with costly garments, but with works. For fine garments may cover the limbs, but they do not adorn the conscience; though it is a greater shame to walk clean in the limbs, yet to walk stained in the senses. Therefore let us first remember the adornment of the inner man, that the outward garment may then also be in order; wash away the spiritual stains, that then the earthly clothes look beautiful. But it is of no use to be resplendent with clothes if one stinks of vices; for where the conscience is dark, the whole body is dark. And especially because it is to be feared that such a spiritual treasure, which is given to all believers in Christ throughout, will not be found in people's lives, especially in those who still exist, when the year of jubilee is over in the city, as it is wont to be, and not elsewhere: It is believed that there will be little or no one, at least of those who come to their years, since human nature is capable of reason and wrong, who will not need this so great treasure or most holy Jubilee, and the liberties contained in its bull, namely 1. either of the quite complete forgiveness of the sins which they have committed, and about which the Christian faithful have been absolved by their prelates and pastors, who have indeed power to absolve from such cases as are due to them by right, but not from those which are reserved to the Holy See, nor have a quite complete thorough (plenariam) power to forgive sin, which God alone has conferred and reserved to the pope, or to the cardinals deputed by their holiness, who are legati a latere; or there have 2. also reported believers in Christ on the said jubilee, at least some of them, need dispensations from all kinds of irregularities, disgraces, stains or crimes, which are reserved to the apostolic see, and change of all kinds of vows, although great ones, over which dispensations and other reported things the pope alone, or those delegated by their holiness, has power; As the same power to dispense and change, and to do all things aforesaid, is given to us first, and afterwards also to the commissaries lawfully appointed or to be appointed by us or ours, and to all confessors, by virtue of the Jubilee.

It is also to be noted that, in order to acquire the same freedoms and plenary indulgences, there are few among our legation who would have gone to the city of Rome; either the danger of the way, or poverty, or old age, and many other obstacles kept them away. Therefore, blessed are those who, with heartfelt repentance, have sent or will send themselves in the future to acquire such indulgences, liberties and pardons. And blessed are those who, being hardened and having forgotten their salvation, do not want to acquire said indulgences and liberties, and who wish that after their death they may not be told that they are not to be pardoned.

I will tell you what was said to the rich man as he lay in torment.

In view of this, and in order to show that these patents of ours, or rather of the apostles, are primarily for nothing other than the salvation of the rich and poor, and not for profit: We declare by the present that those who have hitherto obtained indulgences and jubilee pardons, and have brought in the taxation ordered by us and by the Holy Roman Empire, to the box of others where the jubilee feast is situated, or will still bring in during the said jubilee feast, if they have fallen again from human weakness or otherwise, or should fall in the future; That (I say) such may and shall receive anew full pardon and other liberties contained in the bull of said jubilee (that also the confessional shall be omitted, if they have not had it), without giving a new appraisalment thereof; if only, in virtue of the jubilee, they shall confess anew in the places where said jubilee shall be appointed, and visit the churches or altars ordained or to be ordained for that purpose, and perform the penances imposed by their confessors. And this is primarily for the benefit of the poor; for the rich, and those who have an abundance of money, we do not want to close our hands when they want to pay new money for the purchase of new debts and sins, but rather we praise their good conscience and their prudent spending in the goods given to them by God; whether, when these fall again and want to purchase the jubilee anew, we could cheaply impose new taxes on them. However, it is not our opinion that they should give anything but what they voluntarily want to pay and give to the treasury, since all other freedoms for the poor, which we have already announced long ago, remain in their force and validity.

And because, as we have heard, there are some among our legation who have unknowingly married in the fourth degree equally, or in the third and fourth degrees unequally, and yet, according to the bull and our patents, have acquired the jubilee for the benefit of those poor, and others will still acquire it; and because of the guilt charged upon them by marriage in such forbidden degrees, have now obtained, and others will still obtain, by virtue of such jubilee grace, that they may be absolved in the divine court, but on account of poverty have not yet been able to obtain the letters of freedom in the temporal court, nor can they now do so: We, therefore, for the sake of the poverty and salvation of those who have so ignorantly married and obtained such a jubilee, do hereby or in the future would like to acquire others, to advise and help; As their Holiness also desires such things more than we, hereby have commanded and commanded all our Commissaries and Sub-Commissaries, whom we have ordered and placed throughout all Germany, by virtue of this, that they shall give all and every name and surname of such poor persons, who before the date of the present of our letters, have married in the fourth equal, or in the third and fourth unequal degrees of blood friendship or affinity, unknowingly, or in the third and fourth unequal degrees of blood friendship or affinity unknowingly married, and yet have acquired the jubilee as stated above, and thus have allowed themselves to be absolved in the divine court (or their consciences), although an obviously recognizable obstacle would be if they are only real poor; that they send them (I say) at our expense from those of whom they can have knowledge; to whom we then promise to make out their dispensations for God's sake free of charge, and to send them back again at our expense, so that we may also enjoy the messenger to us out of our purse. As we then forbid our commissaries and sub-commissaries, under penalty of excommunication and deprivation of their benefits and salaries, to which those who act contrary thereto shall by deed be liable, without being able to be released therefrom other than by us or the Roman Pontiff, in the strongest possible terms, that in the above-mentioned case they shall be deprived of the said poor, who have married in this way, neither to solicit, demand, extort, or take the slightest thing, either outright or covertly, under any pretense whatsoever, from the said poor, who have married in this way, for the message (or report) to be sent to us, or otherwise, or that anyone should dare to do anything contrary to this, whatever he may pretend to do against it. But that also said poor, who have need of such dispensations in the temporal or external court because of marriage in the third and fourth forbidden degrees, shall pay something of an ecclesiastical tax for the preservation of such dispensations in the external court: We will and order that for every dispensation to be obtained as aforesaid, every subject of the realm and pauper who has need of the same shall be required to pray a prayer to God to be expressly ordered by our commissaries and sub-commissaries, or even the pauper confessors, for the happy prosperity of the Supreme Pontiff and the Holy Roman Church, the Emperor, all princes and prelates, all nobles, and for good harmony of the whole people of the Empire, that God may incline the heart of said Pope, Emperor, said princes, prelates, nobles and the whole people of the Empire to this His move against said perjured Turks. Hereafter

The said poor shall pray, according to the above, that God will grant us the grace to contribute much to the preservation of the harmony of the Emperor, the above-mentioned princes, nobles and the people of the Roman Empire, in order to bravely undertake the aforementioned campaign against the faithless Turks.

And that the said poor may be the more willing to make such prayers to God for the said pope, emperor and other princes and prelates, and the whole German people: so we give them, as often as they do it during our legation, and all other believers in Christ of our legation, 100 days of indulgence for each day.

But because some might doubt whether even our commissioners appointed by us, or further appointed by them, or those yet to be appointed, can or may proclaim such our letters, and all that is and is contained therein, without new commission: We, who wish to dispel such doubts, order and decree, and by virtue of this make known, that all and every commissioner, lower commissioner, and archpriest, dean and governor of the parish churches, or their administrators, who have been appointed by us for the proclamation of the holy Jubilee Indulgence up to now, and who are still to be appointed, are to be sent through the whole of Germany, Denmark and other countries which have been ordered to us, Denmark and other countries commanded by us, can and may make known the above-mentioned our letters and patents, and all that is contained and named therein, and have them proclaimed by others, without any further commission to be granted by us for this purpose, in all and in all parts, as if everything were mentioned word for word in their powers of attorney concerning the said patents. And because it would be difficult to get our present letters to all places, we want and command by aforesaid power that the copies, or also printed copies, with the signature of a public notary, be given complete credence everywhere in all and through all things as if present principal letters had been produced and shown. We also want and command our commissioners and the deputies or those to be deputized by them, and the preachers, to make known and have made known from the pulpit everything contained in the present order.

We also desire that the archpriests and deans in the countryside, and the pastors, vice-pastors, and other preachers of the divine word have a confessional from our commissaries for the proclamation of the said command: which, if they have had such because of the trouble taken for the proclamation of the holy feast of jubilee we want them to have one in turn for one of their friends, whom they may appoint.

Likewise, so that all the faithful of Christ may take the more diligent heed of the promulgation of this mandate of ours, we give 100 days' indulgence to all the aforesaid faithful of Christ of both sexes who shall present themselves at such promulgation of the said mandate, as we also give to those who shall promulgate it. In witness whereof, and for the authentication of the foregoing, we have executed our present letters thereto, and have caused the same to be signed by our public notary public and by the said scribe, and have caused the same to be kept and affirmed with our appended seal. Given and done in the city of Erfurt, Mainzian district, the year after our Savior's birth 1502, in the 5th indiction, Nov. 8, of the papal government of our most holy Father and Lord in Christ, Lord Alexander, by the divine providence of Pabst VI, in the 11th year. In the presence of the venerable men, Messrs. Dionysii Jacobi and Conradi Udenbecks, clergymen of the districts of Besanyon and Cologne, our chamberlains, who have been specially called and required as witnesses thereto.

40 The instructions issued by Pope Alexander VI to Raymund Peraldus, together with the new instructions issued by the legate to Count Hermann von Kirchberg and others, as well as a letter from this legate dated Strasbourg, Aug. 30, 1502, concerning the popular uproar over the jubilee money demanded by Emperor Maximilian.

This document is located at the writing described in the previous number.

Translated into German.

To our beloved son Raymundo, of the title of St. Mary the Novice Priest-Cardinal of Gurk, our legate delegated to all Germany, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Friesland, Prussia, and all of their countries, cities, towns, and villages, including those subject to and bordering on the Holy Roman Empire. Since the godless Turks, as is known and obvious to all, are becoming more and more powerful with great and obvious danger to the whole of Christendom, we consider that, as we have done so far, it is necessary to take measures against them in times to come and to persuade the Catholic princes to do so, that they provide help, so that repentance does not come too late, and what was first neglected can no longer be recovered. And because we know that your prudence is very capable in prudence and experience, and is devoted to the preservation of the Catholic faith, and testifies to great zeal for this campaign; to this end it is also very well known to our son Maximilian, beloved in Christ, the most illustrious Roman king, and the princes of the empire, as well as the king in Denmark and the entire German nation: We have chosen your person, as being very suitable and useful for this trade, whom we would like to send as a legate and angel of peace to his royal majesty, the princes of the Holy Roman Empire, and to our King in Denmark, beloved in Christ, and other princes of the same nation and neighboring countries; in the hope that your prudent trade will bring peace and tranquility to all Christians, promote the faith, and bring great benefit to your own praise. Will you therefore, with the help of God, go to her Imperial Serene Highness herself, and bring her greetings and apostolic blessings on our behalf.

Secondly, you will diligently recite how, right from the beginning of our election to the apostolic dignity, our thoughts were always primarily directed toward protecting Christendom, as much as we could, from the terrible rage of the Turks, which is why, before two more years had passed, we often sent letters and messengers, and finally, for this reason, exhorted Her Majesty and other Christian princes to send their envoys to us with proper instructions. However, we have not yet succeeded in doing so, because of the divided Christian minds and cold-hearted laziness, which also caused our sins. Therefore, the cruel Turkish tyrant, thirsting for the blood of Christians, has become more courageous due to the Christians' negligence and quarrels, and since he, unfortunately! and recently on the shore in Morea he has conquered and razed two other Venetian cities, Modon and Coronna, which are very convenient for warfare, and has inflicted terrible defeats; he continues to set himself up against the Christians and rages and rages everywhere on the same shores, sparing neither sex, age nor rank, desecrating and defiling holy places, and through the victory becomes more and more defiant and threatens to penetrate deeper into Italy. If now his fury is not controlled, we will soon see that he besieges Italy, yes, invades it, with the utmost Devastation and damage, God forbid! of the whole Christendom. And since in these matters you will not fail to do the least, you will admonish Her Majesty that she, as the supreme patron of the Catholic faith, and on whom everyone looks, and after whose example others seem to be guided, should take up this common cause for the benefit of Her Imperial Majesty, and show what zeal for God and the Christian religion and the pure faith resides in their Catholic and godly minds; Just as we have often seen from the same letters, in which he [the Emperor] has always declared himself willing, that it is easy for him to induce others to help him in time, if he himself first does so with his help. And in truth, her Majesty can acquire greater glory with nothing than in this now highly pressed matter of faith/ and with such great and near danger, which her Majesty, if she thinks about it rightly, can herself encounter, especially because of some sovereigns who are very close to these insolent and powerful enemies. Her Serene Highness should also know that we are anxious with all our might for this salutary and necessary move, and will not omit anything that is possible; for this reason we have also sent other legals to other Christian princes, whom we hope will be willing to do anything. And we shall never fail to join with our most venerable brethren, the Holy Roman Church Cardinals, with all the spiritual and temporal aid of the Apostolic See, but shall even go along with the same Cardinals in person, as we shall say below, if their Majesty but freshly attacks the cause. From this she will certainly bear an immortal praise among men, and an everlasting merit with God, but from us and this See a glorious prize. In order that her highness, together with other princes of Christendom, may the better and more quietly attend to the aforementioned matters, you will report to her that we have especially instructed your prudence, with earnestness, to all, both princes of the Holy Roman Empire and prelates and other princes, barons and lords of the German nation, and all others, especially the most Christian king in France (to whom, as you know, we are willing to send another legate in this and the common matter), that all strife and discord, which may have arisen and may arise among them against each other, be put away and reconciled. Which discord you will most diligently exhort Her Imperial Majesty to settle, that she direct her mind, as much as possible, so that the necessary cause is not thereby hindered.

and for the sake of their own discord, the common cause is left behind. Therefore, we want you to take care of the said Electors and all those to whom your delegation goes in our stead in time, so that, as we have now said, all strife and quarrels, where possible, are completely resolved, or at least put aside and calmed down for a long time. For Her Majesty and the princes themselves know very well how much love and peace among the Christian kings and princes among themselves serve this work of the Christian faith, and how necessary they are, and what harm disunity does, since, as has been said and is known, it has largely increased the power of the Turks and given them courage and encouragement, to the greatest and irreparable harm of Christendom.

As far as the aid in this matter is concerned, then, in addition to what the Christian princes themselves are to contribute and invest, their Majesty and Electors are to hear that we have decreed that tithes, a crusade and a jubilee (year) be established in her Majesty's estates and dominions and throughout Germany, as we have also done throughout the world. They shall also know that all the money received from this, even that which belongs to us and the church, will be used for the said work of faith, and for no other use, completely and undiminished, and will be used by Her Majesty, you and the Electors and Ordinaries (that is, ecclesiastics, (that is, clergymen who reside and always remain in the places) of the Oerter, competent and honest persons shall be chosen, who may keep the same in custody until, according to our and the royal and the electors' own command and will, such shall be used for the said use and the best of the faith. You will certainly assure Her Majesty of this.

But since it is well known to your prudence how eagerly and earnestly we care for such a necessary and salutary campaign against the Turks, so that we think of it day and night, and our thoughts and endeavors are concerned with it, and yet we have so far promoted little with letters and nuncios, even legates, which we have always sent to Christian kings and princes, because of our sins: so we want, in order to at least provoke them with our example to initiate and continue such a campaign, and hereby instruct you to report to the said Emperor and all the Holy Roman Empire's princes, prelates and barons in all of Germany and to assure them that we are of the firm conclusion that with our holy college, not only ours and the

We not only want to use the entire assets of the Church with counsel and action, but also to offer our own person as a sacrifice pleasing to God, and to dare to serve God and His Church with what is left of our lives. In which resolution and conclusion also, as you know, stand our most venerable brothers, the Cardinals of the Holy Roman Church, who are around us; who in our secret consistory, after deliberate, mature council, unanimously decided and promised that they want to go with us in person on a fleet to be equipped for this purpose. Therefore, their Royal Majesty and reported princes, prelates and lords are to be assured by you in my name that we and our brothers, the Cardinals, ourselves will actually accomplish the conclusion, with God, in the way I will now say.

Since we have said that we want to go in person with the Cardinals, even though we are poorly experienced in warfare, since we have followed the sanctuary rather than the camp, we still want you to consult with their Majesty and the Electors about everything we have meant, which will serve the good direction of this business, and which will be very useful and beneficial to us. For since we have considered the enemy's power and great dominion, we consider that this campaign should include three special and strong armies, two on land and one at sea, which should all break into the enemy's lands in one month and, if possible, in one day at the same time. But since the Emperor Maximilian and the German nation do not have as good an opportunity and convenience to equip a fleet as a land power; and since, on the other hand, the most illustrious kings of France and Spain, and the Venetian territory, together with the other Italians, are more able to do so because of the seaports, harbors, and quantity of ships and galleys, as well as the men necessary for this purpose: It seems to us that one army on land should be raised by the King of the Romans and all Germany, which Her Majesty herself would like to lead; but the other army by the kings of Hungary, Bohemia, and Poland, with the Danes ¹⁾ and other believers in the same adjacent regions; but the third by sea by us and the kings of France, Spain, and the Venetian dominion, and other Italian lords, who, in that case and for the causes mentioned, would sooner raise a fleet necessary for this purpose.

1) Instead of "Wallachians," we have used "Danes. Cf. col. 162.

and arm them. To this end, we shall ask the kings of England and Scotland for financial aid, and we shall embark a good army of people on foot and on horseback in our fleet, and attempt to land and attack and damage the Turks. And since we cannot follow the army on land with the said Cardinals, due to age and other difficulties, we will go with the fleet, if only the said Kings of France and Spain, or one of them, as we hope, will come in person.

You will further inform Her Imperial Majesty and the Electors that we have come to this decision by inspiration of the Lord, because of the urgent and supreme need and distress of the Christian religion, which, where it is not encountered in time, seems to be the case for Christendom. Therefore, if we, with the most venerable of our brethren, the Cardinals, venture all our goods and persons ourselves, without regard to any cost, danger of life, or hardship, to attend this holy and necessary procession, we also hope that the Catholic kings and princes will follow our example with God the sooner, and prefer God's cause and their own honor to their other grudges and enmity. Therefore, we are all the more of the opinion that our presence in person is necessary, and hope with God that we will succeed in it, because we see that not only Their Imperial Majesty, but also the kings of France, Spain, Hungary, Bohemia and Poland, as well as other Christian kings, are quite willing, inclined and inflamed by themselves. The Spanish kings have already sent their strong and well-equipped fleet to the aid of the Venetians against the Turks, and it has already united with the Venetian fleet.

Afterwards, your prudence will also seek to find out how many people and men her imperial majesty will have in her German army, which must be strong and brave in view of the enemy power. And it will soon be necessary to inquire what her Majesty will give of hers to the German nation, apart from the money that the tithe, crusade and jubilee will yield, which is otherwise ours and the church's and belongs to us, but if we also want to add to it. For it is certainly due to their imperial office, since they are the highest among all Christian princes, as well as to the princes and nobility of the German people, that they, in addition to the above money, also give from their property

In such urgent need, they must provide abundantly what is necessary for the above-mentioned army, especially since, in addition to the common cause, which all must join, there is also the security of their state and their sovereigns, which, because of their proximity, can be constantly devastated, plagued and endangered by the Turks.

If Her Majesty were to ask: what would we then be willing to do if neither the King of France nor the King of Spain should come in person, as we wish? you will answer that, if none of the said kings should come in person, we would not leave Italy either, but would send with the said fleet a Cardinal Legate who would have the jurisdiction over it. We insist, however, that the said naval power and fleet be equipped by us and the most Christian king and the Venetian dominion and other Italian princes and lords. For if, for the sake of our sins, no general march could be made by all Christian princes, we and Her Majesty, if it pleases her as we wish, and the most Christian, as well as the Hungarian and Bohemian kings and the Venetian dominions, will make the said march against the Turks with a united force.

If her Majesty should further say that it was necessary for the sake of an assembly or imperial diet to be held with us in one place, that everything should be done with common counsel, your prudence can answer: that last year we admonished and requested all Christian princes and potentates to send their envoys to us with full power and instruction, and yet, as her Highness would know, expected them in vain and were unable to accomplish anything with them. Now, however, since the matter has become so urgent that the procession must be hurried, it would be highly dangerous to send it out and wait for the princes to meet at some place and to spend the time in consultation. For before we could agree on the place and the meeting could take place, the Turk could have invaded the Christian lands and interrupt our consultations, especially since her fleet would not go to Constantinople, as was thought, but to the port of Negroponte, in order to attack the coasts of the Adriatic Sea from nearby, if she so desired; In addition, it is preparing another new fleet and armies on land, in order to break into the Christians even more strongly with the approaching spring. Therefore, it is imperative that we do not allow ourselves to be invaded, and that we avoid all delays from the clear the way. Such an imperial assembly, however, would not only be a most urgent matter, but would also require great expense and dispersion of money. The Mantuan meeting, which our ancestor Pius II, of blessed memory, had previously called because of such a move, is funny to us. We have seen that both the apostolic see and other princes have wasted untold money and expense in traveling back and forth without any benefit, and that we have finally parted without having achieved anything. Therefore we say: we must now dispense with all pomp and unnecessary expense, and whatever else would have to be spent on such an Imperial Day, as it could be used much better and more conveniently in this emergency for the aforementioned procession.

But if Her Majesty should ask about the war and the time of the war, you can answer: we are concerned that at least three years, beginning with the whole of the future April, namely the 1501st year, are to be spent on it, and meanwhile the people and all necessities for equipping said three armies, according to the above measure, are to be procured with all seriousness and zeal.

We also want you to act with the same diligence in these matters with all princes in particular, namely with the Electors and other prelates and princes of Germany, and to present to them not only the above-mentioned great need, and our desire and announced resolution to go in person with our brothers, the Cardinals, to this war, as mentioned above, but also to show them our letters written to them, and to try to persuade them seriously, that they do not break away in such distress of the church and Christianity, but apply their reputation and their efforts to the king himself, and where it is otherwise necessary, so that, with restraint of all other intentions, all discord is quenched and peace is established, so that this so necessary campaign is undertaken by the king and the electors and the German nation, in the above manner, unanimously with all their might and without delay, according to our wish. You will also remind them hereafter, and each of them in particular, that because they have been given the excellent privilege of electing the imperial majesty, they are all the more bound before others, and thus, according to the fortune bestowed upon them by the Lord, they will not only steer quickly and abundantly, but also, according to our example, appear in person, and follow the emperor's camp, and always want to assist their majesty, who is fighting for God, with counsel and action. Soon your prudence will affect each of them.

ask what he will contribute from his own income to the costs of the said German land power under the Emperor's leadership? Not only the reported Electors, but also the other prelates and lords must be requested and admonished to pay this tax, each according to his income and dominions. However, you will assure these same Electors, and especially the prelates, of our paternal love and special affection, and you will endeavor to maintain them in constant obedience and reverence for the papal chair.

As far as the foundation of the peace and the undertaking of the campaign are concerned, and our decision to go along in person, and other aforementioned things, you are to act and speak with our son Johanne, King of Denmark 1), beloved in Christ, of whom we have heard that he is now at war against the city of Lübeck: then you will exhort her majesty and ask her to accept peace with this city and all her enemies, according to the breve written to her, and to grant our salutary remembrance, and in this urgent need, putting everything else aside, to think earnestly of this holy procession. You will also do the same with our beloved son, the noble man Alberto, Duke of Saxony, who, as they say, is now waging war in Friesland, to whom we will also write our breve, which you will hand over to him. We hope that their Imperial Majesty and the Electors, and other prelates, princes of Germany, and the King of Denmark, will listen to your exhortations and, if they have considered the matter properly, will persevere in their Catholic mind and innate goodness of virtue; to whom you will promise all the best from us and from this Holy See.

The rest of what is necessary will be added by your prudence, according to the grace bestowed upon it by the Lord.

L. Cardinalis Caputaquensis.

[Instruction of Raymundus for the deputies sent by him to the Imperial Diet.]

The following are the instructions for the things that will be presented to the legate and, where necessary, will be presented in writing to the reverend Lord Hermann, Count of Kieburg.

1) Here, too, instead of "Denmark" in the old edition, it says: "Dacien". This passage seems to give us full proof that we were right to put "Denmark" instead of "Dacia" or "Wallachia" every time in the previous documents.

juris utriusque 1) clootor, UsMiw at the University of Heidelberg; and canon of the collegiate church at Heidelberg, also juris utriusque Doctor, Mr. Wolfgang Bocklin, before the highborn princes, church prince and other princes, also princely envoys, and the venerable in Christ fathers, bishops, and other prelates and nobles, who are at the same respectable Reichstag assembly at Würzburg [Nuremberg?] 2).

First of all, the above-mentioned envoys will present and justify the aforementioned legate as newly authorized before the aforementioned highborn princes and other gentlemen envoys who are from the aforementioned Imperial Diet;

They will also say that said legate has hurried with his journey to come to the announced Diet, against the advice of all physicians and surgeons in Erfurt. They will also say what prevented such a journey to the Imperial Diet, namely his illness in the foot and an ulcer that afflicted him on the left leg, and other many pains that have afflicted said legate since two months, in that he has had many pains internally and externally since he has been legate to Germany. Which hindrances hurt him more than anything he has suffered for two months.

They will also state the most noble reasons why the said legate wished and still wishes to be with the said lords and princes; namely, that he could do something with them for the good of the peace and unity of the whole empire, where possible, as it is necessary and extremely useful, not only for the welfare of the empire, but also for the salvation of all Christendom.

They will also say that the said legate has requested to come to the Diet, that he and the said princes should decide how the money received so far from the Jubilee and confessionals should be paid and kept according to the order and agreement reached at Nuremberg between the noble Imperial Assembly and him, the legate, or in other best ways as may be deemed good: That the legate is by no means meant, for the sake of someone's favor, love or fear of a living person, to deviate from the word given to the above-mentioned most noble imperial council; that the realm see that the legate desires nothing else from the same funds than what apostles are to have in the preaching of the law, namely the necessary subsistence.

They will soon also report the reasons why the empire would have to send its envoys and commissioners to pay the money of the jubilee and to reimburse the costs; of which also the printed article is to be looked up, in which the reasons are stated why said envoy did not hurry, as he should have, to have such money paid and to claim his third part. And they will also say what said legate's actual opinion of the reported third part is.

They will also say: what said legatees think, how to keep such funds.

Similarly, why the jubilee will not cost the tenth part of what it should otherwise cost, and what it cost under Innocentio.

The illustrious princes will also appoint some to hear the accounts of the envoy and his commissioners at the place to be appointed by the said lords, who have so far collected the funds of the third part in some districts, namely Cologne and Trier, since the said envoy or his commissioners have otherwise collected nothing or little in other districts.

Likewise, what way is to be observed, so that one obtains a right certainty of all monies received or to be received, namely that the expenditures of the third part are given to the commissioners deputized from the side of the empire, honest people, who do not seek their own; who then, together with the deputies appointed by the legate, and those to be deputized by all the archbishops in Germany, shall appoint all the commissioners appointed by the legate, and also those who have had offices of confession, to the episcopal sees and seats, so that they may come and account for all the monies received or to be received; with two certified instruments or writs, one to be sent to the Supreme Pontiff, as he wills and has commanded; the other to be presented to the Empire at any Imperial Assembly before the Legate departs again from Germany.

It is also to be ordered to all dioceses by apostolic and imperial power that they inquire in their districts, through their deans in the country and archpriests, in which and how many places of their districts the jubilee has been proclaimed, and how many confession slips have been distributed; for otherwise the accounts of the legate's commissaries will not be accepted. And the legate himself wants it this way, in his honor with the supreme pope and holy college, and for the discharge of said commissaries, and that the people, who have given their money

1) Thus, we have resolved "I. V." here and immediately following.

2) Nuremberg," it says in the "heavenly treasure trove," below, Col. 209.

The people, who have controlled the money only for their happiness and for the protection of the faith, see that the Supreme Pontiff, the Emperor, the Legate and the Empire do not seek anything else than that such money be kept and used for the purpose for which the said people have controlled it.

Also, in the name of the pope and ours, said our envoys will ask the aforementioned high-born princes that the pope and us be given an answer about the affairs of the holy crusade, with petition and objection before notary and witnesses, that if by delaying an emphatic conclusion to be taken by the empire for the protection of the faith and for the march against the faithless Turks (for which we have come to Germany, especially regardless of our age, If, God forbid, some harm should befall Christendom from the faithless Turks, such harm should not be attributed to the Supreme Pontiff, the Holy College and us, but to those who are entitled to take up arms against said faithless Turks.

Copia of the Sand letter, so the Highest in God Father and Lord Lord niuncnks, Roman Legate 2c. some steles written, to excuse the Roman Royal. Majesty, that the Jubilee money, which fell in his Majesty's country, was not begged for by the said legate, then in order to help the King of Hungary against the Turks, from what men may have stowed away, his Royal Majesty may not have begged or understood anything of a natural nature.

Our greetings and all good wishes for the careful and wise practice of long and daily summons and requirements. As the King's Majesty has sent us for six months, to all and sundry where we have been called, and beforehand that such a call has been made, of all the afflictions that affect our holy Christian faith, and of a common sin, we have been moved to seek his King's Majesty's help. Majesty, and thus, as well as with much pain, we are suffering from the podagra, coming from Cologne up to His Royal Majesty in Vienna, Aldo His Royal Majesty. Majesty. has spoken and acted with us in all manner of matters concerning the deficiencies and shortcomings of the Christian faith and the common faith, and has held us accountable to others for our grave concerns and needs, the whole of Christendom is in, and before that the German nation, because of the remarkable and careful armament, which the Turkish tyrant and the rabble are daily preparing for the destruction of the common German nation, to which he is leading through Craben [Carniola?]

The king's majesty's will may even have a wrestling entrance in other countries, so that in the same places they will have to wait hourly and be concerned about what his king's majesty may do to stop such sudden and incursive damage, so that his king's majesty may be able to take action when he thinks he has the right to do so. will consider it necessary to appoint and arm a campaign against the first-dreaded enemy of Christendom, and to protect his paternal and inherited lands, through which, when they have been conquered by the Turks, the other part of the Turkish nation will have to face the same trouble and loss of their lands, and to pay His Royal Majesty a sum of money. Majesty with a sum of money brought together from the Jubilee relief, but at least from that which had fallen in His Royal Majesty's lands. Majesty's lands, with the promise that such money shall be given and invested from that time on, not only for the purpose of collecting such reasonable and necessary tribute, but also that His Royal Majesty may use it for the benefit of the land. The king's majesty may now require and request help for the land of Hungern, because the tower now occupies the noble city of Gaize, which is then a port of the land of Hungern, with such a painting, which we have answered to his royal majesty that we will gladly help in this matter and in the destruction of this noble and proud city of Hungern. The instruction and mandate which our most holy father the bishop, when we were sent to him by his holiness, has entrusted to us and seriously bound us, to which end his holiness has granted us a bishop's breve under the ring of the bishop, in which we are highly encouraged to comply with his holiness' command and will. In this way we were mistaken about the order and decision of the Holy Roman Empire, to which his Royal Majesty had personally been, which we did not need to resist in any way, nor did we need to break that same order, and even less did his Royal Majesty deserve it. His Royal Majesty was initially somewhat displeased by our answer and partly moved us with anger. His Royal Majesty has also, on many valid grounds, taken such an answer in the best possible way, adhered to our opinion, and has graciously and kindly remitted such a demand to us, and has also promised us that His Royal Majesty will never again accept this reward.

The Holy Father of the Holy Babylon and the Holy Roman Empire will do everything in his power to ensure that such a reward will be kept secure and unchanged. Until such time as, by unanimous and common consent, all the princes and rulers of the German nation have seriously and manifestly understood the deprivation of the throne, we have received such a pleasing answer from His Royal Majesty that we are now in good hope of ridding Christendom and the German nation of all concern and repugnance. As has been the case up to now, and thus with good will and courage, we have received the favor and grace of His Royal Majesty. We have left it to his Majesty, so that we may do enough for our first legation to bring about the holy jubilee for the salvation and salvation of many, in which neither the painful podagra nor other illnesses of our lives shall hinder us, if the love and brotherhood which we have for the protection of the glory and the whole German nation salvation and peace, would as we hope give our sick body for and for relief and time to do so, although some of the King's Majesty, the King's Majesty, and the King's Majesty, the King's Majesty, the King's Majesty, the King's Majesty, the King's Majesty, the King's Majesty, the King's Majesty, the King's Majesty, the King's Majesty, and our own evil-mongers and cutters, out of devilish pretensions, intending to deceive the common people out of their devotion and good Christian faith, have openly lied and falsely stated that we have, in spite of ourselves and the Royal Majesty, as secretly escaped. We know that the King's Majesty has not been abandoned by anyone, and we do not want to be held responsible for any such misconduct or misrepresentation at the time of our discovery, and we do not want you to be held responsible for it in the best interests of the King's Majesty, since we are completely willing to do anything that may bring you peace and good fortune. Given at Strasbourg on the VII day of September.

41 Report on what happened to Raymundus at the Consistorio in Rome on his return to Italy.

From Tentzel's "Historical Report," Part I, p. 104.

Raymundum, when he arrived back in Rome from his last legation with a lot of money from Germany, the Cardinals asked in the Consistorio: what the barbarians thought of Rome, if they were given such a rich indulgence? He answered: "The whole world complains over the pomp and indulgence of the Cardinals, and if they do not see you improved, our Republic will be in danger. When he explained this with more, they all raised their brows and shoulders in the Italian manner, and in order to discourage him from speaking further about the Reformation, as a thing much hated by Rome, they had him mocked by the most audacious among them: You yourself are the cause that our order is badly rumored among the barbarians, since you have used so many servants, such precious clothes and food, such splendid household goods, that you and we have incurred nothing but disfavor as a result. Good Raymundus soon understood how much the bell had struck, and was silent from then on.

42. excerpt from the Joh. Paltz, Augustinian Order, Doctoris decretorum, of the monastery of the new work at Halle Praepositi, and Archidiaconi at Halle, a famous indulgence preacher under Raymund of Gurk, heavenly treasure trove of 1490, the Coelifodina of 1502, and its Supplemento of 1504.

The writing from which Kapp has made this excerpt in the "Nachlese nützlicher Reformationurkunden", Theil IV, p. 424, was first published in German in 1490 in Quart under the title: Himmliche Fundgrube, thereafter in 1502 in Latin as OosUtoclinu, and in 1504 a supplement to it.

Translated into German.

Sky Pit.

To the reader.

If you want to travel to Himmelsthür, dear reader, buy us and we will show you the way.

Below these verses is a large woodcut depicting a crucifix 2c. After the title, the following message is given of the difference between the Latin and German Himmelsgrube.

The Heavenly Pit is twofold: 1. a Latin one, which is more extensively compiled than the common one, and which is attributed to the most reverend in God Father and Lord, Lord Hermann, most worthy Archbishop of the Holy Cologne Church, Archchancellor and Elector of the Holy Roman Empire through Italy, Duke of Westphalia and of the Englands, and most worthy Administrator of the Church of Paderborn, for the important reason reported in the preface.

2. the common or German, formerly more briefly understood, under the names of the illustrious princes and lords, Frederick, Archmarshall and Elector of the Holy Roman Empire, and his beloved brother, Lord John, Duke of Saxony, Landgrave of Thuringia and Margrave of Meissen; namely, at the time of the Jubilee and Indulgence through Germany; by the most reverend Lord, understand Raymund, the then Legate of the Apostolic See through Germany D. 1490, but who is now, by the grace of God, most worthily exalted to the Cardinal dignity, of the title of St. Mary Novae Churches, and by the Most Holy Lord, Lord Alexander, Pope the Sixth, again deputed to Germany and Denmark anew, and abundantly provided with the greatest liberties and indulgences, for resistance against the shameful Turks.

After this difference the contents, which are only at the end in the other display, follow with the following words:

Contents in the pit of heaven.

The first part contains two things: a. First, a passion text that can be preached every year, and at the same time touches five errors of some who preach about it. First, an unreasonable entrance. Secondly, unseemly interference. Third, if they make too many parts, and at each again new parts. Fourth, when they make too high spiritual interpretations. Fifth, when they spare the crucifixion too long. There are also five errors of the listeners "touched on, b. Furthermore, it contains the fruits and various ways of thinking about the Passion or the Passion, or having thoughts about it. There are beautiful things about the holy cross, about the one who hangs on the cross, and about the one who stands next to the cross, besides what is already in the passion (or suffering) text.

Part II contains four kinds of thoughts: 1. whether one can sin with thoughts; 2. that one should beware of fivefold consent; 3. that one should not respect blasphemous thoughts; 4. when thoughts become worse and worse.

Part III contains four things about death: 1. why death was imposed on man; 2. why few achieve their natural goal in life; 3. how useful it is to remember death; 4. how death is willing to accept that guilt and punishment be remitted in Christian faith.

The IV. The fourth part contains seven consolations of the sinner, so that he does not perish at his end; and especially very consoling things of the last chastisement, as there are: 1. the infinite goodness of God; 2. the ineffable love of Christ; 3. the motherly love of the holy virgin; 4. the

The fraternal friendship and love of all the saints, giving seven reasons why the saints are favorable to us; 5. The benefits of the sacraments of Christ, dealing with three in particular, which are sacraments for the dying.

a. Of the Sacrament of Penance. There are beautiful things about the small repentance and its three stages, likewise about the great and right repentance; and how the priest of the new law can make a mere penitent (attritum) into a right penitent by his office, and free the sinner from the hellish gallows, and make one capable of receiving indulgences. And afterwards beautiful things of the priestly dignity of the new law in the sixth question of indulgences, b. Is dealt with the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. In addition to other beautiful things, the question is asked whether communicating under both forms is necessary for salvation, and is answered against the errors of the Bohemians; likewise, the use of the mass. c. The sacrament of the last rites is discussed, which is spoken of in particular because of many who err in the doctrine of this sacrament, to the detriment of souls and bodies.

6. the truthfulness of the indulgences of the church; of which seven questions are dealt with: a. whether indulgences are; b. what they are; c. by whom they are granted; d. in what way they are granted; e. whence they flow or come; f. to whom they are useful;

g. How it should be used. The use of confession slips and letters is discussed, and it is pointed out what the community of intercessions has in itself, which the pope communicates, and how such brotherhood is better and more useful than the mere indulgence.

7. the rich grace of the Jubilee. Ten questions are raised: a. Where the Jubilee originated; b. Why it was instituted; c. What happens in the Jubilee; d. Why it is kept in the 50th year; e. Why under the new law it is not always kept every 50th year; f. Whether it is good nowadays that the Jubilee be instituted by the whole church; g. What should be done to obtain the grace of the Jubilee; h. What should move priests, preachers, and confessors to promote the Jubilee. What priests, preachers, and confessors should do to promote the Jubilee; i. Whether one should believe that through the Jubilee and indulgences the souls in purgatory are properly helped, in which question many secondary questions can be raised and answered by the souls who find themselves in purgatory; k. Whether he who has obtained the Jubilee and plenary indulgence goes straight to heaven when he dies, without some punishment of purgatory.

The contents are followed by the letter to Hermann, Archbishop of Cologne, which reads as follows:

To the most reverend in Christ Father and Lord, Mr. Hermann, most worthy Archbishop of the Holy Church of Cologne, Archchancellor and Elector of the Holy Roman Empire through Italy, Duke of Engern and Westphalia, and faithful administrator of the Church of Paderborn, Brother Johann von Paltz, humble professor of the Holy Scriptures, of the Order of the Hermite Brothers of St. Augustine, offers due reverence, constant love and untiring prayer.

When the other day your most noble lordship required of me that I preach some sermons (which I formerly preached at the time of the proclamation of the jubilee year, under the most venerable Lord Raymundo, namely the then legate of the apostolic see through Germany, a. d. 1490 2c. to the most illustrious Princes and Lords, Lords Frederick, Archmarshall and Elector of the Holy Roman Empire, and his beloved brother John, Duke of Saxony, Landgrave of Thuringia and Margrave of Meissen, as well as their noble Counts, and their excellent and manly knights and noblemen, also venerable prelates, and other people of both sexes who are devout, and at their request, reported sermons, I would like to translate into the noble Latin language sermons that have been compiled in a common or German tract, or rather to summarize the occasionally scattered Latin, from which I first took the German, so that it would be more pleasant for the scholars, and thus also more useful for others, which most clergymen of various countries, especially in Thuringia, Meissen and Hesse, who knew more about German, have already eagerly desired; but, because obstacles always intervened, did not obtain it: But now that such a great prince, who undoubtedly loves the Holy Scriptures very much, and is a great patron and mild benefactor of all, especially godly, clergymen, it is no longer appropriate to stand by it.

Accordingly, with divine help, I have been able to joyfully take on the burden that has been placed on my shoulders for the second time. I have kept the first name and order (of the work) in the translation. And because, according to the prince of the worldly wise topic. I. 6, all those who translate something translate it according to some equation: so I have titled this little work Heavenly Pit. For as gold is dug out of a gold pit, and silver out of a silver pit, which is dug out of Schneeberg (Monte nivis), of which I

The grace that was once the cause of equality can be found in great quantity, so a far more delicious grace can be dug out of the pit of heaven for all people.

Since the German work was divided into four parts according to the fourfold matter, the Latin summary is also divided into four parts in the same way. The first deals with the suffering of Christ and the different ways of thinking about the suffering of the Lord. The other is about thoughts and especially about blasphemous thoughts, how one should not respect them, but should do them from oneself. The third part is about the way to die well, namely, how even the greatest sinner can obtain forgiveness of guilt and punishment through the good use of death in Christian faith. The fourth part is about the most salutary effects of the last rites, against many dangerous errors that harm souls and bodies, and about other spiritual consolations, so that man does not despair in the end.

But why I prefer to collect these things for said most noble princes and lords than others, I say this: because these newly preached matters were more pleasing to their devotion. They also desired other things in other tracts; for example, the work of the seven flowers or feasts of the holy virgin. Virgin, which begins: Blessed is he who waits at my door daily 2c. And another under the title: Würzgärtlein ebenderselben hochberühmten Jungfrau 2c., therein in short speeches or little prayers almost the whole life of the holy virgin contain. Which little work the most illustrious princes have had brought to the people far and wide by their own at great expense, not only in writing, but also in print, and have hoped for the reward for it from the giver of all good.

If I then follow the above-mentioned matters, and in the work assigned to me follow your most noble glory, most excellent archbishop, I have not wanted to walk alone, because it is written Eccles. 4: Woe to him who walks alone, because if he falls, he has no one to help him up; but have relied on my superiors (or ancestors), especially my teacher and venerable father, Magister Johannis von Dorsten, of glorious memory, our holy Hermit Brothers Order of St. Augustine, the holy divine order of St. Augustine. Augustini, the holy God-honor in the praiseworthy university and Erfortischen Convent of the order of that order, now and then scattered writings looked around, whose footsteps I

I will follow him, walk with him according to the grace that has been given to me, and act more in Latin than I have done in German, in order to complete the work as I wish; so that, as the Lord Christ walks with us in the midst of us, all the words will exist in the mouth of two or three witnesses. Glory and praise be to Him for all eternity! Amen.

In arch O he explains what quadragesima, septena, carena are; and because these words occur frequently in Ablaßdiplomatibus, but are not intelligible enough to us, we will indent the passage.

What is quadragesima, septena, carena of indulgence:

Of the first type of the said teacher (scil., of Dorsten), who makes a certain number of days or years, it is to be noted that such indulgence, so expressed by days and years, is also given sometimes by quadragesimam, sometimes by septenam, sometimes by carenam.

To know further (which one stated in the Basilean Concilio that it was taken and concluded from the supreme papal histories) that there would be a distinction among Quadragesima, Septena or Septinaria, and Carena.

For Clement I ordered such a penance for a mortal sin that the penitent should fast 40 days with water and bread; and the same 40 days he was excluded from the church, and went on it with bare head and ashes. Thereafter, a seven-year penance was imposed on him in such a way that on the other vacations (Mondays), he would eat 1) milk food once, on Thursdays a dish of fasting food, and on Saturdays three pieces of bread dipped in ashes. Within which seven years he needed neither meat nor wine, but water; also slept on no bed, but on boards, on the ground and stones; after which years he was able to enjoy the body of the Lord in the Lord's Supper. And this penance was called quadragesimam by Clement.

Innocentius, however, first ordered a septenam for a manifest mortal sin, in such a way that a penitent may need two dairy dishes and eggs on Sunday; on Monday a Lenten dish [Feria secunda u. s. f. quarta, sexta], on Wednesday again two dairy dishes and eggs; on Thursday bread and wine of the day once; on Friday likewise two dairy dishes and eggs, as on the Wednesday; Saturdays alone bread and water once of the day.

On the Sabbath he went on pilgrimages through the churches and ate milk only once a day. After that he was allowed to communicate. And that was called Septena, or the week Innocentii.

Carena, however, was a temporal penance, which included the Quadragesima and Septena penances, so that the penitents abstained from common food and contact with people, and fasted with water and bread for 40 days. Then the seven-year penance was imposed on them, not only in bread and water, but at the priest's discretion, that they fast one day every week and recite certain prayers or do some good works. Which penance had to be ordinarily imposed for every mortal sin, as was done in the first church, to the sinner's terror. And this is called Carena, from the Cariren (or idleness) of the people, because they stayed the first 40 days in a secret place. But the gloss on the chapter: Accusasti de accusato, and in the chapter: Accepisti de sponsa duorum, says that Carena is common Italian, and means fasting with water and bread for 40 days. And the gloss seems to be of the opinion that Carena means only a penance of 40 days, therefore, because it says: it would be dealt with äst. 50. o. in the beginning; where only the penance of 40 days is reported, with concealment of the seven years. And the same can be seen in the confessional form of the pope, who makes the carenia into years, as the lesser into the greater. But what Peter Parisiensis, in the book called verbum abbreviatum, says, that this punishment is to be interpreted to those who have sinned gravely, as death-slayers and committed incest, indicates so much that it also includes the seven following years. But the pope speaks so doubtfully in the above chapters that one cannot really know whether Carene means 40 days with the seven years in addition, or only 40 days alone. For he says thus: 40 days, so one calls Carenam, with seven following years, you shall atone. For if this little word, namely "with seven following years", belongs to the first word, namely "calls", then one sees clearly that Carena means so much as 40 days with the seven following years; but if it belongs to the following word, namely "thou shalt atone", then it means only 40. But what the apostolic (man or pope) meant in this, I cannot say; only this I say, if Carene meant only 40 days of penance, then the bishops and cardinals could give Carene. But the bishops can only give 40 days of indulgence.

1) In the old edition: "seems to be Tuesday". This is an error that is often repeated by Walch, also in the dating of letters, that he takes tsriu sseuMu for Tuesday 2c., instead of: Monday.

and do not go over it, except for the consecration of the church, since they can give a year for the same day and act. And the Cardinals, according to proper usage, give 100. And a reverend man has told me that the Apostolic (Successor), in affirming the Cardinal rights (or liberties), designates and affirms this in particular, so that the people of the faithful are not deceived.

He is also of the opinion that faith is especially necessary in the matter of indulgences, namely because of the many infernal armies that assail them; in Arch R.

How to use the indulgence usefully.

Consequently, it is also to be said of the other piece, how one may use the indulgence usefully. For faith is very useful; as in all articles, so especially in the matter of indulgences, because of many infernal armies that assail it.

The following salutation to the archbishop is found in sheet S:

Most Reverend Father, Most Excellent Archbishop, Most Serene Prince! These two mites, which a poor widow threw into the treasure of Christ, and were cast from the silver of the double heavenly pit, namely the Latin and German, and were coined on the arrest of the two most illustrious electors, one of which was written in an ecclesiastical (Latin) language, and is now attributed to an ecclesiastical prince; the other, however, in the German language, was formerly suitable for a secular prince, are now at the same time placed before the eyes of your most reverend glory to examine them. And if, by the judgment of the wise, they are found worthy to be considered as bread to feed the hungry, I leave them to the love and understanding of your most reverend fatherhood (or fatherly love) to be devoutly chewed (enjoyed). However, with the addition that if anything praiseworthy is found in it, it will be attributed to the Most High, as the giver of all good, and to my ancestors; but what is ugly, disdainful and frail, will be overlooked by the godly reader with Christian patience. But because of simple writing [the authors of the documents add: in this he spoke very true] the matter is not to be despised, because under a hard shell often lies a good kernel, under coarse chaff a good grain, and under a despised bag the best gold. We have brought this about in our new monastery in the valley of Mühlheim near Coblenz, in the year 1500, around the feast of All Saints.

On this he makes some additions for the following reasons:

Now that I have returned from the new convention of the valley of Mühlheim to the actual convention [or of the fatherland, nativum] at Erfurt, I have learned that the most reverend Lord Raymund, Cardinal, the apostolic see's legate to Germany and Denmark, will return with a rich jubilee year and indulgence to equip a mighty army against the Turks' terrible invasion. In order that the preachers of the Jubilee may come to it the sooner, I have decided to add something about indulgences to what has been said above, and to add ten questions about indulgences.

There are ten questions, to which he also answers according to the order. In it, he remembers Raymundi Gurcensis several times, e.g. in the D. arc.

From which and other godly causes Sixtus IV. moved to grant the jubilee year with many orderly liberties to the church of Saintonge 1) in the Holy Roman Empire; which afterwards Innocentius VIII. with many other liberties, through the most reverend Lord Raymundum, then his legate, most orderly, salutary and timely travels almost through all of Germany and Denmark, has instituted and directed to work. In his jubilee year proclamation is quite credible, and there has been the experience that many more great sinners have been converted than in many years before. Now, however, after the Jubilee Year celebrated in 1500, the same Most Reverend Raymund, Cardinal 2c., was sent by the Most Holy Lord Alexander, Pope VI, to the whole of Germany and the Kingdom of Denmark in the following year, A.D. 1501, to all Germany and the Kingdom of Denmark with the Jubilee and great indulgence, because of the extreme distress of the Turk, about which he laments miserably in his letters; one of which he sent to the Lords Electors and Estates of the Roman Empire at their recent assembly in Nuremberg, inviting them to resist this terrible tyrant; The other, however, to the Swiss, in which he strongly exhorts them to take up arms against the perjured Turks, the contents of which letters I have decided to append to the end of this work with the Bull of the Most Holy Alexandri, because of their great usefulness and importance.

From what I have now said, many salutary lessons follow: 1. the jubilee year of the new law does not necessarily follow the jubilee year of the old law in the same number of years, but it does in the

1) In the old edition: "Saintonger".

The right and proper meaning. (2) That the indulgence was not newly invented by the new apostolic (successors), as some blaspheme, but was used ages ago. (3) Will it not be contrary to divine order, nor to the nature of things, if in the future the supreme popes set a lesser number of years for the establishment of the Jubilee, namely, from 20 to 20 or from 10 to 10 years, or at what time they find it necessary, for good reasons, to have the Jubilee preached, wherever it may be, because of many motives which are to be dealt with in the following question.

In this very arch is contained a strong punitive sermon against those who do not want to make use of indulgences. And since we have included in our scene of the Tetzelian Indulgence Convict, and the Lutheran contending against it, some such as Joh. Tetzel held about fifteen years after Paltzen, we want to add here a piece of this Augustinian sermon, and it will be seen from the correlation which of the two has surpassed the other:

From this it is seen (says Paltz) how much they err who, out of avarice and self-interest, oppose and speak against such indulgences. O foolish, ungrateful, wretched, and true disciples, yes, children of Antichrist! who prefer earth to heaven, temporal to spiritual, dung to heavenly pearl. O apostate children, you who despise the grace of God, put your own salvation in the background, and hinder the edification or benefit of others. O children of Babylon, you who resist God's order and will not escape His judgment. Was it not God's order that Jesus would die for the people, not only for the people, but also to gather together the scattered children of God? Joh. 11, 52. Why then do you resist the suffering of Christ, so that it bears no fruit among you? Why do you not let the lost, wounded and afflicted sheep be gathered, healed and refreshed in the world by the chief Shepherd, since no one is able to refresh and heal them in all things but the chief Shepherd?

I pass over what already in the 1730 under my presidio by Mr. Johann Peter Thümmlingen held Disputation de Ourine ftoru. Loloeieisius politieis euren, Rskorraationsln Initiiel! eomiuissis ruerito 8U8p6t>is p. 41. not. 2. that Father Paltz also considers Pope Clement IV's bull, by virtue of which he commanded the angels of Paradise to immediately take to heaven the souls of those who, wishing to enjoy his indulgences, would die, to be correct; and reports only so much that the two above letters of Raymundi, the Cardinal, to the German churals and princes, likewise that to the Swiss, are printed at the end, but the bull of Alexandri VI has been omitted. At the end it says:

Printed Erfurt by Wolfgang Schencken, A[nn]o MDVII. the 3rd after Judica.

The supplemeutuM Ooelikodinas (or Heaven's Pit) is published two years later by this same printer A. 1504 tertia wria p08t inoonvrit (that is, Tuesday). 1) Behind the title page is a letter from Cardinal Raymundi to our Paltz, which I do not repeat here because it is already included in my vmputiou de indulAtzutiarum qua68loril>n8 p. 18. not. (d) is incorporated. What Father Paltz wrote in the book itself about the matter of indulgences, that faith is necessary in this, he repeats here again in the arc B, when he speaks: lutelleetlm 6aptivaudu8 68t in odW^uium üdsi eirau materiam iudulMutiarum: one must take reason captive in the indulgence trade under the obedience of faith. He also has no hesitation in asserting in the following arc C that the pope can give indulgences on future sins.

To the fourth question (Paltz continues), whether the pope can, and it is also useful, to give letters of indulgence or confession for future sins? is answered: Yes, because of many causes: 1. because of the fullness of power; 2. because of human frailty; for though no one need undertake sin, yet every one has such to fear from weakness. And although one can live without mortal sin by the grace of God, no one can live without venial [or weak] sins, and consequently everyone must necessarily suffer the penalty of purgatory, which is to be paid here or there. And would God that no one would fall into mortal sin again! Which might well be the case with many, if the so corrupted flesh did not drive them to it, the devil beguiled them, and the world tempted them. But even if one were so brave and strong, he would hardly prevent himself from building wood, hay, and stubble on this foundation, according to 1 Corinthians 3. St. Augustine explains this in lib. de fid. et oper. Others build on the foundation of faith, that is, Christ, in whom they believe and whom they love above all things; wood, that is, a strong love of temporal things, which is nevertheless necessary; other hay, that is, a moderate love of temporal goods, which is nevertheless also necessary; other stubble, that is, the smallest desire for it 2c. But all these must be swept here or there; therefore the apostle adds: "Every work, whatever it may be, will be tested by the fire. But that one may be counted free from this trial by fire, it is good to buy letters of indulgence even for future sins, but without having them in mind deliberately, because we can hardly or not at all live without them. 3. it is good to buy such letters or confession slips because of the danger to souls. Because the souls of present

1) In the old edition "Wednesday".

Time are in great danger, because of abuse of the ban and episcopal power. For many of the present time turn the keys of salutary cure into keys of miserable extortions and miserable exterminations. That is why many keep silent about their sins and fear to fall into such pressures. Therefore it is good that the pope should come from time to time and save such, and leave behind them strong confession slips, by virtue of which they may freely confess to whom they please. (4) It is good to loose these confession slips, because it is so easy. For it is not difficult to solve such things. For who is so poor among the people who would not give as much or more to the body for the consecration or the prohibition of meat? In Rome, they have to give two guilders to buy a confession slip, and by no means in such rich form as the ones that one buys here, one of which is only set at the fourth part of a Rhenish guilder. Indeed, whoever would not have a confession slip should rather beg so much for it or pay so much for it, than miss such a treasure and afterwards have to suffer purgatory, which hardly anyone will avoid without indulgence. (5) It is good to redeem confession slips, because they are irrevocable. For such slips, if all else be right, are irrevocable, both by God's authority, in which they are given, and by papal fidelity (or truth), according to which they are so proclaimed; as it is also written in the confession slips that they are not to be revoked. 6. it is good to dissolve confession slips because of their usefulness, since it is said above in the first sermon of this supplement that the confession slip bears five kinds of fruit. Which are also put above in the first part of the Heavenly Pit pag. IV. in the sixth consolation reason of the sinner in the seventh question.

And because in the following sheet F there is quite an indulgence ceremonial, as such was taken into consideration under Cardinal Raymund, we want to repeat this. It shows first of all how the indulgence was introduced, the cross erected and taken down again.

But because the Holy Indulgence in the Church must be solemnly and properly instituted, reverently and devoutly continued, and gratefully ended at the proper time, before one proceeds to the fifth army of hell, which Lucifer is wont to send forth after the holy Jubilee year has ended, the consecrations (or ceremonies) of such indulgences practiced under the most reverend Lord Legate Raymund, at the two times when he was sent, shall be established in Germany under the following form:

The way to introduce or to apply the sacred indulgence.

On the day when the sacred indulgence is to be instituted in a place, the prelates, canons, priests, monks, with the secular (or common) priests must come to the church where the cross is to be erected, before seven o'clock. Then, after seven o'clock, they go in procession with the venerable Sacrament, if any, to the church where they have to accept the Commissarium or Plenipotentiary with notified indulgence. Which, when they come to that church, the cantor may begin: Advenisti desiderabilis [You have come, beloved one]. Under the singing, the confessors can ask the blessing from the Commissario, saying: Jube, Domine, benedicere,, command, O Lord, to bless. And he will give to each one a staff to absolve by force, according to the bull. After that, they will go to the procession, on their return, and two of them will read the litanies, so that the choir will respond. And when they have finished the litanies under way, they can sing the responsory at will. Which in total, when they come to the church, they can intonate with bent knees: Media vita. After which the Commissary can read the Versicul and the Collecte of Sins; then play and sing: HErr GOtt, dich loben 2c., on the organ. And when one comes to the verse: Therefore we beseech thee 2c., the commissary shall come with the confessors to touch the cross and sing the said verse three times: first low, then higher, and finally still higher. At each intonation the choir is to respond and rise in tone as well. At the third intonation, they shall raise the cross completely and strike the stick or box; then the choir shall always continue singing until the end. Then the commissary may go up and preach the sermon, and then the high mass may be solemnly celebrated.

The consecration to be held daily with the praise of the cross after Vespers at three o'clock.

According to the decree of the most reverend legate, the praise of the cross is to be sung daily, and a sermon is to be added to it by the indulgence; in such a way that everything that is to be sung or read in the church, where the cross is aligned, is to be finished before three o'clock. And at three o'clock, when all go down from the choir, they shall arrange the procession standing around the cross; the commissary with the confessors shall come last. On the way out of the choir the cantor begin the antiphons: O Crux, gloria etc.. When the in all end, two scholares, or pupils, with two wax candles standing before the cross with bent knees shall begin the verse: O Crux, ave etc., O Cross, be greeted, thou some hope 2c., to two times. The third time: Te summe DEus, trinitas etc., and the choir should first answer: hoc Jubilaei tempore, at this time of jubilation. The second time it shall answer: hoc gratoso tempore, in this gracious [pleasant] time! Thirdly: hoc passionis merito etc., by this of the suffering merit 2c. After this the Commissarius, or whom he assigns, shall read the verse and the Collecte, thus: Adoramus te etc., we adore you, Christe, and bless you. He answers: quia per Crucem etc., because you have been blessed through the cross redeemed the world. Let us pray: Gregem tuum, quaesumus Domine etc., We beseech thee, O Lord JESUS CHRIST, thou good Shepherd, look down reconciled upon thy flock, and upon the sheep which thou hast redeemed with thy precious blood on the cross, that they be not destroyed nor torn asunder by the devil's invasion; who livest and reignest with Father and Holy Spirit GOD for ever and ever! Amen.

The way to take down the cross in the Jubilee year.

First, the praise of the cross is to be kept according to custom, namely: O Crux etc., with its collecte. After that: Nôia vita, with the Collecte of Sins (as above in the Introduction). Then the organ or choir may intonate "Herr Gott, dich loben" 2c., and the priests from the choir respond. Then the commissarii and the confessors standing around the cross should sing: Salvum fac populum, Lord, help your people 2c., to three times. The choir will answer and continue to the end. And the Commissary will read the Collecte of the Holy Trinity in thanksgiving. After that the Commissarius will begin with the confessors: Haec sunt convivia etc., These are the banquets, so pleasing to the wisdom of the Father. Then the cross shall be taken down and placed on the box. At the end, the choir of scholars sings in a loud voice: Rex regum etc., O King of kings, rich above all 2c. To conclude, the preacher goes to the pulpit and begins this theme or lecture: And the door is shut 2c., that he may preach according to his understanding: that hitherto, through the keys of the church, the door of heaven has been opened to all penitents and to the souls in purgatory.

but now the door has been closed again by the removal of the cross. Since he will then continue according to his understanding and remind them that the cross should still remain on the box for six days; whoever has not yet put on or spent anything, or has not yet completed his penance, could do so during these days. Likewise, you can also announce a few days beforehand that the cross should be taken down on such and such a day; would they then come 2c.

This may be enough from the first edition of this book, from which it is sufficiently evident how much Paltz tried to make himself deserving of the indulgence system.

The other edition has a slightly longer title than the former. It thus reads:

Himmelsgrube, so die verborgnen Schätze der Schrift aufthut; wieder gedruckt, verbessert, und wo erst etwas fehlte, durch Zusatz ergänzet, und dilig nach der ersten Schrift [oder dem Druck] verbessert.

Behind the title is 1. above mentioned letter Raymundi to Paltzen; 2. the difference of the German and Latin Eoslitockinae; the letter to Churfürst Hermann. Then comes the work itself. It is largely the same as the first edition, and the additions made in the first edition are not indented in the work itself, but printed in the same order as in the previous edition. The type is larger than in the first edition, and the following is appended at the end:

You have now, dearest reader, happily finished and completed this newly printed, again overlooked, diligently corrected after the first defective and by carelessness very corrupted copy, and where the first copy was extinguished, with the author's hand and file again polished out heavenly pit. Read and reread it often. For it is she of whom is written what is written there: That her stones are iron, and from her mountains noble ores are dug, and treasures of the fountain spring of the living water, so into eternal life quillet. Elaborated with neat art and lovely print, by art and diligence of Baccal. Martin Landspergks, of Würzburg, citizen of the city of Leipzig, An. 1504, Thursday the 22nd of August. ____

43 Summa and excerpt from the bull given by our most holy father, Pope Julius the Other, for the protection of our holy Christian faith. Printed in 1510.

From Hottinger's "impartial guide" reprinted in Löscher's "Reformation Acts," p. 423.

To the high and mighty lord waltherr von Pletenberg, master vnd his knights-

The brothers of the chivalrous Teutonic Order, the highly praised young lady Marie in Lyfland: against the vulgar Russians heretics, and apostates or cut off from the Christian faith, and Tartars. This contains the most complete remission of all sins and atonement with God the Lord, like the remission of such holy devotions the previous holy cousins the bishops, or now our holy father the bishop, have given in times past to those whom the churches within and outside Rome have sought for it in the last Jubilee, even in the hundredth year; or were drawn to the aid and protection of the holy land or grave: Also all and any other graces given to them.

Vrsach diß ablaß nach Weisung der Bäbstlichen Bullen.

Our holy father the Bishop has noted from the various stories of some kings and other Christian princes that the Russians were heretics and cut off from the faith with the help of the unbelieving Tartars in past years, about the dispute and controversy that existed between the aforementioned noble Master and his brothers knights of the Order of the Teutonic Knights in Lyfland and the same Russians for some time, The same Master and his brethren of the Order of the Knights of Tutti in Lyfland, and the same Riga Archbishops and Bishops of Tarbat [Dorpat] and of Reual were attacked with fine weapons, and those with the sword, war weapons, and fowers: Also man and woman persons, also ecclesiastical and many religious in part in herte Dienstberkeit vnd gefencknuß led, and the others with sundering vnd vsserdachten penen vnd torture killed, also church vnd formation of the saints defiled vnd disinherited, The chalice, the church ornaments and the bells were smashed and carried away, the holy sacrament was also handled with the hands of church thieves, churches and other saints were constantly touched, and much damage was done to the Christians: So that not only a large part of the land of the masses has been conquered, and in these places the Christians, with noticeable care and skill, are no longer willing to take it, but also many places which belong to the aforementioned masters and knights, and also to some other churches and ecclesiastical persons, have been conquered, and are still being held by the thieves, as well as the said Russians with their adherence of the unbelievers do not hesitate to arm themselves, so that they raid Lyfland again, because this land is a forgem or a fortress, and serves as a protection and shield for other Christian lands, so that when they have conquered it, they can then conquer other adjoining lands to their own.

evil evil, and thus destroy and ruin the Holy Roman Churches and Christian faith. For this reason, in the comfort and confidence that our holy father the priest confesses to the divine goodness, and thus hopes that such an outrage of the evil ones may be stopped and hindered by God's help, his holy lord Walthern von Plettenberg has now appointed his master and his brothers in God the lord, that in such cases they want to fight against such unglorious ones for the release of Christian glory, as they have done so far with great glory and praise of God and Christian glory: And how much the Holy Roman Pontiffs and the knights of the Order of the Teutonic Knights in Lyflandt have been willing to do in such a way, but for constant and temporary warfare, according to the greed and opportunity of the matter, their fortune, rent and money [Gefall = income from taxes], they and their peoples do not extend to such disputes, but it is necessary that they be given relief and help by the Christians, so such remission has been given.

The following are the essential pieces and points of the official letter of indulgence or Bull content:

The first gives and grants, by the authority of our holy father the bishop, to all those of both sexes who have repented and repented, who reside in the archbishoprics of Mentz, Sollen and Trier, and Mynen, and in the same cities and bishoprics: or for the purpose of receiving favors and indulgences in such bishoprics and cities, so that they, within three years from the time of the opening of the same covenants and indulgences, in the course or journey against the said renegades in glory and inglory with the said Masters and Knights of the Order of the Teutonic Knights in Lyfland, or their guardians, or one of the same, which counsel they shall take, at the least six months by themselves, or another, or others, with the creed, at their own expense, if they are able, or who are satisfied only with the goods presented to them by the Master and the brothers of the Knights, or which are in the castle, the palace, or the tents, and the ends, where their armies or armies lie, offer, which they need for such a march or war, or which prouiant vnd others in them needful vnd helpful to fight, or so that they may wait for the war, by themselves, or others to intercede: Or who are not in these things, or can not do them, but who have some of these things.

churches or altars, which are designated by the official commissioners and governors appointed by his Holiness, or his decrees, to be visited within the dry years: And in the churches which shall be appointed for this purpose, to make an offering or payment of money, as they shall be appointed by the commissioners, the most perfect remission and pardon of all their sins, which they shall have repented of in their hearts, and repented of with their mouths, which remission shall be equal to that which is above mentioned.

The official commissary and his abbot have the power to determine the churches and the altars, and to appoint skilled priests, who have been appointed by the officials to absolve and absolve from their sins those who are in fear of them, and to absolve them from their sins, transgressions, laziness, and iniquities, whether they were already such things, for which they should visit the holy shrine in Rome, as well as from spiritual penances and banishments, and to impose on them salutary penances.

They may transform vows and promises, or fert [pilgrimages], or make [them], and change the vows to a hand ransom for this work, except for vows to be evaluated in order 1), or to keep chastity. They also have the power to do everything that the official penitentiaries and chief confessors were allowed to do in the new Jubilee Council in Rome.

One may dispute with the commissioners and their deputies about property that has been legally transferred, if one does not know to whom it belongs, or if it has been taken by means of wipers, if one does not know to whom it belongs, and if a wiper has taken wipers from another wiper, and the latter does not want to return his wipers. Also, if a man has a foreign good behind him, and does not know or doubt to whom he will give it. Also for goods, which were occupied by poor people or needy people in a community, and which were not specifically determined, to whom or to whom one may give something, for this sacred work and use, and for the purpose of giving it back.

The commissioner and his office bearer shall have the power to absolve and discharge from the sin of the spiritual worshipper, called Symony, who has been in receipt of ecclesiastical wardship or benefices in the court of the Conscience. And to absolve and discharge in the court of the Conscientz, also for paschal temporal court elected [consecrated] perphonies, which were fallen into ecclesiastical bonds and punishments, because that they were in battles, which were held against the aforementioned enemy. Also of irregularity, that they were unfit for

1) In the old edition: "orten" instead of "orden". It is the monastic vow.

If any of the ecclesiastical and divine embassies, on account of the law or other causes, have committed voluntary manslaughter within the limits of the aforesaid slaughter, and if any of them, by reason of the care of the church, are not fit to become priests, they shall have the power to dispense and remit by means of their rights, or by means of those who wish to be elected, and to allow the rights to be exercised by their ecclesiastical embassies: And the benefices, which they have taken over, as if they were to be taken over, together with the fruits, which they have received, also the benefits, which they have received in the time, when they have not bedded down their fyben time,

They may keep and therefore revoke, but this only in the court and judgement of the Conscience or Law: with much further violence and content of the bulls so recently not reported here. Item they have the power to dispense and to convict of the errors and sins, which occur, magistrate's and criminal half they arose from real or unreal lypical works, 2) also of magistrate's or of justice open erberkeit, to latin publicae honestatis iustitia, who or other persons who have violated the law or the law of their own country, and yet have carried out the law of their own country, if such violation did not occur in court, or if no open revenue resulted from it. That they may transgress such persons, also absolve the ban in which they fall, and impose a salutary penalty, which shall extend to the work of this protection of the faith, and may moreover permit the same to remain, according to the provisos, even children who come of it, to be recognized in the court of the conscience.

Item with those who rightfully hold churches, monasteries or benefices, and rightfully may not be forced to recant due to lack of proof.

Item in the indulgence book is allowed, that persons so sickness, age, stupidity, or for other reasons do not want to sin the church or do otherwise, so that as obstet [as said above] the indulgence is to be recovered, where they so much as they delay a week with their fief, give into the ordered boxes, or otherwise according to the order of the Commissar, or his authorities, that if they are prevented from doing so, they may also, as if they were in charge of the churches, pay the penance, and also have the authority of the commissioners to occupy such persons in the places where such persons are, whom they may elect.

2) Instead of "become" with Löscher and with Walch "works" is to be read. Immediately following: "the marital bodily works".

Item, dwyl zweyfällig [zweifelhaft] sein mögen, wieviel ein yedenes zu erlangen des ablasses, ynnlegen soll, auch welche vnuermügligkeit, krankheit, oder hindernuß einen entschuldigt, dass er die Kirchen zubesuchen oder anders zu tun 2c. The commissioner and his deputies shall be allowed to decide on such doubts, and to decide on such doubts, and to let them lapse, if the matter requires it, but that such lapse shall be turned to other good works.

They also have their own rules for dealing with poor people so that they may be granted indulgences. Item: How to deal with great princes and other rulers, spiritual and secular, who are of great rank, both officially and lydally, so that they may receive the indulgence. Item, vß Vertröstung to divine mercy and bäbstlicher power volkommenheit, verlyhet in such bulls our holy father the Pope that if father, fathers, or other Christgloubige in time, so this indulgence weret, do handouts according to the order of the commissary or penitentiary, and visit the churches for those in purgatory whom they wish to help, so that such popular indulgences may comfort them in purgatory, in order that they may be relieved of their sins by the people. It is also the will of our holy father the bishop, through the same power of the people, that the Christian believers do their part in this matter, and occupy the churches as if it were their duty. Also their departed, parents, and benefactors; of all prayers, stubbornness, alms, fasting, divine ordinances of the measure, and customary customs: consecration [mortification], fasts, and other spiritual deeds [good deeds], which have been done in the Christianity and by all the members of it, are eternally liable. Item, so the commissioners and penitents have to give power of indulgence letters, which contain very great forcible and pardon, which a man may use all his life for the need, and bychtuätter have, according to their content, painted on the same bestplichen.

Item, for the sake of this indulgence and good work, so deteriorate and keep the time before the bishop, while this indulgence is in force, all other indulgences, even in letters of intent which his holiness or the bishop before him, have given, be it to whom it may. Also to the authorities of the Holy Trinity, as well as to the monasteries, convents, hospitals; also to Saint John of Jerusalem and the Holy Spirit, and to all the common brotherhoods, and they want them to be infallible at this time.

Item, his holiness also wants that from the questioners [Ablaßkrämer] shall not be demanded on the other indulgence, in time as this indulgence is, something almösen.

Item, the priest also wants and recognizes that in repudiation and fraud, or where he would repudiate in his holiness indulgence letter, this indulgence shall not be understood.

If there is any doubt as to how the words of the papal bulls are to be understood, the explanation shall be left to the papal commissioners who appointed the bulls and to his subordinate officials, and they shall be given as much explanation as is necessary, and such explanation shall be adhered to.

Item, so that such sacred work and commitment is not hindered, so our holy father, the bishop, gives to all and any sovereign rulers, bishops open, epts, also others of what standing, grade or nature they are, man and woman persons, by obedience and the judged ban, also the pen of perpetual punishment, also a fine, so the Commissari, so his decrees will therefore begeren, that they such proclamation in churches, bishoprics and cities, as thick is necessary, nor prove any fraud or deception, nor prevent anyone from following this indulgence, nor preach against it, secretly or openly, so that they shall not proclaim any other indulgence, which is now repudiated, or make use of it as long as this indulgence is in force, and the absolution of those who were in such breach should not be given to anyone else, except to our Holy Father the Baptist or his Holiness, before they are divorced from their beds, and they should be given and kept.

44 Christian Baumhauer's letter of indulgence issued to Adam Leuterer, June 6, 1508.

From Kapp's "Collection of Some Writings Belonging to the Indulgence," p. 32.

To all and everyone to whom the present letter will come before the face, wishes Christian Baumhauer, vsorstoruin äootor, Rector of the Parochial Church in Ruien, Tarbater, or Dörppter ^Dorpater] Dioceses, of the Most Holy Father in Christ our Lord, Lord Julii, by divine providence of this name of the other pope, Acolythus Capellanus, as well as of the same and of the Holy Apostolic See to the provinces of Mainz, Cologne and Trier, Meissen, as well as their cities and dioceses nuncio and commissarius, salvation and welfare in the Lord! We declare and know that our aforesaid Pontiff wishes to be known to all the faithful of Christ who reside in the aforesaid provinces, cities, and dioceses, in whatever manner they may be, or who may go to them from other places, and who during the time of their visitation are in need of help.

The Holy Father, in the course of three years, for the protection of the parts of Loveland, for the promotion of the holy crusade against the cruel penitent heretics and schismatics, who rely on the unbelieving "Tartar" for help, will have rendered a helpful hand according to our decree, in addition to the plenary indulgence of sins, as in a most holy jubilee held every hundred years, and besides many other graces and fortunes, which those who are disposed to obtain for themselves and for certain souls of the departed, have graciously permitted and commanded out of the abundance and liberality of the apostolic power: That both they and all their parents and benefactors, who have departed with love, shall have a share for ever in all prayers, intercessions, alms, fasts, supplications, masses, horis canonicis, corporal castsigations, pilgrimages, and all other spiritual things which are and may be done in the whole universal holy contending church and all its members. Moreover, he has also left it to those who are still alive and allowed them to choose as their confessor in the future, in case of other incidents, a competent secular priest, or one from a regular order, from whichever he may be; who, if they live longer, may be their confessor in the cases reserved to the said See, except when someone disturbs ecclesiastical liberty, commits the vices of heresy, rebels against the person or state of the Roman Pontiff, or against the said See, and conspires to falsify the apostolic letters of supplication and commission, invaded the lands and seas subject to the Roman Church, either medially or immediately, plundered, conquered and devastated them, personally insulted a bishop or another prelate, forbade the processes to reach the Roman court, delivered weapons and other forbidden things to the infidels; that once in their lives, but in other cases as often as it will be useful, they may be absolved of their sins, and that salutary penance may be imposed on them, as well as all vows, except when one has vowed to travel to the Holy Land, to visit the apostolic churches of blessed Peter and Paul, or to go to Compostello to St. James. Jacob, to remain celibate, 1) to become a monk, in other works of godliness; that also the confessor, whom each of them will have chosen, will grant them complete forgiveness of all their vows.

It is hereby commanded and decreed by our most holy Pontiff that the sins which they have repented of in their hearts and confessed with their mouths may be forgiven by apostolic power even once in their lives and at the hour of death, as often as they will be at the door, if they should not die that time; however, in this way that this confessor may apply the satisfaction which is to take place to another, also that in no way anything unlawful be committed out of a trust in the remission and forgiveness of said things. Our most holy Lord Pope hereby orders and decides that this indulgence, grace and gift shall not be included in any suspension or revocation, neither now nor in the future, but shall always be considered exempt, as is contained in the apostolic letter issued on this subject. And because the devout in Christ, Adam Lewterer and Margarethe his wife, have contributed godly from their goods to the above-mentioned work of the Catholic faith, according to the intention of the pope 2) and our decree, we testify by the present letter, by virtue of the above-mentioned apostolic power and the power herein entrusted to us, that they can and may avail themselves of the above-mentioned grace and indulgence, become partakers of it and enjoy it. Given at Dresden under our seal, of which we hereby avail ourselves, June 6, 1508.

Formula of absolution in life, so often re.

Have mercy on you 2c. Our Lord Jesus Christ absolve you for the merit of his suffering, and I absolve you from all your sins by his command, by virtue of the apostolic power entrusted to me in this piece and granted to you. In the name of God the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit, Amen.

Formula of absolution and perfect forgiveness once in a lifetime and at every hour of death.

Have mercy on you 2c. Our Lord Jesus Christ absolve you for the sake of the merit of his suffering, and I absolve you by his authority and that of the apostles, which is entrusted to me in this piece and granted to you, first of all from all ecclesiastical excommunication, great and small, if you fall into one, then from all your sins, granting you complete forgiveness of all your misdeeds. In the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, Amen.

1) In the old edition: illegitimate.

2) In the old edition: Hohenpriesters.

Second Section.

The indulgences offered by Popes Julius II and Leo X for the construction of St. Peter's Church in Rome give rise to the Reformation.

A. The indulgences granted under Pope Julius II.

45 Cardinal Pallavicini's historical account of how the construction of St. Peter's Church and the continuation of the same, since there was no money, caused Julium II to issue this indulgence, reporting at the same time who were the general commissioners.

From Ualtavicini llistor. eoueil. Drikteat., lid. I, PSA- 4.

Julius II, who was completely exhausted by the very costly war waged to recapture the lost cities, and by the necessary repair of the seaports for the sake of the Turks, fell upon a mild and willing contribution of the faithful, by which they were to promote the construction of St. Peter's Church, which had already begun. He initially granted an indulgence of one year, but later extended the time according to his liking, and in order to obtain several indulgences and freedoms, he included the respect and reverence for the church buildings that he would choose.

Hieronimus Torniiellus, Vicarius citra montes, Ordinis Minorum, was appointed by the pope as plenipotentiary in twenty-five provinces, where he held the position of Vicarii; and since he died in 1508, he was succeeded by Franciscus Zenus on Jan. 2, 1510; and since the latter also died on July 23, 1512, this office was entrusted to Timotheus Lucensis and Alphonsus Matritensis, after several others, by this same mendicant order. July 1512, this office was entrusted, after some others, to Timotheus Lucensis and Alphonsus Matritensis, of this same mendicant order, and they were at the same time given authority to distribute indulgences in Switzerland.

46. letter of indulgence from Timotheus de Lucă for Dyting's deceased mother. 1513.

From Schellwig's "Prüfung des Pabstthums" printed in Löscher's Reformation Acts, Vol. I, p. 368 ff. This document, together with the two following ones, forms the

A whole, so to speak. The third, No. 48, should have been set first (as it is also set in Löscher, and as the date proves). But we leave it in its place, in order to preserve the agreement with Walch.

Translated into German.

For the deceased.

Because our most holy father, Mr. Julius II, Pope, wishes that by the help of the treasury of the Holy Mother, the Church, the souls of the departed who are in Purgatory may be freed from their punishments: so he has charged us, the brother Timotheus de Lucă, of the Order of the Minorites of the Observance, in regard to the execution of the bull and other apostolic letters which went out for the building of the church mentioned below, of the apostolic see nuncio and commissary general over all Italy, Hungary, Poland, Bohemia, Austria, and some other provinces, that he, the pope himself, has willed that all and every faithful of Christ, who, for the sake of their parents or departed friends' souls who are under the penalties of the purgatory, shall, for the building of the Church of the Prince of the Apostles at Rome, present a full alms, according to our ordinance, participate in the intercessions, fasts, prayers, masses, horis canonicis, disciplines, pilgrimages, and other spiritual goods which shall or may take place in the whole contending Church. And because the venerable Johann Dyting, moved by godliness, through the mediation of Brother Baptistă de Austria, apostolic commissarii, our subdelegate, has deposited an alms for the soul of his deceased mother, Elisabeth, in the box of said building, according to the contents of the bull issued in that case: Therefore, by apostolic authority, we order, by present, that for the soul of the aforementioned deceased, a complete indulgence be granted, for the complete relief of the punishment, and likewise, that she be helped by participation in all the charities described above. Given at Elwing, November 26, in the year of our Lord 1513.

47 Permission given by Timotheus de Luca to Johann Dytting to communicate wherever he wishes. 1513.

Permission to take communion outside the parish and without the priest's consent, as often as devotion drives him, except on Easter Day and at the hour of death.

To all and any venerable bishops, priests, monks and others who will see the present letter, Brother Timotheus de Luca, of the Minorite Order of the Observance, in regard to the execution of the Bull and other letters issued for the building of the Church of the Prince of the Apostles, although unworthy Nuncio and Apostolic Commissary General, wishes constant salvation in the Lord! According to the contents of the present, we certify and attest to you that through us, with the mediation of Brother Baptista de Austria, apostolic commissarii, our sub-delegate, the venerable John Dytting has been granted the freedom and power to celebrate the sacrament of the Holy Supper at any time, except on the feast day of Easter and at the hour of death, from a confessor whom he may choose by himself or by another, because he contributed to the building of the aforesaid church in Rome, that of the Prince of the Apostles, according to an agreement made. Such freedom and power to grant to the faithful in Christ has been granted to us and to our ambassadors by our most Holy Father, Pope Julius II, as is evident from the apostolic letters given in the form of a breve at Rome under the Fisherman's Ring, dated 12 Feb. 1507, in the fifth year of his pontificate. To certify and attest this, we have had the present executed. Given at Elwing, November 26, in the year of our Lord 1513.

(L. S.) I, Frater Baptista, who is named above, have signed with my own hand.

48: Timotheus de Luca's permission for Dytting to choose a confessor. 1513.

Translated into German.

To know to all and everyone who will see present letter that to the honorable Johann Dytting, Wlatislauischer 1) Diocese, together with his wife Agnethe, because of a kind-hearted contribution,

1) Instead of Wlatislaviensis, which we could not locate, Wohl would like to be read Vratislavisusis (Breslauer).

which, according to the apostolic indult set forth below, for the purpose of building the main church of the Prince of the Apostles in the city of Rome, be permitted and allowed to avail themselves of the benefit and freedom of the bulls and apostolic letters of our most holy Lord, Mr. Julius II, Pope, which went out recently, namely in the year 1513, the 13. January, 2) (according to the same letter, the permission or authority granted and given to the venerable father, Brother Franciscus Zenus of Milan, who belongs to the Friars Minor of the Observance, who is also a father to me, Brother Timotheus de Lucă, Vicar General on this side of the mountains, over the whole of Italy, Hungary, Poland, Bohemia, Austria and other provinces of his jurisdiction, as far as the aforementioned friars are concerned, and subsequently to me Untenbenamten, as one of his apostolic authority, deputies and subdelegates, namely in the year 1412, the 28th of June, as far as this matter is concerned. June, as far as this matter is concerned) that he may choose a skilled confessor whom he wishes, be it a secular or a religious priest of any, even a mendicant order; who, after diligently hearing confessions, would be absolved of the excesses and crimes committed by them at the time of their election, as well as of all and any sins reserved to the Roman See; also of ecclesiastical censures, the absolution of which would be reserved to the said See; also of those reserved in the Bull Coena Domini; except those which they have committed on the occasion of an enterprise against the person of the pope, the murder of bishops and other high consecrated prelates, the falsification of the bulls or apostolic letters, the bringing of arms and other forbidden things to the lands of the infidels, on account of the alum of Tolfa, 3) and bringing things from the lands of the infidels to the faithful, contrary to the apostolic prohibition, but not under the hope and pretext of the present concession, and, if satisfaction is made, according to ordinary law, once in life, even on the deathbed, and as often as doubt arises therefore, grant absolution, remission and plenary indulgence; in the

2) This intermediate sentence, which is translated quite incorrectly in the old edition, we have put in parenthesis for the sake of easier understanding. - Franciscus Zenus died on July 23, 1512.

3) Near the town of Tolfa, in the former Papal States, in the village of Allumiera, there are important alum mines that belonged to the Papal See; for these the Pope creates a monopoly here by forbidding the import of Tolfa alum.

However, in cases and censures not reserved, although they would be reserved cases for others who are under the pope, as often as he may require, he may grant absolution and impose a salutary penance; indeed, he may change all and any vows made by them at that time (only those that go over seas and the vows of monasticism and chastity excepted) into other works of love. Likewise, that by apostolic power granted to him by this letter, he is able to administer the sacrament of the Holy Supper to the aforementioned needy at all times of the year, except on the day of Easter and at the hour of death, either by himself or by another. However, these confession slips do not extend to the conversion of those vows or the absolution of sins that were committed before the acceptance of them, because they are to be absolved or dispensed from the vows made and sins committed at that time by those ordained to do so; afterwards they will help them for the future.

However, the pope forbids the ordinaries to interfere in any way with the absolution, dispensation and similar concession made in the above-mentioned cases, or to harass such contributors, or to take them out, under the penalty of excommunication, as a sentence pronounced, and 500 ducats, that they may freely avail themselves of these powers and pardons, because in both foro, namely contentioso and conscientioso, foretold transformations, absolutions and dispensations shall be valid, notwithstanding the statutes and apostolic ordinances and letters of all and every one of our forefathers, the Roman popes, especially Paul II. and Sixtus IV, which, together with all that serves for the contrary, are expressly and sufficiently repealed by the present letter. To certify the best, I, Brother Baptista de Austria, this very Jubilee Commissary of the Order of Minorites of the Observance, subdelegate and deputy to the Superior, have signed with my own hand and handed over the present letter sealed with the seal. Given at Elwing, the 25th of November, in the year of our Lord 1513.

Formula for total absolution, after previous confession. Once in life and in any danger, even in the real or probable hour of death.

Have mercy on you 2c. And after the words of the general absolution, the priest says:

Again, by the power granted to you, but entrusted to me in this piece, I absolve you from all sins, crimes and transgressions, as great as they may always be, and have been committed by you so far, also from all censures, in whatever way you have charged them upon yourself, also from those which are reserved to the apostolic see, as much as given to me power. And again, by plenary indulgence, I remit to thee all the punishment in purgatory which thou hast deserved, according to the above; I also restore thee to that innocence and purity which thou receivedst in holy baptism, so that when thou departest from this temporality, the gates of punishment may be closed to thee, but the door to the joys of paradise may be open to thee. But if you do not die this time, this pardon shall nevertheless be sure and valid for you if you are in mortal distress elsewhere. In the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, amen.

The formula of absolution, which is to be used as often as necessary.

Have mercy on you 2c. May our Lord Jesus Christ absolve you through the merit of his suffering. By this and by apostolic power, which is entrusted to me in this piece and favored to you, I absolve you from all your sins and censures. In the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit, amen.

Formula due to change of future vows.

By this very power, I transform the vow or vows vowed by or for you into another or other works of love (which shall be expressly named), and release you from the same. In the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, Amen.

49: Plenary indulgence granted to the Swiss by Pope Julius II. 1511.

From Hottinger's psutack. kicssrt. ruise, p. 514.

Translated into German.

Beloved Sons! Apostolic greeting and blessing! When we heard a few days ago that you had come down to Italy against the French, not only to avenge the wrong done to us by them, but also to protect us and the Holy Roman Church, whose cities and oratories they, contrary to

We have written to you out of paternal love, praising your deeds and actions, and exhorting you to continue in the war you have begun; we have also granted you complete indulgence and forgiveness of sins. Now, however, we have also been advised to send to you our beloved son Matthaeum, of the title of Cardinal Priest of St. Potentiana, of your nation, our and the Apostolic See's legate, so that you may continue the war with all the more courage and hope and defeat and overpower the common enemies of yours and of the Holy Roman Church, as well as the heretics and the red spirits that they harbor. Furthermore, the legate himself will deliver what has been promised to you according to the settlement reached between us, and because of the dangerous ways could not be delivered to you until now, upon his arrival, and do everything else necessary and required for your honor and benefit, as you will hear from the beloved sons, Anselmo Count, pastor of Uri, our acolutho, and Ulrichen vom Hohenstein (alto saxo), or one of the two, and deliver such faith. Given in Rome at St. Peter's, under the Fisherman's Ring, the 26th Dec. Anno 1511, of our Papacy in the 9th year.

50: Emperor Maximilian I forbids the imperial city of Memmingen to continue paying indulgences to the Dominicans in Augsburg. 1515.

From Schelhorn's amoenitat. litte rar., tow. VI, p. 312.

We Maximilian, by the Grace of God chosen Roman Emperor, at all times Major of the Empire, in Germania, Hungary, Dalmatia, Croatia 2c. King, Archduke of Austria, Duke of Burgundy, of Brabant, and Count Palatine 2c., offer to our and the Empire's dear faithful, Mayor and Council of the City of Memmingen, our grace and all good. Dear faithful! It has come to our attention that the Order of Friars of Augsburg has in various times obtained from Papal Holiness an indulgence and indulgence for the building of their monastery there in Augsburg, on your and several other towns of ours and the Empire, and in virtue of this indulgence have contributed a considerable sum of money to it, and shall continue to do so. Since this has happened without our, as the Roman Emperor's, knowledge and decree, and since those of the Holy Spirit in Saxia at Rome have also acquired such indulgence and indulgence, which we have then received from the Holy Spirit, we are not obliged to pay it.

The Holy Spirit, considering that such money shall be used only for the entertainment of the poor and needy for God's sake. And for divine services, and no other things, at their request, on your and some other our and the kingdom's cities, previously admitted. Accordingly, and so that by such preaching or other indulgences our and the kingdom's subjects may not be exhausted, and those of the Holy Spirit prevented with their indulgences: We earnestly recommend you, with avoidance of our severe disgrace and punishment, and want you to put all the money, which the named preachers or anyone else, outside of those of the Holy Spirit in Saxia, thus obtains, into arrest and prohibition, and that until further notice no one follow our order, Nor henceforth let such indulgences and indulgences of the preaching monks, nor anyone else, but our knowledge, be further publicized, issued, posted, or proclaimed in your city, but send them to us, and against this do no other thing, lest we be caused to act against you in any other way. In this you do our favor and opinion. Given in our city Inspruck on the seventh day of the month Martii, after the birth of Christ fifteen hundred and in the fifteenth, of our kingdoms of the Roman in the thirtieth and of the Hungarian in the fifth and twentieth year 2c.

Emperor Maximilian I revokes the above mandate. 1515.

From Cyprian's preface to des Myconius digtor. rskormat., p. 13.

We, Maximilian von Gots Gnaden, Exalted Roman Emperor at all times Merer of the Empire, in Germania, in Hunger, Dalmacia, Croacia 2c.. King, Archduke of Austria, Duke of Burgundy, of Brabant, and Count of the Palatinate 2c., offer to all our and the Empire's Princes, Prelates, Counts, and Saints, in the provinces of March and Cologne, who have heard of these things, and are requested by this imperial letter of ours, or a true copy thereof, our grace and all our good! Dear, highborn, wolborn, noble and firstborn, dear new [nephews], grandparents, electors, devotees, and faithful! Whereas on the seventh day of the month of Marcii, next Verschinen, we send out our commandment letter to all of you and others, that we place all money, which the brothers of the Order of Preachers at Augspurg, obtained from a Papal Indulgence, for the construction of our monastery there, in arrest and prohibition, and that on our will

But if no one is to be told, nor to have it published further, this has happened for no other reason than that the same preachers have not been permitted to use the Indulgence in the Holy Roman Empire, with our as the Roman Emperor's permission, But because they now, through the Exalted, Empty, our dear devout Doctor Johann Fabri, Preacher of the Order, as Commissarii of the Indulgentz, have made our excuse that they have not asked us for it out of ignorance and no contempt, We have also found that the indulgence we have obtained is lawful, we have herewith revoked our letter of commandment, which we earnestly command you to give to the aforementioned brothers of the Order of Preachers, or to our attorneys, the above-mentioned indulgences, according to the Papal Bulls, in your territories, publicize, issue, advertise, and proclaim them, and what there is of them, let them do so themselves in error, and let nothing prevent you from doing so, and you do so with our sincere consent. Given in our and the kingdom's city of Augsburg, on the three and thirtieth day of April, Anno etc. Decimo quinto, our empire of the Roman in the thirtieth, and of the hunger in the sixth and twentieth year.

Ad mandatum Domini Imperatoris proprium, per Cesarem Sernteiner.

Collation vleißig übersehen und verlesen ist diese gegenwärtige Copi durch mich Jacob Moclin, Bürger zu Augspurg, von Päbstlichen und Kaiserlichen Gewalt ain 1) offen Notari, gleich luttet dem Orginal, das bejahe ich mit meiner eigenigen Handschrift.

B. The indulgences granted under Pope Leo X.

1. written out in Rome itself.

52. bulla of the most plenary indulgence for the construction of the Church of the Prince of the Apostles in the city, which recently went out from the apostolic see. 1517.

From Cherubim dullnruni pontit., pars X, p. 38.
Translated into German.

Leo Bishop, a servant of the servants of God, to all believers in Christ who will read this letter, salvation and apostolic greeting!

Having attained to apostolic majesty, though unworthy, by divine grace:

1) In the old edition: "am".

Among other things that we have always been concerned about and have diligently striven to accomplish, we have also found the care for the salvation of the Christian faithful and the completion of the construction of the cathedral church of the prince of the apostles in the city. For that is most incumbent upon a good shepherd, both to build the heavenly court and to make the flock entrusted to him blessed; but this is found most necessary, to rebuild the church, which is the head of all churches and the throne of the apostolic see. Pope Julius II, of blessed memory, has always been anxious to accomplish both, which is why he has granted plenary indulgences and many spiritual gifts to stimulate the faithful to works of godliness and to lend a helping hand to the construction.

Because we are following in the footsteps of our ancestor, and it is sufficiently known to all Christians that St. Peter was made prince of the apostles by our Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, and the power to bind and loose souls was given to him by divine grace, in the words: "You are Peter, and on this rock I will build my church, and I will give you the keys of the kingdom of heaven. And whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven. And we too, although unworthy, have become successors of the same Heavenly Key Bearer, and sit in the holy church of God in his place, considering that, although by virtue of the apostleship commanded to us by God we have to take care of all the churches throughout the world in such a way that the churches, as houses of God, are not only maintained in their buildings and carpentry, but also, where necessary, repaired, it is especially incumbent upon us to take care of the cathedral church of St. Peter, the prince of the churches of the world. Peter, the prince of the apostles, all the more care and diligence: that, as St. Peter himself was made prince of the apostles by our Savior, so also his cathedral church, which was mostly torn down by our aforementioned ancestor in order to build it up anew, thus among all the churches of the city or the world needs such, be provided with proper and necessary buildings, rebuilt and expanded, and also afterwards maintained in such new construction, expansion and better condition. Moreover, it is also decided that the assets of the church, the Holy Mother, which has to bear so many necessary costs, are not sufficient for the completion of such construction; and that the construction itself will not be completed without God's will.

The Minorites, in their concern for the salvation of the souls of the faithful (especially those in the twenty-five provinces in which the Servant General observes): we have, out of concern for the salvation of the souls of the faithful (especially those who are in the twenty-five provinces in which the Servant General of the Order of Friars Minor observantiae regularis, as they are called, is on the other side of the mountains, and which are to be counted according to the custom of that Order; including all of Italy, Sicily, beyond Pharus, Corsica, Candia, Cyprus, Rhodus, up to Jerusalem, Dalmatia, Croatia, Bosnia, Hungary, Austria, Bohemia and Poland, except the land of the Archbishop of Gniezno, likewise the islands of the Mediterranean Sea), and considering that, although the Christian faithful themselves, who live in these lands and islands, would gladly devoutly wish of the indulgence granted on account of the said building, they nevertheless, because of the vastness of the others, have no opportunity to go personally to the said building, or to deliver by other godly alms to the box ordered for this purpose, nevertheless fatherly decided, in order to promote their souls' salvation and the said building in time, according to the example of our Saviour (who sent his apostles to various parts of the world, to preach the Gospel and to win souls to the Father), in good faith of the Almighty God's grace, and of St. Peter and St. Paul, his apostles, and of all the saints' merits, also with good knowledge, forethought, and fullness of apostolic power, to all the faithful of Christ of both sexes, be they of what state, dignity, degree, order, office, or majesty they may, also to the spiritual monks of all orders, and other seculars, in all countries (except the aforesaid Gniezno) and aforesaid islands, and who come thither, so doing true penance and confession, provided they end within One Year, to be reckoned from the promulgation of the present our letter, and as follows, and so then further, according to our pleasure, the churches in said countries and islands, over which our beloved son Christopher of Forlivo, of the title of St. Mary of the Celestial Altar, has the right to consecrate. We have elevated him to the dignity of Cardinal because of his good life and praiseworthy morals, and for these and the other things described below we have appointed him as our Nuncio and Commissario in the said countries and islands for the year in question, and then further at our pleasure, together with those whom he himself or through others may still appoint and appoint, according to the said nuncio and commissarii, or the salutary order to be ordered by him, or the salutary order to be further ordered by them in their stead, which he shall submit in this case, and into the boxes set for the purpose of the said building by the nuncio or commissario, or subcommissary to be appointed, according to the order and institution of the nuncio, commissary or the notified commissaries to be ordered or further ordered by him in his stead, to actually lay Christian alms, complete forgiveness of all their sins, and to proclaim as many and such indulgences as in a jubilee year, so that they obtain as much of such indulgences and forgiveness of sins as if they personally visited all the churches of said city and outside of it, which the Christian faithful are accustomed to visit for the sake of standing prayers, every day during Lent and throughout the year. And that they may also act with said commissaries, or those appointed in their stead, or again appointed by the same, that they may take a secular or monastic priest from all, even the mendicant orders, as confessor, who, upon their attentive hearing, may confess of all sins, transgressions and misdeeds, however high and terrible they may be, committed by the confessor; also of the cases and curses of excommunication reserved to the apostolic see; also of those which a person has committed by arrest, and which have been carried out with the consent of the parties on account of the interdict, and of which otherwise the indictment would be reserved to the apostolic see (with the exception of conspiracy against the person of the supreme pope, murder of bishops or other high prelates, and forcible laying of hands on them and other prelates, forgery of apostolic bulls and letters, bringing arms or other forbidden things to the infidels, (1) and the alms from our tola, 1) as well as what is brought to the faithful by the unbelievers against our prohibition, once in their life, and of the cases not reserved, always, as often as they desire, grant complete indulgence and forgiveness of all sins, impose wholesome penance, and administer the sacrament of the Lord's Supper (but without the governor's and own priest's detriment), and change all the vows vowed by them beyond the sea; except those to enter the monastery and to remain single, unless their validity is still in question.

1) Compare note 3, Col. 227. Here in the old edition aluminurll is given by: "those about alums and our tulph".

if the person would have been in duality, or if the person would have become unfit for monastic life due to age or illness, or such cause, or if he would have married according to the vows; In which cases we also want the vows to be changed, with the dispensation that the marital debt of the person who married contrary to the vows can nevertheless be discharged, and that he is no longer obliged to enter the monastery after his redemption, but cannot marry the other time; and that everything that is paid from such change of the vows is added to the work of said building.

And furthermore (one may act) with those who in ecclesiastical orders or benefices are defiled with the abomination of simony, if they steer to such work because of their transgression of the rules in this case; if such have been under the ban hereof, and yet have performed mass and other sacred offices, although not in defiance of the keys, or have otherwise maintained divine service, or in any other manner, even if they have improperly usurped church goods at the previous instigation or otherwise; with the exception of bigamy, bisexuality; But as for premeditated murder, if it is secret, that one did not serve at the altar, only in the court of conscience to give release or redemption for it, and to erase all stain or censure of incompetence and disgrace, so coming from it; that they maintain office in the received order, and thus enjoy the ecclesiastical benefices, which are to be regarded as conferred on them anew from then on, and the fruits enjoyed from it, if they also refrain from the canonical hours of prayer and other divine service, by the settlement made:

Similarly, one may act on what has been wrongfully taken and is uncertain, or has been acquired by usury and usurpation; also on what is certain, which one usurer extorts from another, and which, since he should pay the interests, he would not be willing to pay; or which one would owe to some church, which the Roman church should inherit according to the common law. Likewise about goods that come into one's hands, and those who have them do not know or doubt to whom they are to replace them, as well as if what they took were no longer there, or they had gotten it (to whom it belonged). Similarly, about those who have been consecrated or bequeathed without special designation, only for the benefit of the poor and other holy places, or for the marriage of girls, and for masses and other religious services, that their own names and persons have not been noted: both about those past and to make a settlement for the future, so that if anything is paid for the said construction to the same nuncio and commissary, or to those ordered in their stead, or he alone would still like to order, and placed in the boxes themselves, they shall then be completely free from such goods left to them or otherwise wrongfully come into their hands, or obtained by usury, and whatever else they come to, that they do not know or doubt to whom they should return it, as has been said, and may not return such. And what before the promulgation of the letters of our forefather, Pabst Julii himself, was uncollected through such indulgences, even if it was left and given to the ordinaries, but as something uncertain; or what otherwise came to them, and what was claimed by the ordinaries themselves, or in their name, after the promulgation, and paid to them, in whatever way it may be; and what was not due as a debt before the proclamation for certain or uncertain persons and objects, but became a debt after the proclamation; also what is bequeathed, given, or otherwise accrues to the ordinaries themselves, as aforesaid: This is to be freely reclaimed, collected and collected as something that does not belong to them by the commissario and subcommissaries, or those he further appoints, also by ecclesiastical excommunication and fines and other appropriate legal remedies, also with the involvement, where necessary, of secular power.

The same shall apply to all those who have been promoted to the holy or priestly order without any other dispensation before the appointed time, and who have served in the said order. Likewise with those who, in case of affinity, blood friendship, or fleshly or spiritual relationship, arising from right or sinful kinship, are between the baptized and godparents; except for the single or multiple degrees; or by any other impediment to common respectability and justice, or by whatever impediment it may be, knowingly or unknowingly, in the third and fourth degrees of consanguinity and affinity, and by illegitimate intermarriage, if it is only secret, also in the first degree of consanguinity, married, and with carnal intermarriage completed, if only such impediment had never been pending, or could otherwise cause trouble.

Also with those who married in the fourth degree of consanguinity or affinity and did not complete it by fleshly union, that they be free from such guilt and sentence of banishment, of which they would otherwise be guilty thereby, but that, according to the nature of the guilt, salutary penance directed to such construction be imposed on them, and that they henceforth no longer do such things, nor advise, help, and serve others to commit such things, and otherwise be reminded of what is to be done in this connection: that they thus enter into marriage anew, and in this way may remain free and without sin, and their children produced or yet to be produced from such marriage be considered legitimate, namely in the court of conscience alone. Also, as for others than those married in the third degree of consanguinity and the fourth degree of affinity, as stated above, whom we want to be counted free in both courts in this case and freed to marry again publicly; and that the same Cardinal, and to whom he especially entrusts his place in this, although in the fourth degree of consanguinity and affinity, and an obstacle to public respectability and justice exists, may dispense with such marriages.

Likewise, to deal with those who have been promoted above in an improper manner, because of such impropriety and incompetence of which they have been guilty, since they were in charge of the said order of office; also with those who have come to it too early, and are twenty-three years old, that they may also attain to the holy priesthood and serve at the altar. Likewise with all those who, whoever they may be, have property of churches, monasteries and ecclesiastical benefices, of whatever kind they may be, and in the absence of judicial proof cannot be forced to return it, even if it could be proved. Likewise about all goods and legacies, and what else has been bequeathed as inheritance, for compensation of stolen and ill-gotten goods, and may still be bequeathed or granted in the future during the appointment of our Nuncio and Commissarii, as is done by the present letter. Likewise about all wills, donations on account of death, codicils or other last declarations of will, by whom and where they may also occur and during this appointed commission, be it for which church, holy place or persons it may be, certain or uncertain or absent, that because of their absence nothing is to be learned from them, and that otherwise they must also be refunded, but that the persons to whom they would have to be refunded are now no longer entitled to accept the same. Similarly, about everything in wills, donations on account of death, codicils and other last declarations of will for the redemption of the prisoners, even if they have been given to St. Mary of Mercy (de mercede) or the Holy Trinity, the redemption of the imprisoned friars and St. Eulalia of Barcelona; also over inheritance and goods of the clergy and laity dying without a will, so as to have no legitimate heirs, even if the thus consecrated belonged to the said redemption of the prisoners by apostolic benefit. Likewise over all money and other things, so at noon meals and Gastereien and public spectacles, with certain celebration, by reason of vow, statute or use, it is in which place it may, be put on, or during the Nuntii and such Commissarii authority might be put on. All of which we hereby propose for this construction, and condemn the objectors all to the ban sentence and penalty of 500 ducats of gold by the deed itself. Likewise, concerning the restitution of such goods of the churches, monasteries and benefices, we want that against a certain part or sum of them, which are to be used for such construction, those who possess them thus, are counted free from all further restitution, and that they possess them henceforth without hindrance. And that the Nuncio and Commissarius themselves, or those whom he authorizes in general or in particular, may have the power to exclude all doubt, both about the persons to whom freedom to choose a confessor is to be granted, if this already includes entire communities of cities, towns, castles, villages or other places, also colleges, which with all their individual persons, namely said communities, castles, villages and colleges, castles, villages and colleges (if only the confession slip is not drawn on other persons than those who were stated and named in such parishes and colleges at the time of the issued confession slip), would have to decide, dissolve and interpret the lot count of the above-mentioned cases, or one of them, and the dispensation over the same or one of them, as all other doubts. And those who die without confession, whether they have otherwise confessed under a year, if they have only shown signs of repentance at the hour of death, shall nevertheless be free to be buried in a holy place. And they (the Nuncio and Commissarius) shall condemn the objectors to the penalty of excommunication and 500 ducats, which shall come to the building; also reduce and estimate the sum of money, for obtaining such indulgences and other objections, and for freedom to choose such confessors; also allow those of nobility, priests and graduates, a funeral altar, which they may keep with due honor and reverence, and on which (at ge-

(The church is to be held in proper and honorable places, even if they are not holy or ecclesiastical, which may be bound by a common or special interdict of apostolic or ordinary authority, if only they have not given cause for such interdict), before daybreak, but toward daylight, in their presence or in the presence of their trusted servants, according to the contents of the chapter Alma de sentisut. Excommunic. l. 6. they may celebrate masses and other religious services either themselves, who are priests or will be priests at that time, or have them celebrated by other priests, and at the time of such interdict they may attend the service, receive the sacrament and other church sacraments without any disadvantage (except for Easter Sunday), and their bodies may also be buried according to the Christian church manner, but without chasuble.

Likewise, that during fasting and other forbidden times, eggs, butter, cheese and other dairy food, also meat, be used, eaten and consumed with both (that is, the physical and spiritual) doctor's advice, without conscience scruples, in all freedom, (said Nuncio and Commissarius) shall have freedom to grant: (who shall also have power) at the time of a general indulgence, even if it were imposed by apostolic authority, to open one or more churches for the proclamation of such indulgence, and to exempt the same, one or more, from the indulgence, and to hold divine service at open doors, and to have the bodies buried. Similarly, all oaths, be they in commercial contracts, instruments, lists, and prescriptions (except for those taken in the manner of the chamber), are to be enacted solely for their effect, and to be absolved from all perjury, but without harm to a third party. Likewise, all indulgences, including those usually proclaimed by the mendicant orders from the middle of Lent until Easter, and which we as well as our ancestors and the pre-notified See, or its authority, be it churches, monasteries, hospitals, also our (Hospital) of the Holy Spirit in Saxia in the city; likewise of St. Augustine's Order and other holy orders of the Holy Spirit in the city, Augustinian Order and other holy orders, congregations, brotherhoods, whatever they may be, and for whatever use they may be established from spiritual and secular persons, also granted to individual persons; also the complete in life, and all liberties, which any person, whatever his rank and dignity, even if he had the honor of the Cardinals or the office of Legation, over the above-mentioned cases or one of the same has been granted so far (except as much as the preservation of the poor and miserable persons in Saxony).

the Hospices of Rome and St. James in Galicia and the Kingdom of Portugal. We have the right to revoke or suspend the rights of the monarchs in the countries in which these hospitals are located, and which have their borders according to our chancery usage, as well as in some other places, both with regard to the campaign against the Turks and heretics, if they already contain clauses of reservation against all revocation and suspension (said freedoms): when and how often and at what time it seems good to the notified nuncio and commissario or their rulers and sub-rulers to revoke or suspend them. All and any of which (indulgences) we hereby suspend until the said time at our discretion, and declare and pronounce suspended and dormant, with prohibition of all alms collections otherwise done by virtue thereof, and order all and any of the local ordinaries, abbots, and other spiritual and secular persons, whatever their rank, dignities, orders, orders, and sovereignty or honors, to pay a penalty of exile and a fine of 500 ducats, so that they may be guilty of the same penalties by the fact that they do not hinder the proclamation of the said indulgence and the cancellation of the other such indulgences in their churches, cities and districts, where and as often as the same are necessary, or demand something under pretext of the proclamation, or even accept or demand from those who give willingly, and use deceit and trickery in reported matters or otherwise; nor prevent those who seek to benefit from such indulgences and to obtain their benevolent assistance, from doing so, in whole or in part, outright or in a crooked manner, in express words or tacitly; nor even, for themselves or through their vicars or officials, any treasurer of any order, monastery or brotherhood, or hospital, including ours of the Holy Spirit in Saxia, or St. Antonii, or other relatives. Antonii, or other administrators, freedom to build churches: Rather, we want them to find all such alms collectors, who in their jurisdictions, without letters of privilege, want to collect such alms from the Commissario and his rulers, whom he wants to order, with their belongings and goods, which we propose for the said building, and faithfully to the hands of our beloved son Bernhardt, St. Mary in Portiuncula Cardinaldiacons, said building administrator (and supreme overseer), and that they do not in any way dare or undertake to take those who have obtained dispensation and lot counting from him or his agents.

The commissioner shall not be entitled to contest or hinder the power of these letters to obtain dispensation or absolution from the commissioner himself or his appointees and subdelegates to be appointed by them, or to demand some penalty for the case in which the above-mentioned dispensation or absolution has been granted, for the past and the future, according to canonical, imperial laws, statutes or usage.

However, we forbid the aforementioned alms collectors, with the same penalties, not to dare to collect alms in a certain way, nor to let their goods, as reported by the Commissarius and Subcommissarii, or their administrators, because of their (the coffers') fault, thus wither away, be beaten and sold to the said building, presume again in some way, or reclaim from the buyers, accountants (decorioribus) or commissioners, sub-commissioners, or their appointed people. And command, by the same ban and penalty, all preachers of the divine word of all orders, also the beggars, that, as often as the reported Commissarius and his officers ordered by him or their administrators request it, they exhort the above-mentioned believers in Christ to the taxation of said construction; and also, if the said Commissarius and his appointed sub-commissarii have them reminded of this, to refrain entirely from preaching (on the days on which the said indulgence and the abrogation of the other are proclaimed by them or by their order); and the said commissioner and the said rulers shall nevertheless have power to command and interpret all and any of the aforesaid, also to all and any of the aforesaid persons, under the same penalties, as often as they think fit and good; also to annul all oaths, such laymen of both sexes as they may desire, that they may remain with a society, fraternity, or number of some persons, and have done something certain, on account of such fraternity, society, or number, in regard to the said (other) indulgences, liberties, or alms-gatherings, always or for some time, and to absolve them therefrom in some manner; to restrain the blasphemers, contumacious and disobedient by means of ecclesiastical excommunication and other strong legal means, and also, if necessary, to call in the secular arm, and to drive them to couples; and also to institute public processions or parades to the said end, and to have the people and all clergy of all orders, even those who are otherwise exempt, assembled with the ringing of bells for the performance of such works, since then reported assembled clergy under penalty of the

The governor is to precede the ban and leave the commissioners and sub-commissioners the honorary office of initiating the indulgences themselves; likewise, after prior satisfaction, he is to release and remit the said ban and punishments, and also to restart the indulgences that have been initiated.

That also the copies and confession notes in said lands, islands and borders, which are written by the said nuncio and commissario or their appointed and further to be appointed rulers, and he signed or only provided with his seal, be granted faith, for this we give by apostolic power, by virtue of this, power and freedom, and will and command such.

And that the more the souls need other help, the more their salvation will be promoted, and they will not be able to obtain it: We want and grant, out of the said apostolic power, from and out of the treasure of the Church, the holy Mother, to the souls who are in purgatory, and who have departed from this world united with Christ through love, and who deserved during their lifetime that such help should come to them; because we want to help such souls, as much as we can with God, with compassion, out of divine grace and full apostolic power: that if some parents, friends and other believers in Christ, out of pity for the souls themselves in Purgatory, which are kept for the reconciliation of the punishments according to divine justice, during the commission of the Nuntii and Commissarii, contribute to the work of this construction any alms (according to the discretion and disposition of the Nuntii and Commissarii and the authorities ordered by him or to be further ordered), the most plenary indulgence, as an aid to the souls themselves in purgatory, for which the alms intended for them, applied in a godly manner, as above mentioned, will benefit them as an aid through the cancellation of the punishment; and all and every believer in Christ of both sexes, both clergy and monks, as well as seculars, shall lend a helping hand from the same abundance of power and clemency, if they lend a helping hand to the building of the said cathedral church; Likewise, all their deceased parents, benefactors, deceased in love, shall participate in all prayers, masses, canonical hours, flagellations, pilgrimages, and other good works that may be done in the whole universal holy contending church and by all its members, without the aforesaid apostolic statutes and orders, letters of liberty and pardons, even those called the great sea, which the same Order or its persons in general or in particular, under whatever kind of expressions and points it may be, may also have in such a manner.

The only thing that can prevent them from being abolished is that they have been granted by the apostolic authority of their own accord and with good knowledge and from the fullness of that authority. As which we (whether already for their abolition or invalidation otherwise from themselves, or their contents, special, expressly named and own, also from word to word, but not by common or plain clauses or points, from which it could be concluded, clear written message, or otherwise a completely explicit form of speech must be taken and kept, which we all want to be named and incorporated here as well as possible, but otherwise leave them in their power and dignity at another time) only for this time especially and expressly set aside with such our knowledge and complete power, and not let anyone benefit from them; as well as all others which contain the opposite, or if some or their orders have been conferred by the very See, that they may not be condemned by apostolic letters to interdict, suspension or banishment, according to apostolic letters which do not give clear and express notice of such conferment from word to word.

But because it would be difficult to bring the present letters to all places where it would be necessary: We have decided by the aforementioned authority that their copies, signed by one or two notaries with their hand, and sealed with the seal of the nuncio and commissarii, or their sub-commissarii and administrator, if he wishes to set one, or of a prelate, or of a person in ecclesiastical dignity, shall be delivered with the same unquestionable faith that would be delivered to our present letters, if they were to be identified and delivered.

We also want that those who, in the money received from this indulgence, make some misrepresentation, likewise those who, in the above-mentioned matters, or on the same occasion, speak ill of the Commissario and the rulers to be appointed or further appointed by him, or of their order, or say that they have bought the said indulgence and liberties, and made a bargain and settlement with us or with someone else, since they, as obedient sons, have taken the trouble and expense of the said construction for nothing, by the act of which they are to be immediately condemned, and cannot be released from it by anyone other than us or the said commissary, or those specially authorized by him for this purpose, and only at the hour of death; and that the present letters shall not be valid after one year, and whatever else we may decide.

Therefore, no one should dare to invalidate or counteract this deed of ours, decree, order, award (of funds), suspension, declaration, prohibition, prohibition, command, benefit, annulment, will and conclusion (or in all matters where something has been commanded, raised 2c.). But if anyone undertakes such a thing, let him know that he incurs the wrath of Almighty God and of the holy apostles Peter and Paul. Given in Rome at St. Peter's, Anno of the Incarnation of our Lord 1517, Sept. 13, in the 5th year of our papacy.

Jac. Sadoletus.

Cyprianus.

Which letters, after having been diligently read, we have received from the most worthy Father and Lord, Mr. Christopher of Forlivo, of the title of St. Mary at the Altar of Heaven Priest Cardinal and of the whole Minorite Order of Regular Observance General Servant or Ecclesiastic in twenty-five countries. We have been asked by the Most Reverend Father and Lord, Mr. Christoph of Forlivo, of the title of St. Mary at the Altar of Heaven Priest Cardinal, and of the whole Minorite Order of Regular Observance General Servant or Minister, and of the aforesaid indulgences in the twenty-five countries contained in the aforesaid letters, to order them to be kept together with the original itself by our final notary, and to have them kept; To all of which we have attached our decree or order, and for the greater certainty of the foregoing have printed our usual seal in such present. Done in Milan, in the house of our (episcopal) see, January 11, 1518, and of the papacy of our most holy Lord Pabst in the 5th year. In the presence of the reverend Freduli Magnardi, canon of Cererat and priest, Johannis Quirici de Ferrariis, canon of the collegiate church of St. Ambrosii of Iglevano, in the diocese of Novara, as witnesses called, obtained and requested for the above. The copy was made by Baptista, Bishop of Bosro and Comes Scriptor, and the Notary Joh. Thomas of Cavallis, Milanese and Imperial Notary.

The Jesuit Maimburg's report of Leo X's true intention in offering the indulgence shows that he was not concerned with St. Peter's Church in Rome, but that he wanted to give his sister, who was married to Prince Cibo, the proceeds of this indulgence as a bridal treasure.

It can be said with truth of Leo X that he showed all the qualities of a great prince, but did not have all those that belong to a great pope. Therefore, following the inclination of his nature to have everything splendid, he sought to carry out the magnificent construction of St. Peter's, which Julius II had begun. But he had completely exhausted the papal treasury by his inordinate expenditures on splendid things of every kind, which were more befitting for the most powerful monarch than for the governor of one who professes that his kingdom is not of this world. Maimburg [1. C. Sect. 6] continues, that is why, following the example of Julius, he took recourse to indulgences, publicized them everywhere, and allowed those who would deposit the money for the construction of St. Peter's Church to eat eggs and cheese during Lent and to choose a confessor. It must be confessed in accordance with the truth that the popes who followed Leo were much more cautious in dispensing this spiritual treasure, and that at that time some things happened that would not happen now, and through which it came about that Leo's indulgences, which in themselves were very good, became very hated, especially in Germany. For it is reported that Leo immediately and without hesitation attributed to his sister, who was married to Prince Cibo, all the revenues of the indulgence in Saxony and the neighboring countries up to the Belt, and this so that he would give the family of Cibo a reward for the great means of help that were offered to him in time of need. For Leo was expelled from his fatherland Florence and lived in exile in Genoa. There are also writers who claim that this indulgence, in order to obtain cash, was auctioned off and awarded to the highest bidders; These buyers, in order not only to recover the money they had spent, but also to enrich themselves from this shameful trade, would then have hired such indulgence preachers and merchants with considerable money, whom they considered suitable to persuade the common people to pay the indulgence as much as these miserly and church-robbing merchants would offer it. It is certain that at the time when Urban II proclaimed the indulgences for the Crusade, the quaestores, who were appointed to receive the gifts of the faithful, were gradually challenged and corrupted by avarice, so that they finally committed great abuses in the exercise of their office.

The letter of indulgence issued by Bartholomew Farratinus as Leo X's commissary on Nov. 18, 1515, at Rome. Commissarius, Nov. 18, 1515, at Rome.

From Kapp's "Collection of Some Writings Belonging to the Papal Indulgence," p. 46.

Translated into German by LI. Joh. Erh. Kapp.

To all and every venerable secular priest, and of whatever orders they may be, also to the regular mendicant orders, Bartholomew Farratinus, Canonicus of the chief church of the most noble Apostle in Rome and Commissary ordered to the things described below, wishes salvation and blessedness in the Lord! So that the obtained spiritual gifts of grace, which our holy father and lord, lord Leo, by divine providence of that name the X. Pabst, voluntarily, to invite the faithful of Christ to the works of godliness and mercy, and to lend a helping hand to the chief church of the chief apostle in Rome, according to the contents of the apostolic bull of a plenary indulgence on account of that church, issued under the date: Rome, in the thousand five hundred and fourteenth year after the incarnation of the Lord, the 10th of Jan, in the other year of our papal reign, that the good Lord Bertoldus, of the Bamberg diocese, may enjoy and rejoice in it for the blessedness of his soul: We hereby testify that this Bertoldus, because he has offered something out of his abundance of love to the said church and has lent it a helping hand, has, according to the said bull, obtained complete and free authority to choose a skilful confessor from among you; who, after hearing his confession diligently, shall tell of the misdeeds, infirmities and sins committed by him, whatever they may be and however great they may be, also of the cases which are reserved to the apostolic see, even if they are of such a nature that the apostolic see should be consulted for counsel; likewise of ecclesiastical punishments, if they were awarded by a judge at someone's request, to which, according to the agreement of the parties, one would be subject because of an ecclesiastical prohibition, and the absolution of which would be reserved to the said See; nor less from those cases which are reserved in the Bulla coenae Domini (to be read on the day of the institution of the Lord's Supper), with the exception of the enterprises intended against the person of the highest priest, the killing of bishops or other prelates, the laying of violent hands on them or other prelates, the falsification of the papal documents, or the violation of the constitution of the church.

The following are the penalties that are imposed on the unbelievers for the alumnae of the Holy Scriptures and the apostolic letters. Rom. Church, and [things,] which one has brought from the unbelievers to the believers against the apostolic prohibition: once in life, and in the cases not reserved, as often as he shall have demanded such, and in the hour of death, as often as it should be doubted, impart to him plenary indulgence and forgiveness of all his sin, impose salutary penance, and administer Holy Communion (except on Easter Day and in the hour of death) at all other times of the year; as well as to annul all the vows he has made (except the vows to travel to the Holy Land, to enter the clerical state, and to surrender to chastity) for the benefit of the said building (if the confessor will have contributed from his fortune); but if he does not contribute anything of his fortune, to change it into other works of godliness; as also all oaths in contracts, instrumentis and obligationibus (except those made in the manner of the chamber) can and may be abated, all according to their effect. That also equally said electing person may eat and enjoy eggs, butter, cheese and other dairy foods, as well as meat, during fasting and other forbidden times, freely and without any scruple of conscience, according to the advice of both physicians; that also, if said person will be of nobility or a clergyman, he/she/it will have a supporting altar, which he/she/it shall hold with due reverence and honor, and on which in for this purpose comfortable and honorable oertens, even if they are not holy and by ordinary power are subject to a church prohibition. Furthermore, that they, before it is light and bright day, but at daylight, in their and their housemates' presence, either themselves, if they will be a clergyman at the time, read mass and administer the other services, or have them administered by others; that they continue to attend services at the time of such a church ban, and their body (but without Leichgepräng) be buried in the graveyard. Finally, that they receive as much and the same indulgence and forgiveness of sins, which the persons, if they personally attended all the churches, which are in the city [Rome] and outside of it, every almost day, and are visited for the attainment of the stations of said city; namely, by going to one or some church or churches, according to said commissarii or other commissarii, of one or some, which one would like to deputize and subdelegate for this purpose, wise and to be established about this.

The Pope and the Pope's order, devoutly went, and in the boxes, which for the purpose of the said building were to be set by them, Godly alms really put in, would obtain, by apostolic power, which is granted in the said letter, can and may obtain; all and every statutes, ordinances and apostolic letters of all and every Roman popes, our ancestors, but especially the bulls of Paul II. and Sixtus IV, which are expressly and sufficiently contradicted by the said letter, as well as all other things contrary thereto, notwithstanding. Incidentally, this above-mentioned most holy lord forbids in the above-mentioned letter the Ordinary, as well as all and everyone, under the penalty of excommunicationis latae sententiae (the conferred sentence of excommunication), even in the case of loss of 500 ducats of soluble gold, which are to be used on the aforementioned building, so that after the indulgence granted, confession heard and absolution obtained from the aforesaid cases, to interfere in any way, or to hinder or disturb the contributors, so that they may not freely use, obtain, and enjoy the aforesaid obtained gifts of grace. To certify this, we have drawn up the present letter and affixed our seal to it. Date Rome in the Porticu of St. Peter. In the year following the birth of the Lord 1515, and in the 6th day of the month of Novembris, in the third year of the papal reign of our most holy Lord Leo, by divine providence of that name of the tithe.

The above-mentioned Bartholomew, Commissarius, signed it with his own hand.

Form of a perfect absolution "after previous confession.

Have mercy on you 2c. And after the words of general absolution, the priest says: And again, by apostolic power granted to you and entrusted to me, I absolve you from all the sins, infirmities and misdeeds you have committed so far, be they as great as they may; also from all the punishments you have deserved, in whatever way it may be; also from the cases reserved to the apostolic see, as far as power is given to me. And again, by virtue of a plenary indulgence, I forgive you all the punishments you owe to suffer in Purgatory for the sins committed, and restore you to the innocence and purity you received in Baptism,

So that when you depart from this world, the gates of punishment will be closed to you and the door of paradisiacal pleasures will be opened. And that if you do not fall at that time, nevertheless, when you will be in the time of death, this grace will be kept for you unharmed. In the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit, amen.

Lucas, notary, signed it.

55: Letter of indulgence and brotherhood of Francis of Tripontio, which he sold as commissary of the Hospital of the Holy Spirit in Saxia de urbe in Rome on 27 Feb. 1516, so that the collected indulgence money could be used to feed the whore children laid to rest in Rome, among others.

From Kapp's "Sammlung," p. 65. Translated into German by M. Joh. Erhard Kapp.

For the deceased.

To the praise and glory of Almighty God the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, Amen. For the maintenance of the Hospital of the Holy Spirit in Saxia, Rome, and of the poor, sick and foundlings therein; for the repose of the faithful souls who are purifying themselves in the holy purgatory, so that they may be completely freed from the punishments of the same by the mercy of God and the power of the great Roman Pontiff, our most holy Father in Christ and Lord, Lord Nicolaus, by divine providence of that name the fifth pope, after having granted indulgences to the people who are still alive, has granted a plenary indulgence to the souls of the deceased, for which alms would be given according to the good pleasure of the commissaries; namely in the following words: If anyone among them will give the said quantum to this hospital for the souls of the father and mother or other deceased, who have departed from this life in sincerity of faith, unity of the holy Roman Church, in obedience to us and our ancestors, the Roman Pontiffs, in a contrition and perfect confession (if one has had time and can confess): To all these departed in Christ, we leave, out of God's mercy, in which we have a greater trust in heaven than we forgive out of His power on earth, all the punishment which they may receive after this life.

For the cleansing of sins they deserve to suffer, out of the foretold power and mercy in the Lord, and forgive them such. This indulgence has been confirmed and approved by our most holy Father in Christ and Lord Leo, by divine providence of this name of the X. And because Johann Bürger has given the alms set forth in the bulls for the souls of Conrad Bürger and Margarethen, Conrad's housewives, then these souls receive, per modum suffragii, per petition, plenary indulgence and complete forgiveness of all sins. According to the content of the apostolic letter. Hof Regnitz, the 27th of Februarii, in the year 1516.

For those who are still alive.

In the name of the holy and inseparable Trinity, the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit, Amen. This is the indulgence given to the Hospital of the Holy Spirit in Saxia at Rome and to its benefactors and confreres. In particular, Honorius, the fourth pope of that name, gives the magister and the friars and procurators the power to establish and absolve from all kinds of usury, robbery, murder-burning, except when it happens in the churches; as well as from other things obtained in an evil and illicit way, if the right lord is not found. Likewise, they may confuse all vows, except when someone vows to go to Jerusalem; as well as absolve from the vigils that have been omitted by clergymen. Likewise, Bonifacius permits absolution from usury, capital murder, oppression of the poor, and incest, as well as from all the others mentioned above, like Honorius. Likewise, he forgives the seventh part of the expiated penance to the benefactors, makes the benefactors and confreres partakers of the indulgence of the stations of Rome and the consecration of the holy Roman church, and wants them to have their share in those who go on pilgrimage to the promised land. He also gives perfect forgiveness in the hour of death to those who give alms. Likewise, Urbanus, who is called the Fifth Pope, gives the benefactors and confreres the power to choose a confessor who can absolve them completely once in life and at the hour of death from all cases, including those reserved to the apostolic see. Likewise, he puts all those under a great ban who want to hinder or disturb this salutary work by reserving absolution to himself or his successors. Likewise, Pope Sixtus IV allows that all the Christian believers of both sexes, both ecclesiastical and secular, who are written in the book of the brotherhood, may choose a secular or unregulated clergyman as their confessor, who, after hearing confession from the persons who have chosen him, shall once, if they live longer, absolve them from all and any crimes and sins, as well as from banishment and ecclesiastical punishments, even on the occasion of a simony, which is to be obtained on obtaining the order, or benefices, or other cases, which are reserved either specifically or generally to the Roman Pontiff or Apostolic See, and for which the See itself might reasonably be inquired (except heresy, rebellion or conspiracy against the person or state of the Roman Pontiff or the Apostolic See, as well as personal offense against a cardinal, patriarch, archbishop or bishop of the Holy Roman Church, and priestly murder), and at the hour of death may receive perfect forgiveness of all sins, even those that have been exempted; so that if they have not died at that time, this or another confessor chosen in this way may repeat such, but in other cases as often and as much as it will be useful. Likewise, the clergy, enrolled as confreres, may obtain absolution and dispensation from any irregularity (except bigamy and willful death) in the foro of conscience from the confessor they may choose. Likewise, the said confreres 1) may annually, throughout the whole Pentecostal Octave, choose a confessor who may absolve them completely from all cases, also from those reserved to the Apostolic See, except those exempted from the foregoing. Likewise, the said confreres who are enrolled in the brotherhood and have been excluded from it, have the papal blessing; and if they die at the time of an interdict, even if it has been imposed by the apostolic see, they shall be buried without funeral pomp, if they have not been the cause of the interdict. Likewise, the said confreres have a yearly share in two and thirty thousand masses and so many psalms, and in all the goods that happen and can happen in the whole Order, both in life and after death in eternity. Also Pope Leo X. fixes all and each of the things now described, approves of them, extends them, and permits such things anew, as with more in his and all other Roman Pontiffs' letters.

We, Francis of Tripontio, of the holy and apostolic Hospital of the Holy Spirit in Saxia at Rome, by apostolic power commissary to Germany, inform and know all and every venerable clergyman, as well as the regulars of every order: How on the day set forth below, Johann Burger, beloved in Christ, together with his wife Catharinen, and two sons Matthias and John, moved by devotion, have joined the holy brotherhood of the aforementioned hospital, and have been inscribed in the book prescribed for this purpose, and they also receive all the gifts of grace and complete forgiveness of their sins, which have been given to the confreres by the Roman Pontiffs. Also, by apostolic power entrusted to us, we make them partakers of all early Masses, fasts, chastisements, offices, alms, and all other good things that happen and will happen in the whole Order, both in life and after death. For the purpose of further confirmation, we have drawn up the present letter and affixed it with the seal of which we hereby avail ourselves. Given at Hof an der Regnitz, the 22nd of the month Februarii, in the year of the Lord M.D.XVI.

Formula of absolution.

Have mercy on you 2c. Our Lord Jesus Christ deigns to absolve you from the merit of his most holy passion. And I, by his and his holy apostles Peter and Paul's power, which is entrusted to me and granted to you, absolve you from all bonds, both great and small, of banishment, suspension and interdict, if you have fallen into them, and restore you to the holy sacraments of the church and unity of the faithful. I also absolve you completely from all your sins, which you have confessed, repented and forgotten, as well as from the cases reserved to the apostolic see, as far as the keys of the holy mother, the church, extend, and as far as it is granted to you and entrusted to me. I also restore you to the innocence and purity in which you were when you received Holy Baptism. I also forgive you all the punishment that you owe to suffer in purgatory. I will close the gates of hell for you and open the gates of paradise for you. Also, all the good you have done, or may do, will increase your happiness and divine grace.

1) "Confreres" put by us instead of "confessors" in the old edition.

And if he is a priest or clergyman, it shall be said: I absolve you also by this very authority from the Officiis and Vigils omitted by you, as well as from Simony and Irregularity, if you have committed any.

But the sick person shall be told: And if thou shalt not die of this disease, even so shall absolution be perfect unto thee, until thou draw thy last breath. In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, Amen.

John of Rome, by order of Mr. Francisci, Commissarii. Conrad Müller wrote it.

56. M. Enoch Widemann's news of this Tripotinus.

From M. Enoch Widemann's Höfischer Chronik, which is in the Rathsarchiv zu Hof, printed in Kapp's "Sammlung", p. 66.

In February 1516, a Roman traveller, Franciscus Tripotinus, who had been wandering in Germany for almost a year, arrived here at the court and received a rich indulgence for all sins, disgraces, vices, and wickedness, such as burning, robbing, murdering, killing, committing incest, oppressing poor orphans, neglecting church services, usury, and also salvation from purgatory. 2c., to all those who have given substantial alms for the maintenance of a hospital in Welschland, in Saxia de Urbe, where poor people, and whorish and foundling children put away by the clergy should be educated (as this Hudler has handed over notes about this to the people without shyness). That Germany therefore had to help the Welsh with its money, and raise their whore children, as if it were a work especially pleasing to God, so that heaven could be earned, and the torment of the sheaths avoided. From this it now appears clear whether D. Luther had an untimely zeal, since he turned away from the papacy by God's intervention and attacked with his writings such impudent boys (as monk Tetzl was in the Mark), who not only shamefully cheated Germany out of money, but also gave cause with such letters for all kinds of atrocious sins and disgraces, which God forbade in His law.

2. by the general commissions in other countries as well.

a. Joh. Angelus Arcimboldus and Christoph de Forli and their subcommissaries Tetzl and Samson.

57 Hermann Bonni Relation, how Arcimboldus was seen with his indulgence in Lübeck in 1516, and had silver cauldrons and frying pans made there.

From the eoruvevkio eüronie. Uudee., x. 134. This book is printed in 1678 in Dctav.

Anno 1516 Pabst's Leonis X. Legatus and Executor indulgentiarum, Johannes Angelus Arcimboldus, came to these countries, and finally also to Lübeck. He was brought in with great pomp and a splendid procession, and he collected a great deal of money in these countries through the letters of indulgence; however, this subsequently caused much confusion, because all of Germany was divided into different religious opinions. He had a whole silver service made for him in Lübeck, as well as silver kettles and silver frying pans, from the indulgence money collected in Denmark, Sweden and Lower Saxony; he had a bill of exchange merchant, a citizen of Cologne, named Antonius the Nale, with him, who immediately had to transfer this indulgence money to Augsburg and Italy by bill of exchange. This Antonius der Nale was strangled at night in a whorehouse in Lübeck, then secretly thrown into a puddle, and thus found dead.

58: Emperor Maximilian's order for Arcimbold to lay out his indulgences in Meissen. 1516.

From Tentzel's "Historischer Bericht," Vol. I, p. 102 reprinted in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, Vol. I, p. 387.

We Maximilian, by God's grace chosen Roman Emperor, at all times Major of the Empire, in Germania, in Hungaria 2c., confess that we have allowed and permitted the venerable, our dear devout John Arcimboldo, papal legate, knowingly with the letter, so that he may publicize and use the papal indulgence in the monasteries of Meissen and Camin, and have and take all the money that falls from it,

We sincerely commend this to our princes, the bishops of Meissen and Camin, and want them to follow the aforementioned papal legate with such jubilee money without confusion. This is our serious opinion. Given in our castle Ehrnberg, on the 27th day of August, Anno 1516, in the 31st year of our realm.

59 A letter of indulgence signed by Tetzel's hand, feria tertia post Lamperti Anno 1516.

From Hottingen's xrirnit. Heickelb. S. 29.

To the devout and beloved in Christ JEsu, Petro Currificis and Anna, his wife, we Bartholomew, the undeserved Prior of the Order of Predicants, wish salvation and abundant grace of God! Since your godly devotion, which you bear especially towards our Order, justly requires that we graciously communicate to you the benefits bestowed upon our Order by the most holy grace of the Savior: For this reason I give you the grace that you may be especially made partakers of all the masses, prayers, sermons, vigils, mortifications, 1) fasts, labors, and the other good works which our Lord Jesus Christ will have performed by the friars of our convent, both in life and in death; so that by the help of many voices you may earn both here the riches of grace and there the reward of eternal life. Next to this I will and decree that after your departure your souls shall be committed to the prayer of our fraternity, as soon as your death shall have been made known to us. For its authentication and testimony I have preprinted the seal of my priory. Given Tuesday 2) after Lamperti in the year of the Lord 1516.

Johann Tetzel.

60. memoirs, instructions and statutes of the venerable father, Mr. Johann Angeli Arcimboldi, Juris utriusque Doctoris, Brobst of Arcisate, of the apostolic see Protonotarii, and of the most holy in Christ Father and Lord, Pope Leo X, Referendarii, and to the

1) "Mortifications" put by us instead of "moderations" in the old edition. In Latin, eastiZutionnm will be found.

2) tvriu tertiu post l'Anperti is given in the old edition by: "the third Feyertag after Lamperti".

Cologne, Trier, Salzburg, Besancou, Bremen, Upsal and the same; likewise Cambray, Dornick [Tournay], Teronane, 3) Arras and Camin, cities and districts Nuntii and Commissarii, to proclaim and distribute the indulgences and liberties for the building of the cathedral church of the Prince of the Apostles in the city of Rome; which the said Commissarius agrees to keep unbreakably, under the penalty named in such apostolic bull of indulgences, set by the Most Holy Our Lord, and pronounced by his sub-commissarii and sub-deputies, as well as all and any preachers and priests who may be appointed or yet to be appointed in the work of the aforesaid Holy Indulgence.

From Kapp's "Nachlese," Theil III, p. 176. Translated into German.

First of all, the reported provost and apostolic commissary orders that said confessors or penitential preachers, whom either the commissary or the subcommissarii appointed or to be appointed by him shall be of a tender conscience, people of good life and at least mediocre learning, who know how to distinguish between good and evil, leprosy and leprosy, that is, sin and sin, and that they are willing to promote the glory of Almighty God and the Holy Apostolic See, and the salvation of the faithful who wish to confess to them, and to drive the people to the acquisition of said indulgences and liberties, and to solve the confessionalia, according to their ability; and that said confessors and penitential preachers are bound to vow and swear into the hands of the Commissarii or one of his deputies to keep what is set forth below; and that they also, as soon as they are chosen as confessors, consider themselves bound to keep everything described above or below in the same manner as if they had promised it with a bodily and proper oath.

Likewise, he decrees that in all places where the cross is raised for said indulgence, as long as it is erected, daily, or as often as the Subcommissary deems fit, after Vespers and the Completorio, the praise of the Blessed Virgin Mary and of the cross, according to the manner customary in the respective places, shall be sung by the clergy.

3) See the first note to the following number. "Teronane" will have come in by double reading of lornueensem and omission of LLorivensem.

and the penitential preachers, with white staffs, and the subcommissary standing in their midst, shall be solemnly and devoutly offered before the cross. And when such stationes have been performed, the Commissarius or Subcommissarius shall join the confessors and penitential preachers in the sacristy, for the resolution of any doubtful knots and scruples that may occur.

Likewise, the subcommissarii shall see that all confessors and penitential preachers have a place in the church where the cross is erected, according to their dignity, as they hear confessions, and follow the penitential preachers in Rome therein; and that their chairs stand in proper places of the church, with their names and surnames in large letters, and the pope's coat of arms printed on such chairs. Nor shall they hear confession anywhere else than in the church where the cross was erected, except for persons who are prevented, such as the sick, the aged, and pregnant women, and others of the like, even those of nobility, and if it seems good to any of the said sub-commissioners that some persons and cases of conscience be heard in confession in other places besides the said church, but which are suitable for it, it shall be left to their consideration.

Likewise, in every parish and large city where the said liberties and indulgences have been proclaimed, as long as the cross is erected, there shall be at least three sermons a week throughout the year, namely on Sundays and other feast days of the week; or if there are no feasts, on Wednesdays and Fridays 1) (feria quarta et sexta). During Advent and Lent, however, only one sermon is to be preached at the proper hour, and two on feast days in the church, where the cross will be erected. The preachers should know that they are bound in their conscience to explain the bull and its articles to the people in their sermons, together with the immeasurable benefit they can obtain for their souls from such indulgences; and also the liberties contained in the bull, with the exception of all scruples; but only according to the texts in which the cases are contained in which they can obtain absolution or dispensation. And they shall first of all promote the salvation of the Christian souls, then also the benefit of the Roman Church, for the building of the main church of St. Peter, that also the preachers as well as the confessors shall be instructed by it to some extent, and all shall learn what they have to look at and do primarily.

1) Here in the old edition tsria Quarta et sexta is given by: "Thursdays and Saturdays".

The preachers should take care to instruct the people that the present indulgence has its full power and validity, so that they will go about acquiring it all the sooner when they hear from the preacher's word that everything is correct and certain; That the most holy Lord, our Lord the Pope, has full and perfect power to grant the same plenary indulgence for the living and the dead, and the forgiveness of all sins and punishments that one might suffer in purgatory, and all the liberties written below, because he, by handing over the keys from the hands of our Lord Jesus Christ to St. Peter with his successors, said: And what thou art on earth 2c. is the governor of GOD on earth; and whoever doubted this authority doubted the Christian faith and would not be a Christian. Furthermore, they will explain the urgent, indeed, emergency causes why the Most Holy One, our Lord, was moved to grant such an indulgence as is written in the beginning of the bull, namely, because the church of St. Peter and Paul, which is the head of all the churches of the world, was taken down to the ground by Julio, of blessed memory, with the intention and intention of building another, new one, the like of which does not exist in the whole world. As it is reasonable, because it is the head of all others, and with it the seat or residence of the Pope, and innumerable bodies of martyrs and other saints lie there, which in such cremation are always disfigured by rain and hail (weather). As a result, the same unburied and irrigated heap cannot remain lying there any longer without great disgrace to their holiness and to the whole of Christendom. But since the church itself has been started with such costs, and the income of the whole Roman church would not be sufficient for its perfection, its holiness has had to seek the accession of the believers in Christ, and has thus provoked them to it with the indulgences, which are St. Peter's own treasure. But since it is proper that their goods be used for the benefit of the Church, all the faithful of Christ should be exhorted to contribute to it, because St. Peter offers them his treasure and the kingdom of heaven. By and by, the said preachers and confessors will finally come to the matter itself, and present that in the present bull there are four main graces, each of which can be obtained separately, without the other.

First of all is [the grace of] perfect forgiveness of all sins. About which grace nothing higher can be said, considering that the man who, through sin, is deprived of the divine

And that all the punishments which one should suffer by right in purgatory because of sin committed and divine majesty offended, are thereby forgiven him, so that when he then dies, he leads straight to heavenly glory. And although nothing can be rewarded according to dignity in order to acquire such grace, it seems that in order to entice everyone the more to acquire it, the following can be well observed or arranged:

First of all, everyone who has repentance in his heart and confesses with his mouth, or who has repentance in his heart, with the intention of confessing in due time, should visit at least seven churches set apart for this purpose, where the coat of arms of the pope is affixed, and in each church devoutly say five Pater noster and five Hail Marys, to the glory of the five wounds of our Lord Jesus Christ, through which our redemption was effected, or the Miserere, God, have mercy on me 2c, which psalm is extremely useful for obtaining forgiveness of sins. The sick, however, and those who are otherwise incapacitated, shall visit seven altars, which the commissary or subcommissary shall appoint in the church where the holy cross is erected, on which shall also hang the coat of arms of the pope, with like devotion and prayer. And if the persons are so ill that they cannot well come to such a church, their confessor may appoint an altar in a suitable place, according to his condition, that they may visit such and acquire the indulgence with prayer in the same way as if they visited seven churches; but for those who are lying in bed, some prayers and some devotional image may be arranged. And in the case that someone else asks to be excused from visiting the said churches and altars for one reason or another, the confessors may well allow it, according to the cause involved; but that, on the other hand, a greater tax be levied. However, in order that the tax for building the main church of the Prince of the Apostles may be increased, the confessors and penitential preachers, when explaining to the confessors the power and merits of plenary indulgence, must first ask them finely: What and how much they would like to give according to their conscience? so that they can then persuade them to pay the tax. And because the status and devotion of people is so varied and diverse that the reported Commissary cannot consider everything and set certain rates according to it, your paternal dignity has meant that according to the conscience of the people, they should be able to give more.

My louse therefore a difference to meet that about said attendance of the churches all Christ believers of both sexes steer approximately in the following way, namely:

The kings, queens and their sons, archbishops, bishops and other great princes, shall pay only 25 Rhenish florins.

The abbots, high prelates of the cathedral churches, counts, barons and other wealthy lords and their wives shall each pay 10 such florins.

Other prelates and lesser nobles, and governors (that is, parish priests) of large estates, and all others who earn 500 such (Rhenish) florins from permanent income or goods, or otherwise commonly during the year, shall pay 6 such florins.

Other citizens and merchants who collect 200 guilders shall pay 3 similar guilders.

Other citizens, merchants and craftsmen who have their own income and family, at least one such guilder. Other lesser, who have something in their own income or from their trade, half a similar florin.

The others, according to the confessors' state of mind. Which confessors shall examine very carefully how grievously, often, and how long the confessors have sinned, also their state, fortune, and conscience; and if they wish or are able to give more, they shall exhort them to do so, but if they do not wish or are not able to give more or so much, they shall not let anyone, if only to promote the building of the church, as much as they can, without mercy, because here the salvation of the faithful in Christ is sought so much as the promotion of this building. And those who have no money, may repay it with prayer and fasting. And what is said of men is also understood of their wives and adult sons, who may have peculium. And it is to be known that reported wives, so that they otherwise cannot manage without the will of the men, can nevertheless steer to this use of their given or contributed property, or other property coming to them by right, even against the will of the man.

b. The other main grace is the confession slip. Whereby the preachers and confessors shall particularly state and declare what most important and great liberties are given them: especially to choose a competent confessor, who shall absolve them from all banishment pronounced by a man, on the consent of the parties, and from all grave crimes otherwise before the apostolic see.

The priests may release the sins they have retained, once in life and at the hour of death; but at other times, as often as necessary, and once in life and at the hour of death, they may grant complete remission of all sins, and change all vows, except those of monasticism, chastity, and Jerusalem [pilgrimage], which have been publicly or solemnly vowed, into other godly works; likewise, they may administer Holy Communion at all times of the year, except at Easter and at the hour of death.

The third main good or grace is the communion of all goods of the church. And the said preachers and confessors will indicate a high value of the same: namely, that those who control such St. Peter's building and their deceased parents, who are different in love, may now and forever have a share in all prayer, intercession, almsgiving, fasting, supplication, masses, canonical hours of prayer, mortifications, pilgrimages, and all other spiritual goods that happen or may happen in the universal holy contending church, and by all its members. Which two main goods, the confession booklet and the community of all goods, the aforementioned Commissary, for the greater convenience of the believers in Christ, has set out a certain summa and ordered to be given to them, so that they are included in the confession booklets; therefore, it should be brought to their attention what goods of grace they obtain from the confession booklets.

The aforementioned Commissary also wanted that, in order to entice the believers in Christ to purchase them even more, and not to exclude the poor from such gifts of grace because of their poverty, each confession slip be distributed for the fourth part of a Rhenish gold guilder; however, so that four of these make one such guilder; Unless those of nobility or wealth, out of devotion or weariness, want to give more, which several shall then be placed in the indulgence box, above the ordinary treasury; or if the like are to be lent to a college or monastery of male or female gender, then their number and wealth must also be taken into account. For if they live on their own income, they shall give 10 or at least 6 such florins. Similarly, only one person is to be written on the confession slips, unless husband and wife, who are in one flesh, and father and sons, who are still in paternal power and have nothing of their own, are to be counted as one. The others shall make individual confession slips for their friends and relatives as they wish. The poor, however, will be taken care of in their own time.

shall be granted. The four mendicant orders, however, which will have to deal with the matter, shall receive the same free of charge for each convent or monastery of the place where the indulgence is announced. They can therefore write the confession note themselves and have all the brothers' names put on it, and it will be made out in the proper form. But they have to note that they cannot be given completely free of charge, according to the bull. They may then endeavor to acquire such by promoting the work with sermons and confessionals, encouraging and exhorting the faithful to steer diligently, in the certain confidence that they and other brothers and monks, whatever order they may be, may enjoy the grace of the said confessionals, choosing special confessors as they will 2c., regardless of what other liberties and statutes their orders, even if confirmed and affirmed by apostolic authority, may say against it.

It is also to be noted that in order to acquire said two main graces (or rights), it is not necessary to go to confession or to visit churches, but only to solve the confession slip. And although some think that they are already well provided with confession slips, because they have others, the preachers and confessors should teach them well that so many and high graces are bestowed upon them therein that the faithful in Christ may never tire of them, but as much as the overflowing and mild apostolic See bestows for the salvation of souls, they should also redeem them and never neglect the apostolic graces that make souls blessed. Furthermore, they should know that two great graces are included in present confessionals, which do not easily occur in others, namely the redemption from the ban, which is also pronounced by a man, and because of the communion, which the confessor to be chosen may administer. The matter described below is also to be well remembered and well explained and presented to the believers in Christ: namely, that in all confession slips only once in life and at the hour of death is absolution from the cases reserved to the apostolic see, and complete forgiveness of all sins and indulgence given; therefore, as many times as they have confession slips, so many times in life can they be absolved from such reserved cases and obtain complete indulgence. For it is good to have several confession slips, because of the frailty of the human race, which is all too inclined to sin; and thus, as often as one angers God in the reserved cases, so often can he obtain redemption by the authority of his governor. And thereupon the Preachers and confessors should indeed do this, and make it clear to the people that during this indulgence the confession slips they have or will have are of no use for its proclamation, because their power rests (or is stopped) in the meantime, but afterwards, when it is over, they regain their power.

d. The fourth main grace is for the souls in purgatory, because of the complete forgiveness of sins; of which the preachers and confessors should also explain the power and virtue well, and at the same time imagine that, since the dead cannot help themselves, those who enjoy and hold their goods are obliged and guilty to ask for their reconciliation, and to invest some of the goods left to them for the salvation of their souls. Therefore, he is to be considered most ungrateful who perhaps possesses a large amount of the deceased's goods, if he does not want to spend a little for their benefit and best. And it is most unjust that the poor deceased must be plagued with such heavy penalties of sin for so long, since he could get rid of what he left behind with a little money, and of which, for example, his inheritance, without asking for it. For no one will doubt or reasonably contradict that such a complete indulgence, at least by way of petition or as an aid, will be granted to the souls in purgatory, for whom alms are given, for the complete remission and annulment of their punishments.

Therefore, with these and similar reasons, they will be driven to pay taxes for their parents, relatives, friends and benefactors. Which tax shall be according to the first taxation of the feast of jubilee, so occupied for the living. However, Christian believers should know that the more they receive charity and property from the deceased, the more they are obliged to pay taxes. In this case, there is no need for repentance in the heart and confession with the mouth, because such grace is based only on the love in which the dead differ and on the tax of the living.

(2) After these four principal graces, some of the liberties mentioned in the bull must be touched upon, and especially those about or from all vows; except chastity, monasticism, and Jerusalem [pilgrimage], of which vows this is to be understood, nevertheless, if they have been solemnly vowed; for otherwise they may be turned to the good or into the building of the said cathedral church; which liberty is to be made known to the people by the preachers and confessors. But the penitential preachers and confessors shall note, and they are hereby forbidden to take the great vows, namely (of the pilgrimages) to the threshold of St. Peter and Paul (in Rome), and to St. James in Compostell. Jacob in Compostell, and all other such vows (in which the expense of traveling now and then, with offerings or other complaints of the vows, may amount to more than 10 Rhenish gold florins), but they shall report them to the Lord Commissary, or in his absence to two of his sub-commissaries, or if there is only one, to one, but otherwise, as said, to two at the same time, and make the conversion tax with them or him. In other cases, however, they may transform themselves. And this is to be observed at all times by all sub-commissioners as well as confessors, that at least the travel expenses otherwise necessary for the fulfillment of such vows and the offerings, which they would make in the process, are brought to the treasury; unless they would have cause to remit something of it, which is respectfully left to their good pleasure, if only it is not less than half. There shall also be counted the hardships and burdens that he who has vowed such things would necessarily have to take upon himself if he were to perform the vows, in order to then pay the tax to the treasury in such a way as he would like in his conscience to be relieved of such hardships and troubles; and some prayers and fasts shall be laid upon him over and above such tax, according to the judgment of the confessors.

The other liberty concerns dispensing and dealing with those who commit simony and act contrary to the rules, both over the prebendaries or spiritual goods, or offices themselves, and over the fruits unlawfully enjoyed under both courts. The preachers in the pulpit should touch moderately on this freedom, as far as the simony merchants are concerned, so that the people are not annoyed, and only say in general what kind of freedom it is. Which, however, may be further carried out by those who unjustly enjoyed the fruits of the prebends. For there are many ways in which one's conscience may be violated in the case of such unjust and evil enjoyment of the fruits raised: namely, if one neglects the sacerdotal duties; for then they are liable to restore the same fruits or revenues, according to the time when they neglect the canonical hours. This also applies to what is distributed daily to the canonicos or canons who actually stay there. For if they do not keep their hours properly, or do not wait for their hours and other divine official duties, or otherwise violate the

If the confessors have acted in violation of the church ordinances, they must return the unjustly enjoyed gifts to their court of conscience, or to God. Concerning this freedom, all confessors are forbidden that they do not violate it at all, but that they act jointly with the said Commissario, or two of his sub-commissaries, or (according to the above) only one, if there is only one; then a settlement may be reached with them (such sinners). Whereby the sub-commissioners must note that many are in such debt, and that the simony collector has no beneficium (or prebend), and consequently such is open; consequently, through such freedom, he again becomes partaker of the prebend in both courts. For such grace they shall pay the income of one year of such prebend, which they bought by simony. The same shall apply to those who have acted contrary to other rules, that they pay the income of one year. It should also be noted that if the benefit of the body (real estate) or prebend is small, and on the other hand the distributed endowments or donations or offerings, and other extraordinary additions are rich (fat), a larger assessment should be made according to these; to the extent that the orders can also be dispensed with, that they can wait for service therein.

But as far as the income of the beneficiaries by simony or in any other unjust way is concerned, diligence shall be done, and they shall be urged to give more, as much as is possible; namely, about half, the third or fourth part, or even less, if the unjustly possessed would not be so great or reasonably excusable, which depends on the conscience of the sub-commissioners. And if they would not be capable of any benefits in the accepted orders, then one sees to the worse or more unfortunate kind of irregularity that they give 12 or 10 or only at least 6 Rhenish florins.

The third liberty is to act on what has been wickedly taken, so that one either does not know, or knows according to some cases set below. For example, if one usurer owes something to another, or if one owes something to a single church, it should fall to the Roman church by right. Similarly, in such things as come into someone's hands, be it in whatever way, and yet do not know or doubt to whom it is to be returned. Likewise, in things left to the poor of Christ in general, or to a church without endowment. The preachers should explain such cases to the people, so that they may understand them correctly, especially in the following cases

In the first case, because of the stolen uncertain goods, because many are in this debt, especially merchants, who often cheat people they do not know in some way, if they sell higher than the goods are worth; or sell evil for good; or take something more than the value is, if they borrow for a while, or in some other way, of which there are countless. For in all such cases restitution should be made, and yet one does not know to whom or where. Likewise, all other cases of certain good are to be explained, especially if one should pay a certain amount of money to holy places or the poor in general, and perhaps cannot pay the whole sum in a timely manner, because then he can settle with the commissioner or sub-commissioners on an honest basis, and get rid of the payment of the whole sum.

In the case of this third type, the preachers of repentance must be careful, and they are hereby commanded not to count them out, nor compare themselves with them, unless their consciences amount to about 20 Rhenish florins and less. If it is more, however, they must diligently investigate such consciences, and inquire into the relevance of the trade and the debt, and then let it reach the Commissarium or the Subcommissaries, at least two, as said above. Which sub-commissioners, after careful consideration of all circumstances with the confessor, should urge the debtor to pay the whole sum, if possible, or half or the third part, with the idea that without compensation they cannot be saved. And if he does not want to or cannot, or another valid cause would otherwise be, it is left to the consciences of the sub-commissioners that they can still let up a little more, in order not to leave the soul of the confessing person entangled any longer.

The fourth liberty is to dispense with those who have been ordained before their age, without dispensation, on account of irregularity, and that they may maintain in the received order of the ministry. This pardon may also be proclaimed to the people by the preachers; and the confessors are forbidden not to count them out, but to report it to the commissario or subcommissaries, as reported above, who shall deal with such as have been thought at the other liberty of others guilty of such irregularity. But if they have no benefices (or spiritual goods), they may deal linder with them, that they give about 6 such (Rhenish) florins.

The fifth freedom is to dispense, who have married in a forbidden degree of blood friendship or affinity. And it is to be noted that here is a carnal and a spiritual hindrance. In the first there are four forbidden degrees. The intermarriages in the first and second degree of affinity, namely by secret but not public (or nefarious) fornication, can be exempted from the sin and the forfeited penalty of banishment and dispensed with in the court of conscience alone, and the fruits born or to be born can be declared legitimate. And because this point is not clear enough in the bull, an example is set here, so that it may come right into the heads of all, or become understandable. If one had slept secretly with Bertha, and then engaged himself to Clara, her sister, and also slept with her, the pope allows that this case may only be dispensed with in a court of conscience. And this for a good reason, because a consummated marriage must be more valid than that secret mixture of whores. If, however, their intermarriage were to become public, and one knew of their affinity, the pope would not want to dispense with it, because of the public outrage, and in this he allows a dispensation in the court of conscience, because if such whore intermarriage were to come to light, it would be challenged and divorced by process. But if it remains secret, they can always live together in marriage, and the children inherit their estates.

And in these two things preachers should be careful not to let themselves out too much, lest the people be offended; and lest anyone who does not believe that someone can commit such a thing think that, hearing it, they are immediately granted forgiveness and redemption. Rather, in such cases the preachers in the pulpit should only speak of it in general, and indicate that all sins of the flesh can be forgiven, because God is not sparing in grace, because it is greater than all the sins of the world, even the most grievous. But the confessors are to question the confessors carefully and gently and thus bring them to confession; and when they have given them due punishment and warning, they are to impose salutary penance on them according to the bull; and when they have informed the commissioner or sub-commissioner, as aforesaid, of the crime and the criminal, they shall make a taxation with them, which they shall bring to the caste or box; which, according to other taxes imposed in the same cases by said sub-commissioners and confessors, shall be left to the equal judgment or good pleasure.

What closed in the third and fourth, together

If a man is married or divorced, he shall be dispensed with in both courts (of complaint and of conscience), and he shall be declared to be remarried and the children obtained to be legitimate. In these two matters, however, the penitent preachers are forbidden, as mentioned above, as in which the sub-commissioners must proceed in such a way that.

If they are in the third degree and rich, and have married unknowingly, they shall give 15 such Rhenish florins to the box.

If of medium wealth, 10 if poor, 5 if quite meager, as much as you can get.

But if they had married knowingly, they would have to pay much more, at the discretion of the sub-commissioners. And it is to be noted that by this freedom to dispense in the third degree, it can also be dispensed with if the contracting (or married) parties were in the second and third degree at the same time, because of the legal rule: that in as many degrees as one is of tribe, in the same they are also distant from each other; therefore they are also to be considered as people in the same degree. However, they shall give something more than if they were badly in the third degree, which the sub-commissioners will determine at will.

But if they marry in the fifth degree, the rich shall give 6, but the poor 4 and 3 florins.

The other obstacle is spiritual affinity, except for the single or multiple degree between the baptized and the exalted (Levatum and Levantem) alone; other degrees can be dispensed in both courts. But, as said, the penitents shall not enter the trial court (foro contentioso), but shall consult with the commissario and subcommissaries, who shall proceed with them as is said in the fourth carnal impediment. In all said cases, the confessors may dispense or count out in the court of conscience. Likewise in other works of incest and adultery, fornication, and others; but they shall consider the magnitude and length (or age) of the crime, and the nobility or wealth of the sinners, and after such all set the assessment as they find equitable in their consciences.

The sixth liberty is to settle with those who have wrongfully appropriated goods of the churches or monasteries, but cannot be urged to restitution by the courts, because those to whom it is to be restituted have no deeds or other necessary evidence; for those in such possession may not be restituted by the courts.

If such writings were available, they may nevertheless settle; and if the settled money has been delivered to the cashier's office (or box), they are free from further compensation against said churches. And that they can then keep such things completely unprohibited is conceded in both courts.

The preachers must proclaim this freedom to the people, and the sub-commissioners must see to it that it is properly declared. And the preachers must be careful to do this, because it is very important to rid the consciences of those who withhold such things. For it is not to be believed that those who have had such things for so many and so long years would now want to disown them with shame and disgrace. Therefore the apostolic see, which thirsts for the salvation of souls, proposes a way by which they can be brought to relieve themselves of them with the benefit of the head of all churches (that is, St. Peter's Church). The preachers are also to touch the case, if those who have taken such things do not know for sure whether the goods belong to a church, but are only in doubt about it: that in that case it can be compared with them all the sooner. In this part of the liberty, the penitential preachers (or confessors) are completely forbidden not to settle in this matter on their own, unless, as aforesaid, only a sum of 20 such florins, but to consult with the appointed commissioner or sub-commissioners. Which sub-commissioners shall indicate to the one who has such church property: that without reimbursement no salvation can be hoped for, therefore they should at least agree to half. However, the sub-commissioners may, according to their convenience, let up to the third or at least fourth part, as it seems to them that the confessors would like to be treated. But they shall not lack diligence, because it is a most important case or point.

The seventh liberty is to seize and rightfully receive, for the benefit of the reported building, all goods, things, and monies which have hitherto been bequeathed, in whatever will it may be, to all uncertain churches and holy places, and such uncertain or absent persons, of which no science can be had, for the replacement of any stolen property, and which may still be bequeathed within the said two years; which the Most Holy, our Lord Pope, has bequeathed to the said building. And it is to be noted that between this indulgence or pardon and the above third one is the difference that there is no property left behind for the sake of the stolen or stolen away occurs, and thus the pope does not draw to St. Peter's building, but only gives freedom that those who should give it to uncertain churches, holy places or poor in general, can, if they want, instead of paying uncertain churches or poor, enter into settlement with those who are ordered to act because of the building. In this present case, however, what is left behind for what has been stolen or stolen will be drawn on for the building in question, and can thus be seized by the building merchants or the executors. Likewise, the pope shall draw to the said building all goods that are illegally possessed by others; but those to whom such goods would have to be restituted cannot claim them again in any way. Likewise, all property which should be used for the release of prisoners, and which has been or may be bequeathed by anyone for such release, during said two years. Likewise, all goods that should be applied to banquets or other ceremonies by vow, custom, statute or law.

With such liberty, the preachers are commanded, under the penalties contained in the bulls, to announce, declare and indicate to the people all such cases, especially of that which has been left to replace what has been taken, under penalty of banishment, as below, and 100 ducats to be applied to the said construction, that all, who know something of such cases, and the notaries in particular, who are required for the last wills, give notice to the Commissario or the sub-commissaries beforehand, within eight days, from said notice, respective, so that such goods may be seized by the Commissario or the sub-commissaries themselves. From which ban they cannot become free, as if they 1) report such from the beginning; and that then reported sub-commissioners proceed to their seizure. However, they may deal with the owners or debtors themselves, for example, that they take half, third or fourth part, as it wants to go best, and let it be done according to the nature of the persons and the debt, and they find it good in this case (the confessors, however, may beware that they take hold of this freedom, where it amounts to more than 20 florins, as aforesaid, nor also in the way, as follows, of the cash 2) themselves), and then release the debtors from all further compensation.

1) Here we have erased "not".

2) "themselves" inserted by us.

As for the preachers in particular.

Likewise, the preachers are commanded to remind often in the pulpit that all indulgences, even if they have been granted 1) by the Roman Pontiffs or others, are revoked, according to the Bull and Summaries (or Notice); except for those which the reported Commissary deems it good to renew and grant, and which he has already renewed, and still wants to renew.

They shall also exhort the believers in Christ with the aforementioned reasons that they diligently contribute to the aforementioned building and solve the confession slips. Similarly, they shall point out to them that no one shall deliver any money to the confessors or sub-commissioners for the purpose of obtaining indulgences or settlements made or to be made in the aforementioned cases, but that they shall deliver them to the treasury, if possible, with their own hands or by their own messengers. And if they are settlement monies, they shall be placed in the box with their own hands or with their own messenger (but in the presence of the subcommissarii or another person appointed for this purpose). Otherwise he shall know that he has not gained the indulgence, nor been freed by virtue of such settlement; but rather, if he knew this, and yet, out of contempt or good will, delivered said monies into the hands of the subcommissarii or confessors, he shall know that he has incurred the sentence of excommunication. The sub-commissioners and confessors, however, who accept such monies in some way into their hands, or otherwise deal with them fraudulently, shall be liable to the penalty of banishment, according to the bull, and in addition to 500 ducats fine to the above-mentioned building, as contained in the bulls and in the summaries of said commissarii with more. The said preachers shall also declare all and any blasphemers and slanderers, or other objectors to the said indulgence, by force of the said Commissarii, or rather by apostolic, as banished, accursed and outcasts, who, if the said Commissarius or the sub-commissarii will have science of it, will draw them to even harsher punishments and proceed against them.

As for the confessors in particular.

Confessors and penitents should also know that they have the power to absolve from all sins, however grave they may be, even in the cases reserved to the apostolic see, except those mentioned above. But is

1) "self" set by us instead of: "only".

In the reserved cases, if the misdeed is very great and the criminal is an official person and of great property, they shall talk to the sub-commissioners, and with concealment of the name and surname, merely with naming of the crime and the same protractedness and atrocity, and the criminal's property, they shall need their advice. Also in such grave misdeeds, that e.g. Murderers, murderers of princes and next of kin, death-rowers (parricidae), church robbers or desecrators, and others who commit such abominations, shall be admonished to public penance, where possible, and it may be done without danger before secular authorities, that on the day of penance or confession they go to the confessor naked to the clothes on their legs or shirts, slowly and devoutly, and ask for forgiveness before the cross, and receive the chastisement (scourging) in the Roman manner from the penitential preachers, remembering that our Savior Jesus Christ was not ashamed to let himself be stripped naked in Pilate's palace for the salvation of men, and to be beaten with cheek strokes and cruel rod strokes, and to endure such punishments until death. And if such public penance will not be convenient and imposed, they shall compensate the same with the greater tax. The confessors shall also, when counting the number of those released from the bonds of the ban, take care not to interfere with the external trial court, but shall refer them to the commissary or the subcommissaries themselves, and in the court of conscience shall diligently consider the cause why the banished persons were entangled therein, and the time during which they remained hardened or deaf in the ban; and if the matter is important, consult with the commissioner or sub-commissioners, and then at the same time, according to the relationship of the matters and the time of hardening, set a valuation with them, and then count them loose. Likewise, as often as reported confessors are summoned by the commissioner or sub-commissioners, they shall appear before them; and if they hear anything to the disgrace or detriment of said indulgence, they shall disclose it and be diligent to promote the same indulgence.

The sub-commissioners and confessors should also be careful that they do not accept anything for the jubilee or for the comparisons, but have it placed in the boxes by the believers in Christ with their own hands, as stated above, under the above-mentioned penalties. They shall also not induce the confessors, apart from the said tax, to give them anything for the Sacrament of Confession or for

If something is given to them voluntarily, they may take it.

The confessors should also swear in the above manner that they will listen to confessions with the greatest care, and that they will look more at the conscience than at the bag. And let it not be done, as sometimes happens, that some, out of avarice, seek only their gain and hurry over, without sufficient examination of the sins and the circumstances that have been involved. And it is not to be thought that such as are satisfied in their consciences deserve indulgence, when they afterwards remember that they forget even very gross sins, because of negligence on the part of the confessors, who did not properly inquire into the sins and their circumstances, which made them greater. Therefore, confessors should take care, as I said, that it concerns their conscience.

As far as the sub-commissioning scenarios in particular are concerned.

The sub-commissioners of the said indulgences, when they deliver the present reminders to the preachers and confessors, shall demand the above oath from them, and shall be extremely concerned that they perform all that has been described above faithfully and in fact properly and emphatically; they shall also see to it and take care that everything is observed exactly by the preachers and confessors, as far as each one in his place is concerned; otherwise they may take action against it, as seems good to them. Likewise, that the revenues of said indulgences and liberties be not diminished, but that all money be placed in the boxes to be ordered for this purpose, as the preachers have been commanded above to proclaim, and as is ordered in the Summaries; Except for the money for confession slips or confessionals, where a certain tax has been set, they may accept it in their hands, and from the income they may subsequently render due account to the Commissary, and see to it that, under penalty of banishment and 1000 ducats, which are to come to the said building, confession slips are printed by no one but the printer, whom the said Commissary will order, so that they may render due account. Likewise, they shall see to it that in every place where the cross has been erected, there is only one who distributes the confession slips, who writes in a booklet all the names and surnames to whom confession slips are given. And if they give some out for free (without money), he shall put the reason with it, why and to whom he gave such. And in all the confession slips he shall sign his name with his own hand. The booklet is then to be handed over to the reported commissioner so that no fraud can remain hidden, but that a proper account can be kept of everyone and everything.

Likewise, in order to remove all suspicion of fraud and delinquency, the reported Commissary orders that at least three keys be made to all boxes ordered for reported indulgences. The third key shall remain with the local bishop, or his vicar, or dean, or parish priest, or other person in ecclesiastical or secular dignity, as the Subcommissary shall find most convenient. Likewise, the Subcommissarii are commanded in the same manner that, when the indulgence has been proclaimed, they shall, as soon as possible and in the very first letter after such proclamation that they may write to the Lord Commissarium, commemorate such proclamation as having been made, indicating the cities, parishes and countries, likewise in which district and on which day and month the cross has been erected. Otherwise, if they do not do so, they will be suspected of deception, and an injunction will be issued against them. And when the time comes to open the said boxes, they shall be opened in the presence of all those who have the keys, and of some other trustworthy persons, as the mayor or other secular or ecclesiastical servants, as may best be done. And no one shall touch the money until it has been counted in the presence of the persons named, and if it (the money) is not known, it shall be appraised by persons of understanding.

1) If they have been counted in Rhenish gold florins, the sum has been drawn, and the booklet has been added, and the account of the confession slips distributed in such a place has been made and set to the same gold florins, an instrument or record of it is to be made by a public and legal notary, in which the presence of the above-mentioned persons, and in particular of the rentmaster or his deputy, is to be recorded, so that the money can then be deposited in a safe place, or the money is to be kept in a safe place.

1) The counting of the indulgence money may have been connected with not insignificant difficulties at times. We take from Körner's "Tezel, der Ablassprediger", p. W, the findings of the counting of the same in Frankfurt a. M., which took place on June 15, 16 and 17, 1517:

The court shall order that the case be delivered to the said High Commissioner, as he shall order and command. In cases where the lot is counted or the dispensation (exemption) is granted in the external court of action, the sub-commissioners reported shall also see to it that, for the assurance of the lot-counted and exempted, they deliver to them patents or open letters of testimony, and send the names of those who have requested the same, with the nature and character of the cases, to the Lord Commissary where he is in the vicinity, or also to the city under whose jurisdiction they will be; for in whatever city he may be, a seal and letter may well be made out in good form.

Similarly, notified sub-commissioners shall comply not only with the special sub-commission issued to them, but also with the common commission or the commission issued by the apostolic see, in order to maintain the latter's authority and prestige. To promote its use and advantage. Therefore, they shall not only attend to their own commissions, but also to those of the other sub-commissions, and assist them wherever they can and may. However, they shall be cautious and completely removed from annoyance, so that they do not give the people the opportunity to speak against the indulgence, and they shall behave well among themselves. To which end they are to be ordered that no sub-commissioner, at least half a mile away from the cities and large towns, which are assigned to other sub-commissioners, put up the cross too close in the same way, so that there is no confusion; and if such a thing happens, the offended person is to report it immediately to the Lord Commissary, who will then make the appropriate order.

The rest may be done by the reported sub-commissioners and confessors with their own understanding, skill and diligence, so that they will not deserve anything less from Almighty God and St. Peter and Paul for such a great work.

Form of lot counting and total forgiveness.

May it be merciful to you 2c. Our Lord Jesus Christ absolves you through the merit of his suffering. And I absolve thee also by this and the apostolic power committed to me herein and conferred upon thee: first, from all sentence of great and small ban, if thou hast fallen into any; then, from all sins repented of, confessed, and forgotten, and grant thee complete forgiveness of all thy sins, and remit to thee the penalties of purgatory, as far as the keys of the holy Mother of the Church extend.

If some special redemption or release (dispensation) has to take place, it can be remembered in particular; e.g. from the death stroke, church robbery, irregularity and the like, I redeem you, forgive you and release you 2c. In the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, Amen.

This is the first time that an indulgence by Arcimboldus has been communicated from the original in German. 1517.

Only at Walch.

Johannes Angelus Arcimboldus, Doctor of both rights, Prepositus of Arcisate, Protonotarius of the Apostolic See; and of the most holy in Christ the Father and of our Lord, Leo, by divine providence pope of the tithe, referendary, as also to the provinces of Cologne, Trier, Salzburg, Bremen, Besancon and Upsal and of the same cities and dioceses, so also to the cities and dioceses of Cambray, Dornick [Tournay] of the Morins, 1) Arras, Camin and Meissen, not less to the kingdoms of Denmark and Norway, for the construction of the main church of the most noble of the apostles of the city, appointed nuncio and commissar.

1) In the heading of the previous document, instead of "the Moriner" it says "Teronane". The latter is wrong in any case. In Latin it says: Llorinsussm (Löscher, Ref.-Acta, Vol. I, p. 376). The Morini were, according to Caesar, a people in northern France on the Canal. - In the next number we are offered "Morin".

63 fl. of Frankfurt coins and Mainz pennies, 27 aldus on the florin;
18 fl. in rollbats and crossbearers, 15 on the fl.;
35 fl. in old turnesen, 27 aldus on the fl.;
5 st. Schreckenberger, 7 on the fl.;
62 fl. in gold, good and proper;
3 fl. in Frankish coin;
3 fl. in Würzburg shillings;
3 fl. in medium Meissen groschen;
21 fl. in Räderalbus, 26 on the fl.;
29 fl. in medium wheel albus, as well;
4 fl. in bingen Hellern, 27 aldus on the fl.;
9 fl. in gold, not quite right;
2 fl. Rhenish;
3 fl. in gold from the lower forbidden lands;
1 fl-wrong;

268 fl. in sum.

About this 13 blaffert Strasbourg coin and in different and foreign coins: estimated at 4 fl. Gold and 2 old Turrnesen frankfurt.

rius, wishes the Lord beloved in Christ.... Priest of the Utrecht Diocese and of the liberal arts Magistro, also of the holy divinity Licentiato, constant salvation in the Lord!

The sincere and zealous devotion that you have shown for the Holy Roman Church, for the Apostolic See and for the important construction of the main church of St. Peter of the City (for the promotion of which we hold the Commissariat of the Most Holy Indulgence). Peter of the City (for the promotion of which we hold the commissariat in matters of the most holy indulgence favored for this purpose), since you have contributed to its renewal in accordance with the order issued by us, according to the riches of love, cheers us up and urges us to lovingly pardon you, so that you can cast off the burden of sins and the burden of transgressions, and obtain peace of conscience and salvation of souls through the grace of God; as well as that we are inclined to listen to your humble requests, especially to those which, according to our understanding, are made out of a burning devotion. Therefore, in consideration of your humble and reasonable requests, we also permit you to choose a secular priest, or a religious priest, of whatever order he may be, even of the mendicant orders, as your confessor, who, after carefully hearing your confession, will forgive you for the errors, crimes, misdeeds and sins you have committed, however gross and heinous they may be; even for those which the said apostolic see has reserved to itself, if they were of such a nature that this see should be fairly consulted about them, and because of the ecclesiastical censures which have also been imposed by a man on an operation, and into which you would also have fallen, with the consent of the parties, into the interdict whose absolution would be with the said see alone: except if thou hadst secretly stalked the person of the pope, laid murderous hands on bishops and other high prelates, and used violence against them and other prelates; falsified apostolic bulls and letters of indulgence; brought arms and other forbidden things into the lands of the infidels, and the judgments and censures pronounced for the alum of the Holy Mother of the Church, and for bringing things from the lands of the infidels to the faithful contrary to the apostolic prohibition: once in life, and in such cases as this See has not reserved to itself, as often as you may require, as well as at the hour of death, to grant plenary indulgence of all your sins, and duly absolve you from them, impose upon you a wholesome penance, as well as the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper at other times of the year.

The church shall be sufficient for all the times, except Easter and the hour of death, and all the vows made by you (except the vow to travel to the promised land, to enter the monastery, to remain single) can and may be transformed into other godly works. Moreover, as long as you live, you shall be granted to have an altar with due reverence and honor, on which you may perform at altars which are suitable and honorable, at all times of the year, except Easter, also at such altars which have been charged with an ecclesiastical interdict, by whose power it may be, If you have not given the opportunity for such an interdict, with the doors closed, without the presence of persons under ban, not even with the ringing of the bells, and if the events occurring at the same time should require it, before daybreak, but as it begins to be day; so that neither you nor the priest who performs the sacred act in the manner now described can be counted a sin, either himself or through another suitable priest, be he secular or a religious priest, of whatever order he may be without distinction, even if he belonged to your known household, inasmuch as he, or any of them, cannot give cause for such a jnterdict, say mass, or have it said. Also, where you have a church or some churches that you choose for this purpose, you may devoutly pray for indulgences at certain stations of the city of Rome] during Great Lent and also on other days when one goes to the churches of the city and outside of them because of the unbelievers. (where one performs one's devotions standing or kneeling), in the same way as long as you live, just as often and just as much indulgence and forgiveness of sins as you would be granted if you visited said churches personally every day. Furthermore, you shall be allowed that your body may be buried with a pall at the time of the interdict, by whose power it may be decreed, where you have not given cause for this, in a manner usual to the church. And of this we pardon you by apostolic power, that we may be sufficiently and specially provided for this purpose, by present. Also we make you and your deceased parents, departed in sincerity of faith and in union of the holy mother, the church, of all and every masses, prayers, holy practices, fasts, discipline, stations, alms, intercessions and all other spiritual goods, which are done and

The Lord will do this in the future in the general holy church and the members of the same, by virtue of this same apostolic power. However, you should take care that you use this pardon of saying mass before day sparingly, because it is fitting that, since our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, who is the radiance of eternal light, is offered on the altar, this should not be done in the dark of night, but in broad daylight. Finally, we grant you, together with the members of your household and family that you have at present, as long as you live, the Lenten season until Palm Sunday inclusive, and on other days on which the use of milk foods is forbidden (because, as we have heard, olive oil does not grow in your area), (because, as we have heard, olive oil does not grow in your region), butter instead of oil, and cheese, without anyone's freedom, even if both doctors agree, 1) to eat eggs and meat at the time when you are sick and weak, and at the same time, during the big week, it is forbidden to eat milk foods ever and always. Notwithstanding all mutual ordinances, which the above-mentioned our Lord Pope in all letters of our authority has not prevented and has not let stand in the way. To certify this, we have had the present letter drawn up and kept with our attached seal, which we use here. Given in Cologne in the year 1517, the 19th of the month of May, of the Papal Dignity of the Most Holy Lord N. in the fifth year.

Formula of absolution after heard confession:

Have mercy on you 2c. Our Lord Jesus Christ absolve you by the merit of his most holy passion, and I, by virtue of the power of him and of his blessed apostles Peter and Paul and of our most holy Lord Pope, who have been entrusted to you in this piece, absolve you first of all from all church censures, in whatever way you may have fallen into them; then from all your sins, wickednesses and errors committed up to now, they may be as terrible as they like, also from those which the apostolic see reserves for you, as far as the power of the keys of the holy mother extends. They may be as terrible as they like, even from those which the apostolic see has reserved for itself, as far as the power of the keys of the holy mother, the church, extends, and remit to you by plenary indulgence all punishment which you would have deserved in purgatory because of preconceived sins, and accept you again into the holy sacraments of the church and into the unity of the believers, into the

1) Thus by us instead of: "where the Medicus in both williget", which is in any case a Uebersetzungsfehler. The opinion is: if both the spiritual and the secular physician consent.

Innocence and purity, in which you were when you were baptized: so that when you die, the gate of punishment will be closed to you, and the door to the heavenly paradise will be open to you; even though you will not die, this grace will still apply when you are in mortal danger. In the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, Amen.

Thomas Henrici
wrote it.

62 A somewhat older letter of indulgence under Arcimvold's name, issued by Tetzl to Andreas Hummelshayn, April 24, 1516'.

From Höpfner's 8axoinu svanAsloia, p. 73 reprinted in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, p. 376.

Translated into German.

Johannes Angelus Arcimboldus, juris utrius- que D., Provost of Arcisate, apostolic protonotarius and referendarius, and to the Cologne, Trier, Salzburg, Besancon, Bremen, Upsalian lands, and theirs, likewise to the cities of Cambray, Tournay, Morin, Arras, Camin, Meissen and their districts, for the establishment of the plenary indulgence on account of the great building of the cathedral church of the most noble of the apostles, bearing the keys of heaven, in the city, nuncio and commissarius, appointed by the most holy in Christ the Father and our Lord, Mr. Leo, Pope the X., as is contained in more detail in the letters omitted under the lead mark of the same our most holy Lord Pabst, wishes Andreas Hummelshayn, beloved to us in Christ, constant salvation in the Lord! Since it is the godly devotional zeal that you, as we have recognized, bear towards God and the aforementioned cathedral church, because you have lent a helping hand for the continuation of this tremendously great work out of rich love, in accordance with the apostolic pardon: Therefore, by the apostolic authority given to us, we grant you the power to choose a competent secular priest, or a religious priest from any order, including the mendicant order, as a confessor, who, when he has heard your confession attentively, will absolve you of all your transgressions, sins, crimes and misdeeds, however great and grave they may be, even if they were otherwise reserved to the apostolic see, and of such a nature that one would first have to ask the apostolic see about them; likewise of ecclesiastical censures, which have also been pronounced by men at someone's request, or in which, because of the consent of the parties, an interdict can be made.

and whose absolution would be reserved to the said See: (excepting cases of persecuting the person of the supreme pope, of killing bishops and other high prelates, of laying violent hands on them and other prelates, of forging apostolic bulls and letters, of supplying arms and other forbidden things to the infidels, and excepting the judgments and curses of excommunication into which one has fallen by inducement of the alum of the holy mother of the church, and by things brought from the unbelievers to the believers, contrary to the apostolic prohibition) once in a lifetime, but in such cases as are not reserved, as often as thou desirest, and at the hour of death grant plenary indulgence and remission of all thy sins, and perform wholesome penance, also administer the Sacrament of the Supper (except at Easter and at the hour of death) at all other seasons of the year; and transform all the vows you have taken (except for those beyond the sea, including the vows to enter the monastery or to remain single) for the benefit of this building. However, in such a way that during this commission and proclamation with the said commissioner or sub-commissioners of him, about the transformation of the said vows to the benefit of the said building, the settlement takes place. And hereafter confer upon you and your deceased parents and other relatives, who in true faith and unity differ from the Holy Mother of the Church, communion of all and every masses, prayers, divine offices, fasts, flagellations, hourly prayers, alms, intercessions, and all other spiritual goods, which ever and ever shall be done in the universal holy contending Church and by its members. In witness whereof we have hereunto made this letter, and have hereunto affixed our usual seal. Given Wurzen Anno 1516, the 24th of April, of the Papacy of our most holy Lord in the fourth year.

63 A letter of indulgence that Tetzl, as Arcimbold's subcommissary, issued to the priest and sexton in Schmiedeberg, Meissen diocese, because of the host that had been removed from the monstrance, which was nevertheless kept and well sealed. 1516.

From Seckendorf's Hi8t. I'utüer, lid. I, p. 15, § 6 reprinted in Löschers Ref.-Acta, vol. I, p. 393. Seckendorf notes that Arcimbold's and Tetzl's titles also precede in this writing.

Translated into German.

To our beloved in Christ, Jacob Rynau, priest, and Severino Weiß, sexton of the parish church in Schmiedeberg, of the Meissen district, everlasting salvation in the Lord!

You have lamentably brought to our attention that, since on Tuesday in the Octave of the Feast of Corpus Christi of this year, after the end of Vespers and the Completorium, you placed the Holy Sacrament in its usual place in the church itself and locked it, and subsequently found the lock and straps intact and unbroken and opened them, you could not find the aforementioned venerable Sacrament; Therefore, to help your soul, you humbly ask us to help you in this case in time. Therefore, we, who seek the salvation of all, absolve you, who have compared yourselves with us according to your little ability for the benefit of said building, from the sentence of banishment, which you may have forfeited because of such an oversight, out of apostolic authority, which we administer in this region of Meissen. We hereby order all and everyone who is concerned, under the ban and punishments in our power, not to dare to challenge you, who are thus absolved, or any of you, in the least on account of the above. In witness whereof we have caused this letter to be executed, imprinted and authenticated with the seal of the said building. Wurzen A. D. 1516, the 1st of June, of the pontificate of our aforementioned most holy lord, the pope, in the fourth year. Hermann Berboem, pastor in Dorsten, Cologne diocese, signed it.

Hottinger's account of how the sub-commissary of Christopher de Forli (Forlivius), Bernardinus Samson de Milano, fared in Bern, Switzerland, in 1518.

This and the next following writing are from Hottinger's IÜ8t. 666168IN8t. V. 1. 866ui. XVI, tOM. III, 6LP. 2, p. 160.

When this indulgence merchant was admitted to the city of Bern, he made himself popular especially with those who regarded the papal orders as oracles; and hung up the "diplomat" of his commission and the coats of arms of all Swiss cantons in the church of St. Vincentii. He himself said mass in the presence of many people, so that he could bring money to the church of St. Peter, which was his concern. He did not easily deny indulgences to anyone; he often handed out paper and parchment diplomas, but to no one in vain. To those who did not have much in the way of property, he opened the door.

He gave his rich treasure of indulgences for two batz, the others, however, had to pay more. The rich, who wanted to have indulgences for themselves alone, gave one crown thaler; but those who wanted to share this papal pardon for whole cities or offices, had to bring more.

Before he left Bern, he had the citizens of the city summoned to the great church in the afternoon with all the bells, and by Henricum Lupulum, of the Collegii Canonicum, the standing as a Mercurius in the middle of the choir altar, announce a threefold papal pardon. First, from the superfluous treasure of Christ and all the saints, he gave forgiveness of all sins, of guilt and punishment, to all those present at that time who would kneel and confess their sins and pray three Our Fathers and Hail Marys, thus bringing them to the sanctity and incorruption they receive in baptism. Secondly, he opened the door of purgatory and said that whoever went around the greater temple praying three times a day could deliver a soul he wanted from purgatory. The third pardon is the richest of all; for after all had prayed with bended knees five times both the Lord's Prayer and the angelic greeting for the deceased, he exclaimed aloud: from that moment on all the dead of Berne, they may have died where they will, were freed at once both from hell and from purgatory and transferred to heaven. As he departed, he widely recommended the freedoms and indulgences he had granted to the lords of Bern, for which they had cause both to thank God and to show their filial obedience to the Roman See. After he had distributed confession slips among the council and citizens of the city of Bern, he departed hospitably, and even with a larded bag.

This is a narrative of Samson's boldness and what he had to deal with, especially with Henr. Bullinger, the dean of Bremgarten in Switzerland, who bravely resisted him.

Samson went from Baden to neighboring Bremgarten and visited both the pastor, M. Nicolaum Christianum, and the mayor there, who were quite willing to accommodate him. The dean, however, Henrich Bullinger, seriously opposed such a daring enterprise and did not want to let this money cutter in. When he had to rely on the indulgence bulls, as well as on the

The dean said: "I do indeed hear that this authority was given to you in Rome, and that you received permission from the dean to interpret your old rumble; however, you have never yet given me the consent of a proper bishop; rather, the care of souls belongs to me, not to the council or any other low authority. You put religion and conscience in danger, and you will not get me to look through my fingers and let the people be robbed of their property by these useless and futile bulls. But, the monk said heatedly, the Pope's reputation is even greater than that of a bishop; therefore I command you in his name not to deprive the people of these Roman pardons. I," replied Decanus fearlessly, "would rather do anything else and forfeit my life than have you impose your deception on my community. So then, you beast," the Italian continued, "I lay upon you the terrible ray of banishment, you who so boldly despise the Roman see and so deliberately resist the command of the authorities themselves; you will not be freed from it until you buy off the punishment of your audacity with 300 gold florins. Therefore, Decanus turned his face away from the deceiver, and as he was leaving he said: "I hope that I have done nothing that is not connected with my office, of which I will also give an account if it is necessary. By the way, your ban is unreasonable, for which I am not greatly distressed. At this, Samson became even angrier, and said: "Audacious beast, I will go to Zurich in a hurry, and complain about your bold and foolish show in the assembly of all Swiss cantons; such injustice has not been done to me by the entire Swiss country. Also to me, said the Decanus once again quite boldly, the entrance to the Swiss lords is not closed, before whom I may be unafraid to present myself.

A letter of indulgence issued by this Samson on Nov. 15, 1518.

From Hottinger's pkutaä. ckissert. mise'illnsar., x. 550.

Translated into German.

Leo, Pabst X.

To all who will read this letter, let it be known and known how we, in accordance with the form of the Apostolic Grace reported below, are to be held accountable

The Holy Father has granted Burkhard Würtz, Johann and Anna, his parents, with their compatriots, 1) to use, enjoy and benefit from the benefaction and apostolic pardon (by the pope under the lead in Rome at St. Peter's, for the purpose of building the cathedral church of the prince of the apostles in the city, by our most holy Lord Leo, the X. pope, the year 1517, Sept. 1, 1517. Pope, recently in the year of the Incarnation of Christ 1517, Sept. 13, and of his Pabbacy in the fifth year) of the power and commission issued by said our most holy Lord, the most reverend in Christ Father and Mr. D. Christopher of Forlivio, of the title of St. Mary at the Altar of Heaven Cardinal. Mary at the Altar of Heaven Cardinal Priest, and general servant of the whole Order of Friars Minor, over twenty-five countries included in the Bull, among which are also the whole of Italy, Sicily, Corsica, Candia, Cyprus, Rhodus, up to Jerusalem, Dalmatia, Croatia, Bosnia, Hungary, Austria, Bohemia, Poland, and the islands of the Mediterranean Sea: 2) (And the like also in the same manner and form of power and general commission, which of his own motion and good forethought has been further conferred and extended to the honorable friar Bernardum Samson of Milan, of the Minorite Order of the Observance friar, to the districts and oerters of the beloved sons, the Swiss in the twelve cantons and their confederates, as well as to the cities of the districts and oerters in Valtelin and Cur or of the Grisons, as can be seen from the charter issued in the form of a breve at Rome at St. Peter under the fisherman's ring the 15. Nov. Anno 1517, of the Pabstthum höchstermeldten unsers allerheiligsten Herrn Pabst in the fifth year given letter) namely in below-mentioned pieces:

That persons registered above may choose a competent confessional priest, secular or monastic, from all, even mendicant orders, who, after diligent

In the first hearing of their confession they shall be absolved from all faults, sins and misdeeds committed at the time of their election, be they what they may, if they were otherwise reserved to the apostolic see; as well as from all ecclesiastical excommunication, the counting of which otherwise also belonged to the said apostolic see; also from that which is otherwise exempted in (the bull)

Coena Domini (except in those cases where the person of the pope has been stalked, bishops or other prelates have been killed, hands have been laid on them or other prelates, bulls or apostolic letters have been forged, weapons or other forbidden things have been brought to the unbelievers, (If the prelate or the prelate has brought weapons or other forbidden things to the unbelievers, has brought the alum of the tolfa from the unbelievers to the believers against apostolic prohibition, and thus has forfeited the ban), but not under the hope and pretext of this granted grace, and without the otherwise due penance or satisfaction, in life once, as well as in the hour of death and as often as there is doubt (or sorrow) about it, to grant ransom and pardon and complete indulgence; in the unreserved cases and parts of banishments, whether or not they are otherwise reserved by the pope to other subjects, as many times as they desire, to grant redemption and impose salutary penance; also to change all vows that have escaped them (except those about the sea, the vows of monastic life and chastity) into other godly works; likewise all oaths taken in all trade and commerce, bonds and letters (except those concerning the chamber), at least only so that one cannot sue on them 2c., [ad effectum agendi, or of the outward deed and effect at night, and may be counted free from it, as also from all perjury.

That also now reported voters eat, enjoy and use eggs, butter, cheese and other dairy food, also meat, during the Great Fast and at other forbidden times, with the advice of both physicians, freely, safely and without grief of conscience.

Also, at all times of the year, likewise at Easter and at the hour of death (but without any harm to their own rulers and priests), the sacrament of the evening meal, where they may wish, and may be devoutly received by any secular or monastic priest.

Likewise, that those of nobility or priests have a portable altar, which they shall keep with due reverence and sanctity, on which they shall also keep in proper, honest places, whether they are not holy, and subject to the church interdict, whether common or special, both by apostolic or ordinary power (if only they themselves did not give cause for such interdict), even before

1) Samson had written in another Bernese copy with his hand to it: The Magnificus and High Noble Lord Antonius Spilmanu, with his wives D. Dorothea Rossin, with their daughters and father Aegidio, with their whole family.

2) What is included here in () is not in the Bernese Bull, but instead of it: and consequently to me, as the one deputized and appointed by him by virtue of such apostolic power 2c. In the margin, however: as also said of our most holy Lord Nuntio and apostolic Commissario General to the gentlemen of Switzerland, as the apostolic letter, which was issued in Rome at St. Peter's on Nov. 15, Anno 1517 in the form of a breve, reads. (This is written in Samson's hand.)

The priests of the church shall have the right, when it is daylight (or when it begins to be daylight), in the presence of themselves and their household members, according to the manner of the Chapter: Alma vom Bannurtheil L. 6, to celebrate mass and other divine offices, either themselves, if they are priests or will be priests at the time, or to have them celebrated by other priests; they may also attend such services at the time of the interdict, and their bodies may be buried in a Christian manner (but without a funeral service or vestments).

And that they also receive as much and the same indulgence and forgiveness of sins (as they would, if they visited all the churches of said city and outside of it, which are otherwise attended by the faithful of Christ, 1) (of the standing prayers of said city, in person, if they namely visited one or several churches or churches, (if they devoutly visited one or some churches or churches, according to the same nuncio or commissarii or the sub-commissarii to be appointed or to be further appointed by him, and put a Christian alms in the boxes to be arranged by them for the purpose of said construction) by the power granted in said apostolic letter.

It is also granted by apostolic authority that whoever receives such a confession slip and offers a helpful hand to the work of the said construction according to the order of the Commissarii or the Commissarii appointed by him, will share in all spiritual good that will ever happen in the whole general contending holy church for eternity; that all apostolic statutes, orders and letters of all ancestors, the Roman popes, especially Paul II and Sixtus IV, which are also expressly and sufficiently included in the aforementioned letter, and all others which might otherwise be contrary, shall not in the least hinder it.

Hereafter, the Most Reverend Lord, by said letter, forbids the ordinaries and all others, upon the sentence of the ban pronounced and 500 ducats to be struck to the above building, punishment, that they, after such pardon granted, confession and counting of lots of said cases, shall not submit to interfere in the least, or to hinder or offend in any way those who so control, in the use, enjoyment and reception of such favors, or

1) In the Bernese Bull it is written: to obtain the status prayers are granted that they choose a church which they want, and say three times Pater noster and so many Ave Maria there.

defame the Commissario himself, or the other persons to be appointed by him or to be appointed under him, or their order of regular observance. 2)

However, the confession slips do not extend to the conversion of the vows made or the forgiveness of the sins committed, before the reception of the same, because then they must be counted or dispensed from the vows made and the sins committed otherwise reserved by the deputies for this purpose; however, they will benefit the future ones. In witness whereof I, Brother Bernardinus Samson of Milan, of the Order of Friars Minor of the Regular Observance, having been appointed to the said matters, have executed and inscribed the present letter with my own signature and affixed the seal. Given in Bern, 1518, the 15th of the month of November.

67 Pope Leo's breve to the Swiss cantons, which had become very indignant about this outrageous indulgence stuff, in which he tries to appease them and promises to punish the indulgence preacher Samson after an investigation. 1519.

From Hottinger's üist. 666168.866. X VI, torn. II, p. 177 and KapPS "Schauplatz des Tetzelschen AblasskramS" reprinted in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 925.

Translated into German.

Leo X, bishop, a servant of servants, wishes salvation and apostolic blessing to the beloved sons, the noble Swiss Cantons! It has pleased us to hear that, after some doubts have arisen from the disputations of some religious about the indulgence given by us for the building of the church of the most noble apostle and proclaimed there, which could bring about some danger to the soul and trouble, you have wished to obtain the pronouncement of the apostolic see, to adhere to the advice of this see, and to obey its commands. We therefore answer your devotion to this: that, since a similar dispute arose the other day between some theologians of Germany about the promulgation of this indulgence, we have given our beloved son Thomas, of the title of St. Sixti Priest Cardinal, the title of St. Sixti Priest Cardinal, the title of St. Sixti Priest Cardinal, the title of St. Sixti Priest Cardinal.

2) In the Bernese copy, the following is added: or that they do not dare to say that they bought said indulgences and liberties, or traded and haggled over them with someone.

We have answered our and the apostolic see's envoy in Germany by another letter about the Roman pope's authority in granting such indulgences with the true definition of the Roman church, which we want to be held and preached by all under the penalty of the pronounced ban, the absolution of which we reserve for ourselves and the Roman pope, except in the case of death; as you can clearly see from the letter itself, which we order to be sent to you, and will see to it that it is held. By the way, such disputations, which could arouse anger in the minds, are not to be listened to, but you will firmly adhere to the true statement of the Holy Roman Church and of this Holy See, which does not permit any errors. We have also ordered the preacher to be recalled at your full request; and if we find that he has gone too far in those points of which you write, we will have him punished. Given at Rome by St. Peter, in the year of the Incarnation of the Lord 1519, April 30, of our seventh papal reign.

68. Bapt. Pupp, 1) a Franciscan and Samson's colleague, wrote to the Swiss cantons, from which it can be seen how hated he had made himself among them. 1519.

From Hottinger's xentack. äissrt., p. 549. Translated into German.

Magnifici and Esteemed (Highly Noble) Gentlemen!
With due greetings and compliments.

Since the Most Holy One, our Lord, for the propagation of the divine name and the salvation of souls, has meant to grant both 2) to the cathedral church of the Prince of the Apostles in the city of Reconstruction, full indulgences in various countries, and 3) other pardons contained in the apostolic letter issued in this regard: Her Holiness did not wish to exclude from the same communion the thirteen cantons of Switzerland, which, as experience has shown, she considers to be quite catholic and the most faithful sons of the Holy Roman Church, and perfectly willing to defend it, but has granted her Comissa-

1) Löscher (Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 926) calls him "Ober-Ablaß-Commissarius Ioh. Irsno. de koppio".

2) Here we have erased "also".

3) "as well" put by us instead of: and.

The Holy See decided to delegate to them the Father and Brother Bernardinum Samson, and the Order of Friars Minor of regular observance. And would not have sent such to the Magnificos and Noble Lords in such important and salutary matters if their Holiness had not found him to be a learned and virtuous man. However, in the last few days our most holy Lord has learned [through] your letters that the same brother Bernardinus is said to have fallen into some errors in proclaiming this indulgence, about which her holiness is highly astonished and has verbally ordered me to indicate to you in her name that if this brother Bernardinus is troublesome to you in his preaching, he will be sent to Italy with your peaceful and quiet departure from you. But if you still tolerate him and want to hear him, their holinesses are content that he remain with you until his time of commission is over. For their holiness will be pleased to oblige you in everything that is conducive to the welfare of your souls. Therefore, Most Reverend Sirs, I would ask you to let the said Brother Bernardinum, if you would rather see him go to Italy than stay with you, leave without any restrictions; who, if he has erred in his sermons, will also be prepared to give an answer before our most holy Lord and to suffer punishment for his errors. Therefore I want to write this only to you, that you prove the magnanimity and grace and also the reverence for the holy Roman church that you have shown so far to the said brother Bernardino, as I ask and implore you most earnestly for it, and by the way, I wish you to live well in the Lord at all times. From our convent N. N. in the city, May 1, 1519.

69. indulgence instruction issued by Pope Leo X to Ennio, Bishop of Berulan, on Switzerland.

1514.

From Hottinger's xentuckoe. äissert., p. 515.
Translated into German.

Leo Bishop, the servant of the servants of God, to the Venerable Brother Ennio, Bishop of Verulan, our to the beloved sons, Swiss of the old great Covenant in Upper Germany, as well as of the Apostolic See Nuntio, with the power of a Legati de Latere, apostolic greeting and blessing!

Since we have already decided to send you to our beloved sons, the Swiss of the old great Confederation in Upper Germany and of the same Swiss towns and villages, in matters important to us and to the Holy Roman Church, as our and the apostolic see's nuncio with the authority of a Legati de Latere: We hereby, in order that you may make yourself popular with the persons living in the cities, towns, villages and lands mentioned, and with your friends and companions at table, grant authority to your prudence, in which we place a special trust in the Lord in these and other matters: that you confer the office of tabulionate or notary public on all competent persons, after you have made them swear their oath, according to the usual manner, and appoint said tabuliones to the said office; You may also make honest all illegitimate, natural, bastard, Manser, illegitimate, incestuous children, born in or out of wedlock, and be it from whatever sinful and unlawful cohabitation, their parents may be living or dead, in such a manner, that they may attain to the paternal and other inheritance of all estates, and therein follow hereditarily, without, however, some disadvantage to those who would otherwise have to attain to said successions (if the persons whom they follow died without last will) according to law; Likewise, that they be drawn and accepted to all honors, dignities, degrees, and secular public and special offices, and may and may administer and manage the same as if they were born of right marriage, and that you may restore and establish them to all rights of nature and lawful acts.

Furthermore, that you may exchange all both bad and other ecclesiastical offices, be they secular with care of souls (parish) or without the same, or ecclesiastical (that is, belonging to the monastery) of all orders, also those which otherwise belong to the said See, it may be for whatever causes (except for the said See and Roman court servants, (except for the said See and Roman Court servants who actually administer their offices)), would be reserved throughout, duties, 1) either per se or for any cause, by exchange, and in such a way that the commendable and also the contentious, both in the Roman Court and outside the same. The said benefices shall be extinguished and abolished, both par excellence and for the same or any other cause, including all those within such cities, towns, lands, and oerteries, if they are open or may in time become open (if they are otherwise open because of the pa-tronate of the laity, and also otherwise, as above, or according to their profession, at the said See or because of the kinship of our or the said holy Roman Church still living Cardinals table society, would be reserved or in something afflicted, insofar as such Beneficien annual fruits, pensions and income over 100 ducats of gold at the Chamber, The Lord may grant them to competent persons, even to those who have or have to wait for church benefices, of whatever kind and however much and of whatever kind they may be, among all the more than thirty reserved by decease or subject to some interest or otherwise. The monastery or ecclesiastical order benefices, however, both for life and for a time of your choosing, to commend or order; and to confer on them or on the ecclesiastical benefices for life, or for some time of life, and above the relinquished or ceded to you, as stated above, or at the instance of the relinquished or otherwise ceded benefices, whatever they may be, fruits, enjoyment and income, all kinds of annual interest (which shall not exceed a third part of said fruits, enjoyment and income), such abdicating or ceding, or also other capable persons, if they already be ecclesiastical benefices, they may be how much, of what kind and whatsoever they will, which the relinquishers or resigners will appoint to you, for life from those who at present hold such benefices, annually to certain ends and oerterns, about which they will be compared and determined, also in case of common robberies, delinquencies, sentences and curses, with the consent of those who take upon themselves to pay said interest, you shall have the power to reserve, order and direct; although the statutes and customs of the churches in which such benefits are, would also be established by oath, apostolic affirmation or other firm manner.

Likewise, that you may deal with all persons in said cities, towns, countries and places from time to time, who have sinned and defiled themselves by adultery in the fourth and third degree at the same time, or only in the fourth degree of blood friendship and affinity, or against other ways of respectability and right, notwithstanding, that they may marry among themselves and remain therein and beget children who are to be considered honest.

Similarly, with all persons about all kinds of

1) This will probably mean: which have been abandoned.

Deficiencies in the birth and inaccuracies into which those fall who, for example, under the ban, administer the mass or other divine offices, or have been there, as the names have it, if only it does not happen to the power of the keys to scorn, that they can get to all, even holy and venerable orders and serve therein also at the altar; and that in all the graces granted to them in this way, they may remember none of them; namely, up to 450 such persons.

In the same way, with the same or other persons, you can act in such a way that how many, which and of what kind of benefits of the churches, with soul care or without the same, which can stand together, they have the same, also in the church, in which their father has or will have a benefit, they can serve the Lord in the altar service at the same time.

Similarly, with them or other such persons, and who have about two parishes, or other church benefices not well together; with those of nobility, graduates or otherwise capable, that they have three benefices of all kinds, they may be equal with or without them, equal or unequal, existing under one cover. And if with the nobles, graduates or otherwise capable, it has been dispensed that they should keep for life two benefices, although not existing with each other, at the same time for life; with the same nobles, graduates or otherwise capable, in such a way that they also retain the third, whatever it may be, or with the others existing secular benefices, either with one or two of them (even if the canonicates or prebends standing together.), and both they and the unoccupied benefices, even if they do not exist together, and both they and the non-existent benefices, parish churches or their permanent vicarages, dignities, personalities, administrations or offices in cathedral or metropolitan churches, according to the episcopal high or collegiate churches would be such superiors, and to the personal dignities, administrations or such offices, (where persons are accepted by election and care of souls is involved when they are conferred on others in a canonical manner, or they themselves have been elected, well respected or otherwise accepted for this purpose and instructed therein), even those who do not exist together, retain them for life, and either at the same time or one after the other, or by exchange, as often as they please, and in place of the one or ones given away, another or others, equal or unequal, equal or unequal, of whatever kind, however many and whatever they may be, which, as has been seen, are to be found in the case of can stand together, be free for life and be right about everything.

Likewise, with fifty persons, the twenty, but with those of the nobility and graduates who are eighteen years old, you may act to give them a church benefice with pastoral care, even if it is a parish church, a right of permanent vicarage care, or otherwise, as stated above, of some important kind.

Likewise, with one who has such benefices with pastoral care, because of which he would be obliged to accept all, even the holy and approved orders, you could act in such a way that he would not be obliged to be promoted to said holy orders under seven years (if he accepts at least the Order of the Subdiaconate only two years before the expiration of the same), and that you could postpone such exemptions for two years or one year, to be counted from the end of such seven years, once and more times.

Likewise, you shall have power to act with all persons, that if they study in the place where such order is established, or stay in the Roman court or in one of their benefices, which they receive or would receive at the time, they shall enjoy and raise freely for life all and every fruit, income and annuity of the same benefices, if they only pay off what is due thereon, completely, but in such a way that what of it must be distributed daily and given away as donations, They are free to enjoy and collect the benefits as they would if they stayed in the churches in which they received the said benefits, even if they did not even have their first habitual residence or domicile in the same churches or places, which they should have had there by virtue of the endowment of such benefits received or still to be received, or the statutes of the churches in which they receive them; that, notwithstanding this, they may not hold themselves in person in such benefices, nor be compelled by anyone to do so.

Likewise, in the 22nd year; with the secular clergy in the 22nd year, but with the monks who find in the 20th year. The bishops are to act in the same way with the secular clergy in their 22nd year, with the monks in their 20th year, and with all persons who have a defect of the limbs, also of the eye, but not of the canon, if it is not such a deformity that it causes trouble among the people, so that they can be lawfully promoted to all holy and established orders by any bishop who has the grace and communion of said See, even outside the proper and legally established times, and can officiate there at the altar.

Even with those without a dispensation before their

The only way to prevent them from being caught in the mistake they have fallen into and from the wrongness that is attached to them as a result is to raise, count, and absolve them from the fruits they have already received, as if they had received the orders, so that they can also receive all the other orders.

Likewise, the clergy and all secular persons who, if they are not prelates, lay their hands impudently on clergymen and either accidentally commit murder, or who, according to their mind, are guilty of it, are to be absolved from such debts, errors and banishment, and whatever else follows from it. And to deal with clergymen on account of the wrongdoing arising therefrom, with the exception of premeditated murder, in such a way that they have freedom and power again, promote themselves to said orders, and in the service of the altar, which has already been preserved in the case of such faults, can also well maintain and enjoy all and sundry ecclesiastical benefices that exist alongside one another.

Likewise, all nobles, graduates, and priests are to be allowed to have an altar with the proper honorifics and shades, on which they may have mass read in their and their people's presence in proper and honorable places, and, where the necessity of important business requires it by opportunity, also before day, and in places that have been condemned to interdict or common ban by ordinary power.

Likewise, to act with all prelates and ecclesiastical persons and monastics, that they may make a last will and decree over their goods, which they have acquired, by whatever means, if it is only lawful, according to the measure of the apostolic chancery.

Likewise, that you may give freedom to all of the said cities, towns, lands, and towns, who request that they attend masses and other divine services at the time of the interdict imposed by the said ordinary power, and that they may be present at them, if only they have not given cause for it themselves, so that the interdict does not concern them personally.

Similarly, to those who request that they be allowed to choose a secular confessor or a confessor from all the monastic orders, who may also grant them, in the cases reserved to the apostolic see, the grace of complete redemption once in life and at the hour of death, but over those who are not reserved, as often as they request it, according to the form of the kind noted in the same chancery, to confer such power.

Likewise, all the vows that the people of the aforementioned kingdoms and dominions vow (except for the apostolic thresholds or doors of St. Peter, St. Paul, likewise St. James in Compostell and those above the sea, to go to the monastery and to keep constant chastity) to transform into other godly works.

Likewise, when you say mass or attend a solemn mass, to grant 100 days of indulgence to those who attend.

Likewise, that you may hear, recognize and properly dismiss the matters of all appeals already filed or still to be filed by the ordinary ecclesiastical judges or their deputies, both in and out of court; as well as no less all other matters belonging to and brought before the ecclesiastical court, yourself or through another, or others, in the shortest and worst way, without ordinary trial and judicial office, merely according to the true inquiry and finding of the matter, or assign them to someone else.

Likewise to make 10 comites palatinos [palatines], and 10 poetas laureatos [crowned poets], 10 milites auratos [gold-decorated men of war], and 10 acoliti capellans.

Also to accept others as our and the apostolic see's notaries by apostolic power, and to count them among our and the said see's notaries and ^oolit chaplains, also our Lateran castle's servants and castle guards or war servants' number and heaps respective in grace; That they so enjoy and use all and every privileges, prerogatives, honors, exemptions, graces, liberties, privileges and powers, which others of ours and of the said See Notaries and Acoliti-Capellani, also of the said Court Servants and Castle Servants, enjoy, need and use, or could and would enjoy and use; and to present or cause to be presented to them all such Notarial and other such service emblems and badges of honor in the future, if they have been previously committed to duty.

Also to promote and present, or present and cause to be promoted, 40 able and skilful persons who wish to become Doctor or Licentiate in one or both of the arts, and Master in theology or liberal arts, or to obtain other degrees, after the first sharp and diligent examination, and according to the order of the Concilii of Vienna and other ordinary ceremonies: That they may be granted all and every liberty, right, pardon, privilege, and exemption, which are conferred upon others who attain to comparable degrees in the universities by and in their studies, or

The universities of the said kingdoms and dominions shall be free to enjoy, use, and benefit from all the freedoms they wish to be conferred. And hereunder to deprive and abrogate all previous apostolic liberties, letters and orders, which have been granted to the universities of said realms and dominions of common or special studies by all Roman popes, our ancestors, and said See, as well as all orders of the concilia or provinces, likewise statutes and customs, which would also be provided with oath or apostolic confirmation, to that extent.

Similarly, the endowments and the right of patronage of the clergy and seculars at the same time, or of the seculars, even if according to the endowment and endowment, they are entitled to half or all of them; likewise, the statutes and ordinances on property, in so far as to cancel them or to deprive them of their power.

Also to all respectable women, that they may go to all convents and nunneries, also to the observance of the closed ones (Claustralium), be they exempt or not, however they are kept closed, nevertheless with three respectable women, with permission of the women, who are set over such convents and houses, if they only do not stay there overnight, out of devotion four times a year.

Also to give to 10 governors of parish churches and other ecclesiastical authorities the power to absolve them, the ecclesiastics, whatever they may be, from both sexes, from all sins and crimes, in cases where otherwise only the ordinaries of the orders can absolve by right and custom or otherwise, and in those reserved to the apostolic see, to convert everything into other works of godliness.

Likewise, that you have the power to allow 50 secular clergy and also all other monastic orders to read the law, to hear it, to debate it, and to become masters or doctors in it. Likewise, to those of the monastic state, that they may preach and proclaim the Word of God freely and without sin everywhere, and enter the chair.

Also those who refrain from reciting and praying the canonical hourly prayers according to their charge to count off.

Likewise, to permit all persons to pray and say the hourly prayers and other devotions, according to the manner, custom and usage of the Roman Church, alone or with one or two companions. Similarly, with all clergy, both secular and monastic, to act that they may

The law provides that the deceased may exchange, sell, and lease for a long time immovable property of churches and monasteries and their benefices, and may also lend it as feudal and hereditary interest or other interest and liability, and otherwise dispose of it; and where something is lacking in the proper manner of disposal, both in law and in fact (but only for the obvious benefit of the churches and monasteries or such benefices), to improve it and apply it to it.

Also to grant to the same persons that they may give up their also reserved benefices, as they are usually granted by you, into the hands of all ordinaries of the Oerter and the canons and metropolitan church superiors, or other persons standing in office and dignities, either outright or in exchange.

Likewise, you have and can give the power to eat, enjoy and use meat at all major and other fasting times and days, when meat, eggs and other dairy products may not be eaten, and in times of need and with the advice of both physicians.

And to grant to those who choose and visit one or two churches, or one or more altars of the cities or places, in which they may offer and keep up their standing prayer, that they, like those who in the great fast and other times and days of every year, when the standing prayer is held in the city of Rome, visit all and every church of said city, within and without the same, for the sake of such standing prayer, may obtain indulgence and remission of sins for all and every one.

And that you have the power to graciously remit the imposed penances in the Lord to all kinds of churches, outside or inside the monasteries, visiting or lending a helping hand for their construction or for their dedication and improvement, but only on two or three feasts, seven years and as many quadragens, or during the time as you please, so that it may last always or for some time, as you please.

Likewise, to grant the residents, citizens and all persons of the same that they may receive church sacraments at the time of the common ban or interdict, which has been imposed by ordinary power, and may bury the dying body in a Christian manner, however, without funeral.

And pre-notified liberties, pardons, bestowals and privileges also against your friends (or householders) and constant table companions, who follow you in these legation services, whether they were not already from the said cities, towns, regions and dominions, and whom your people do not even know the language of the place.

understand or could speak intelligibly.

Likewise, all and every person to whom you grant such grace and liberties according to the power granted to you, or against whom you require such liberties, shall be exempt from all other ecclesiastical bans, judgments and punishments imposed or otherwise pronounced on account of suspension or interdict, which the law or a man has pronounced on any occasion or cause, if they are involved in it in any way, whether they have already lapsed into it over the year, or have been banished after the matter has been adjudicated, may be counted and declared by you to be counted, so that the pardons to be granted to them may take place.

Further, that all and every ecclesiastical benefices, with or without the care of souls, which also all and every aforesaid have received from all manner of apostolic benefits and have had the expectancy thereof, and in which and to which they are entitled, whatsoever and whatsoever or however much they may be, and of all their fruits, incomes and pensions, all the true value and honor of these benefits; also to the end that such pardons may be granted and your writs to be made thereon may be strong or valid, to be considered as good as expressed or named. And that anything contrary thereto which may be done or concluded by any person, by whatever authority, knowingly or unknowingly, shall be void and of no force.

In particular, however, that the force of certain letters of Pope Sixty IV, our ancestor, therein expressly provided, among other things, that the nuncios of said See, whom one would depute at the time, even if they had the power of a Legati de Latere, should nevertheless not use their power to grant ecclesiastical benefices or to grant dispensations and other graces to be granted, and all other clauses that may be contained in the powers attached to these nuncios do not apply in the least against the above-mentioned your letters.

And that hereunder all common and special reservations, which occur at the time, and the reported infirmities or settlements, to assign the matter to commissioners, or because of the language, no force is entitled.

Likewise, that of the Vienne, Lateran, and other general conciliar and other orders, apostolic and ecclesiastical, monastic, and all religious statutes, even if they were confirmed by oath, apostolic affirmation, or otherwise; likewise the statutes, customs, liberties, and privileges of the Cluniac, Cistercian, and Brandonian orders and monasteries, such as to them and to others

The same orders have been conferred by apostolic letters from the Holy See and its legates, but they have been abrogated in every way, and their power has been diminished by this.

As well as all pardons of expectation, which have been or would be granted to some persons, also to our friends, companions at table or others, which we hereby expressly suspend or cancel, that you may use your freedom and power granted to you, in the benefits which may arise and be granted by you by virtue of this; and that everything contrary to this shall not apply, we give complete freedom and power over this by apostolic power, contents of these letters. Given at Viterbo, in the year of the Incarnation of Christ 1514, the 15th of October, of our Papacy in the next year.

d. Under the Archbishop and Elector of Mainz and the Franciscan Guardian of the Barfüßerkloster in Mainz, and his sub-commissar Tetzels.

70 D. Georg Arnold, former Chancellor of Zeitz, who died in 1588 and was an excellent jurist, made portrait of the Elector Albrecht of Mainz.

From Mencken's scriptor. rerum Oermaniear., tom. II, x. 1151.

This archbishop held the most precious court in Germany. Therefore, although he had two archbishoprics and a lucrative bishopric, such rich revenues were not enough to redeem the archbishop's pallium, because he wasted everything, was too generous and did too much for the cause everywhere; therefore, he resorted to trickery and deceit to gather such, which was not befitting his reputation, and also gave him the push.

Luther's verdict on Albrecht.

This is attached to Luther's act with Carl von Miltitz at Altenburg, below in No. 276.

The Archbishop of Mainz and Magdeburg's summary instruction for the sub-commissioners, poenitentiaros and confessors who are responsible for the execution of the gracious indulgence and for the of the great powers, which for the benefit of the Church of the Chief of the Apostles in Rome are abundantly given by our most holy Lord Pope Leo X, may be named and decreed.

This writing is published without indication of the year and place, but with the name of Churfürst Albrecht under the title: Instrnetio snrninaria pro sndeonnissariis etc. in quarto. It is found in Latin and German in Kapp's "Sammlung einiger zum päbstlichen Ablaß gehörigen Schriften," p. 93; in German in the Leipzig edition, Vol. XVII, p. 7, and in Walch.

Translated into German and annotated by M. Johann Erhard Kapp.

We Albrecht, by the Grace of God and the Apostolic See of the Holy Church of Magdeburg and the See of Mainz Archbishop, Primate and Archchancellor of the Holy Roman Empire in Germania, Elector and Administrator of the Church of Halberstadt, Margrave of Brandenburg, Stettin, Pomerania, Cassuben and Wenden Duke, Burgrave of Nuremberg and Prince of Rügen;^a) 1) and the Guardian of the Brothers of the Order of Friars Minor de observantia of the Convent at Mainz,^b) the pre-

1) In this document, the annotations marked with letters are made by Kapp; those marked with numbers are made by us.

a) The space would not be sufficient, if I wanted to tell this Elector's life here. Among the Electors of Mainz he is Albertus II and his life is found in the great historical koxioo quite accurate. But if you want to know something more about him, you must read the following scribes in addition to those listed there: M/ooi'r Reformation History, which the Herr Consistorial- und Kirchenrath I). Cyprian has already published twice, Mr. Heinrich Schmid's Brandenburg Reformation History, and the famous Consistorialrath I). Vo/r. M'ekaekr" Ler'neer'i historical preface of the beginning and progress of the Reformation in Halle, which is prefixed to the centennial monument of the Reformation edited there in 1718; Georg Arnold's Leben Churfürst Moritzens, which Mr. Immanuel Weber corrected in German, although not with all scholars' applause, had printed in Giessen in 1719; not to mention other scribes who have described the beginning of the Reformation. The well-known continuator of the Laronrr, Lloom", mentions our Chur

Fürsten 1. VII., Vnnal. ad a. 1517, x. 322, very donoriÜ66, when he speaks: "Erat autem hoc tempore inter Germaniae Praelatos Ecclesiasticos eminentissimus et dignitatis apice natalium splendore Princeps, Al- hertus, Archiepiscopus Moguntinus et Magdebur- gensis, Germaniae Primas et S. R. Imperii Princeps Elector, Marchio Brandenburgensis. Hunc igitur speciali commissione praefecit Summus Pontifex indulgentiarum publicandarum negotio etc."

b) No scriptor coaevns have let us know the name of this Guardian. Most of what we know of his

The apostolic commissarii decreed in accordance with the said gracious indulgences and other apostolic powers, together or separately^c) wish all and every spiritual person, the secular, and the religious of all and every mendicant order, for the execution of the plenary indulgence and other graces, which for the benefit of the building of the church of the most noble apostle at Rome may have been graciously given by our most holy Lord Leo X. Pope recently in the manner of a jubilee. Pabst the other day in the manner of a jubilee, may be delegated and chosen, eternal salvation in the Lord! We send to your prudence the summary process to be observed in the execution of such a work of indulgence, which you, each and every one of you, shall diligently and faithfully, without guile or deceit, and as far as human weakness will permit, keep and follow in an oath which you shall have to swear at the end in our hands or in the hands of our servants, or even of those whom we shall specially ordain for this purpose.

Besides these, we want that, if one of you will be subjected to such summary process and orders described below,

Person and Conduite know, we have to thank the first mentioned LHWmro, who reports of him p. 17 that he had been a short thick man. He tells hereupon that the Guardian and Barfüßerorden did not have desire to the thing. - In the old edition of Walch, almost the entire report was printed again in this note, which is included in No. 73 of this volume. Therefore, we have omitted it here.

c) It says here in Latin: 8p6oialit6r eonjnnetirn et in solidnin Oommissarli apostoloei depntati. This elansnla, in solidnin, is disjunctiva, and is given in German: sammt or sonders. It is opposed by dre elansnla si non ornos, which is conditionalis, and is translated: sammt und sonders. In the first easn, if the onnnissarii are deputized in solidnin, it is up to them if one or all of them want to proceed, consequently also in this indulgence commission both the archbishop Albrecht and the guardian of the Minorites, each one for himself could grant indulgences, the first of which has also happened according to the words M/eourr now quoted. In the other case, however, si non ornos, a lawful impediment of the one Commissarii is supponit. The first formula, sammt or sonders, is expressed in the dnro Oanonieo in various ways, as e. g. Simul vel separatim aut singulariter, prout negotii utilitas suadebit, c. n. X. de haeret, in 6. ut omnes aut duo vel unus eorum mandatum apostolicum exequantur, c. 8. h. t. in 6. item in solidum c. 6. de procur. in 6. con- junctum aut divisim. Schilter. ex. X, § 53, vobis et vestrum singulis, c. 12 de haeret, in 6, with which seems to agree the formula known among the Romans: alter amdove, si 6is videlntnr, of which Barnabas Lrr'ssorr'us d6 solenn, kor", k. Verdis lid. II, p. 219 can be read. See at all of the above formula: sammt oder sonders, des Herrn Geheimen Raths Böhmer dns eeelesiastieum k. I., p. 667 se^.

to transgress prohibitions, instructions and teachings knowingly, sacrilegiously and to the detriment of our said business; that, I say, he has thereby fallen into the censures, judgments and punishments contained in the apostolic letter, and that he can be absolved from such church censures, judgments and punishments, which he has thus brought upon himself, only by our most holy Lord, the pope, or by us, or by those to whom we shall give a special order.

Likewise, we decree that our subcommissarii to be appointed, as well as penitentiaries and confessors, who may be chosen by us or by them, shall seek above all the glory of Almighty God, the salvation of souls, and respect for the Holy Apostolic See, as well as the growth and benefit of the aforementioned building. If, however, one of the aforementioned persons, which God would prevent, intends or undertakes to live contrary to this regulation of ours and to the detriment of the said work, he shall know that as soon as he really begins to think this, he is deprived of the power of a penitentiary and of the power to hear confession. Also, if she should, out of obstinacy, take the liberty of hearing confession, since she no longer has any power and is absolved from it, we ipso facto consider her to be subject, then as now, to the censures, judgments, and punishments thundered out in the apostolic bull, from which she cannot be absolved, except by our most holy Lord, the pope, or by us or others, to whom we shall give a special order for this purpose.

We also want the subcommissioners who may be sent by us, and the penitentiaries and confessors who may be chosen by us or by our subcommissioners, to conduct themselves honorably and well in the offices of our commission. They should completely avoid taverns and suspicious places, and should absolutely abstain from all superfluous and useless expenses, so that those offices are not despised whose lives are held in low esteem. We will also punish most emphatically those who are notoriously guilty of this, and who will be convinced of it, which punishment we also impose on our sub-commissioners in our absence by the present.

Similarly, we decree and command that our

Our said sub-commissioners, as well as the confessors to be chosen by us or by them, shall do their utmost to present the apostolic penitentiaries decreed at Rome^d) with all honor; therefore they shall also decorate the confessionals assigned to them with one of the Pope's coats of arms, together with their attached title, name and surname in rough and large letters.

We also forbid them to hear confessions during the sermon or during the stations at the cross in public or even hidden and dark places, so that it may not look as if they wanted to keep the people from the benefit of the divine word, or as if they had diligently chosen such places where all kinds of evil could remain hidden.

We also command the same, under the censures, judgments and punishments which have been unleashed in the apostolic bull, not to engage in any kind of sacrilegious absolutiones, dispensationes, commutationes, compositiones or settlements in such cases as are mentioned in our apostolic bull.

d) The Roman Doenitentiarii are those who administer the Iridium! kotznittzntiariÄtz. The most distinguished among them is called Dotznitentiarii Major, or rnnÄnns, Italian Lomino Denitentiare, and is commonly a Cardinal. He expedites his office through two kinds of ministers. The first type is that of the priests who administer the so-called Kacranaentnill kosnitentiae in the three patriarchal churches after previous confession, and for this purpose the religious are taken from certain orders designated for this purpose, and they are commonly called koenitentiarii Minores. In the Lnsiliea Imteranensi the Ninoros Odssrvantss are recormati of the holy Drancrmei, in the Vnticana those of the Society of JEsu, and to 8anta Naria NaZsiors the Dominicans. In each of said churches there are seven of all kinds of nations. Each one speaks a particular language of the nation for whose good it is ordered. These cannot absolve in the easidns daxas rsssrvtis, but only in those cases which are forbidden to the common confessors. The second kind of Otkcinium in the kosnitentaria is those who govern the same after the manner of a tribunal, over which they also expedir lakera" ^xostoliens, after the manner of a breve, but under a different form and special seal, so Distinguished From the seal of the Lrsvinrn ^po8tolicornrn, which 8nd annulo ?i86atori8 are issued. The most distinguished is the Doenitcntiariae, so commonly is an anckitor rotae, under which stand the LiAiUntor Lrsvinrn, the Lnmnmto, a Doctor Dscrstorm, who is also called Öanonmta, as well as the Nkeolo^ns Dosnitentiariae, not to mention the still lesser OLcmliinni. Whoever is eager to instruct himself more extensively on this matter, should read Dan Dm sccls8ia8t., p. 252 86HH. as well as the Abriß der kathol. Church, x. 565, which Mr. Georg Christoph Ferdinand von Rasewitz published in 1714 in 4.

The judges are not allowed or permitted by the provisions of the Bull, clearly and unambiguously. They shall also not engage in absolving censures dictated by the Ordinarii or other judges, unless by agreement of the parties. In the meantime, however, our said subcommissarii and penitentiarii shall be able to absolve those who have been involved in ecclesiastical penalties pronounced by the Ordinary or other judges, as far as the tribunal of conscience is concerned, and so far only that they may obtain the said indulgence; However, they must be told beforehand that they will take due caution from those who are to be absolved in this way, by means of an oath, so that within the termini competentis (proper term) they will give satisfaction to the offended party, where they have not done so, or will not be able to do so, and also surrender themselves to the Excommunicatori, and obey his order as much as they can. Of the judgments and censures, however, which have been passed by a canon, and indeed not at one instance, our subcommissarii and penitentiarii will be able to absolve those who confess to them, not only by virtue of the grace of a perfect pardon, since the eight years^e) of our commission still last, but also by virtue of a letter of confession to be purchased,^f) after said eight years of our bull will be at an end.

1) Likewise, we decree that in all places where crosses are erected for said indulgence, as long as the erected cross will remain there, daily, or as often as we or our Subcommissarii shall deem it good, after the Vespers and the Completorio,^g) or before the

e) Thus, it can also be seen from this that this commission is supposed to last 8 years; God alone shortened the deadline and had this deception discovered completely in the third year by the blessed Luther.

f) The letters of confession, called in Latin dout688ioualia, are papal ludulta by which, after the tax has been paid, one receives the power to choose a confessor who can absolve the confessor of reserved cases. One sees Lxarueu Oou-eiili 1^id6utiui, IV, p. 109, latest edit. and LoF- Hist. Lwl., III, p. 112.

1) From here on, the instructions are often almost identical to those Arcimbald gives to his sub-commissioners. Compare Col. 257 sf. From this it can be concluded that the general commissariats received the form for this from Rome.

g) doiuplotorium or 60rupl6ta is generally when the service is concluded with a dolloeta or oration. In the Latin church, dourplota is the last prayer of the mass, and dorupletoriuru the last part of the canonical hours, by whose rseitiatiou the office of the whole day is completed.

Salve,^h) or at other times the praise of the cross by the Clerisei and the Penitentiarios with white sticks or rods,ⁱ) and by the Subcommissarium, who stands at the end between them, with due solemnness and devotion before

h) By the salve will probably be understood the known ^utiplroua Üuali8 in the Roman Church 8alv6 UsAina. One sees of it of the gentleman abbot Schmidts doxieou secÜWiu8. ruiuu8, ?. III., p. 12, as also KoHttUr-rArr LibUotImvaiu Leolssias.

i) It remarquiert both l7r-r ZHoe-r, that the Roman koeuitentiarii even today as a sign of their power virMiu, a rod, would have in their hands, as well as the highly learned Mr ^utor of the "Abrisses" I. 6. that they held a white plug in their hand, when they sat in the confessional. Count Carl von Schöneberg had once told him that when he had once seen the church of Santa Naria NaMore in Rome, and had passed in front of a confessional cat, the same had struck him on the head with the white stick. When he did not know what this meant, he was told that the Father had forgiven him for his sins. A much greater parade is made by the Sonnn o kenitentiere or koenitentiarius inujor. He is called the Great because he has the power to absolve in cases reserved to the pope. Eight days before Easter he comes alternately to the above-mentioned large churches to hear confessions. He sits on a chair raised three steps high, which is placed at the side of the high altar in every church, in the manner of a tribunal. In his hand he holds a little stick like a scepter, which is divided into three parts. The first part, which he holds in his hand, is of ivory, the other of Bresilgen wood and the third of ebony. All this shall not be a secret in the opinion of Herr von Rasewitz. He then deals with his power and the way in which he executes the commissions. This Oüleiuru of the NaZui koeuiteutarii is said to have brought in 6000 crowns some years ago. But after it was reformed for the benefit of the apostolic chamber, the pope assigned this cardinal no more than 1200 gold crowns. Which news the Lord of Rasewitz has borrowed from the above-mentioned Ladleau de la eour de Homo, to which he also refers, as far as the laxanr of these kcwulteMiariae is concerned, but says nothing more of it than: "dar tont oola est 8u6r8aluruueut eounu par la 7Ä:-" sr soanckakeuse de la draueeHerie, Hui a ötö irupriruöe on diver868 lanAU68 6t euvo^öe pur tonte la dlrrötietü, dau8 lapuelle on voit, Me 1^ad8olutiou des plu8 reasons erin68 eoutre la do^ ds Dieu ne eonte pas Arand 6Ü086, iuai8 HN6 la moindre eontrovention vordre les statuts des?ap68 et les di8penee8 du quelczue rögleruend de la diseiplius eeeleÄasticie ne sont aeoordöes czu^L eux, Hui ont le moien de ^ros^es sornIN68, tellemut Hus pour de lar^ent on oktient devant ee trikunal la permiksion de taire tout ee yu'on veut etc. This is: For all this is sufficiently known from the so vexatious Taxe of the Chancery, which has been printed in various languages, and sent through all Christendom, wherein it is seen that the absolution from the very greatest crimes Against the Divine Law does not cost much at all, but the slightest contravention against the statutes of the popes, and the dispen-

The subcommissarii, after the completion of these stations, should meet with the penitentiaries and confessors in the Sacristy to resolve the doubts and difficulties that may arise. At this meeting the confessors are to present to them the doubts, where they have some, not of fictitious and impertinent, but only of true casibus (cases), as they occurred to them at the time.

Likewise, we decree that the penitentiaries and confessors shall never hear confessions except in a church where a cross has been erected, except for persons who are prevented from doing so, such as the sick, the aged, pregnant women, and the like, or even noble and aristocratic persons; unless our Subcommissarii, for some important reason, deem it good that some confessors be permitted to hear confession from certain persons in certain cases outside the said church and in other convenient places, which we leave to the judgment of our said Subcommissariorum.

Likewise, we decree that in every city and place where the above-mentioned powers and indulgences have been proclaimed, only three sermons shall be preached weekly, namely on Sunday and the other feast days of the week, or if there are no feast days, on the fourth and sixth day, that is, on Wednesday and Friday.

During Advent and Lent, however, one sermon shall be preached daily at a convenient hour, and on holidays two, in the church in which the cross has been erected. We also command that no preaching be done at this hour in any other place,^k) nor by anyone, whoever he may be, unless he has received special permission from the Subcommissario General.

It is also our will that the gentlemen preachers, in their sermons, should explain the Bull, together with all and every article of it, in the first octave, which immediately follows from the erection of the Cross, to the people in its entirety, so that they may, under

In their sermons, they should mention the great power of the Pope and Governor of God, who can give such graces and gifts, and which are necessary even for every man who wants to have eternal life. They should also not fail, within the aforementioned eight days and in all their future sermons, to open up and announce to the people the immeasurable and inestimable benefit of said apostolic indulgences and powers, which they can obtain from these indulgences during the eight years, both for themselves and for the faithful departed souls.

We also want the said preachers to stick to the text of the bull alone, and to explain the cases that can be absolved by virtue of it and the letter of confession, and in what cases dispensation, commutation, and composition or a settlement can take place by virtue of the said bull, so that foreign questions and those that do not belong here are absolutely omitted. For the words of the bull, being deep and high, require enough important and superfluous matter, excluding all subtleties, which is in fact taken from sacred theology and canon law.

These preachers should also inform the people of the indulgences that the prelates of the dioceses of our provinces have piously distributed from the treasury entrusted to them for the enlargement and increase of this work, including the one that we have just given for this purpose from our ordinary power.

The preachers should also exhort the people in all their sermons to pray an Our Father together with the angelic greeting for the welfare of our Lord Pope, and of the Holy Apostolic See and of the whole contending Church, for the conversion of hardened sinners and of those who assail this work, because it is impossible that the multitude of devout persons should not be heard.

Now that the sermons of the first octave after the erection of the cross have come to an end, the said preachers should hereafter and constantly in all their sermons make at least three or four points from the brief concept of the bull among the people, and explain and magnify them completely, as far as it will be possible for them, so that the people may not become disgusted with the indulgence out of forgetfulness of these so great approvals, and may come to despise the beneficence of the apostolic powers.

The preachers should also remind the people in all their sermons that they may diligently visit the stations of the churches or altars, obtain indulgences sationes of any rule of ecclesiastical discipline are granted only to those who have the means to pay large sums, so that for money one gets permission before this court to do anything one wants 2c."

k) To these words the blessed Lutherus opposed the 53rd thesis, as I reminded in my "Schauplatz", p. 95.

They are also to persuade the believers in Christ to strive, as much as they can, to share all the goods of the whole contending church. They shall also counsel the faithful in Christ to strive as much as they can to become partakers of all the goods of the whole contending church, which participation is more useful for people to obtain grace and to preserve it, as well as to overcome the temptations of the power of darkness, than if he were in a state of mortal sin for himself doing all the works of all pious people. Also, the preachers should say that people can be benefited by buying letters of confession.

Furthermore, it is our will that the preachers should indicate the following three points to the people in all their sermons.

First, that the faithful who wish to obtain such indulgences may, out of respectability and devotion before the day of their confessional fasts, and immediately the next day, receive the reverend Sacrament of the Altar at the hands of their appointed pastor, or another competent priest, in their parochial churches, or wherever it will be more convenient for them.

Secondly, in all their sermons the preachers should emphatically indicate and teach the people that all indulgences are suspended within eight years, and that all profits that might be made with them are likewise forbidden for the eight years,^{l)} so that the people may not miss or despise our present indulgences and unheard-of^{m)} apostolic power on the pretext of the indulgences formerly given and the profits that might be shown with them.

Thirdly, the preachers should not omit, in all their sermons, to indicate emphatically to the faithful the censures, judgments, and punishments announced to those who directly or indirectly disobey and rebel, or put all kinds of obstacles in their way, and to inform them, so that they may not fall into the same, since they can be absolved of them only by the pope or by us and our subcommissaries.

l) The great dispute that Johann Tetzel had with the Königsutter monastery arose from this suspension of the other indulgence. No scholar who has described the life of Tetzel has yet mentioned it, so I will not fail to recount it, at the very least, with the inclusion of all the letters exchanged at that time.

m) If one notices these words well, that this indulgence is given out for "unheard of", and holds them against the Decretalem of Pope Leo, one will hardly be able to explain both words in such a way that a contradiction should not be found.

Likewise, we decree that the preachers in their sermons and the penitentiaries when hearing confessions, namely the preachers in the first eight sermons constantly, and in the following ones oftener, but the confessors at all times with all those whom they hear confession, shall most diligently indicate the necessary cause to the faithful, by which our most holy Lord was moved to give and distribute such great grace and indulgence, as is said in the beginning of the bull: namely, because the church of St. Peter and Paul, which is noble in the whole world, has been razed to the ground by Pope Julio of God's memory. Peter and Paul, which is the most noble in the whole world, has been pulled down to the ground by Pope Julio, of godly memory, with the opinion and intention of building another, new one, which, as is fitting, must not have its equal in the world, because it is the head of the others, and with it the Pope, as God's governor, who also has a judgment seat with Christ, and in it various bodies are located, especially those of the blessed apostles Peter and Paul, and innumerable martyrs and other saints, which bodies are constantly being destroyed by rain and hail because of this ruin. In view of this, without great dishonor to his holiness and to all Christendom, this shapeless heap 1) could no longer remain shapeless and so subject to the rain. However, since the church itself had begun with such great costs that the income of the entire Roman church would not suffice for its expansion, His Holiness would have had to take recourse to the intercessions of the believers in Christ, whom He also wants to provoke to this end by means of indulgences, which are the real treasure of Saint Peter, at God's instigation. Therefore, the believers in Christ will not be ashamed to contribute to the construction of St. Peter's, especially since the holy apostle offers and promises his treasure to reward the contributors for their contribution.

Now follow the four most distinguished graces and powers admitted in the apostolic bull, each of which can be obtained separately without the other. With these four powers, the preachers should use their greatest diligence, so that they may most emphatically extol each one of them to the faithful, and explain it as much as they can.

The first grace is the perfect forgiveness of all sins; and can nothing be called greater than this grace, because the man who lives in sins and is deprived of the divine grace

1) "ungestalte Haufe" set by us according to Arcimbold's Instruction, Col. 259, instead of "Klotz" in the old edition.

By this forgiveness of sins, the punishments that he would have to pay in purgatory for insulting the divine majesty are completely forgiven, and the punishments of purgatory are completely extinguished. And although nothing worthy enough to deserve such grace could be given in exchange, because it is a gift of God and grace is inestimable; however, in order that the believers in Christ may be invited to obtain it all the more easily, we decree the following to be taken into consideration, namely:

First of all, everyone who is contrite in heart and has confessed with his mouth, or at least has the intention and opinion to confess in due time, should visit the seven churches designated for this purpose, namely, those in which the coats of arms of the pope are hung, and in each church devoutly pray five Pater noster and five Ave Maria to the honor of the five wounds of our Lord Jesus Christ, through whom our redemption took place, or the Miserere,ⁿ) which psalm is very suitable to obtain forgiveness of sins.

However, sick and disabled persons shall visit the seven altars, which must be erected by the Commisariis and Subcommissariis in the church where the cross will be, on which the coats of arms of the Pope shall also hang, with the same devotion and prayers as above.

But if the persons are so weak that they cannot comfortably come to such a church, then their confessor or preacher shall have an altar brought to a place that is convenient for them. If they visit this place and pray at or before the altar, they will earn the same indulgence as if they had visited the seven churches.

But to those who are on the sick bed, a holy image can be sent, before which or with which they can pray some prayers according to the confessor's liking, which likewise in this way should have done as much as if they had visited the seven churches.

If, however, some or one (person) 1) for a certain reason demanded that the visitation of the said churches and altars be abated, then the Penitentiarii may do so according to the cause heard, but that the said visitation be replaced with a greater contribution.

n) This will probably be the 51st Psalm.

1) Here Kapp has erroneously supplanted "female person". Compare Arcimbold's Instructions, Col. 260.

The way to put in the box.

But as for the contribution to the treasury for the building up of the said church of the chief apostle, the penitentiaries and confessors, after having explained to the confessors such plenary pardon and greatness of indulgence, should ask them: How much money or other temporal goods they would like to give according to their conscience for the said plenary pardon? 2) and this, so that they can bring them to the contribution all the more easily afterwards. Also, because the statuses and dealings of people are all too varied and different, which we do not take into consideration, and consequently cannot impose certain rates, we have deemed it good that such rates could thus be distinguished according to the common course.

The kings and queens and their princes, the archbishops and bishops, as well as other great princes, when they go to the place where the cross is erected or are otherwise there, shall pay five and twenty Rhenish gold florins. ^{o)} The abbots and great prelates of the cathedral churches, counts, barons and other noblemen of nobility and their wives, shall pay 10 such gold florins for each letter of indulgence. Other, lesser prelates and noblemen, as well as the rectores of famous offices, and all others who either have to collect five hundred gold florins annually from permanent income or goods, or otherwise in general, shall pay six such florins. Other burghers and merchants who generally earn two hundred such gold florins shall pay three such florins. Other citizens, merchants and craftsmen, who have their own income and families, shall pay one such florin, but others, lesser ones, shall pay only half. And where the foregoing form is not so fully com-

2) We have changed this sentence according to Arcimbold's Instructions, Col. 260. In the old edition we read instead: "Before how much money or other temporal goods they wanted to spare according to their conscience said perfect forgiveness and fortune?"

o) The Rhenish gold florins have not always had the same price. Formerly they were coined to 21 gl., subsequently they were set by Oarolo V. to 24 gl. or 72 kreuzer, by l'oräinunZuni I. to 25 gl. or 75 kreuzer, by üuäolxro II. to 26 gl. 8 pf. or 80 kreuzer, finally from 30 gl. Among others, one can also see Mr. v. U. Orclin.

allhier gelehrte äisp. äo Linonäa Kaxonioa 8 5, allwo he in der not. d. mehr Autores anführt, auch dieses als was was Besonderes anmerkt, dass ein Goldgulden rheinisch in den sächsischen Gerichten durch ein königliches Rescript vom 10. Aug. 1711 auf 1 Rth. 22 Gr. 6 Pf. Leipzig foot.

We declare that the said kings, bishops, dukes, abbots, prelates, counts, barons, distinguished nobles and rectors, as well as all others who are above, according to the principles of sound reason, according to their munificence 1) and generosity, after they have heard the subcommissaries, penitentiaries, and their confessors' advice and conclusion, shall deposit or have deposited, so that they may fully obtain these graces and gifts. All others, however, are left to the discretion of the confessors and penitentiaries, who always have the better condition of this building in mind, and who should induce their confessors to give more, and should not let anyone go completely without grace, because here the blessedness of the believers in Christ is sought no less than the benefit of the building. But those who have no money should replace their contribution with prayer and fasting. For the kingdom of heaven should not be more open to the rich than to the poor.

And although a wife cannot dispose of her husband's goods against his will, she may nevertheless contribute from her dotal or paraphernal goods, or which come from elsewhere in a lawful manner, against her husband's will in this case. If she has nothing, however, or has been prevented from doing so by her husband, she shall replace this contribution with prayer; which we also want to be understood by the sons who are still under paternal authority.

If, however, said poor wives and sons, who are still under paternal authority, could beg such taxes and contributions from other rich and devout persons 2) or otherwise procure them, they shall place the contributions procured in this way in the box. If, however, they have no way of obtaining such contributions, they may obtain the said treasures of grace by prayer and petition, both for themselves and for the deceased.

In all superior cases, however, the moderation of the Subcommissarium and the confessors shall have place, who shall look to God and their conscience, so that the tranquility of consciences and the indemnification of all aforesaid persons may be happily advised.

The other most distinguished grace is a letter of confession, full of the greatest, immensely refreshing, and previously unheard-of powers, which even if the eight years of our bull are about to end, all-

The text of the bull says: nunc et in perpetuum participes fiant, they shall participate now and forever. The preachers and confessors should explain and raise the content of this letter with all their strength. For in the letter of confession those who buy it are given: firstly, the power to choose a competent confessor, even a religious priest from the mendicant order, who above all absolves them from all censures dictated by anyone,^p) with the agreement of the parties. Secondly, from all and any, even the most serious crimes, even those reserved to the apostolic see, once in life and at the hour of death; thirdly, in cases not reserved, as often as 2c. Fourthly, that once in life and at the hour of death, as often as it will be at the door, although death will not then occur, perfect forgiveness of all sins will be granted; fifthly, all kinds of vows (unless someone had vowed solenniter that he would travel to the promised land, visit the holy apostles in Rome, walk to Compostell in St. James, become a monk, become a monk in the Holy Land, become a monk in the Holy Land, become a monk in the Holy Land, become a monk in the Holy Land, become a monk in the Holy Land, become a monk in the Holy Land, and so on). Jacob, to become a monk, and to take the vow of chastity) into other works of godliness; and sixthly, that the sacrament of the altar may be administered to them in all seasons, except on Easter Day and at the hour of death.

We also decree that one of these letters of confession, insofar as the poor are not excluded from the manifold grace contained therein, shall be given and distributed for a quarter of a Rhenish gold florin; unless perhaps noblemen and other rich persons would have wanted to give something more out of devotion and generosity. Whatever is above the ordinary tax shall be put into the indulgence box. If, however, colleges or monasteries demand such a letter of confession from both male and female persons, then their number and wealth must be considered by the subcommissarii, with whom they must also compare themselves as far as the tax is concerned. These subcommissarii shall also seal the letters of confession that may be written, and sign them with their own hand, along with the noted tax that has been paid for the letter of confession. ^{q)}

p) What Excoramunicatio ad donains luta is, has already been explained. Oensuru ad domins lata is likewise a censure, so by a judge was fallen, and lasts only so long as he lives. It is set against 66N8UrU6 a 6UNON6 latue.

q) One finds also already on the Cardinal's letters of indulgence the tax of the same written, and stands one in the innocent news 1713, p. 1045-1049, which for XII Arots or Groschen eingekauft worden.

1) In Kapp and in the old edition: "Magnificenz".

2) Arcimbald does not go that far.

It is also our will that only one person be written in the letters of confession, unless it be husband and wife, if two are in one flesh. To these may also be added the sons and daughters who are still in their father's power, and have as yet nothing of their own. And so that all and each of the said persons, as well as the poor and others of mediocre means, may obtain such letters of confession, we give to our General Subcommissaries by present power to lax the number of persons who find to write on one letter of confession, as they will see that it will best benefit the aforesaid church building.

We also want the names of all and everyone who buys confession letters, or otherwise receives them for free, to be written in a special book by the deliverers. Those who distribute such letters shall also always sign their names to each letter, so that they can be accounted for in the future, and no fraudulent error can be concealed.

¹⁾ We also want that said letters of confession may be distributed in all places where our Commission of Indulgences extends, and where no cross has been erected, during the eight-year period by those who have a written authentic commission from us or from our General Subcommissarii.

The third principal grace is the participation in all the goods of the universal Church, which consists in the fact that the depositing persons for the said building and their deceased parents, who are different in love, will from now on and for eternity have a share in all the petitions, intercessions, alms, prayers, in all and every pilgrimages, also in those to the Holy Land; furthermore, in the stations in Rome, in the masses, chastisements, and all other spiritual goods, which happen and can happen in the universal, most holy, contending church and of all its members. ²⁾ The faithful become partakers of these things when they buy letters of confession. Preachers and confessors must stand by this authority with the greatest diligence and persuade the faithful not to refrain from buying it and the confessional.

We also declare that in order to obtain these two most noble graces, it is not necessary to confess or to visit the churches and altars, but rather to go to the church.

¹⁾ In this, too, the Mainzer goes further than Arcimbold.

²⁾ Blessed Luther opposed this § with the 37th thesis, as I noted in my "Schauplatz" p. 90.

but only to buy the confessional letter. Although some have already been provided with the letters of confession of the first two graces, they are nevertheless to be persuaded that they may also buy these letters of ours; Considered that in our letters of confession a threefold great grace is dispensed, which is not given in the other two, namely, absolution from the censures dictated by a judge, also from the censures dictated by someone, but at no instance, and the dispensing of the Sacrament of the Altar by a confessor whom one may choose; further, the confusion of vows, as if one promised to travel across the sea, to the liminibus of the apostles, and to St. Jacob in Compostell, to live chastely, to become a monk, if they have not been made in such a way, and all other vows in all kinds of other good works, which confusion should happen within our time of eight years for the sake of the construction of St. Peter.

The fourth most noble grace is for the souls in purgatory, namely, a complete forgiveness of all sins, which forgiveness the pope intercedes for and grants to said souls in purgatory (³), namely, that a deposit be made for them in the box by living persons, which one would have to give or do for himself. However, it is our will that the moderation of our subcommissioners should take place in the case of such a contribution, which must be made for the dead, and of those to whom they will take special care to make this moderation happen. Nor is it necessary that the persons who place souls in the box be contrite in heart and have confessed with their mouths,⁴⁾ since this grace is based on the love in which the deceased has departed and only on the deposit of the living, as is clear from the text of the Bull. The preachers should also make every effort to proclaim this grace most vigorously, because through it the departed souls will certainly be helped, and the work of building the church of St. Peter will be advised in a very useful and superfluous way.

Now follow other graces and powers, which come after the four most distinguished ones. These ³⁾ Of this kind per modern kutkrnAÜ has been acted above, and will occur even more below at the Decretale Leo's X. of it.

⁴⁾ Lutherus considered this teaching unchristian in his 35th thesis. See the note x. 89 in my "Schauplatz".

The confessors and preachers should not read and repeat it above, but in the most proper way, because the bestowal of it is necessary for the salvation of almost all people, least of all those who have the use of reason, and if not all, then in part or in some parts. The obtaining of the same also brings great benefit to the work of rebuilding St. Peter's Church, since previously such rich dispensationes, commutationes and settlements had not gone out from the apostolic see.^{u)}

However, it is to be known that those who have need of these gifts should deposit them for themselves in the set boxes, either themselves or through other trustworthy persons, if it is within their means, and just as much as they would otherwise have to give to obtain them, namely as if they went to Rome or to St. James or elsewhere. Jacob or elsewhere, stopping at stations and returning, and also having letters made out for this purpose; unless the General Subcommissarii, who have special commission from us in this matter, deem it good to set this rate lower, especially if the merits of the persons and the things themselves require it.

Therefore, the first grace is the confusion of all vows for the benefit of said construction; unless someone had solenniter vowed to visit the apostolic churches in Rome and St. James in Compostell! to become chaste, to take up the monastic life, or to go on pilgrimage to the promised land. This confusion can happen for now in two ways, namely by virtue of the perfect forgiveness and the jubilee, and the letter of confession.

It is also our will that our general subcommissarii do not entrust here and there, without distinction, to all and any penitentiarii and confessors or other particular commissarii who are deputized by us or by them, the power to mix up all and any vows, but they shall entrust the same only to those among them in whom they will see that it will benefit the work. This we command to be observed especially in the case of greater vows. In the case of lesser vows, however, in which the expenses for the journey there and back, together with what is offered or sacrificed, or the complaints accompanying the vow do not exceed the value of ten Rhenish gold florins, all Particularsubcommissarii and penitentiarii can make a comparison, but that they always have the better condition of said building in mind.

The other grace is the dispensation and settlement with persons who have committed simony, or are living in irregularity, both about benefices and about the fruits unduly collected in both courts. The preachers should declare this authority, as far as those guilty of simony are concerned, sparingly and with modesty, even only in general, in order to avoid the annoyance of the secular [that is, the laity].

But as for those who have unduly enjoyed the fruits of some benefices, the preachers can speak more clearly of them, because the consciences are variously burdened on this point, namely, in regard to the omission of the divine official duties, because of which they are required and bound to restore the fruits enjoyed from the benefices at a certain definite time, during which the vigils have been omitted, which also takes place at the daily distributions that are usually given to the canonicis residentibus. For if they have not properly resided, or have not attended the proper hours and other divine offices, behold, they have the second kind. Or they have dealt fraudulently with the statutes of their church, which is the third way of weighing down the conscience. Therefore, they are required to restore the distributions improperly enjoyed in such a way in the court of conscience.

With this grace, the Particularsubcommissarii and Penitentiarii, also all confessors, shall behave as if they were the General Subcommissarii, or a generalis, as if there were only one, will or will decide to impose the same on them, because such a Simoniacus does not have the Beneficium, and therefore the same is open. 1) Therefore, by this grace, he is proscribed with the beneficio in both courts. For this grace he shall pay the fruits of the Beneficii obtained by a Simonia, which it yields within one year, into the box, on which the General Subcommissarii shall have a special intention.

The same is said of those who have committed an irregularity, namely that they pay the fruits that come in one year, as soon as they are refused dispensation in both courts.

u) These words, too, are just as good to remember as those above, "Third. (See here Col. 310.)

1) What the opinion of this sentence is, can be recognized from the parallel passage in Arcimbold's Instructionen Col. 266.

is to be driven. Attention must also be paid to the fruits of the benefices and prebends. For if the benefice or prebend were small in substantialibus, but the offerings and distributions, along with other accidences, were fat, then a larger tax must be imposed on them. One must also see to it that they are dispensed with as far as the ordinances are concerned, which they have already accepted or may accept, so that they can also minister in the same in the future.

But as for the fruits of the benefices unduly enjoyed by simony or otherwise, the owners of the same must be required to deposit more than half or the third or fourth part, or even less, if the nature of the undue appropriation would not be important, or reasonably excusable.

If, however, the simoniaci and irregulars would have no benefits, then the manner of the committed simony and irregularity must be considered, and if it is more serious or less, then a greater or lesser tax must be imposed. In all this mercy, the General Subcommissarii must have a free hand, to whom we hereby impose that in this point they do nothing to the detriment of this work, with the penalties announced in the Bull, which they ipso facto burden themselves with.

The third grace is that a settlement of unlawfully appropriated property may be made, both if one does not know it and if one does know it, in some cases mentioned below. If a usurer owed another usurer, and he was requisitioned, and would not return the interest; or if one owed something to a single church; in which the Roman church should or could succede by right. Similarly, in the case of those things which have come into the hands of some, in whatever manner, but they do not know or doubt to whom they are to be restored. Furthermore, in the case of those things which might be left, or which might be left and bequeathed in the future in the eight years to the poor of Christ in general, or to a church, without designation. All these cases should be explained by the preachers to the people, and they should bear with them, so that they may be well understood. Especially in the first case about things that have been taken illegally, because many are tricked in this, but especially the merchants who defraud some unknown people in some way by giving them the goods.

sell more than they are worth, or sell bad for good, or take a little more in price because they wait some time for the payment of the price, or in some other ways, which are innumerable.

For in all these cases restitution should be made; and it is not known to whom. Therefore, they must examine their consciences to see how much they would have to pay for the things they have taken. And by comparing, they will be freed from all restitution of ill gotten things. In the same way, all other cases of certain goods shall be declared, especially if someone has to pay a sum to sacred others or to poor people in general, but he may not be able to pay the whole sum comfortably. For then he can agree with the subcommissariis against a cheap part, and he will be released from the full payment.

The penitentiarii and confessors should not get involved with this grace, except for those who would have an evil conscience because of twenty Rhenish florins. If, however, the conscience would be burdened with a larger sum, then they shall report it to the Subcommissariis, and conclude with them about a certain tax. However, in all such cases, the general commissioners shall be able to moderate everything as they see fit, but they may not do anything to the detriment of the work, with the censures and penalties that have also been mentioned above.

The fourth grace is to grant dispensation on account of irregularity to those who have been promoted to ecclesiastical offices before the proper age without dispensation; and so that they may minister in the accepted offices, this grace shall also be proclaimed to the people by the preachers. The confessors shall also be forbidden not to absolve the same, but they shall communicate with the general subcommissariis, or with whom they have been instructed to do so, who shall proceed with such persons, as has been said in the other grace of other irregularibus. However, if they have no beneficia, they shall deal with them more gently.

The fifth grace is that one can grant dispensation to those who have been joined in a forbidden degree of blood friendship or affinity, they may have known it; likewise to those who have been hindered by some kind of spiritual relationship, and yet have joined, or also to those who have otherwise, in whatever way it may be, betrothed themselves.

Knowing that we do not by any means grant dispensation to those who have been prevented by the degrees forbidden in the divine law (x) by virtue of this grace; but in the degrees which have been forbidden by the papal law, we command to dispense in this way. If those who, in the first or other degree of affinity, have been made fornicators by carnal mixture, but not public (nefarious), if they have been married, and the marriage has been consummated with a carnal mixture, we shall grant them dispensation in this way: First, that we count them free from the condemnation that has been placed on their necks; second, from their sins; third, that we recognize the children who have already been born and who may yet be born as legitimate, and also give them freedom so that they may marry again or remain in the marriage that was entered into in this way. And all this we do only in foro conscientiae or in conscience. If, however, the affinity of the betrothed is due to a publicly known carnal union, so that the affinity between them is known, or if such an impediment has been brought before the court, then it is our will that, in order to avoid public offense, no dispensation should be granted to such people. For the apostolic bull does not want such a dispensation. If, however, the said affinity is always concealed, then the persons contracting in such a manner will be able to attend each other in the marriage thus contracted, and the children will be able to succeed to their estates. If, however, such a fornication were to come to light, then it can be settled before the foro contentioso, that is, a public court.

In the third and fourth degrees of both affinity and consanguinity, however, in both courts, both in the court of conscience and in the trial court, we want to have it dispensed that the marriage be consummated anew, or that they remain in the marriage bond, and that the children who have already been born be declared legitimate. Which we therefore understand to mean that, if some had been engaged to be married and had consummated the marriage by the carnal union, those in the third or fourth degree of affinity or blood friendship with each other

x) This the pope still holds today so that he reserves the dispensations in divine laws, and does not allow even the supreme konsnitsntiurio, as can also be seen from the "Outline of the Catholic Church" x. 367 can be seen.

We want to grant dispensation to those who are related, but not to those who want to join in the future.

But those who have married and are hindered by a spiritual relationship^y) we absolve from their sins, and grant them dispensation in both courts, so that they may be granted to remain in the marriage thus entered into, the children being declared lawful, as above.

If, however, a baptismal witness and the child raised from baptism marry each other, they alone may be granted a dispensation to remain in the marriage they have contracted.

However, we want our general subcommissarii to pay diligent attention to the dispensations of all persons who are hindered in this way, and to entrust them only to those people whom they will consider competent for this, but not here and there to all and everyone without distinction, because said subcommissarii will have to issue open and authentic letters in a public court because of such dispensations. Our general subcommissarii shall also decree that those who need such a dispensation shall put in the box as much as they have to spend on the journey to Rome and back home to obtain it, and there also the expedition of a letter about it. However, our aforementioned General Subcommissarii and others, to whom they will assign this, shall have the power to limit this deposit, if the circumstances of the matter require it.

The sixth grace is to establish a settlement with those who have taken church and monastery properties in an unjust manner, and who cannot be forced to restitution in a judicial manner, because those to whom restitution should be made have no instruments and necessary grounds of proof. For even those who possess such in this way, although they would have evidence with them, may settle, and after payment into the box has been made before the settlement, they may be exempted from further restitution to said churches. It is also allowed in both courts that they can keep them freely in the future.

It is also our will that the preachers should follow this

Y) Of the eoAvations spiritnli occurs in all coriptoridns lluris Oanonioi. P7m As-ss-r deals with it p. 687. 691, allwo he also p. 689 shows that the Ooneiliuru Iriäentium tightened the old law again.

They should say that those who only doubt whether they have or possess such goods, even if they do not know for sure, should make a settlement, because in case of doubts concerning the conscience, the narrowest way is always to be chosen. But with those who doubt in this way whether they do not possess such things, it will be easier to proceed.

With this grace, however, only our general subcommissarii shall lend a hand, and a few others to whom they shall deem it good to entrust such things. However, if such a contract does not amount to more than twenty florins, the penitentiarii and confessors shall also be able to get involved, but in such a way and in such a manner that, with the above-mentioned penalties, they may not do anything to the detriment of the work, but may always strive to improve the condition of the same. However, those who own such goods will have to get along in such a way that they put half of the value of the goods, or as much as the General Subcommissarii will allow, into the box.

The seventh grace is that, for the benefit of the said construction, all goods, things and monies, which, instead of restitution of unlawfully appropriated goods, have been bequeathed in the last will of all and every person to all kinds of uncertain churches or holy monks and persons, likewise also to certain or absent persons, of whom no news is to be had, or may be bequeathed in the said eight years, may be appropriated and rightfully obtained, because our most holy Lord Pope has designated them for the said construction. It can also be noted that there is a difference between this grace and the aforementioned third one, because there the goods were not bequeathed for the things that were badly taken, and therefore the pope does not apply them to the construction of St. Peter's, but he only gives authority that those who should give them to uncertain churches, holy monasteries, and the poor in general, can, if they do not want to pay them to uncertain churches or poor people, come to an agreement with the agents of the said construction. In this present case, however, because they have been bequeathed instead of the unlawfully appropriated goods, they are entirely applied to the said building, and thus they may be appropriated by the agents of the building.

Likewise, the pope applies to the said church all the goods which are unlawfully possessed by some; but those to whom these goods are restored cannot be reacquired for a certain reason.

Likewise, all those goods which were to be given for the redemption of the prisoners, and which were bequeathed for said redemption by some, whoever they may be, or may be bequeathed during the said eight years.

Similarly, all the goods that should be paid out of a vow, ordinance or custom, on guest houses or other such pleasures.

Likewise, we order the preachers, with the penalties and censures contained in the Bull, as above, to make known, explain, and report to the people all said cases, and especially that which has been left in lieu of the restitution of things unlawfully appropriated. Likewise, that all who have only some knowledge of said cases, as there are notaries who have been requested for said last will, and witnesses, also all other persons, under the very penalties contained in the bull, as above, are required to report and make known the same to the lords Subcommissarii respective within eight days following said intimation, so that the goods can be confiscated from said Subcommissarii. Also, those who have such notice and neglect to give it may not be absolved from these church penalties until they have given the said notice. However, the confessors shall take care not to interfere with this grace unless the price of this contract is less than twenty Rhenish florins. However, the General Subcommissarii shall have full power in such cases, but that no fraud and trickery may be involved, as also under the conditions that have been set for other and the first contracts above.

And because in the foregoing it has been said of the hindered persons, we hereby declare that hindered persons are: all prisoners and those in chains and bonds; persons whose time of birth is approaching, or who have children to suckle from whom they cannot get away; likewise those who, because of enmity charged upon them, because of banishment, or otherwise on account of death or other great danger, neither can nor may visit the place where the indulgence is dispensed; Similarly, married women who cannot leave without the consent of their husbands, as well as sons and daughters who are still in the custody of their fathers, and who cannot leave without the will of their parents.

are involved in divine or human officia, and in general all those who are not allowed to travel de jure or de facto. All these aforesaid may be granted dispensation from the subcommissariis and penitentiariis, so that they may not be bound to visit the churches or altars.

If, however, all the above-mentioned persons could not deposit their contributions in the boxes intended for the construction of the church of St. Peter, then they shall have them deposited by other credible persons, but in such a way that such mandataries may not postpone such deposits to the detriment of the work, under the censures, judgments and penalties announced in the apostolic letter. We also want that those who postpone the deposits without the most important causes are ipso facto subject to this penalty, from which they too can only be absolved by our most holy Lord, the Pope, or our General Subcommissariis.

Likewise, we declare and decree that all monks and nuns, both those who beg and those who do not beg, in the case that they have despised their superiors, may purchase or procure this indulgence and grace committed by us for themselves and those who are under them, insofar as they may enjoy the same in their convents or monasteries, if they have something right to deposit. And if they have nothing of the kind, then they may beg alms from any and all ecclesiastical and secular persons who have their own funds, and make those who give said alms put them in the box for the religiosos.

If, however, they could not obtain anything from others from which they should contribute, then they should replace their contribution with prayer and fasting or other good works. We also declare that if the prelates of the aforesaid religious do not want to give their subjects the freedom to go to the places where the cross has been erected and the indulgences have taken their throne in such a way, then those who are under them may freely and lawfully confess to the confessors by apostolic power and by virtue of our authority, which our Subcommissarii send them, or which they themselves shall request from them, notwithstanding the privileges and constitutions given and confirmed to these orders also by apostolic authority, that they shall confess only to the confessors who have been assigned and instructed to them by their superiors. But so that it may not have the appearance that we have, through

This declaration of ours has been more than justly yielded to said monks and nuns, and therefore they wanted to lift the monastic observance: so it is our will that these monks, because of said forbearance, can only be absolved of their past debts, excesses and crimes, which are reserved not only to their superiors, but also to the most holy lord, the pope, if their now said superiors do not want and contradict. We also order them, under penalty of the sentence passed, to be excommunicated, so that they may not hinder this only for this time, since their Privilegia and Constitutiones are suspended.

Likewise, we declare that in this matter the poor are understood to include not only the aforementioned monks, but also all those who beg for their sustenance, as well as those who have to live from their work and yet only acquire daily nourishment from such work, and from this can lay up nothing for the days to come. Our Subcommissarii and Penitentiarii shall diligently investigate these poor and all other conditions, and after they have obtained the truth about them, they shall be granted their blessedness and harmlessness out of mercy.

Likewise, we declare that those who have once been expedited and have obtained a perfect pardon, if they have relapsed again,^z) where they have not done anything illicit out of a trust in this indulgence, or have remembered the past or forgotten things, may confess again in the places where grace is made known, and earn such indulgences. Also, they will not need to go to the first confessor, they would want to do it meritoriously. And under this our declaration we want to understand all those who have obtained or will obtain present grace.

Likewise, we declare that those who will do public penance, on the occasion of which the whole neighborhood may have been annoyed, or the place where they have exceded, if the severity of the secular laws is not feared, shall behave thus. First of all, in a comfortable chapel or sacristy, they shall be stripped naked and bare of shoes, and shall keep nothing but their shirts or pants on. Then they shall have a rod in one hand and a light in the other.

z) These are called here in Latin rseiäivantss, which comes from rseickivars. - Kapp follows this with a lengthy argument that rseiäivars means as much as: to do the same thing again. The words we have used: have relapsed, he replaces with: "got a recidiv".

They are to hold hands so that their hands are crossed in front of their chests, but they are to walk in front of the procession going to the station, and they are also to lie down with bent knees in front of the erected cross until the song there with the versicle and the collecte is completely finished. Afterwards, when all is silent and the Commissary begins the Psalm Miserere, they are to be led by their confessors through the middle of the station, first to the Commissary, who will take the rod from the hand of the penitent and strike him three times on the back, saying: God spare you and forgive your sin, which all and every confessor will do in the same way, according to the order. After the Psalm Miserere mei Deus has been said alternately with the Gloria Patri, the Commissary shall begin: Kyrie eleison. Pater noster. Et ne nos. Salvos fac Domine servos tuos. Deus etc. Mitte eis auxilium de sancto etc. Domine, exaudi orationem meam etc. Dominus vobiscum etc. Oremus: Deus cui proprium etc. Hereupon the confessor shall absolve the penitent himself, who is thus before the cross, with the proper apostolic absolution, and declare that he is in this way reintegrated into the community of the faithful. However, public penance should not be easily imposed on the clergy and young men. Also the women should only have their shoes removed because of the reverence for this gender.

Those who do penance in this way, before they are absolved, must also give an oath that they will obey the command of the one who absolves them, and that they will, according to their own ability, pay emendam to the offended, and obey the orders of the Excommunicator.

If, however, the salvus conductus is denied to those who wish to do penance in this way, or if there is any other danger, our general subcommissarii shall have the power to absolve them or have them absolved by the confessors, as they see will be beneficial to the salvation and harmlessness of those who do penance, with the addition that they may replace the deserved punishment of a greater discipline with a richer deposit.

General formula of absolution.

Have mercy on you 2c. Our Lord Jesus Christ absolve you by the merit of his suffering. And I absolve you by apostolic power, entrusted to me in this piece, and

It is granted to you, from all ecclesiastical censures, judgments and punishments with which you are afflicted in some way, then from all excesses, sins and crimes committed by you, whether they be serious and great, and from whatever cause, specialiter or generaliter, should be reserved to our most holy Lord Pope and the apostolic see, also in the letter, which is published in Coena Domini every year, as well as of those who should now be specially mentioned, by erasing all the stains of inability and notas infamiae which you have contracted on the occasion of the aforesaid things, by forgiving you the penalties of impiety, and by restoring you to the innocence in which you found yourself after your baptism. I also restore you to the sacraments of the church and restore you to the fellowship of the faithful. In the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit. Amen.

It must be known, however, that excommunicated persons and persons subject to other church punishments at the instance of one party can thus be absolved, even if the other party does not want to: Our Lord Jesus Christ absolve you, and I by apostolic power, which is entrusted to me and granted to you, absolve you from all ecclesiastical censures, judgments and punishments in which you find yourself involved at the instance of the parties, and this only to the extent that you may obtain this indulgence, so that you may give satisfaction to the offended party, if it is in your power, and surrender yourself to your excommunicatori, also obeying his orders according to your power. Then, of the excesses you have committed; and in this way, consequently, the whole absolution must be read.

Also our commissarii and penitentiarii, before they absolve the persons excommunicated in this way and involved in the censures at the instance of the parties, shall take an oath from them that they will give satisfaction to the charged parties if it is in their power, and may surrender themselves to their excommunicatori after the deadline that has passed and been set for them for the purpose of obtaining mercy and obey his command, as has been decreed by us in the foregoing.

Also, the aforementioned form of general absolution can and should be extended according to the nature of the confessors' excesses, and as required by the grace given in the bull.

For example:

If a settlement has been made for a thing that cannot be restituted, it may also be attached: I also permit and admit, by the same power, that after having paid this or that sum for this holy work, you shall be absolved from further restitution of the remaining things which you possess unlawfully, and shall not be required to voluntarily restore any more. In the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, Amen.

If the vows are changed, it must be added: I also by this very authority change this or that vow into this work of indulgence. In the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, Amen.

As far as the irregulars and simoniacs are concerned, it should be added: I also grant you dispensation on account of the irregularity committed and the simony charged upon your neck in obtaining certain offices and benefices, and permit you to be promoted to all ecclesiastical offices, also to minister in the ordinaries taken upon you, and in this way to retain the ecclesiastical benefices obtained, also to accept all other benefices which might otherwise be granted to you canonically. In the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, Amen.

If the benefices obtained by simony are conferred anew, they may be added: I also confer on you anew all and every spiritual beneficia, whatever they may be and how much they may be, which have been obtained in an illicit manner, cum cura et sine cura, with and without spiritual care, with all their rights and appurtenances. I also introduce you anew to their real possession. In the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit, amen.

In the same way, those who have entered into and consummated forbidden marriages are to be dealt with, by first absolving them according to the general formula of absolution, and then granting them dispensation so that, despite such an impediment, they may at the same time remain lawfully in a marriage they have entered into in this way, or enter into another one anew, so that the children are declared lawful, as is clearly stated in the bull. All the foregoing is to be understood both by the court of conscience and by a public court.

Likewise, we declare that the confessors and penitentiaries are to be excused from all sins, however great they may be, as well as from those that are committed to the

The only exceptions to this rule are those which have been specified above. However, in the cases reserved de jure to the pope and prelates, if the person committing the crime is of great status and wealth, it is good to speak with the subcommissarii, and to consult with them about the assessment and other penances to be imposed upon them, but that their names and surnames be concealed, and only the nature of the crime and the property of the offender be indicated.

Similarly, the penitentiarii and confessors shall not absolve from the bonds of excommunication and other ecclesiastical punishments in foro contentioso, but shall have the same passed on to the subcommissarios.

Likewise, we also order the aforementioned penitentiarii and confessors to appear as often as they are requested by us or our subcommissarii; also, if they notice that something has happened to the detriment of indulgences, they are to report it to us or our subcommissarii.

We also order the above-mentioned penitentiarii and confessors in the case of the above-mentioned church punishments and censures not to take the deposit or the alms into their hands from those who confess to them, but to have them put into the box by the Christian believers themselves with their own hands (as has already been said).

We also command the said confessors that, apart from the tax they must pay, and apart from attending church, they may not impose on their confessors any other penance, in the case of church punishments that have been announced, except for a few short prayers, which may not last long, in order to prevent them from falling again immediately.

It is also our will that they may not demand a reward from their confessors for confession, because one commits simony, but they should only accept that which is given freely [that is, voluntarily], under the above-mentioned church penalty.

Likewise, we order the preachers of our said work, with all the above-mentioned church penalties, not to neglect to announce to the people, at least on Sundays and feast days, so that they do not give their deposits, which must be made for the attainment of grace and the salvation of souls, into the hands of the subcommissarii and confessors, but deposit them themselves, or have them deposited by other trustworthy persons. They shall also tell them that if they neglect to do so, as-then they shall know that they have not earned an indulgence, nor obtained grace and redeemed souls. It is also our will that the confessors and penitentiaries should do the same as the preachers to all their confessors, under the same penalties as above.

We further decree that our General Subcommissarii shall likewise not take into their hands the deposits of the faithful, under the above-mentioned penalties; indeed, they shall endeavor with all seriousness to ensure that all and every of the above-mentioned things are really and in fact carried out, and are most carefully observed by the preachers and confessors, as is due to each respective.

We, on the other hand, allow our General Subcommissarii to take into their hands the money for the letters of confession, for which a certain assessment has been made, and to render due account of the money received to us or to those of us to whom we shall give special instructions.

We also order, under penalty of the announced sentence of excommunication, and under a fine of a thousand ducats to be applied to the said building, that no one may dare to reprint the aforementioned confessionals, unless he has been ordered to do so by us or by our General Subcommissarii. It is also our will that in all places where the cross has been erected, only one person shall distribute the letters of confession, who shall inscribe the names and surnames of the purchasers, also of those who will have them for free, and these shall sign their own hand on all letters of confession.

In order to avoid all suspicion of fraud and negligence, we order that only three keys be made to all boxes that may be assigned to the said indulgence, one of them with the Subcommissario, the other with the Thesaurario or Treasurer (to whom we will give a special order) or with the one whom the said Thesaurarius may deputize for this purpose, the other with the treasurer (to whom we shall give a special order for this purpose), or with the one whom the said treasurer may deputize for this purpose, the third finally with the ecclesiastical or secular authority of the place, as will be best for the subcommissarii. It is also our will that, when the time to open said boxes will be at the door, they shall be opened in the presence of all who will have keys, and of a public notary, as well as of some competent witnesses required for this purpose, and the money shall not be touched by anyone until it has been counted in the presence of said persons, appraised by experienced persons, and reduced to Rhenish gold florins. For this sum, an instrument shall also be drawn up by a

The notary shall be sworn, in which the above-named persons who have been present, but especially the treasurer or the person deputized by him for this purpose, shall be named, who shall make the decree for the money, and shall proceed herewith as we shall order him to do. ^{a)}

The rest will be replaced by the Subcommissarium, Preachers and Penitentiaries, who will receive eternal rewards from our Lord God and the Holy Apostles Petro and Paulo for such a happy work.

Myconius' account of how the Guardian of the Franciscans of the Barefoot Monastery at Mainz had rejected the papal commission on the indulgence to be collected with particular skill.

From the Myconius üst. rslorm., x. 16 reprinted in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, Vol. I, p. 380.

In 1517, after Julii's death, Leo Decimus became pope and announced his intention to complete the construction of the church of St. Peter in Rome, which Julius had begun: All countries and especially the German nation should give money. At the same time, Albrecht, bishop of Magdeburg, who had recently purchased the pallium in Rome with great money, had also become bishop of Mayntz and a prince of the church, and in order to obtain the same in Rome, he had to pay for the previous and new pallium from scratch, which amounted to many thousand guilders. Thus this man was splendid and proud, wanted nothing, built for it many useless buildings to hall, drove unbelievable arrogance and cost, that he also needed money. In order to bring money again, the new Pope Leo Decimus sends another indulgence to German lands, and the Bishop Albrecht of Mayntz and Magdeburg, and the guarantor of the Barefoot Monastery in Mayntz, a short, fat man, were made chief commissioners. From now on, they are to order the Umler-Commissarios and appoint preachers, a) The pope at that time received this money generally through the Fuggers in Augsburg, who were known to have been rich merchants there. But how much money was collected at that time, is probably not to say, [^]Voltüus reports 1. II. Dsct. inemorad., p. 183, that Tetzels, under this Archbishop Albrecht's authority, solved 100,000 gold florins in the first and only year. See also Herr Heinrich Schmidt's Brandenburg Reformation History, p. 134, and the learned Herr Johann Jakob Hottinger's Helvetic History, x. 28, where he refers to Auctores.

who admonished the people to deposit money, and they rightfully redeemed the indulgences. And so that the bishop would do it more joyfully, the pope also promised him a portion of the money. This made devotion. But the Gardian and the Barfüßer order did not like the matter. For Tetzel, as mentioned above, did it so roughly that the common man almost began to suspect the indulgence: as if one did not seek to absolve people of sins and the deceased from purgatory, but rather from money and property, and to devour the houses of widows and orphans, as Christ says.

Moreover, the monks complained that they had enough work, that they begged so much that they maintained themselves and their monasteries: Let them also beg enough for the pope and the Cardinals and all the Roman splendor, that would be too hard for him and untruthful for the poor people. But if they were to refuse and deny such obedience and apostolic command to the pope, to whom they and their entire order had obeyed, pledged and sworn, it would also be very difficult for them and they would have to worry about his disgrace. For the other day, in honor of the Order, he had made their chief general Christophorum de Forlivio a Cardinal, even though they had to give 30,000 fl. for it. And so they were taken in with this indulgence and commission; and they spent a day in Weymar in Thuringia, to see how these things might be handled.

So at Weymar the Gardian of Mayntz and several Gardians of the country of Thuringia met: Arnstadt, Eisnach, Saltza 2c., and there all sorts of ways were proposed how to get rid of this commission, and none of them wanted to rhyme that one would keep the pope's favor and grace.

Finally, the Gardian of Mayntz, when he was burdened with the commission, said: "Dear brothers, you all know that our bishop of Mayntz is a proud, arrogant man, and wants to be unmastered by us, as poor beggars and mendicants. So I will dispose myself to him, and with him, how the indulgence is to be preached, and the commission to be carried out, have conversation and deliberate; and just pay attention to what he gives: and will act according to it, as if I did not like it at all, and only suggest it unruly, until he becomes angry. So I will stay on my mind. If he then admits that my suggestion does not rhyme at all, then I will finally say: Most gracious lord! you are commissary-in-chief, if you do not know how to give me coincidence, so that nevertheless the mandate of papal sanctity will be sufficient, then I will give you the right.

I will take care of the whole thing for you. Do it as you like. And I will leave the bulla and letter with him. If he then sends the matter to Pope again, we will see how we answer. But if he takes care of the commission alone, as I would gladly allow the hopeful man to do, then we are the losers. And when the monk came to the bishop, everything was done as it had been discussed in Weymar. And the bishop was glad that he alone had Pabst's power. So the monk was glad that he was released from the drudgery.

74 Myconius' report on how Tetzel declared himself to Archbishop Albrecht as a subcommissary, and how he appointed him as such.

From the Myconius Ilist. rstorri., x. 19.

When Bishop Albrecht was the supreme commissioner of papal indulgences, the great clamant and preacher of indulgences, Johannes Tetzel, came to him: he stated that where he was needed, he wanted to change the indulgences and thus to strike them out, so that he hoped they would carry something honest. The bishop was happy, 75 Tetzel's special permission, allegedly received from Pope Leo X, to grant indulgences also for himself.

From Vogel's "Leben des Ablasskrämers Tetzel", p. 179, printed in Löscher's Ref-Acta, Vol. I, p. 383. Löscher rightly remarks that this document seems suspicious to him because of the enormous concessions, and it seems credible that it was made for mockery.

Translated into German.

We Leo the Tenth, Roman pope, servant of servants, Christ's governor on earth, successor of Peter and Paul, declare to all believers of both sexes how we, by virtue of the power of Christ and of St. Peter and Paul, as well as of the whole Church, we have granted permission and authority to Mr. Johann Tetzel, friar of the Dominican Order, apostolic commissary and, through Germany, orator, inquisitor of heretical wickedness, to grant the richest indulgences in the whole world; that the said Mr. Johann Tetzel can and may absolve from all cases which the apostolic see at Rome has reserved for itself in general and in particular in all cases, and about which this see should be consulted.

Likewise, from the repented, confessed and forgotten sins, as well as from the unrepented and unconfessed ones; and at the hour of death, to grant general indulgence of all sins, all guilt and all punishment that one would have deserved to endure in purgatory. Likewise, to close the gates of hell and open the door to paradise. However, to the poor. . . . Sealed under the fisherman's ring in the last Roman interest number, the great golden number, and in the solar and lunar circle in the leap year.

76 Joachim I, Elector of Brandenburg, mandate to his subjects to respect "Tetzel" as subdelegated commissary, who is at the same time given safe conduct, in his sermons. Date Wednesday after the Exaltation of the Cross [16th Sept.], Anno 1517.

From the original in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, Vol. II, Appendix (immediately after p. 656).

We Joachim von GÖttes Gnaden Marggrauv zu Brandenburg des heiligen Römischen reichs Erzcammerer vnd kurFürst zw Stettin pomern der cassuben vnd Wenden Hertzog, Burggraff zw Norembörg vnd Fürst zu Rügen Embieten allem vnd iglichen vnsern Prälaten, Graven, Herrn, Ritterschaft vnd Steten unseres Chur-Fürstenthumbs der Marck zw Brandenburg vnser Freuntschafft, Funst vnd Grus und geden Ewch zw erkennen: That the Most Holy Father and Lord Leo of the Holy Christian Church, Supreme Bishop and Bishop of our Most Holy Lord, out of movable causes and insanity for the salvation and salvation of the Christian souls, has given a merciful and gracious indulgence and indulgence, and for this reason has given the Most Holy Father and Highborn Prince Albrecht, Archbishop of Meintz and Magdeburg, of the Holy Roman Empire through Germania, Electors and Primate, Administrators of the churches between Halberftadt, Margraves between Brandenburg, between Stettin, Pomeranian of the Cassuben and Wenden Dukes, Burgraves between Nuremberg and Princes between Rügen have ordered our dear Lord and Brother in several provinces to spread and carry out the same indulgence between commissaries. After the report of the official bulls about it went out, so that his beloved out of any possible prevention, so that his beloved may not order such by his beloved person, his beloved has several subcommissaries and especially the willful one.

and High Angel Ern Johan Tetzel Baccalaurien der heil. Scripture, heresiarch, preacher of the order in this country, and subdelegated to several other principalities and countries, This indulgence and indulgence we have granted in our territories to the Holy Roman Pontiff and to our subjects for their salvation and consolation, and we have forgiven the name of Ern Johan Tetzel and all his other subdelegated and appointed subcommissaries, who will present a lawful appearance and testimony of our will, our sure peaceable and pious faith 1) before all of us who have given us and whom we have given our pious faith in our lands, And we will compel and grant such indulgence, and give to the sub-commissioner in question, with other of his constituted sub-commissioners, our sure peace, vehement, and vicious faith, as it has been established, in craft, and will thereupon make this briar, mind, and behest, to all of you, all of you who wish, by the sub-commissioner in question, and his sub-commissioners, to be of the same mind, earnestly desirous, and obedient, who will give credible proof of this, freely and without hindrance proclaim such a salutary indulgence in our lands, districts and territories, and not to interfere with you or your servants' goods and chattels by word or deed, and to let sinners move and wander back and forth safely and unhindered. This pleases us from all of you. It is also our earnest opinion, and we wish to leave this between all of you and everyone else. Date with our seal sealed between Coln an der Sprew. Wednesday after the Exaltation Cruc. [16 Sept.] Anno 1517.

Luther's narration of the true and secret circumstances and causes why Tetzel actually brought his indulgence stuff to market and gave rise to all subsequent changes with it.

This story is found in Luther's writing Wider Hans Wurst, especially in the section titled: Ursprung des Lutherischen Lärms; in the old edition of Walch, Vol. XVII, 1703 ff.

1) In Löscher and after him in Walch: "vegelieben vnd vngenerlieben Glaits", which is in any case read from the original. The usual formula in escort letters is: "strong, free, safe, vehlich (vehlich) vnd vngeferlich Geleit". See Jena edition, vol. I, p. 434d; Wittenberg edition, vol. IX, p. 1065. - Afterwards, where this expression is repeated, we have put instead of "vehrlich": "vehelich".

78 Myconius reports how Tetzel, because the princes of Saxony did not want to allow this indulgence immediately in their lands, first laid out his stuff in Albrecht's bishoprics of Magdeburg and Halberstadt, and how outrageous things he had preached in his sermons.

From the Myconius liibt. rstorumt., p. 20.

The princes of Saxony did not want to allow this new indulgence, because their lands would have been depleted of all money and sucked dry for several years. But so that the matter would not remain without a beginning, until the princes would also be overawed, the bishop had Tetzel first erect the cross in his own dioceses of Magdeburg and Halberstadt, and preach the indulgence. It is unbelievable what the impudent monk was only allowed to admit, talk about and preach. He gave a letter and seal that even the sins that one would still be willing to commit should be forgiven. The pope would have more power than all the apostles, all the angels and saints, even Mary the Virgin herself. For these would all still be under Christ, but the pope would be like Christ. After the Ascension, Christ would have nothing more to rule in the churches until the Last Day, but would have ordered everything to the Pope as his vicar and governor.

Item: Around the same time there was a preacher monk, called Johannes Tetzel, the great clamant, commissarius and preacher of indulgences in Germania. He preached countless amounts of money, which he sent to Rome, in Germany, and especially at the new mine, St. Annaberg, where I heard Friederich Mecum himself for two years, a lot of money was obtained.

It is unbelievable what this unrighteous and impudent monk was allowed to admit. He says: if someone had slept with Christ at his dear mother's, and only put money into the Pabst's indulgence box, then the Pabst would have this power in heaven and earth that he could forgive, and if he forgave, then God would also have to forgive. Item, if they quickly put in and redeemed pardon and indulgence, then all the mountains around St. Annaberg would become pure solid silver. As soon as the penny was in the basin, the soul for which one pledged would be led from the mouth up to heaven. So his indulgence was a great thing! In sum: our Lord God was never God, if he had given all divine power to the pope: tū es Petrus, tibi dabo claves, quodcunque ligaveritis. Peter and Petra, clavis and solvere must all be and be called Pabst; and there were heretics, whoever spoke a word against it, they banished and burned.

79 A piece of Joh. Tetzel's short instruction for the priests, in which he prescribed to the priests who were to do a service for the Commissary of Indulgences how they should advertise the work quite emphatically and movingly.

From kumirmria inbtruetio ^o. IsMlii pro LaeerOotibu8 in von der Hardt's Ki8tor. litter. rskorumtionm, Theil IV, p. 14 and printed from it in Löscher's Ref.Acta, Vol. I, p. 415. Luther frequently mentions this book, which was printed with Albrecht's coat of arms, especially in his writing wider Hans Wurst. Von der Hardt has only communicated one piece of it, because he probably had a torn copy.

They (the believers) can be absolved and freed from all disorder in their office, except for willful deicide and bisexuality.

Similarly, those who have been prevented by some relationship, whether spiritual or carnal, namely in the third or fourth degree of consanguinity or affinity, and yet have married into it, may be absolved and dispensed from remaining in such marriage, or, where necessary, consummate it anew, and be told that the children begotten or to be begotten will be honest.

Likewise, about everything that has been wrongfully acquired, be it something uncertain or certain, that has been scraped together by drudgery and usury.

Similarly, settlement and dispensation may be made from all legacies bequeathed for godly use.

Likewise, one has many other liberties that have been omitted for the sake of brevity.

Therefore, the people remember that here is Rome. This is St. Peter's Church, and the churches to be visited now are to be in place of the churches to be visited in Rome. Here are penitential preachers and confessors, and they are able to do as much as the highest confessors in St. Peter's Church. God and St. Peter are calling you.

Therefore, send yourselves to such great grace that you may obtain it for the salvation of your souls and those of your deceased. Do not delay yourselves. For you do not know what hour the Son of Man will come.

Likewise, the grumblers, evil detractors, blasphemers, and those who hinder this holy work in any way, outright or in a roundabout way, publicly or secretly, are immediately banished by our aforementioned Most Holy Lord Pope Leo, and under the wrath of Almighty God and the Holy Apostles Peter and Paul;

From which ban they cannot be absolved except by the pope or his commissario, therefore beware that you do not open your mouths to heaven.

The other sermon.

Venerable Lord! I ask you to make it known to the people under your care that they will not neglect such great grace bestowed for the salvation of souls. Let them know that St. Lawrence gave all the treasures of the Church and his body to be roasted; St. Bartholomew his own skin, in cruel agony; that St. Stephen was stoned to death for the salvation of souls, and all the martyrs were killed and crushed. And you do not want to recognize that you have Rome in the city or small town. Your church has become the church of St. Peter in Rome, and your priests apostolic confessors. For the churches are like the seven at Rome, ordained for the remission of all sins. The seven altars are like those seven that are at St. Peter's, where complete forgiveness is found. What are you thinking about? What are you failing to convert? Why do you not shed tears for your sins now in this time? Why do you not confess now before the vicars of our most holy Lord Pope? Do you not have the example of St. Lawrence who, out of the love of God, distributed the treasures he had and offered his body to be roasted? Do you not take the example of Bartholomew, Stephen and other saints who gladly suffered the most cruel death for the salvation of souls? And you do not lay up immense treasures, nay, not even a moderate alms. They have given their bodies to torture, but you do not disdain to live well and be merry. You priest, you nobleman, you merchant, you woman, virgin, you married woman, you young man, you old man, go into your church, which is, as I said. St. Peter's, and visit the most holy cross, which is erected for you, which is always crying and calling you. Are you ashamed to visit the cross with a light, and are you not ashamed to go to the drinking house? You are ashamed to go to the apostolic confessors, but not to the dance. Consider that you are on the raging sea of this world, in so much storm and danger, and do not know if you can come to the port of salvation. Don't you know that everything people have hangs by a thin thread, and the whole of life is a quarrel on earth? Let us then, like Laurentius and all the other saints, fight for the salvation of souls, but not for the body which is who today is healthy, tomorrow is sick; today is alive, tomorrow is dead. You should know that whoever confesses and in repentance puts alms in the box, as the confessor advises him, has complete forgiveness of all his sins, and if he visits the cross and the altars every day after confession as well as the jubilee year, he will obtain indulgence, just as if he visited the seven altars in St. Peter's Church, where complete indulgence is given. So why are you standing idle? All of you run after the salvation of your soul. Be ready and diligent for the salvation of your soul, as for temporal goods, from which you do not depart day or night. Seek the Lord because he is near and can be found; work, as John says, because it is day, for night is coming when no one can work.

Do you not hear the voice of your crying dead parents and others, who say: Have mercy, have mercy on me, because the hand of God has touched us. 2c. We are in severe punishment and torment, from which you could save us with a little alms, and yet you will not. Open your ears, because the father cries to the son, and the mother to the daughter: "Why do you bite me like a tooth, and fill yourselves with my flesh? as if to say: "We have begotten you, nourished you, educated you, and left you our temporal goods; why then are you so cruel and hard, that, since you could now save us with a little effort, you will not; and let us lie in flames, that we come so slowly to the glory promised to us. You may have confession slips, by virtue of which you may obtain full remission of the penalties due to sins once in life and at the hour of death, and as often as you wish in the cases not reserved. O you who have vows upon you, you usurers, robbers, and vicious ones! Now is the time to hear the voice of God, who does not want the sinner to die, but to repent and live. Turn then, O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, to the Lord your God. O ye gainsayers, rejecters, blasphemers, who hinder this work outright or in secret ways, how evil do ye stand? You are outside the church community; no masses, sermons, prayers, sacraments, nor intercessions help you; no fields, vineyards, trees, nor cattle bear you fruit, wine; and the spiritual itself withers and dries up, as examples could be given. Turn to me with all your heart, and need the medicine of which wisdom speaks: The Most High has created the medicine from the earth, and a wise man will not despise it.

The third sermon.

Venerable Lord! I beg you to speak to your sheep in my name, so that they may open their eyes and see what grace and gift they have had and still have at the door. Truly blessed are the eyes that see what they see, and realize that they have a safe conduct by which they can lead their soul through this valley of tears, through this sea of the raging world, where there is so much storm, weather and danger, to the blissful fatherland of paradise. They should know that man's life is a war on earth. We have to fight against the flesh, the world and the devil, who always try to corrupt the soul. Our mother conceived us in sins. O woe! the cords of sins have caught us, and it is difficult, indeed almost impossible, to reach the harbor of salvation without divine help, because he has not made us blessed for the sake of works of righteousness, but by his mercy. Therefore, one must put on the armor of God. Take the sure letter of salvation from the governor of our Lord Jesus Christ, by which you may save your soul from the hand of the enemy and bring it to the blessed rich, by means of repentance and confession, safe and unharmed, without some penalty of purgatory. They should know that in this letter all the services of the Passion of Christ stretched out there are printed and engraved. They should know that for every mortal sin one must atone for seven years after confession and repentance, either in this life or in purgatory. How many mortal sins are committed in a day, how many in a week, how many in a month, how many in a year, how many in a lifetime? They are almost innumerable, and have to suffer infinite punishment in the fiery punishment of purgatory. And with these confession slips you can have once in your life, in all cases (except four which are reserved to the apostolic see), complete remission of all punishments forfeited up to that time; after that, all the time of your life, as often as you want to confess, in the cases which are not reserved to the pope, you can also have equal remission, and after that, in the hour of death, complete remission of all punishments and sins, and communion of all spiritual goods, which happen in the contending church and all the members of it. Do you not see that when a man goes to Rome or other dangerous places, he sends his money through the bank, and for every hundred he gives five or six or ten, that he sends it to Rome or elsewhere through the said bank?

exchange safely again? And you do not want to have this letter for a quarter of a guilder, by virtue of which you can bring not money but the divine and immortal soul safely and freely to the fatherland of paradise? Therefore, I advise, exhort, and, as much as a shepherd may do, command you to accept the precious treasure together with me and other priests, and especially those who have not confessed in this holy jubilee year, which they can obtain for the future. For you might encounter the case that you would like to and could not.

Then also, on account of our most holy Lord Pope and the holy apostolic see and my most reverend Lord Legate, all and every one who have received or will receive in the short time to come the holy jubilee and the confessionals, and who have offered a helpful hand for the said building of the prince of the apostles, shall participate in all prayer, intercession, almsgiving, fasting, church prayers, Masses, Liturgies of the Hours, Mortifications, Pilgrimages, Pontifical Prayer, Blessings, and other spiritual goods, which now and forever are or may be in the contending Church and all its members, both for their persons and for their dead parents, blood friends, and benefactors, always and forever, and as they have been moved by love, so may God and Sts. Peter and Paul and all the saints whose bodies rest in Rome, keep them in peace in this valley and bring them to the heavenly kingdom!

You will also give infinite thanks in aforesaid and in my name both to the venerable common priests and prelates 2c.

Some of the contents and fragments of one of Tetzel's instructions, which Chemnitz has removed and communicated.

From Chemnitz Lxaivkn eone. Irickent, Theil IV, p. 143"
Translated into German.

Tetzel offered indulgences for sale in Germany not only in sermons, in impudent praise, but also in a scattered booklet, which he called Summary Instruction. However, the content of both the sermons and his writing, as I can gather from Luther's writings, was this. In the sermons, these indulgence sellers made the following exhortations: Behold, now heaven is open to all; if you do not enter now, how will you ever enter? O you insensitive and stubborn people! who are like wild animals, do not want such a great mercy.

Take it to heart. Oh, how many souls you could save! O how obdurate, how obdurate, and how negligent you are! You can redeem your father from the punishments of hell with ten pennies, and you do not want to help your father in this. Certainly, at the last judgment I have no responsibility, but you may watch. I tell you, if you had only one skirt, you should take it off and sell it, so that you would be granted such a great grace 2c. But against those who would not accept this grace, they were so vehemently zealous that the common man trembled at it, and thought that the heavens would fall in and the earth open up. They added that if someone bought a letter of indulgence, his soul could be assured of eternal life; but the souls that were already in purgatory, and for whom the indulgence was bought, would come out of purgatory into heaven as soon as one heard the sound of the money thrown into the box. Furthermore, the grace was so great that no sin was so great, even if one had sinned against the Mother of God, that he could not be freed from punishment through the indulgence, indeed, man would be freed from guilt and punishment through these letters of indulgence. This grace was a priceless divine gift, since man was reconciled with God and all the punishments of the purgatory were thereby redeemed; nor did those need to worry and grieve about the sins they had committed, who either bought their souls themselves or bought confession. The words that Tetzel used in the summary lesson were as follows: The first and noblest grace we receive through indulgences is a complete forgiveness of all sins, since a sinner receives forgiveness and divine grace anew. Through this forgiveness, the punishments that sinners had to endure in purgatory because of offended majesty are also completely given and redeemed; the pope also has power over purgatory to free souls from it by means of indulgences; indeed, they also assured that the assurance of eternal life through these letters of indulgence is so certain that they also put their own souls as a pledge for it. The cross they made in the church with the pope's seal was just as powerful as the cross of Christ itself. To this they added the fable: In a certain place, 5000 souls had been bought and redeemed by this indulgence, of which three had been damned, because they had deducted something from the letters of indulgence. The end and the conclusion of his sermons was this: "Lay down

Put in, put in, put in! In order to encourage and entice the people not only with words but also with their own example, they first went to the box in front of all the people and threw something into the box with a bright and very audible sound. Those who stood by showed themselves very friendly to those who put something in, but to those who did not, they seemed to become angry and unwilling. They also allowed the indulgences to be given to the poor free of charge, but in such a way that they first tried to collect the money through good patrons in all places. They also got behind the women and taught them how they should gather money to buy such letters without the knowledge and will of the men, no matter how it might happen. I have put this here from the writings of that time, with the very same words that are used in them. Meanwhile, however, since these frauds were going on very brazenly in Germany, one heard not only much grumbling, but also public complaints from all honest people. For people in Germany had already grown tired of the drudgery, shenanigans and endless frauds of the papists. They called these indulgences fairs, a buying up (monopolía) of souls, they complained bitterly that not only the forgiveness and remission of past sins, but also of future sins are sold by these indulgence merchants, and not only in this life, but also after death, as the complaints and grievances of the Germans read. They [who were tired of indulgences] invented ridiculous fables, namely, that a deceased person with a letter of indulgence came before hell, and by virtue of this wanted to be free from it; but a devil came running, who, having read the bull, burned and melted the paper, parchment, sealing wax, and lead under his hands by the force of fire, but the soul was plunged empty into the depths; as such is told in the writings of those times.

81 Johann Tetzel's letter of indulgence, which he issued as Pope Leo X's Unternuntius and Commissary of Indulgences in the German provinces, together with the Guardian of the Minorites on May 19, 1515.

This letter of indulgence is in the "innocent news" 1705, p. 197; in Löschner's Ref.-Acta, vol. I, p. 391 and in Kapp's "Collection", p. 37.
Translated into German.

Brother Johann Tetzl, Order of Preachers at Leipzig, of the Holy Theology Baccalaureus and Special Heresiarch, of the Most Holy Father in GOD, of our Lord Leo, by Divine Providence of this name of the X. Pabst, the highest bishop and God's governor in the whole world, as well as the Holy Roman See in the German provinces, dioceses, cities, countries, and all and every Easter Unternuntius and Holy Indulgence Commissarius, together with the Guardian of the Friars Minor of the Order of St. Francis, his co-helper in this matter: To all and every believer in Christ to whom this letter will come before the eyes, but especially to the authorities, judges, inquisitors and persons holding court, both spiritual and secular, offer eternal salvation in the Lord! Matthias Menner, inhabitant of the dairy Krichow, which belongs to the Burgwerber parish on the Saale, has discovered and confessed to us in the greatest sorrow and sadness that he wanted to throw a stone at his neighbor's dog, which was barking at him, but that during the throw his neighbor's little daughter, since he did not see it, had approached the dog, whom the stone had hit against his complete will and opinion, and he is heartily sorry for this fatal blow. Therefore, because he wanted to take care of his bliss, he asked us with bent knees and folded hands, crying, that we would come to his aid with a convenient means of absolution. Since we are to seek the salvation of all and sundry, we count the said Matthias Menner, who has paid the fee for the construction of the main church of the chief apostle according to his means, out of apostolic authority, which we administer in this piece, free from this accidentally committed death stroke by grace, and also by virtue of this authority declare and know in the present letter that he is completely absolved from the said death stroke. We therefore command all and everyone, both clergy and secular, that in the least no one accuse, convict, or condemn Matthias Menner for this death stroke, but that everyone in all places and ends keep him completely and utterly absolved of it, unless he wants to fall into the punishments and judgments contained in our apostolic letter of authority. For the greater faith and witness thereof, we have had the seal of the above-mentioned building and the Papal seal, which we use in such cases, printed on it. Given at Krichow in the year of the Lord 1515, May 19, in the third year of the reign of our most holy Lord, the Pope.

Letter from Heinrich Campis, vicar general and prior of the Carmelite convent in Magdeburg, to Johannes, abbot of Königsutter, in which he reports to him that the commissary of the current jubilee, Johann Tetzl, has revoked all indulgences in general in the churches of the Magdeburg and Halberstadt dioceses; he has also forbidden the Königsutter indulgences in particular, and has forbidden, under penalty of banishment, that no one may hear confession from them. On the third day after the feast of Corpus Christi in 1517.

This and the four following documents are taken from Kapp's "Nachlese," Theil III, p. 217.

Translated into German.

Brother Heinrich Campis, Vicar General and Prior of the Convent of the Carmelite Brothers of St. Mary in the suburb of Magdeburg, V. I., to the venerable in Christ Father and Lord Johanni X, highly renowned Abbot of the Monastery of Königsutter, his in Christ much beloved and especially sincerely venerable friend, his obedience at any time most devoted to all pleasing services and ready for unceasing intercession.

Gracious Father and Lord! Having perceived that the Commissary of the present Jubilee year publicly revokes in the pulpit all indulgences in any order or church of the Magdeburg and Halberstadt dioceses; By this we see that he also meant your indulgences, which your confessors appointed by you had to grant annually on the feast of the Princes of the Apostles, so that at present there was nothing to be done in your apostolic practices; as he also forbade this, that no one should take the liberty, under penalty of banishment, to hear confessions with you according to custom. This will cause your convent not a small, but an important and great damage, if it is not prevented and remedied. For this reason, I have not only verbally, but also in writing, requested your grace, as I have a constant and unwavering affection for you, my gracious father and lord, and hereby open my dear friendship to you, that you in this matter, where it can be done conveniently, and as the fathers and lords of the Antonites have done, who have prevented the revocation of indulgences in their order, and have pacified the Commissary, but especially the most reverend of our lords, the Bishop of Magdeburg, by which, I do not know how to explain it.

In a certain way, you will pacify and satisfy him before the time of execution. For I wish at the most, sincere father, that all prudent precautions be carefully taken with you, in that I advise your gracious lords to prevent the aforementioned revocation of indulgences by kind means according to your reverence's liking. What will happen in these and similar incidents to the gracious lords, I will recognize with all love and friendship, along with all those who stand below me, and will remain devoted to them day and night with unceasing and untiring service. In the meantime, live well in him who rules and governs all things. Given at Magdeburg in the convent outside the city, in the year after our redemption 1517, the 3rd day after the Feast of Corpus Christi.

83 Henry the Younger, Duke of Brunswick, letter to the cathedral dean and chapter of Magdeburg, in which he asks that the ban on the Königsutter indulgence imposed by the papal commissioner be lifted. On Corpus Christi Day 1517.

By the Grace of God Henrick the Disciple, Harzug zu Brunswick und Lüneburg 2c.

Den Werdigen Edelen und Erbaren Herrn DomDecken [Dechant] und Capittel der Kercken tho Magdeborg, unsern Fründen und Leuen [lieben] besondern.

Our greatness and favorable will before us. We are informed that the most worthy in God, dignified and high-born prince, Mr. Albrecht, Archbishop of Magdeburg and Ments, Primate and Holy Roman Ruler in Germania, Archbishop and Elector, Administrator of the County of Halberstadt, Marggroff of Brandenburg 2c. Vnser Leuer Herr und Ohme, von wegen pewstlicker Hilligkeit einen Commissarium Predicker Ordens abgefertiget, de itz by ju sy, Gnade und Aflat, tho Behoiff des Gebäwes S. Peters Kercken tho Rome, Christlicken Volcke mede tho delende [to communicate], and dat desulvige Commissarius alle andere Gnade und Aflath, esonderheit de heimsökinge, so neistkommende Petri und Pauli tho Königsutter in vnnsem Fürstendom tho gescheende, verboden. The ban on us and our friends, as well as many other people, who have come to Königsutter for the pilgrimage, is not a small burden, ock dem armen Closter dath vaste buvellig sosehr baufällig], und in korten Jahren de reformacien. assumed, de se ahn so [sothane == said] heimsökinge nicht erholden mögen, tho groten schaden komen wolle, darmede [damit] dem Commissario in synem Bevele mit alle nichts behulpen, the day of the visit of the pilgrims to Königes-Lutter was considered so short of ogen, that no one could warn the Pellegrim [Pilgrim] about such a pretext, and those who came would not be able to do so less or more at St. Peter's Church in Rome. Therefore, it is our good will and our intention to prevent that the common people will not be harmed by the affront to the King's Lutters. If we want to order this commission, we will do so willingly and willingly, so that we can prove our good intentions. We are willing to accept and owe this in all good faith. Date Sycke on the day of Corporis Christi 11 JunH, Domini M.D.XVII.

84. Johannis, Abbot of Königsutter, writes in his and the whole monastery's name to Botho, Grasen and Lord of Stolberg, Archbishop Albrecht Hofmeister, as well as to other councillors of the same, in which he presents both the antiquity of the Königsutter indulgence and the poverty of the monastery, and asks for the lifting of the ban made by Johann Tetzels. Wednesday after Corporis Christi [June 17] 1517.

Joannes Abbot, Siffridus Prior, Senior and whole assembly of the monastery tho Königes-Lutter, Order S. Benedicti in the Halberstedischen Stifte, and the Fürstendum Brunswig: Den Edelen, Wolgebornen, Werdigen, Achtbaren und Gestrengen, Herrn Bothen, Graue und Herrn tho Stalberg und Wernigerode Hoffmeistern, und andern unsers gnedigsten Herrn van Magdeborg, Mentz und Halberstadt 2c. heimgelatenen Reden, unsern gnedigen, günstigen Herrn und Fründen: Edelen, Wolgebornen, Werdigen, Achtbarn, Gestrengen vnd Ervesten Herrn vnd Fründe, vnsse innige Beth tho Godde dem Allmechtigen mit gantz willigen Deinste alle tydt tho vorn, Gnedigen, Günstigen Herrn vnd Fründe, Euwer g. w. a. und g. [Graces, Dignities, Respectable and Strict] we humbly add to the city of our gracious lord that we know that our monastery some years ago, from the Hartzogedom tho Brunßwig

The Holy Roman Emperor Lotharion, of blessed memory, had a great and remarkable affliction, because His Imperial Majesty, by the Pope Innocentio the other, the Holy Roman Emperor, and the unfortunates of Rome, neither the one in his palace Stol and Ere with great effort and work, before which he neither sold nor obtained any money, but obtained the highest rank in the land, so that all Christian believers come to our monastery in the feast of St. Peter and St. Paul for the sake of the monastery, all the monks who were in Rome in all the churches, cloisters and chapels for eternal time, with previnge pine and debt, which aflath at veerhundert vnd xx Jahre^a) vnvorhindert gestanden vnd erholenden, ock synt der tydt, von Pawsten tho Pawsten confirmeret vnnd bestedt worden worden. Dewile öuerst iz de pewstlicke gnade alhie tho landen komen, de vnse gnedigste Herr von Magdeborg, Mentz vnd Halberstadt 2c. The Supreme Commissary is, and the Bull is to mediate, that all other indulgences at the time of this jubilee have been suspended and revoked, therefore we have granted some of them against Magdeborg to the worthy Lord Johann Tetzl, in the name of our gracious Lord of Brunswick, in accordance with the wishes of the noble lords of the Capitol of Magdeborg, to find us unhindered in our own indulgences, and to indulge us in the city of our dear lord, so that this kind of walfart, which happens every time in our monastery with the mercy and grace obtained, may gain a continuation 2c., And because S. W. has not been unwilling to do so, but he has not wished to make such a thing impossible for the sake of his Lordship or the Holy See. Thus, the rent of our monastery is almost insignificant, and the persons therein are many, and our congregations are most interested in the offer and the general permission, which is given and worthy of being given by good men in the time of the Aflat, and of which we may grant procuracion and Subsidy to our gracious lord as a bishop of Halberstadt, which we then obey as an obedient commoner. Wu vns nu sölcke Walfart entzogen, vnd an den gegeuen PawstlickenAflathevorhinderengevnd insperinge bringen, hebben e. g. w. a. vnd g. gnediglicken zu betrachten,

1) and were it to be feared that the indulgences of the monastery and the sinners would not be brought back to the pilgrimage, and that in order for this to happen, we would have to ask the city of our church to reimburse us for the sins of the monastery. g. w. a. and g. tho ersöcken mit demödigten flite deinstlich bittende, e. g. a. w. vnd g. wolde an stad vndes g. h. [most gracious lord] to consider our and our monastery's needs and opportunities graciously, and to ensure that we are not hindered or hindered in any way in our common indulgences and praiseworthy work, The sinner who has recovered the Christian man as he has done until now, has been able to make a progress, to catch the divine rewards beforehand, and to show himself graciously in this, so that we may be able to be inferior to God the Almighty, to the most gracious Lord of God, and to the most gracious God of the world. g. a. w. vnd g. long leventh vnd luck myth vnssen innigen gebede tho vorbidden, vnd mith flite thouordenen alle tidt willich des wy 2) e. g. a. w. vnd g. gnädige Antworth bidden. Datum Middeweckens nach corporis Christi [17. $uni], Anno MDXVII.

Botho, Count and Lord of Stolberg and Wernigerode, court master, as well as other councilors of the Archbishop of Magdeburg, write to Johannem, Abbot of Königsutter, in which they report that the papal commissary has lifted the ban that had been imposed, and that they can distribute their indulgences without hindrance for the upcoming Petri and Pauli. From Halle on the evening of Johannis Baptistä [June 23] 1517.

Botho Grave vnd Here tho Stalberg und Wernigerode, Houemeister, und andere vnse gnedigsten Hern van Magdeborg, Mentz vnd Halberstadt heimgelaten Rede: To the worthy Lord Johanni, Abbot of Königsutter, our dear friend and favorable Lord.

Our friends, your friends, your friends. Acquiring dear friends and favorable here, after you have appealed to the Chapter of Magdeburg, praying to help that your indulgences be kept on St. Peter's Day and St. Paul's Day, but in order to prevent the grace that is present, we have given the same to you with ..

1) Instead of "gebeven" probably "geberen" (give birth) should be read.

2) "wy" placed by us instead of: "w."

a) That there was an influx to Königsutter in 1291 is evident from the D. II. Leript. Lrunsvie. of the Lord of Leibnitz, p. 429: Anno Domini MCCXCI. cum instaret solennitas Apostolorum Petri et Pauli, factus est concursus populi in Regali-Luttere et est consuetudinis usque adpresens.

The Papal Commissioners have diligently spoken to you, and have therefore read and granted that your indulgences, as previously done, be announced and kept for the specified period of time, as you will see from his writings 1). That we give you to know in the best way, according to which we know how to judge. We are inclined to show you favorable will and friendly service. Date Halle vff S. Moritzburg, Dinstags am Abend Joh. Baptistä [23. June], Anno MXXVII.

86 Johann Tetzel's, Order of Preachers, Apostolic Heresiarch and General Subcommissarii letter to the Abbot of Königsutter, in which he reports that the monks there can freely proclaim their indulgences without being required to give a sum of money into his boxes. From Halle, June 22, 1517.

From KaPP's "Nachlese," Theil III, p. 232 f. reprinted in Körner's "Tetzel," p. 147.

Translated into German.

Johann Tetzel of the Order of Precedents, apostolic inquisitor of heretics, also generalsubcommissarius:

To the venerable Father in Christ, Lord John, Abbot of the Monastery of St. Peter and Paul in Königsuttern, his most reverend lord and superior:

Salvation, which God gives to those who love Him. Venerable Father in Christ! I have dealt faithfully with your cause with the lords councilors, and it has progressed to the point that you can freely proclaim your indulgence without having to pay any tax into our chests. Therefore, I also remit to you by the present letter the annulment of your indulgence, which I announced verbally at Magdeburg, and you can be assured that I have faithfully taken up your cause in this matter, wherewith I most humbly commend myself to you, venerable father, who, under the grant of God's grace, will perhaps see you in a short time.

From the castle of St. Moritz at Halle, June 22, 1517.

1) This is the following document.

A letter of indulgence granted by Tetzel under the name of Albrecht, Elector of Mainz, to an unnamed person and to Walpurgis, his wife, because they had generously contributed to the construction of St. Peter's Church. 1517.

From Paul Seidel's "Historie und Geschichte Luthers," p. 3 printed in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, Vol. I, p. 388.

Translated into German.

Albrecht, by the Grace of God and the Apostolic See of the Holy See of Magdeburg and Mainz, Archbishop, Primate and Archchancellor of the Holy Roman Empire in Germany, Elector and Administrator of the Churches of Halberstadt, Margrave of Brandenburg, Duke of Stettin, Pomerania, the Caspians and the Wends, Burgrave of Nuremberg, and Prince of Rügen; and Guardian, of the Minorite Friars of the Observance of the Mainz Convent; by our most holy Lord Leo, Pope the X., by the lands of Magdeburg, Mainz and theirs, and the cities and districts of Halberstadt, likewise the lands and territories which are directly or indirectly subject to the temporal rule of the most illustrious Princes and Lords Margraves of Brandenburg, nuncios and commissarii specially delegated for the matters mentioned below: to all and everyone who will read this letter, Hail in the Lord!

We hereby announce that the most holy Lord Leo, by divine providence the present X. Pope, to all and any of the faithful of both sexes who offer a helping hand for the reconstruction of the Cathedral Church of the Prince of the Apostles, St. Peter, in Rome, in addition to plenary indulgences and other pardons and liberties, which the faithful of Christ themselves can obtain according to the apostolic letter issued in this regard, has also graciously granted and conferred in the Lord that they may freely choose a competent confessor, either from common priests or from all monastic orders, including the beggars, who, after their attentive confession, may pronounce on all sins, abominations and misdeeds committed by the penitent, however great and grave they may be, even if they were otherwise reserved to the said See, even ecclesiastical excommunication, if it had already been pronounced by men at someone's request with the consent of the parties, or if it had otherwise been forfeited because of the interdict, and from which no one but the apostolic See could absolve (except in cases where the person of the supreme pope was being pursued, bishops or other high prelates were being sought).

(The same shall apply to the confessor who has killed, laid violent hands on them or other prelates, forged apostolic bulls and letters, brought weapons or other forbidden things to the unbelievers, and except for the judgments and curses brought on the occasion of the alacrity of the apostolic tulfa brought from the unbelievers to the believers against the prohibition), once in life and at the hour of death, as often as it is threatened, even if it is not done then; in those cases which are not reserved, grant to the same confessor the complete reckoning of sins and impose salutary penance; likewise, once in life and at the said hour of death, grant complete indulgence and forgiveness of all sins, and administer the holy sacrament of the Last Supper, except at Easter and at the hour of death, at all times of the year; likewise, the vows that he vows at times, be they what they will (except the one about the sea, the entrance into the monastic life and single state, the visit to the thresholds of the Apostles and St. James in Compostella). Jacob at Compostella), into other godly works by apostolic power. The same Most Holy Our Lord has also granted that the said benefactor and her deceased parents, who are different in love, may always and always participate in all prayer, intercession, almsgiving, fasting, supplications, masses, prayers of the hours, mortifications, pilgrimages, standing prayer and all other spiritual goods, which only happens and can happen in the whole Holy Church and by all its members.

And because the devout N. N. and Walpurgis, his wife, for the building and necessary improvement of the above-mentioned main church of the Prince of the Apostles, according to our Lord Pabst's opinion and our decree, have willingly steered from their goods and have shown themselves grateful and mild, for the sign and witness of which they have received this present letter from us: therefore, out of the very apostolic power which is entrusted to us and which we hereby administer, we hereby grant and grant them that they may need and enjoy the aforementioned graces and indulgences. Given Berlin, under the seal ordered by us for this purpose, the 11th of the month [April], 1) Anno 1517.

1) The name of the month is missing as well as in Löschner's old Allsgabe Walch. We have added "April" from Tentzel's "Historischer Bericht", Vol. I, p. 122, but "October" would seem more credible to us, because Joachim of Brandenburg only permitted the sale of indulgences in his lands by a decree of Sept. 16, 1517. See No. 76.

88: A letter of indulgence, issued to Meckel, widowed Rodt, and to Peter and Adam Rodt, dated Göttingen, July 1, 1517, on which the seal is remarkable, which represents the image of the apostle Peter and under it the papal crown and keys with the inscription:

S. Fabrice S. Petri de Vrbe.

From von der Hardt's laeula pdiloloZiae, p. 77, and tiistor. litterar. retorunt., Theil IV, p. 4.

Translated into German.

Albrecht, by the Grace of God and the Apostolic See, Archbishop of the Holy See of Mainz and of the Churches of Magdeburg, Primate of the Holy Roman Empire in Germany, Archchancellor and Elector, also Administrator of Halberstadt, Margrave of Brandenburg, of Szczecin, of Pomerania, Duke of the Caffubes and Wends, Burgrave of Nuremberg, Prince of Rügen; and Guardian, of the Minorite Order of Observance, of the Mainz Convent; by our most holy Lord Leo, Pope the X., by the lands of Mainz and Magdeburg, and theirs, and the cities and districts of Halberstadt, also all regions and places subject to the temporal rule, directly or indirectly, of the most illustrious and illustrious princes, the lords Margraves of Brandenburg, nuncios and commissarii specially appointed for the matters reported below: to all and everyone who will read the present letter, salvation in the Lord!

We hereby announce that our most holy Lord Leo, by divine providence the present Pope X., has graciously granted and permitted all and every believer in Christ of both sexes who offer a helping hand for the reconstruction of the cathedral church of the Prince of the Apostles in the city (Rome) according to our order, by way of plenary indulgence and other pardons and liberties which the believers in Christ themselves can obtain, according to the apostolic letter issued on this subject, that they may choose a competent confessor, either a secular priest or one of all, who, after an exact hearing of the confession, will be responsible for all sins, transgressions and misdeeds committed by the electing (confessing) child, be they as great and grave as they wish, also for the cases reserved to the apostolic see and church excommunication, likewise for that which a person has pronounced at someone's request, at the consent of the parties, or into which one has fallen for the sake of an interdict, and of which the absolution is otherwise before the apostolic see.

(except when the person of the most holy pope has been persecuted, bishops or other high prelates have been killed, they or other prelates have been violated by force, apostolic letters have been forged, weapons or other forbidden things have been brought to the unbelievers, or they are otherwise under such judgment and ban, (for example, alum of the apostolic tulfa brought by the unbelievers to the believers against apostolic prohibition), once in life and at the hour of death, as often as it occurs, although death has not occurred, but in all other cases not reserved, as often as he requires it, completely count them out and impose salutary penance on them; likewise, during life and at the said hour of death, grant them plenary indulgence and forgiveness of all sins, and administer the Sacrament of the Supper (except at Easter and at the hour of death) at all times of the year; also all vows vowed by them (except that of walking on the sea, likewise the apostolic thresholds and St. James in Compostella). James in Compostella, or to enter a monastery and live a single life) into other godly works by apostolic power.

The same Most Holy Our Lord has also granted that the said benefactors and their deceased parents, who are different in love, shall always have a share in all prayer, intercession, almsgiving, fasting, church prayer, masses, Liturgy of the Hours, mortification, pilgrimages and other spiritual goods, which are or will be done in the whole general, holy, contending church and all of its members at all times. And because the devotees, the Meckel, widowed Rodt, Peter and Adam Rodt, for this building and necessary improvement of the above main church of the prince of the apostles, according to our most holy Lord Pabst's intention and our order, have steered from their goods, have shown themselves grateful and generous, in witness of which they have received the present letter: Therefore, out of the very apostolic power which has been granted to us, and which we here need, we grant and pardon them that they may use and enjoy such grace and indulgence. Given in Göttingen under our seal prescribed for this purpose, July 1, Anno D. 1517.

Loss speech form on so many times in life 2c.

Have mercy on you 2c. Jesus Christ absolve you by the merit of his passion, by which and the apostolic power given to me for this and granted to you, I absolve you of all your sins, in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit, amen.

The form of release and complete recovery once in the "life" and at the hour of death.

Have mercy on you 2c. Our Lord Jesus Christ absolve you by the merit of his passion, and I, by his and the apostolic power herein conferred upon me and granted to you, absolve you 1. from the sentence of the greater or lesser ban, if you fall into one; then 2. from all your sins, and grant you complete forgiveness of sins, also remitting to you the punishment of the purgatory, as far as the keys of the holy Mother of the Church go. In the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit, Amen.

A letter of indulgence from October 5, 1517, which Tetzel gave to Tilemann from Köpenik¹), who had beaten his young son to death because he wanted to beat his pig. 1517.

From Seidel's History and Stories of Luther, p. 20, reprinted in Löscher's Ref.- Acta, Vol. I, p. 394.

Translated into German.

Brother Johann Tetzel, of the Order of Preachers in the Convent of Leipzig, Baccalaureus of the Holy Doctrine of God and Inquisitor of heretical wickedness, by the most reverend in Christ Father and Lord, Lord Albrecht, Archbishop of the Holy Churches of Magdeburg and Mainz, Primate and Archchancellor of the Holy Roman Empire in Germany, Elector and Administrator of Halberstadt, Margrave of Brandenburg, Stettin and Pomerania, Duke of the Cassubians and Wends, Burgrave of Nuremberg, Prince of Rügen, of the most holy in God Father and our Lord Leo, by divine providence Pope X, the most holy in Christ Father and our Lord Leo., and the same Holy Apostolic See to the lands of Magdeburg, Szczecin and theirs, and the cities and districts of Halberstadt, likewise to the lands and lands of the Archbishops of Magdeburg and Mainz, and those of the Margraves of Brandenburg under secular rule, directly or indirectly, directly or indirectly, to grant the most sacred indulgence for the construction of the cathedral church of the Prince of the Apostles in the city of Rome in the manner of a jubilee year, nuncio and commissarius, 2) at the same time with

1) Walch: "a nobleman".

2) This "Nuntius and Commissarius" does not refer to Tetzel, but to Albrecht, together with the Guardian 2c. in his (Albrecht's) city Mainz, as his colleague in this. On the other hand, in No. 81, from 1515, Tetzel gives the Guardian for his (Tetzel's) colleague.

the Guardian of the Minorite Brothers of St. Francis of the Observance in his city of Mainz, as his colleague herein, decreed general sub-commissary, who has been ordered and appointed by force again, to the said lands and districts and all the aforesaid of the most noble and illustrious lords margrave dominions, to appoint people in his stead, offer to our in Christ beloved Tilemann von Köpenik, of the Brandenburg district, constant salvation in the Lord!

You told us that when you wanted to strike at a sow, your boy, not realizing it, approached you, whom you struck and killed (when you struck at the sow) against your will, to your immense heartache. For this sin you grieve with your heart. Since you now wanted to counsel your soul, you humbly asked us to come to your aid in time by counting the lots. Therefore, we (who seek everyone's salvation), by virtue of apostolic power, which we hereby administer, release you, who have made a settlement with us according to your ability for the purpose of the said construction, from the death stroke in grace, and announce to you by this letter that you have been released from the said death stroke by us. We also command all and everyone to whom it comes, by the judgments, banishment and punishments contained in our apostolic letters of authority, to believe this [letter], to consider you completely absolved, and that no one accuse you of this death stroke in any way. In witness whereof we have hereunto set the seal of the said building, which we use for such matters. Given in Berlin in the year of the Lord 1517, the 5th of October, in the 5th year of the reign of our most holy Lord, the Pope.

90 Myconius tells how splendidly the commissary of indulgences, Tetzel, was caught up everywhere when indulgences were still held in high honor.

From the Myconius kist. rekormat., p. 15.

The indulgence was so highly honored that when the commissary was introduced into a town, the bull was carried along on a cloth of gold or silver, and all the priests, the council, schoolmasters, pupils, men, women, virgins and children went to meet him with flags and candles, with singing and procession. Then they rang

All the bells were rung, all the organs were struck, he was escorted into the churches, a red cross was erected in the middle of the church, the Pope's banner was hung there, and in sum, one could not have received and held God Himself more beautifully.

91: How Tetzel at Zwickau swindled a large piece of money from the entire congregation at the time of his departure and then gave it to the priests to feast on.

From Joh. Petrejus "Vorrede über das römische Ablassbüchlein" lit. v 3. 4 reprinted in Tentzel, Hist. Bericht, p. 108 and in Löschers Ref.-Acta, vol. I, p. 404.

When Tetzel had been selling his indulgences in Zwickau for many days, and finally wanted to leave, the chaplains and altar servers spoke to him: Lord, you are now leaving, and we have not enjoyed your indulgences, but you might have given us something to show that we had good courage to do so; he answered that he had now wrapped up all the indulgence money and packed it away, but that he wanted to do justice to the matter, and the following day let the large bells ring again, which were always rung when he was supposed to preach. When the people heard this and frequently came to church, he stood up and said: Although he had been very clever to leave this morning, there had been a poor soul in the churchyard last night who had whimpered so piteously and confessed that she wanted to be helped, so that she might be delivered from her terrible torment, that he did not know how to avoid remaining this day, and a mass was now being held for her, where they should all go diligently to the sacrifice, so that the poor soul might be delivered from its torment; And whoever does not do this is an indication that he has no compassion for the poor soul, indeed he himself must be drowned in sin, because of which the poor soul is now suffering, and if he is a man, he must be an adulterer or fornicator, but if he is a woman, she must be a whore and adulteress. And that they see that there is great need, then he himself wants to go to the sacrifice. After that he was the first to sacrifice. This was followed by such a sacrificial procession that the people in the church borrowed money from each other so that they could sacrifice. For no one wanted to be an adulterer or adulteress. After that, he gave the money to the priests, and was reckless with them.

The story of Strigenitus tells how Tetzel once asked the sexton in Zwickau to be his guest, and when the sexton claimed that he was poor, he asked him to look at the calendar to see what day tomorrow would be, because Juvenalis was written in it, and he immediately made him a saint, solinized his feast with the ringing of all the bells, preached on it, and collected a large sum of money.

From the Strigenitus comin. in Ionum xropli., x>. 142, in Schunds tüiron. Auiccuvsliw., p. 380.

When Tetzel was a preacher in Zwickau, before he became the pope's indulgence merchant, he asked his sexton at one time if he would not like to ask him to be his guest; and when the sexton excused himself, saying that he was too poor to do so, that he could not, Tetzel said: "We want to get money soon, look in the list, what saint will be tomorrow. The sexton does so and says, I will find Juvenalis; but it is an unknown saint. Then Tetzel says: "We want to make him known soon. Tomorrow ring the bell for matins, the sermon and mass, as on a great feast day, and have the high mass held above the altar, in the middle of the church, above the preaching chair. The sexton follows. When the people hear such ringing the next day, they often come into the church. When the high mass is half over, Tetzel appears and preaches thus: "Dear people, today I have something to tell you. If I were to tell you, it would be the end of your blessedness. You know that we have long called upon the saints, but they have now grown old and are almost tired of hearing and helping us. Today you have the memory of Juvenali, and although he has been unknown until now, let it be dear to you. Because he is a new saint whom we did not know before, he will be all the more eager to take care of us. But Juvenalis was a holy martyr, whose blood was shed innocently. If you now also want to enjoy his innocence before God, then prove yourselves today in his honor, and place each of you his sacrifice on the altar, where high mass is held today. Dear people, show yourselves mild, and start walking in the name of God. You, the rulers, go ahead and give good examples to the others. What more has he done? He put people at the doors, and no one let them out, because he had offered sacrifices beforehand; and because the people went to the sacrifice, he stayed on the preaching stand, and saw what each one had laid.

After that he finally went down to the altar himself and laid his penny, and secretly asked the sexton if they would have enough for supper.

A history of how Tetzel fared with the pen, which he claimed the devil plucked from the angel Michael during the fight and which he claimed to be a great sanctuary; how it was exchanged for coals, and how he got out of the deal with clever trickery.

From the Albmus "Meißnische Land-Chronik," p. 342, printed in Tentzel, Historischer Bericht, Vol. I, p. 111.

Tetzel once wanted to give the people a feather that the devil had plucked out of the angel Michael in a quarrel, and at the same time grant indulgences. But during the night, some boys got hold of it, stole the feather from the box and put coals in it. The next morning, Tetzel took the box without looking at it and made a great speech before the people about the dignity and power of the heavenly feather. But when he opens it, behold, there is no feather but coals inside. Although he is somewhat altered, he does not notice anything, but immediately makes a new feint, saying that he has seized an unjust box, but in which there is also a special sanctuary, namely coals from St. Laurence's grate, of which he not a little emphasizes the excellent power.

94 There is an almost identical story about the Mass priest Iselinus in Swabia, who also had such a feather of St. Michael stolen, and how he put hay from the stable into the monstrance in front of his landlady's eyes, and also bet with his landlady that she would kiss it in the church as a holy thing, she would or would not, and also won the bet.

From Crusius, aimul. Kuevm., Theil III, p. 516, reprinted in Tentzel, Hist. Bericht, Vol. I, p. 112, and subsequently in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, Vol. I, p. 410.

Around the year 1500, there lived a missal monkey, named Iselinus, who laid out his saints and indulgences in Altingen, and boasted that he had a feather from St. Michael's wing; but as he was drinking in the inn, the same was given to him of the Stolen at night. When he realizes this in the morning, he runs into the stable, puts hay into the monstern and says that this should be his sanctuary. The landlady, as he is lying in his quarters, laughs at this, but he sends her away: I will make it so in the church that you must kiss the shrine, whether you like it or not. She says that this shall never happen. He bets her a good feast. As one enters the church, the indulgence merchant begins: Behold, dearest Christians, this is the hay on which our Lord Christ lay in Bethlehem: it has the power to avert the plague from the people, which is now rampant in Tübingen and now and then in Württemberg; it also does not admit adulterers or whores. When the people heard such a sermon, many men and women came to kiss the shrine, and the hostess joined them, so that she would not be mistaken for a lewd woman. Behold," said the priest secretly to her, "are you coming too? I have won the bet. In this way, it was a forerunner of Tetzel.

95 How Tetzel would not absolve a rich woman in Magdeburg until she had paid 100 florins, and how this woman refused him so that he received nothing at all.

From Scultetus in the first Decade p. 16 from Suecū Leichenpredigt über Levin von Schulenburg in Tentzel, Hist. Bericht, p. 123, and in Löschers Ref.-Acta, Vol. I, p. 403.

Tetzel did not want to absolve a rich woman in Magdeburg if she did not pay him a hundred guilders first. The woman therefore consulted her regular confessor, a Franciscan or Barefoot, who answered: God grants forgiveness of sins for free and did not sell her; but at the same time asked the woman that she should not discover to Tetzel from whom she received this answer. Since Tetzel heard the reason for the unpaid money, he said that this counselor should either be burned or at least chased away.

96) How a horseman let Tetzel grant him indulgences for future sins, then ambushed him and took the entire indulgence money by force.

From Albinus' "Meißnische Land- und Berg-Chronik", p. 342, printed in Löschers Ref.-Acta, Vol. I, p. 405, and in Tentzel's Hist. Bericht, Vol. I, p. 111.

A horseman came to Tetzel in the Electorate of Saxony and asked if he could also forgive him the sin he was still to commit? in case he wanted to give him ten thalers. At first, the monk was very upset and apologized to some extent, saying that it was an important matter. But he had full authority from the pope, if he gave him thirty thalers, he would give him such an indulgence. This is done. But he waits for D. 1) Tetzel himself, lays him down and takes his indulgence money. Because of this act, he complained, but because he had previously forgiven the future sin so lightly, he was ridiculed.

This is the first time that Tetzel has been tricked by a nobleman on his way to Leipzig.

From Arnold's vita Nauritii elect. in Mencken's scriptor. rsum. Aermunieur, toru. II, p. 1151. Seckendorf also shares this incident, Ilist. lurk., Ud. I, x. 26, and adds that there are various versions about it. We consider this narration to be only another version of the previous one. Löschers remarks on the previous relation: "In the Churmark a similar thing is said to have happened to Tetzel between Triebeln and Jüterbock, and that with one of nobility, called von Haake."

After Tetzel had collected a large sum of money in Leipzig, a certain nobleman came to him and asked whether he would be able to grant him indulgence for the sin he was about to commit. Tetzel was immediately ready with the word of consent, but also pending, if he would pay the stipulated money, which the nobleman would pay and thus receive letter and seal from Tetzel. Then he would have watched Tetzel as he traveled away from Leipzig, attacked him on the way, smeared his skin thickly with blows, and then let him go back to Leipzig empty after he had reported how this was the sin he had intended to commit, since Duke George was initially enraged about this deed, but after the whole thing had taken place, he let himself be pacified again without imposing some punishment on the nobleman.

1) "D." will have to be resolved by "Dominum", not by vfootor^, as Löschers has done, because the disputation on his second series of theses, for the attainment of the doctorate, perhaps never took place. Cf. Walch, St. Louiser Ausq., Vol. XVIII, Introduction, p. 13. Kolde, Martin Luther, Vol. I, p. 376.

98 The strange story that happened at Anuaberg with Friedr. Myconius, when out of good simplicity he wanted to have the indulgence for free from the indulgence merchant Johann Tetzel and did not want to let go of such a request; as he, Myconius, tells it himself in a letter Anno 1546 to Paul 1) Eber as follows.

From a letter written in 1546 by Myconius to Father Eber, reprinted by Jenisius in his annalibus XnirudsrA. and subsequently in Hecht, vita leMiii, p. 116, and by Löscher, Ref.-Acta, Vol. I, p. 405.

Translated into German.

The well-known promoter of the indulgence offered by the Roman pope, Johann Tetzel of the Dominican order, lied to and charmed the people in the new city of Annaberg for two whole years, so that finally everyone had the firm conviction that there was no other way to obtain forgiveness of sins and eternal life than through our works, of which he himself taught that it was impossible. But this one way was still left, if we bought it from the Roman Pontiff with money, and thus procured the papal indulgence, which he declared to be the forgiveness of sins and the entrance into eternal life. I could tell quite amazing and almost unbelievable things from what I heard during those two years (for he preached every day). I listened to him so attentively that I could recite his entire sermons to others, even imitating his voice and gestures, not in jest but in earnest. I was also of the opinion that all these were entirely God's sayings, and that everything that was sent to us by the Pope came to us from Christ Himself. Finally, in the same year, around the feast of Pentecost, he threatened that he would put down the indulgence cross and close the open gates of heaven, and that it would not happen that they could receive eternal life and forgiveness of sins after this at such a small price. Thus, he said, there was no hope that such a great generosity of the Roman See would ever come to Germany again, as long as the world would stand, and he exhorted that each one should take care of his own soul as well as that of his deceased. Now was the day of salvation and the pleasant time. "Oh, do not miss any of his souls.

Blessedness! For if you do not possess the papal letters of indulgence, you will not be absolved from many sins and the reserved cases by any man. Printed notices were publicly posted on the doors and walls of the churches, announcing that to show some gratitude for the devotion of the German people, the letters of indulgence and this complete power to forgive sin should no longer be sold for such large sums of money as in the beginning, but for a lower price. And at the end a little further down was added: To the poor also indulgences may be given for free, for God's sake. This was the reason that I had something to do with the commissioners of indulgences, which certainly happened at the suggestion, encouragement and impulse of the Holy Spirit, although I myself did not understand what I was doing at that time.

When I was still a boy, even a small child, my father had taught me the Ten Commandments, the Lord's Prayer and the Creed, and told me that I had to pray diligently. For he always told me that we had everything from God alone, and that He would govern us if I prayed diligently. Likewise, that the blood of Christ was the ransom for the sins of the world, and that this faith was necessary for every Christian; yes, even if only three people should have this hope that they would be saved through Christ, one should nevertheless quite certainly believe that one was one of these three, and it would be a disgrace to the blood of Christ if one wanted to doubt this. The indulgences of the pope would be nets with which the money of the simple-minded people would be fished away. Certainly, forgiveness of sins and eternal life could not be bought with money, but it would annoy the clergy if one wanted to say this. Since I had heard nothing but praise of indulgences in the sermons on indulgences, but not the slightest mention of the grace of the Lord Christ and of His atonement for the sins of the world, I thought that only those would share in the death of Christ who had either earned it through good works or had bought it for money. So I remained in darkness, and was in doubt whether I should believe the clergy or my father more; but I believed the clergy more. But I could not quite get my head around the fact that forgiveness of sins could not be obtained, or that money would have to be paid for it, especially as far as poor people were concerned. Therefore, I liked the clause added at the end of the papal mandate on all

1) In the old edition: "Pater" instead of: Paul.

Measure well: Indulgences are to be given to the poor free of charge, for God's sake.

Since after three days the cross of indulgence was to be solemnly laid down, and these steps and ladders to heaven were to be taken down, the spirit impelled me mightily to go to the Commissary and ask for such a letter, in which the forgiveness of sins would be contained free of charge for the poor, stating that I was a sinner and also a poor person, and that I was in need of the sharing of Christ's merits and the forgiveness of sins free of charge.

The next day around dinnertime, when Tetzl was in Johann Pflug's house with the confessors and a large crowd, I went to this meeting and asked in a Latin speech that I, as a poor man, be granted the right, according to the mandate contained in the letter, to ask for absolution from all sins free of charge and for God's sake, so that no case would be reserved, and that a papal letter of assurance would be given to me. The priests were astonished at my Latin speech, which was something rare among boys at that time, and they quickly went out of the parlor into the chamber to the Commissary Tetzl, presented my request to him, and also interceded for me that he might grant me a letter of indulgence free of charge. Finally, after a long consultation, they return with the answer: "My son, we have presented your request with all diligence to the Commissary, who also declares that he would gladly grant your request, but he could not, even if he wanted to; but that concession would be null and void. For he has indicated to us that these papal letters would be of the explicit clear content that only those would really be capable of this most lenient indulgence and would become eligible for it, who would lend a helping hand, that is, who would give money. I, however, convinced them from the letters posted on the church doors that this same most holy pope had ordered that indulgences be given to the poor free of charge, for God's sake, and that it was written underneath: By the Lord Pabst's own command.

They went again to the monk, who was proud beyond all measure, and asked him again to grant my request, since I was a gifted and eloquent young man, who would therefore be well worth doing some good to him in front of others. But they came again with the answer of the helpful hand, which alone would be able to obtain indulgences. But I still thought that they were doing an injustice to me as a poor person, since they wanted to reject the one whom God and the pope did not want to exclude from the offered indulgence, just for the sake of a few pennies that I did not have.

At last, they said that I only wanted to give something, and that I should only give something, or so that the helping hand would not be completely lacking, I should give a penny. My answer was: I do not have it, I am poor. At last they asked me to give only six pennies. I answered again: I don't even have a penny.

Thereupon they went a little aside and talked with each other, and I heard that they were very concerned about two circumstances in particular. First, they said that I should not be allowed to leave without a letter of indulgence, so that, if the matter were instigated by others, an unpleasant outcome (tragedia) would not be brought about because of me, since the letter in fact contained the clause: "To the poor free of charge". On the other hand, that one would certainly have to receive something from me, so that if others heard that the letters of indulgence were being distributed free of charge, the whole swarm of the school and the prayer people would come over their necks, and everyone would want to have indulgences free of charge.

After the consultation was over, they came to me again, and one of them offered me six pennies, that I should give them to the Commissary, and thus be one of those who would help to build St. Peter's Church in Rome and destroy the Turks, and would have a share in the grace of Christ and the indulgence. But then I answered frankly, quite out of an impulse of the spirit: If I had wanted indulgences bought for money, I could only have sold a book and obtained them for money. But I wanted to have indulgences for free and for the sake of God, or they should give account to God for missing the salvation of a soul for the sake of six pennies, which God and the pope wanted to make partakers of the forgiveness of sins that Christ had acquired for us. At that time, however, I believed that it was to be given entirely to the Roman Pontiff, after everyone had earned it, but for free to the poor.

Finally they asked by whom I had been sent here? I answered, which was the plain truth, that I had not been sent by any man at all, nor had I been sent on anyone's invitation.

I would never have made this request without the advice of someone, without the counsel of anyone, merely in the confidence that I would have trusted in the indulgence promised in vain in the papal letter. I would also never have undertaken to get involved with such great people, because I would be stupid by nature; and if the thirst for the grace of God and for the forgiveness of sins had not driven me, I would not also have taken so much to go to such a meeting. Again I was promised that I should get a letter of indulgence, which would have been bought by someone in my place for six pennies, but would have been given to me for free. But I wanted a remission of my sins without payment from the one who would have the power to forgive sins for free in the place of the pope, or I wanted to bring the matter home to God.

So I was dismissed, and the holy thieves became sad. But I was saddened, on the one hand, that I had not received a letter of indulgence; on the other hand, I rejoiced at the same time that there was still a God in heaven who would remit the sins of the penitent even without any price or money, according to the words I had often sung: "As surely as I live, says the Lord, I do not want the death of a sinner. Lord God, you know that I am not lying here! For I was still in the thickest darknesses. And yet, as I departed from them, behold, the Holy Spirit moved my whole heart and body, your good Spirit, who is an enlightener and a reviver, who is a comforter and also a spirit of renewal.

And as I went home, I completely melted into tears, and begged that, because they refused me mercy, because I lacked money, you, O God, would have mercy on me, and by grace forgive my sins, be a merciful God to me, and absolve me. And so I came home, went into my room, took the crucifix that I always had on the table in my study room, placed it on the bench, and prostrated myself on the ground before it.

Here I cannot write any further, but I could feel the spirit of grace and prayer, which you, O Lord my God, poured into and over me. This was the sum of my prayer, that you would be a dear Father to me, that you would forgive my sins. I had given myself completely to you, so that you would do with me what you wanted; and since they would not be merciful to me without money, you should be a merciful God and father to me. I felt that my whole nature was transformed, so that I was now disgusted with all things, with the world, yes, that I seemed to be tired of life itself, and wished to live only with God, so that I might please Him.

99 Hottillger's report of what happened to a shoemaker's wife in Hageau, who had bought a letter of indulgence for one gold florin so that her soul would not go to purgatory.

From Hottinger's eecT, Theil VII, p. 536, reprinted in Tentzel, Hist. Bericht, vol. I, p. 124, and in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. I, p. 402. Hottinger's report is taken from des Musculus I^oei e, ominune8, p. 362, who witnessed this himself in 1517.

A cobbler's wife in Hagenau bought a letter of indulgence for one gold guilder, so that she would be all the more certain of her blessedness and would not go to purgatory but, as soon as her soul ran out, to heaven. For this the letter of indulgence promised, out of the complete power of the governor of Christ. Soon after, she became deathly ill, sent for a monk, showed him the letter, confessed, received complete absolution and died. The husband did not like that the woman had given a gold florin for the indulgence, he had her buried, but he did not hold any masses for her, according to custom. When the local Plebanus heard this, he accused the shoemaker of being a despiser of the Christian religion and of being ungodly toward his wife. The shoemaker appeared and took the letter of indulgence. The shoemaker asked: Did your wife die? Answer: Yes. Further: What have you done with her? Answer: I buried her dead body and gave her soul to God. He persecuted: Have you done nothing more, nor have you kept any soul masters for her preservation? Answer: I did not do it, because I did not need it, for she is about to go to heaven. The other: How do you know that? Him: I know it well, for I have a credible witness. The other: Show it to me. The cobbler brings out the letter of indulgence and asks to read it. The shoemaker gives it to the priest to read, who had also come as a plaintiff. The priest is frightened by the letter and does not want to read it. But the castle forcibly makes him read it, and both of them are ashamed and know nothing more to say. There says the cobbler: "Judge for yourselves whether I do not have a credible testimony of my wife's soul that she will not go to purgatory but to heaven; my wife bought this testimony with one gold florin: Why does the pleban now say that my wife only needs to be redeemed by the Masses? If he rightly affirms this, then my wife has been deceived by the pope; but if she has not been deceived, then the priest is trying to deceive me. Since neither the shoemaker nor the priest could contradict this, nor condemn the pope's bull, they let the shoemaker go.

The story of Mathesius about how an old miner in Schneeberg thoroughly shamed an indulgence merchant and led him away.

From the seventeenth sermon of Mathesius in Luther's Life (St. Lomser Ausg., p. 334) printed in Tentzel's "Bericht," Vol. I, p. 129, and "in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, Vol. I, p. 401.

A miner asked an indulgence-keeper on the Schneeberg whether it was true what he had preached several times about the power of indulgences and the authority of the Holy Father, that with a penny, as soon as it rang in the basin, a soul could be delivered from purgatory and ransomed. As the indulgence merchant insists: Ah! says the miner, how the pope must be such a merciless eternal thief, who for the sake of a penny lets a poor soul circulate in purgatory for so long; if he had no other means of payment, he could raise several hundred thousand guilders and release the poor souls at once, but we poor people would gladly pay the principal sum, and whatever interest and expenses would have been incurred, on the right account.

The report of Myconius on how the pope sent indulgences to all countries, and especially on how the papal missionaries were busy with indulgences in all provinces, how at first they were very popular, but later they became so bad that emperors, kings, and princes finally got tired of them.

Aus des Myconius distort. retormat., p. 9.

The pope sent indulgences to the provinces and preached that whoever paid money for the tax against the Turk or for the building of the new church of St. Peter's would have to pay the tax.

he should have forgiveness of sins, of chastisement and guilt. The bulls and letters are still available, you may read them; and almost every year a new grace and indulgence came from Rome. And although this carried innumerable money, because all spinners, widows, even those who took alms, wanted to redeem indulgences, and their friends' souls, which they all respected to be in purgatory, redeemed, put in two, three, four, five snowbergs, also redeemed letters of indulgence, that, if it should have lasted longer, Germany would not have kept neither penny nor nickel. The pope and the whales were not yet sated, and yet the money came neither against the Turk nor to the building, but rather to the pope's and the cardinals' splendor, arrogance, and Roman excesses. Whoever spoke against it was burned, like St. John Hus and other holy teachers. It finally became so overwhelming that even emperors, kings, princes and lords of the Holy Empire were displeased. But no one could advise or help; the earthly God of Rome was too powerful in the church and in the hearts of all people. At several imperial congresses, people complained about it and demanded reformation, but no one was allowed to take any serious action. The pope's ban was too feared.

The Jesuit Maimburg's rather sincere and truthful report on the impudent practice of selling indulgences, in which he punishes Tetzel's and other monks' actions not much less than the Protestant scribes did.

From Seckendorf's Hist. lid. I, p. 12, sset. 6. translated into German.

Pope Leo had entrusted the preaching of indulgences in Germany to the Archbishop of Mainz and Magdeburg, Albrecht, brother of Joachim I, Elector of Brandenburg. This prelate, who had great prestige and a peculiar virtue, for the sake of which he was made a cardinal by Leo two years later, entrusted this business to Johann Tetzel, a Dominican monk and heretic, who not long before had done similar work to the great benefit of the knights of the Teutonic Order, and by his indulgence sermons had brought the multitude to war against the Muscovites. Tetzel took his brothers of the order as assistants. These people, as is often the case, exaggerated the cause that they had taken on, and

The pontiffs praised the dignity and power of indulgences so excessively that they gave the common man the opportunity to believe that as soon as he had paid the money and received the letter of indulgence, everyone would certainly be blessed, and the poor soul would immediately be delivered from purgatory. This was undoubtedly annoying, as the princes at the Diet of Nuremberg complained to Pope Adrian VI, Leo's successor. The trouble increased, and had often given the people cause for revolt, since the subordinates of the indulgence merchants, who had bought the profit of the indulgences, sat daily in inns and carried away part of the money shamefully. The poor and beggars also complained that this money was being squandered on them in a cruel way, since, as they said, they were being deprived of the alms they would otherwise have received. These abuses have been described by so many famous scribes, more sharply than by me, in various languages, such as Latin, French, Italian and German, so that a historian would use vain efforts if he wanted to try to suppress them. Thus it cannot be denied, indeed it is admitted by all, that these abuses gave rise to Lutheranism, which is also not inarticulately indicated in the last session of the Council of Trent.

103) Mayer, Chancellor of the Chur-Mainz, complains about how the pope has obtained money from the German church.
presse, in a letter to Cardinal Aeneas Sylvius. 1457.

From Flacius cutuloA. test. veritat., p. 464.

Translated into German.

Martin Mayer, Chancellor of the Archbishop of Mainz, wishes the Lord Aeneas, Cardinal of Siena, his dear father, good health.

I have learned from letters of good friends that you have been elected Cardinal. I congratulate both you, who for your virtue have received such a worthy reward, and me, since my friend has been elevated to such a position of honor, in which he will be able to serve me and my closest relatives in time. I only regret that you live at such a time, which looks sad for the apostolic see, since my lord archbishop is often complained about the Roman pope, that he has not acted beyond the decrees of the Costnitz or Basel Councils.

and is of the opinion that he is not bound by the treaties of his predecessor, nor does he make anything of our nation from all appearances, but rather seeks to exhaust it completely. It is well known that the election of prelates has been annulled and rejected here and there, and that honorary offices, be they what they may, are reserved for cardinals and protonotaries. In fact, you have also received an entitlement to three German provinces under this formula, which was not customary until now and of which nothing has ever been heard. For Expectanzbriefe are issued in incredible quantities. The annals, or half of the ecclesiastical income, are collected immediately, and it is on the day that money is extorted even above the fee. Church offices are not given to those who deserve it above others, but to the highest bidders. In order to cut money, new indulgence bulls are handed out daily. They want to have the tithes collected for the sake of the Turks without consulting our prelates. Legal disputes, which should be investigated and decided between the parties, are brought before the apostolic court without distinction. A thousand ways and means are devised by which the Roman See might subtly and cunningly seize our treasury, just as it would if we were barbarians, for which reason our otherwise famous nation, which by its bravery and blood brought the Roman Empire to itself, and was once the ruler and queen of the whole world, has now, after being completely exhausted, become a servant and interest-bearing, and has for many years lamented in great distress its miserable condition, its lack and poverty. Now, however, our great ones, awakened from their sleep, as it were, have begun to consider how and by what means they might remedy this misery, and have concluded to throw off this papal yoke altogether and to restore themselves to their former freedom. This shall be to no small detriment to the Roman court, insofar as the imperial princes will accomplish what they intend. As much as I rejoice over your new dignity, I am deceived and frightened that this should happen in your time; but perhaps God has decided otherwise, and His decree must truly apply and prevail. In the meantime, be of good courage and, according to your wise insight, think about how to put a stop to the impetuous floods and put a stop to them. Farewell. From Aschaffenburg, August 31, 1457.

The first part of the book is a list of the annals that some German bishoprics and abbeys have given to Rome.

This document is found in the Leipzig edition, vol. XVIII, p. 354. It belongs to the year 1522. Compare the two prefaces in the St. Louis edition, vol. XIV, col. 422 ff, no. 53.

After the answer of the Imperial Majesty's governors, princes, princes and other estates of the Empire, begun at the Imperial Diet in Nuremberg in the 22nd year and ended in the 23rd year, the message of the pope is given there. It is found there, under a special heading, how the German archbishoprics, bishoprics, abbeys and provostries of the German lands are being unfairly oppressed, that these newly elected archbishops, bishops, abbeys and provostries of this time have given annata to Rome; and for this reason the same secular estates, upon previous letter of Imperial Majesty to the Pope, are requested to have such annotations of the Germans, which are for the common use and necessity of the Empire, prosecuted 2c. So that these annotations are not considered higher or lower, nor are they endured, it would be useful and good that the Imperial Majesty and the German secular imperial estates actually know what every bishopric, abbey and provosty give to Rome for annotations, from which they could all the more accurately notice what is important to the German lands. Now, many years ago, a booklet was made in which it is shown what the several archbishoprics, bishoprics, and some abbeys of German lands have given for annuities to Rome at that time; thus, in the meantime, they have been increased and enhanced more than with the Zwiefalt zu Rom.

Thus, in the same old booklet, many abbeys that give annotations to Rome remain unreported, and all provostries, of which there is an "excessive number in high and low monasteries of German lands, and all of which give annotations to Rome, are completely silent. And because such deficiencies could not be experienced and reported now, and the German states therefore have all the more reason and cause for further thorough investigation, reported annotations, such as those found in the aforementioned old booklet, have been Germanized by some, in good opinion, and finally counted and summarized, as follows.

About the bishoprics in Liefland.

Item from the tax of the bishopric Derbt fDorpatl is not reported.

The bishopric of Reval is valued at 300 guilders.

The bishopric of Riga is valued at 160 marks of silver, each mark at 5 guilders, making 800 guilders.

Abbey, called Apollonii. St. Benedict's Order, located in the reported bishopric, is valued at 160 marks of silver, and for it 800 guilders.

Abbey at Pangratzen, called Silo. St. Blasien Order, also belongs to this diocese, and is not reported by its tax.

The bishopric of Ossal is valued at 1000 and 300 guilders.

The bishopric of Courland is valued at 500 guilders.

In the land of Prussia.

Item in the country to Prussia are four bishoprics, namely Somlont [Samland], Helsingburg [Heilsberg], Rusenburg [perhaps "Riesenburg", once seat of the bishop of Pomesania] and Coy [Culm?], of all of which nothing is reported.

In the Duchy of Pomerania.

The bishopric of Camin is valued at 2000 guilders.

In the Mark Brandenburg.

The bishopric of Brandenburg is valued at 1000 guilders.

The bishopric of Hamelburg is valued at 600 guilders.

The bishopric of Libus [Lebus] is not taxed.

In the Duchy of Mecklenburg.

The bishopric of Schwerin is not taxed.

In the Duchy of Holstein and Schleswick.

The diocese of Lübeck is valued at 300 guilders.

The bishopric of Schleswick is not taxed.

In the Silesia and Moravia.

The diocese of Breslau is valued at 4000 guilders.

Item the bishopric of Ulmitz fOlmüA also two abbeys belonging to such bishopric, as namely Camitz and Lübenitz, are not taxirt.

Between the river of the Elbe and the Weser, to the Thuringian Forest.

The Archbishopric of Bremen is valued at 6000 guilders.

Abbey, called Herosveld [Hersfeld], Benedictier-

The order, which belongs to the reported archbishopric, is not lax.

The abbey, called Reufseval, of the Order of St. Benedict, and also belonging to the archbishopric, is valued at 100 guilders.

The bishopric of Hildesheim is valued at 1000 guilders.

The bishopric of Florence is valued at 00 guilders.

The bishopric of Ratzenburg is valued at 323 guilders.

Abbey in Brunswick, called St. Egydii, is valued at 113 florins.

The Archbishopric of Magdeburg is valued at 2500 guilders.

Lichtenberg, a monastery of the Augustinian order, is valued at 33 gulden.

The bishopric of Merseburg is valued at 120 guilders.

The bishopric of Meissen is valued at 120 guilders.

The bishopric of Naumburg or Zeiz is valued at 200 guilders.

In Westphalia.

The bishopric of Verden is valued at 400 guilders.

The bishopric of Minden is valued at 1000 guilders.

The bishopric of Ossenbrück is valued at 600 guilders.

The bishopric of Badenborn [Paderborn] is valued at 100 guilders.

Beyond the Ems between the sea and the Rhine.

The bishopric of Monster is valued at 1000 guilders.

The bishopric of Liège is valued at 7200 guilders.

Abbey Somlot, Benedictinerordens, is laxirt on 502 guilders.

Waleodoren and Hactenor, Benedictinerordens, are valued at 100 guilders.

Villary Abbey, Cistercian Order, is valued at 200 guilders.

Abbey of St. James, Benedictine Order, is valued at 560 guilders.

The Abbey of St. Ubert, Benedictine Order, is valued at 1000 guilders.

St. Lawrence Abbey is valued at 1000 guilders.

Paro Abbey in Brabant is valued at 300 guilders.

Abbey Fliderbiten, Benedictine Order, is valued at 100 guilders.

The bishopric of Metz is not taxed.

On the Rhine and Moselle rivers.

The Archbishopric of Cölln is valued at 10,000 florins.

Siperk Abbey, Benedictine Order, is valued at 270 guilders.

Abbey of St. Martin, Benedictine Order, is valued at 200 guilders.

Stabulon Abbey is valued at 169 guilders.

Abbey of St. Niclas, Benedictine Order, is valued at 150 guilders.

Tintien Abbey, Benedictine Order, is valued at 115 guilders.

Brulbilien Abbey, Benedictine Order, is valued at 200 guilders.

The Archbishopric of Trier is valued at 7000 guilders.

Vallisbrandi Abbey is valued at 300 guilders.

St. Matthias Abbey is valued at 150 guilders.

Abbey of St. Martin, Benedictine Order, is valued at 300 guilders.

The abbey of St. Maximin is valued at 400 guilders.

The Archbishopric of Mainz is valued at 10,000 florins.

Abbey Blidenstat, Benedictine Order, is valued at 133 guilders.

Herschefeld Abbey, Benedictine Order, is valued at 170 guilders.

Abbey of St. Alban, Benedictine Order, is valued at 150 florins.

Abbey at St. Jorgenthal is not taxed.

The bishopric of Worms is valued at 1000 guilders.

The bishopric of Speyer is valued at 600 guilders.

Hitzogen Abbey, Benedictine Order, is valued at 100 guilders.

Weisenburg Abbey is laxirt to 750 guilders.

The bishopric of Strasbourg is valued at 2500 guilders.

Abbey at Lör, Benedictine Order, is valued at 110 guilders.

Schwabach Abbey, Benedictine Order, is valued at 333 guilders.

Senethera Abbey, Augustinian Order, is valued at 200 guilders.

Abbey of St. Salsen, Benedictine Order, is valued at 200 guilders.

Gegenbach Abbey, Benedictine Order, is valued at 200 gulden.

The bishopric of Costentz [Constance] is valued at 2000 guilders.

The bishopric of Wallis is valued at 170 guilders.

In the mountains of Welschland.

The bishopric of Trento is valued at 2000 florins.

St. Laurentz Abbey is valued at 50 guilders.

The diocese of Brixen is valued at 3000 florins.

The bishopric of Triest is valued at 4600 guilders.

The bishopric of Seckach is not taxed.

The bishopric of Gürk is valued at 1066 guilders.

The Archbishopric of Salzburg is valued at 10,000 guilders.

The Abbey of St. Lampert, of the Order of St. Benedict, is valued at 1000 guilders.

On the Lech and the Danube.

The bishopric of Augsburg is valued at 800 guilders.

The diocese of Freisingen is valued at 4000 guilders.

The bishopric of Regensburg is valued at 1030 guilders.

Abbey of St. Jörgen, Benedictine Order, is valued at 100 guilders.

Abbey of St. Jacob, Benedictine Order, is valued at 60 guilders.

Abbey of St. Emeran, Benedictine Order, is valued at 200 guilders.

The diocese of Passau is valued at 333 guilders.

Abbey at Melck, Benedictine Order, is valued at 333 guilders.

The bishopric of Vienna together with the monastery, called Theodore, is valued at 5000 florins.

The Abbey of St. Anthony, Augustinian Order, is valued at 2000 guilders.

Abbey of St. Peter, Benedictine Order, is valued at 200 guilders.

Abbey of St. Andrew, Benedictine Order, is valued at 200 guilders.

Gutenthal Abbey, a Cistercian order, is valued at 300 guilders.

In the country to Franconia.

The bishopric of Eichstet is valued at 800 guilders.

Halsbrunn Abbey [Heilsbrunn], Cistercian Order, is valued at 333 florins.

The bishopric of Bamberg is valued at 3000 guilders.

Mönchberg Abbey is valued at 200 gulden.

The bishopric of Würzburg is valued at 2030 guilders.

Ebrach Abbey, a Cistercian order, is valued at 800 guilders.

Fulda Abbey, Benedictine Order, is valued at 300 guilders.

Abbey of Schoten, Benedictine Order, is valued at 300 guilders.

Abbey of St. Stephen, Benedictine Order, is valued at 110 guilders.

The abbey at Neuenstadt, Benedictine Order, is valued at 100 guilders.

Camberg Abbey is valued at 120 guilders.

Abbey of Sucter, Benedictine Order, is valued at 160 guilders.

Anberach Abbey, of the Order of St. Benedict, is valued at 300 guilders.

The abbey of St. Burckhard is valued at 300 guilders.

Summa Summarum of all annuities, as they are variously recorded herein, make once a hundred thousand, seventeen thousand, two hundred and nine and fifty florins.

From the lack of superior annats.

Item, from the preface of these annotations is found what is therefore in their right whole sum great lack. Thus it also appears from some previously reported dioceses, which many people know publicly, that such dioceses now give much more than twice as many annotations to Rome as is shown here according to the prescribed old list and previously reported. If, for this reason, the aforementioned summary is duplicated alone, it nevertheless makes twice a hundred thousand, four and thirty thousand, five hundred and eighteen guilders.

What all the registered Anuata like to enter every year to Rome.

I will set that a bishop and prelate, [one] to be counted in the other, according to such his chosen state experiences 15 years, and according to the same divide the next preceding duplicated sums in fifteenth part; from this it is clearly understood that only certain German annata, counted and summed up to the least, outside of many other innumerable ignorant and untaxed bishoprics, abbeys and provostries, enter annually to Rome.

fifteen thousand, six hundred four and thirty guilders, ten shillings, eight heller.

So now the above-mentioned manifold, lacking German bishoprics, abbeys and provostries, whose names and days are not known at present, and therefore could not be determined herein, also

They would undoubtedly do no small thing, but it must be taken into account that with them alone from German countries, the much more than twenty thousand florins, Rhenish florins, fell annually to Rome.

Item, it is also to be noted that to all such annata by the archbishops, bishops and prelates, by applied tax on the laity, and in addition on benefices, at which the laity have Jus patronatus, are founders and liege lords, are struck.

From other favors from German lands to Rome.

But what about all the annata reported above, the disputed election of bishops and prelates, confirmation

The pope is authorized to give the coadjutories, pension and reserve, prelature, parish and benefices to others, and to accept them again after his death, the dispensation to accept, retain or grant incompetent or forfeited prelatures, parishes and other benefices, alteration of orders, prohibition and permission of certain marriages, food and many other things, which are otherwise all forbidden and allowed for money, and many other things, which are otherwise all forbidden, and are allowed for money, indulgences, bulls, absolutions in special cases reserved to the pope, the papal graces given, and the judicial wars caused by the popes, which they bear annually from German lands to Rome, is unspeakable.

Paul increases Rom. on 13.

Brothers, it is the time to rise from sleep.

The second chapter.

Beginning of Luther's Reformation, and papal countermeasures up to the Diet of Augsburg in 1518.

First section.

Luther's attempts to stop the abuse of indulgences.

A. Luther's warnings in sermons and in the confessional and Tetzel's behavior against them.

This is the story told by Myconius about how Luther first preached his sermons against indulgences in the old, small, dilapidated church of the Augustinian monastery in Wittenberg.

From Myconius' Reformation History, p. 24.

The preacher of indulgences, Tetzel, was still at Jüterbog, heretical, shouting and raging hostilely against Luther; but nevertheless it no longer wanted to sound and be valid in German ears as it had done. In Wittenberg, the Augustinian monastery had begun to be rebuilt, and no more was built than the Schlashauss, in which D. Martin still lives. The foundations of the church had been laid, but were only level with the earth. In the middle of the same foundations stood an old chapel, built of wood and covered with glue. It was very dilapidated and was propped up on all sides. It was about thirty shoes long and twenty wide, as I saw it. It had a small, old, rusty church, on which 20 1) people could stand with difficulty. On the wall at noon there was a preaching stand made of old boards, which were uneven; a preaching stand made about one and a half cubits high from the ground. In sum, it looked everywhere like the painters painting the stable in Bethlehem where Christ was born. Thus the little church in which John Huss preached in Prague was also called Bethlehem. In this poor, miserable, wretched chapel, God has left his dear holy gospel and the dear child Jesus in these last times.

1) Instead of 20, it will probably read 200.

be born anew, and let it be unwrapped once, and show to all the world how beautiful, lovely, comforting and blessed a little child Jesus is, from whom we all take and receive our blessedness, payment for sins and eternal life. There was no minster, monastery or place of worship on earth at that time, of which there were many hundreds of thousands, that God would have mentioned for this purpose; indeed, they despise it, for only this poor, unsightly chapel. From this the spirit of the Lord's mouth came forth, and blew down the Antichrist. From this the holy grave, which is the holy scripture, which the pope had covered with guards, so that Christ would not rise, was won by Duke Friederichen, as the old prophecy read; and since he hung his shield on the tree, it became green again, Anno 1518.

In this church preached first D. Martinus preached and preached against indulgences, which was printed. Then another, which he called the freedom of the sermon, which he had previously preached against indulgences, was also printed. *) These were the first things about indulgences, and in them he explained how all teachings that were to be presented in Christendom were to be judged, justified and judged according to the divine word, which is more valid than the word, wit and wisdom of all men. According to the command of Christ: Oves meae vocem meam audient. Alienum non sequuntur, sed fugiunt ab eo. Item: Omnia probate, quod bonum est, tenete. Gal. 1: Si Angelus de coelo aliud evangelium evangelizaverit, quam quod accepistis etc., anathema sit. This was a new thing at that time and soon spread throughout the world. And in a short time this church became too small; and Doctori Martino was ordered to preach in the parish of Wittenberg. So the child Jesus was brought to the temple again.

Luther's own account of how he displayed one and another meaning about indulgences in the pulpit of the castle church in Wittenberg, for which he was not well received by the Elector.

The same can be read in his writing against Duke Heinrich zu Braunschweig, in the old edition of Walch, Vol. XVII, 1703, § 96 ff. This report is also inserted in our introduction to the 18th volume of the St. Louis edition, p. 10 b f.

Myconius reported how the people confessed to Luther about the letters of indulgence, and how Luther did not want to absolve them, and how Tetzel was enraged by this.

From Myconius' Reformation History, p. 21, reprinted in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, Vol. I, p. 431.

In the same year, some came to Doctore Martins in Wittenberg with their letters of indulgence, and confessed to him their mercy. And when they were given gross defaults, and let themselves be heard that they did not want to desist from adultery, fornication, usury, unrighteous property, and such sin and wickedness, the doctor did not want to absolve them, because no true repentance or correction was given there. Then the confessors appealed to their papal letters and Tetzlian pardon and indulgence. Martinus did not want to turn back on this, and invoked the saying: Nisi poenitentiam habueritis omnes similiter peribitis. Luc. 13 And when he would not absolve them, they went again to Tetzel and complained to him how this Augustinian monk would not give anything in response to their letter. Tetzel was at Jüterbog in Saxony, and became very angry about such a new newspaper, raged, scolded and maledicted atrociously on the preaching chair, and threatened the heretic masters, who were preacher monks at that time. And in order to frighten them, he had a fire lit in the marketplace several times a week, telling them how he had orders from the pope to burn the heretics who opposed the Most Holy One, the pope, and his Most Holy Indulgence.

This is the story of Mathesius about how modestly Luther initially opposed Tetzel's trade in indulgences; Tetzel, on the other hand, publicly raged against Luther, and how Luther further behaved against it.

From Mathesius, "Luther's Life" (St. Louis edition, p. 17), reprinted in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. I, p. 432.

As Tetzel emphasizes in his Roman Getetzlich und Trügerei, many people ran to this indulgence fair and wanted to redeem grace and buy eternal life with their money. In his monastery, Luther began to warn his listeners against this money indulgence, and in the beginning he taught in a subtle and modest way: it would be better to give alms to poor people according to Christ's commandment.

x) Walch, St. Louis Edition, Vol. XVIII, 270 and 296.

because such uncertain grace can be bought for money. He who repents throughout his life and turns to God with all his heart receives the gracious and heavenly grace and forgiveness of all sins, which the Lord Christ has purchased for us through his one sacrifice and blood, and which he offers and sells without money out of pure grace, as is clearly described in Isaiah. In addition, he also began to ask and discuss these things in distant monasteries and universities, and because he was a doctor of the Holy Scriptures, he always based his cause on the words of the prophets and apostles. As such comes before the indulgence partier, who pricked Roman letters, wax and lead to good Schreckenberger, Spitzgröschle and gold florins, Tetzl begins to curse, scold, and call D. Luther an arch-heretic. Luther for an arch-heretic. Thus, this indulgence leader, with his presumptuous speeches and atrocious words of shame, puts Luther in his spiritual armor, so that he takes David's sling and the spiritual sword, which is a fervent prayer and the righteous word of God, for protection, and on his doctorate and oath attacks Tetzl and his Roman indulgence in the name of God, and confidently teaches that such indulgence is a dangerous fraud.

B. Luther appears publicly with his theses or disputation against indulgences and has a confident courage in doing so. How this debris was removed by friends and enemies.

109 Myconius reports how Luther wrote to the bishops of Meissen, Frankfurt, Zeitz, and Merseburg, and later also to the bishop of Mainz, Albrecht, and reminded them of their office to have an understanding, but afterwards, when he did nothing with them, he put his theses into print, and how quickly they passed through the whole of Christendom.

From Myconius' Reformation History, p. 22.

Doctor Martinus first wrote to four bishops, namely to the bishop of Meissen, the bishop of Frankfurt, the bishop of Zeitz and the bishop of Merseburg, and then also to the bishop of Mainz, Albrecht, reminding them that they owed it to their episcopal office to see to it that God's name was not so abused and blasphemed, that the poor people were not so miserable.

would be seduced. But the bishop of Mainz, Albrecht, despised it; so the others answered that they could not do anything against the pope's business. When Doctor Martin Luther saw that the bishops did not want to do anything about it, he wrote several propositions about indulgences: Dominus et Magister noster Christus dicens, poenitentiam agite, voluit omnem omnium hominum vitam esse poenitentiam, and had them printed, and only wanted to discuss with the scholars of the high school of Wittenberg what indulgences were, what they could do, where they came from, and how much they were valid 2c. But before a fortnight had passed, these propositions had gone through the whole of Germany, and in four weeks almost the whole of Christendom, as if the angels themselves were messengers, and carried it before the eyes of all men. No one would believe how much talk there was about them; they were soon Germanized, and this trade pleased everyone very well, except the preaching monks and the bishop of Halle, and also some who enjoyed the pope's daily fare and made good use of the treasures of the earth that he had raised.

Meisner's account of the strange circumstance of how, from time immemorial, a great indulgence was granted in the castle church of Wittenberg around the feast of all the saints, that is, on the very day when Luther held his disputation.

From Meisner's "Wittenberg Jubelfest" published in 1668, p. 60, reprinted in Tenzel's "Bericht", Vol. I, p. 259.

The popes of Rome and other bishops have given excellent indulgences, as Pope Boniface IX promised in 1398 to all those who would devoutly visit this church on the feast of all saints and open their lenient hand, such an indulgence, which Christ himself should have given to the church of St. Mary in Assisi in Italy, that they should be cleansed of all sin and guilt immediately. Leo X did it too roughly, as will be seen from the following of his special bulls.

111) Two bulls given by Pope Leo in 1516, which contribute to the fact that a large number of people from far and wide come to this church.

the feast of all saints. In one of them he promises all pilgrims indulgences for 100 years; the other, however, reads from word to word in German:

From Meisner's Wittenberg! Jubelfest, in äix, p. 84.

Bishop Leo, the servant of the servants of God, to the constant remembrance of the cause. Carefully considering the salvation of the Lord's host, which is entrusted to our care according to the divine will, as the pastoral office entails: we willingly invite all and every believer of this host to the practice of godly and meritorious works by spiritual gifts, namely by pardons and indulgences, so that by means of the practice of such works they may all the more easily earn the eternal life which each one desires to attain. After Bonifacius the Eighth, whom we have to praise because of his good intention, which he led at that time, wanted that the Capellkirche of all the saints of the city of Wittenberg, Brandenburg diocese, which, as named Bonifacius learned, with the relics of many saints by some dukes in Saxony, The church should be reverently visited and maintained, and the believers in Christ should, for the sake of devotion, all the more gladly assemble at this church and lend a helping hand for its preservation, so that they may see themselves all the more richly filled with the heavenly gift of grace, and to all and every truly penitent and confessing believer in Christ, who will devoutly visit the said church on the feast of all saints from the first to the second evening of this feast every year and lend a helping hand for the preservation of the same, by means of certain pardons and remission of sins, which those who visit the church of St. Mary of Portiunculus will receive. Mary of Portiuncula, otherwise called the Chapel of Angelica, outside Assisi, on the first and second day of the month of August, obtained annually, by whatever means it may have been done; and nevertheless, in order that the faithful of Christ might benefit from this indulgence, the superior of this church at the time and eight other competent priests, both secular and regular, to be chosen by this provost every year, and to be empowered to hear the confessions of all and every faithful of Christ who make a pilgrimage to this church on the feast of all the saints and said days, in order to obtain such indulgences, and, after hearing their confession, duly absolving them of their sins, allowed them to impose a salutary penance according to the nature of the crime, except in the case of such crimes where the apostolic see would have to be consulted, and to distribute the body of Christ. of blessed memory, as our predecessor, having learned that the beloved sons and noble lords, Frederick, Elector of the Holy Roman Empire, and John, Dukes of Saxony and brothers in the flesh, who profess a special devotion to this church, rebuilt the said church from the ground up and adorned it with many precious relics, so that a large number of the faithful in Christ could gather there for the sake of devotion, the bulls of this Boniface by his other letters of grace, with the granting of indulgences, the forgiveness of sins, and the authority to delegate preconceived confessors who could absolve and administer Holy Communion every year, as often as necessary, in any cases not reserved by the apostolic see, together with all the clauses contained therein, have been approved and confirmed by virtue of apostolic majesty, and the aforesaid parts have been confirmed anew, as is more extensively contained in the aforesaid Bulls, which the said predecessors Julius and Bonifacius have made valid for the future times. Since we therefore sincerely desire that this church be preserved in its structural condition and that its missals, chalices and other ornaments necessary for worship be protected and handled, and that the Christian faithful themselves all the more gladly offer their alms and make helpful contributions to it, so that it may receive all the more abundant gifts of grace: We consider all the aforementioned letters of grace, with all and every clause contained therein, to be acceptable; we also increase and extend the same by the present bull to the effect that all believers of both sexes who visit the aforementioned church throughout the Octave, including the feast day, and offer a helping hand to the aforementioned items, may always, as often as they do so, obtain indulgence and forgiveness. Also, that the deceased, who have decided their life united with Christ through love, as for those of their relatives or friends, during the Octave, such alms will be given for the often-mentioned use, just such an indulgence will be granted for the penitential exercises imposed on them, to which they are subjected in Purgatory according to the divine ordinance, and that thoughtful confessors will grant these believers in Christ, who are to them confess their sins, from the ban and other judgments, censures and punishments pronounced against them by papal law or by a human being, and all other their sins, crimes, wickednesses and faults, they may be as gross and horrible as they wish, even if they are such that the apostolic see would have to be consulted about them; except such cases as are contained in the bulls published on Green Thursday; absolve them and impose on them a salutary penance for the sins they have committed, as well as all the vows they have made so far; the vow to travel across the sea to St. James in Compostella. The vow to travel across the sea to St. James in Compostella, the vow to enter a monastery, and the vow of chastity alone, into other works of godliness to be used for the benefit of the church. Further, that those who have taken property belonging to others, or have acquired something unlawfully and withheld it, if it does not exceed 500 ducats, and the person to whom it should be returned is not known, if they or someone of their number have made a bequest, which is to be left to the discretion of the confessors and applied for the benefit of the same church, may in good conscience and lawfully retain and possess such property from that time forth freely and without offense. That finally also the confessors may exempt those who, in the fourth degree of consanguinity and affinity, have married each other unknowingly and have consummated their marriage by carnal intermarriage, if such obstacle standing in the way had not yet been raised in court, or if the same had caused any public annoyance, from such transgression and from the banishment ray, after a salutary penalty has been imposed upon them according to the nature of their fault, which is also applied for the aforementioned benefit, and to dispense those thus joined that they may secretly marry again and remain in such a state of marriage freely and without decency, solely in the ecclesiastical court, and may and may declare their children produced or yet to be produced from such marriage to be legitimate and conjugally begotten children. We hereby resolve and declare that, if anyone should in any way afflict the persons absolved and dispensed by the said confessors on account of their remitted and dispensed crimes, sins and transgressions, and should wish to put anything in the way of the confessors themselves in the aforesaid matters, he would thereby render himself guilty of excommunication, of which he shall be excommunicated by no one but ourselves and the Roman See, except in the case of death.

(1) and among which the present Bull, with any withholding of indulgences and property for the building of the main church of the Prince of the Apostles in the city of Rome, or other still godly works endowed by us and the said See at the present time, shall by no means be included, Nor are they to be understood as such, regardless of the preceding apostolic decrees, as well as everything that the aforementioned Julius, our predecessor, and Bonifacius did not want to be considered in the more recent bulls of grace, and other things contrary to this. Therefore, no man shall be at liberty to invalidate this writing of our extension and conclusion, or to act contrary to it in a careless manner. But if anyone should undertake such a thing, let him know that he will fall into the disfavor of Almighty God and of His blessed Apostles Peter and Paul. Given in Rome at St. Peter's in the year after the Incarnation of our Lord 1516, March 31, our Pontificate in the fourth year.

Meisner's more distant account of the great pilgrimage brought about by the Bull of Indulgence to Wittenberg.

From Meisner's Wittenberg: Jubelfest, p. 60, reprinted in Tentzel's Hist. report, Vol. I, p. 259.

What wonder was it that on the Day of All Saints many people from near and far came in droves, but most of all adulterers, thieves, murderers, and death-rowers, who could be absolved of the greatest sins at once? Other pious people of spiritual and worldly rank, who were troubled in their conscience, also came along, and looked at the shrine with great reverence and wonder, kissed and worshipped it, did everything that was required of them; and when they left again, they were happy in spirit, and did not travel any differently than if they were completely pure of angels.

Luther's account of the weakness, fear and stupidity with which he began the matter, not out of pride and insolent presumption, but out of a pure and sincere desire to come to the knowledge of the truth.

See the "Preface to the Theses, about which disputirt worden ist von Anfang der Reformation bis zum Jahre 1538", in the 14th volume of the St. Louis edition, Col. 450 ff.

1) There seems to be something missing here.

Luther's letter to Albrecht, Archbishop of Mainz, in which he asks him to put a stop to the insolent indulgence hawks, and at the same time sends him his theses. Date 31 Oct. 1517.

The original of this letter is in the Stockholm Archives, which, as can be seen from an enclosed letter, was sent to King Charles XI in 1694 by the governor Oerneklv auf Oesel, who had found it among the papers of a deceased general superintendent (Weserzeitung, No. 425 of 1845). Certified copies of it are in the Ernestinisches Gesamt-Archiv in Weimar, in 4. (briek. triZa ckissortationnna ttiooloZiou-mra.

1707, p. 7, and reprinted from it in Joh. Erh. Kapp, "Sammlung", p. 292 and in De Wette, Vol. I, p. 67. Burkhardt also obtained a certified copy and notes in his "Luthers Briefwechsel", p. 7, that the same is "without significant deviations from the print" (in De Wette). According to De Wette, it is printed in the Erlangen "Luthers Briefwechsel," vol. I, p. 113. A redaction that differs in some parts is found in Latin in the Wittenberg edition (1550), tom. I, col. 92b; in the Jena (1579), tona. I, col. 1b; in Aurifaber, torn. I, col. 37 b; and in the Erlanger, oxp. var. arZ., torri. I, p. 282. Latin and German in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. I, p. 476. In German, probably in a translation by Justus Jonas, in the Wittenberger (1569), vol. IX, p. 8; in the Jenaer (1564), vol. I, p. 6; in the Altenburger, vol. I, p. 13 and in the Leipziger, vol. XVII, p. 5. Walch has taken the translation improved by Kapp according to the original, together with his notes. This faithfully reproduces the meaning, so we have retained it, with the exception of a few changes. The notes marked with letters originate from Kapp.

Translated into German.

To fear in humility and obedience the most reverend Father in Christ, the most noble Lord, Lord Albrecht, Archbishop of the Church of Magdeburg and Mainz, Primate, Margrave of Brandenburg 2c., my most gracious Lord and Shepherd in Christ.

JEsus.

God's grace and mercy, and what I am and can do. Most Reverend in God Father, Most Serene Prince! Your C. F. Graces graciously grant me that I, among other people the least and least worthy, am so presumptuous that I have refrained from writing a letter to Your Reverence. The Lord Jesus is my witness that I am not unaware of how lowly and despised I am; for this reason I have also withheld my letter for a long time.

which I now intend to accomplish with a bold brow. I have been moved to do so primarily by my faithful service, which I, most reverend Father in Christ, recognize myself to owe to E. C. F.'s grace. Your Reverence would, however, have a merciful eye on me, who am earth and ashes, and graciously understand and hear my desire for your and the bishop's gentleness.

The papal indulgences under the name and title of E. C. F. Grace for the building of St. Peter's Cathedral in Rome are being circulated in the country, in which I do not so much punish and accuse the indulgence preachers of great clamor, which I have not heard, as the false reasoning, which the people draw from it and which they praise highly to the coarse people everywhere. This in particular grieves and offends me, namely that the wretched people allow themselves to be persuaded and believe, when they buy indulgences, that they are sure and certain of their salvation. Likewise, that the souls leave purgatory without delay as soon as they put them in the box. Further, that this indulgence is so powerful that no sin can be so great (indeed, as they blasphemously speak of it, even if it were possible that one had weakened the highly praised Mother of God),^a) it could be remitted and forgiven. Item, that through this indulgence the person becomes free and rid of all chastisement and guilt.^b)

Oh dear God! In this way, the poor souls under your reverence and care, dear pious father, are instructed to death, not to life, and a very strict and heavy account, which grows and grows, will be demanded from you for all these souls. For this reason I have

a) That Luther did not attribute anything to the insolent Tetzels has been proven by Hugo Wismeidern in a special writing, the title of which I have quoted in my "Schauplatz", p. 70.

b) This expression is also found in letters of indulgence, which were sold long before the Reformation, even shortly before the same find. In the letter of the monastery Königlutter to the archbishop's councillors because of the Tetzelian suspension of his indulgence fin this volume Col. 349 ff], the power to forgive chastisement and guilt is also attributed to the indulgence, when it says Col. 350: So dat alle Christlöwige Mynschen, de vmme Aflath willen in vnse Closter in dem Feste Ksnotorum?6tri 6t Vauli come, all Aflath, dat tho Rome in allen Kerken, Klüsen vnd Klufften vnd Kapllen, was tho ewigen tyden, mit vorgewinge Pine und Schuld erlangen möchten 2c.

cannot conceal this any longer. For man is not assured of his blessedness by any bishop's office or work, because he is not assured of it by God's infused grace, but the apostle commands us to always work with fear and trembling that we may be saved. Even the righteous will hardly receive. Finally, the way that leads to life is so narrow that the Lord, through the prophets Amos and Zechariah, calls those who are to be saved a fire that is torn out of the fire. The Lord also proclaims from time to time how difficult it is to be saved.

How, then, do they make the people safe and fearless by those false fables and vain promises of indulgences? Since indulgences are of no use to souls, much less help to make man righteous and blessed, but only take away the outward chastisement or punishment which was formerly interpreted according to the canons.

The works of godliness and love are infinitely better than indulgences, and yet they are not preached with such splendor or diligence; indeed, they must give way to indulgences in silence and without being preached, so that only indulgences may be proclaimed and highly praised, while the primary and sole office of all bishops is that the people learn the gospel and the love of Christ. Thus Christ has nowhere commanded to preach indulgences, but to preach the gospel he has emphatically commanded. What an abomination, therefore, what a danger for a bishop who, while the Gospel is kept silent, allows nothing but indulgences to be preached among his people with great pomp, and is more concerned about them than about the Gospel! Will not Christ say to you, "You who are gnats and swallow cameos?"

Moreover, most reverend Father in the Lord, it does not remain so, but in the Instruction of the Commissaries, which went out under your name, most reverend Father, it is indicated (without doubt, most reverend Father, without your knowledge and will) that of the most distinguished graces is this inestimable gift of God, by which man is reconciled to God and all punishments of the sweeper are eradicated.

be. ^{c)} Likewise, that repentance is not necessary for those who redeem souls or letters of confession. ^{d)}

But what else can I do, most reverend bishop and most electoral prince, but that I ask Your Reverence through the Lord Jesus Christ. Reverend by the Lord Jesus Christ, that you will keep an eye of paternal care on this matter, and that you will remove the same booklet^e), and that you will order the preachers of indulgences to preach in another way or form, lest perhaps one of them should stand out, who refutes both them and that book by published books, to the highest disgrace of your most noble highness, for which I am truly very afraid, and yet worry that it might happen where the matter is not hastily advised.

Your Most Serene Grace will graciously accept this small but faithful service of mine in a princely and episcopal manner, that is, as I show it with a completely faithful and entirely devoted heart to Your Reverence. For I, too, am a part of your host. The Lord Jesus protect and preserve Your Reverence forever, Amen. Given at Wittenberg 1517, on the evening before All Saints' Day.

If it pleases Your Reverence, you may look at these disputations of mine, so that you may hear how the opinion of indulgences is an uncertain thing, which the preachers of indulgences dream of as if it were quite certain.

[E. C. F. G.] unworthy son Martinus Luther, Augustinian, appointed Doctor of the Holy Doctrine of God.

On the back the original has the note: Letter Doctoris Martini, St. Augustine Order, to our Most Reverend Lord, opened at Kalbe by the Râth? Tuesday after Briccii f17 Nov.) Anno Domini 1517.

I have seen for myself that the present letter corresponds to the original. S. Leyonmarck, Secret. of the Royal Archives.

c) These words are found in the Archbishop Albrecht summar. Instruct. 19 6 in my "Collection", p. 143 fin this volume Col. 311 f.). Luther draws the same in the 33rd thesis of his Resolutoius 6ispx. 6s virtuts iuckulseutiarum. sWalch, St. LouisenAusg., vol. XVIII, 204 fs.).

d) These words are also in the summary Instruction 37, as I have already quoted them in my "Schauplatz" p. 89 (in this volume Col. 317).

e) That Luther is aiming here at the Summarium Instructiuem is undisputed.

Luther's letter to John Lang, with which he sends him his theses, from which his joy in God and his confident courage to bring the truth to light without asking for human judgment shine forth. Nov. 11, 1517.

This letter is found in Aurifaber, vol. I, p. 40d; in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. I, p. 837; in De Wette, vol. I, p. 71 and in Erlanger Briefwechsel, vol. I, p. 124. We have retranslated after Aurifaber.

Newly translated into German.

To the righteous and upright man of God, Johann Lang, Licentiate of Holy Theology, Augustinian Hermit at Erfurt, his dear friend in Christ.

JEsus.

Hail in Christ! Behold, my dear venerable Father in Christ, I am sending you again strange propositions (paradoxa). If now also your theologians should be annoyed at these and say (as then all talk about me here and there) that I am too bold and hopeful in making my judgment rashly and condemn the opinions of others, then I answer through you and through this letter: first, that their well-considered restraint and their long hesitating seriousness please me very well, if they also proved the same in fact, just as they reproach recklessness and abrupt presumption in me. For, as I see, such a fault in me is very easily reproached by them.

But I wonder why they do not look at their Aristotle with the same eyes, or if they look at him, how they do not see that Aristotle is almost in every sentence and part of a sentence nothing else than a blamer, yes, a blamer above all blamers. If, therefore, that pagan is still liked, read, and quoted, without the error of the most biting presumption preventing it: how is it that I, who am a Christian, am so disliked, especially since I have a little of the kind in me that is similar to that of the exceedingly gentle Aristotle? Or is there a drop of error in me, of which a whole sea is pleasing to Aristotle?

Then I wonder why they do not hate and despise themselves in the same way.

dam. For what are these scholastics against each other but loud critics, people like Aristarchus, one a reprover against the other? They are allowed and like it to judge the opinions of all, I am forbidden the same 1) altogether. Finally, I also complain about this: if they dislike my expression of opinion so much, and they rather praise modesty: why don't they also refrain from judging me? why don't they wait more modestly for the outcome of the matter? You see, then, how we men are (that is, quite unreasonable), so that we always hasten to pull out splinters from the eye of our brothers, but in the meantime take pleasure in the beams in our eyes, even in what concerns this life; so also the gnat in another's eye as a vice, which is nevertheless a camel in us, but we swallow it as if it were the highest virtue.

Therefore you shall know that I do not respect these night spirits of the tadlers higher than ghosts (namely they belong to the kind), and I will not be moved by what may seem good to them or not. Of my boldness or modesty I know quite certainly that if I will be modest, the truth will not become more valuable through my modesty, but if I will be bold, it will not become less valuable through my boldness. This is all I ask of you and your theologians in the most urgent way, that for the time being they keep silent about the author's infirmities, and that I find out what they think about what I have published or about the theses, yes, even more, that the errors and mistakes be pointed out to me, if there are any in them. For who does not know that something new cannot be put forward without hopefulness, or at least without the appearance of hopefulness and the suspicion of the pernicious? For if humility itself begins something new, those who disagree with it will soon accuse it of being arrogant. For why was Christ killed, why were all the martyrs killed, why were the teachers hated? Certainly only because one

1) Instead of tzicttzm in all editions we have assumed.

They have been regarded as hopeful people and despisers of the old and famous wisdom or prudence, or because they have put forward such new dictums without the advice 1) of those who held to the old.

Therefore, I do not want them to expect such humility (that is, hypocrisy) from me that they think I have to make use of their counsel and decision before I publish it; I do not want what I am doing to be done by a man's discretion or counsel, but by that of God. For if the work is of God, who will hinder it? But if it is not of God, who can promote it? Holy Father, who art in heaven, let not my will be done, nor that of men, nor our will, but thine, Amen.

Finally, remember that you pray diligently for me, as I pray for you, that our Lord Jesus may help us and bear with us our trials, which are unknown to all men except us. Farewell. From our Wittenberg monastery. 1517 on the day of St. Martin [Nov. 11], the bishop.

Brother Martin Eleutherius [the free], rather a servant and all too much a prisoner, Augustinian at Wittenberg.

Aesticampianus 2) is now with us public professor of humanistic sciences and receives his salary from the prince.

Luther's report to Spalatin that the abbot of the monastery of Lehnin had been to him on behalf of the bishop of Brandenburg and had asked him to hold off for a while on issuing his "Explanations," at whose coaxing he also wanted to sit quietly.

End of March 1518.

See Appendix, No. 1, 2. 3.

1) Instead of eoneilio in the other editions, we have adopted eonsilio with the Erlangen correspondence, also immediately following.

2) Johann Rack from Sommerfeld (therefore nu8) in Neumark, humanist, formerly in Cologne and there in dispute with Hochstraten, then in Leipzig and Freiburg, from where he came to Wittenberg in 1517. He was inscribirt on 20 October (Album Vited. p. 67) as: 4o5anne8 RUnAiuk Lktieumpiunus RststOr 6t kosta l^nursntus, 8N6rarurn litsrarnn Doctor, primukHUs Dlinianas kruditionis pudlieus 6t orclinarium8 prot688or, Dioe. iVli8U6n. 20 Ootodr. He died at Wittenberg on May 31, 1520 (Erl. Briefwechsel, vol. I, p. 126).

117 Luther's report of this to Wenceslaus Link.

July 10, 1518.

See Appendix, No. 2, § 5.

Luther's account of how the superiors of his order wanted to make him hard-headed and fainthearted because of the theses he had posted. See St. Louis Edition, Vol. V, Col. 1204.

Luther's report to Lang that the indulgence merchants were issuing counter-theses against him.

March 21, 1518.

See Appendix, No. 3, § 2.

Excerpt from the Facultätsbuche of the University of Greifswald, how at Tetzel's disputation a young student named Knipstrow, since the other professors did not want to bite the fox, masterfully opposed the indulgence and completely silenced Tetzel.

From the Facultätsbuche of the University of Greifswald reprinted in Joh. Or*x1ii8rva1cl6N8ium (1703) and thereafter in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 8. Seckendorf, Ilmt. Dutü., 1il>. III, p. 139 writes the name "Knipstroh", likewise Köstlin.

Luther's sentences came at the same time with Tetzel to the new University of Frankfurt, where the matter was pursued and investigated with unequal zeal. For D. Conr. Wimpina, the theology professor, had made contradictions, and had given them to Tetzel to dispute about. When almost all the other professors agreed with them, finally Joh. Knipstrow, a studiosus theologiae at that academy, stood up and bravely opposed these theses, and the matter came to such a point that, since the opponents saw themselves overmastered, they could no longer stand the young man and, in order to dissuade him from this zeal, took him away and sent him to Pyritz, whereupon, however, Knipstrow became the longer the more heated and zealous.

Luther's account of the burning of Tetzel's theses in Wittenberg, in which he denies the guilt of the burning and expresses his displeasure, but is also "concerned" that, since he is believed to be the author of this matter, his danger will become even greater.

See Appendix, No. 3, § 3 and the 131st Document, § 7.

122. narration, how great joy D. Fleck in his monastery at Steinlausig, hei Bitterfeld an der Mulde, at the first sight of the disputation Luther's opposition to indulgences.

From the Flacius eutuloZ. tsstium vorit., p. 836.

Translated into German.

A certain monk, named Fleck, whom the venerable D. Amsdorf knew very well, stayed in the monastery Steinlausig, not far from Bitterfeld, and never wanted to say mass. Since he was accused of laziness, he pretended that he had other reasons for this. It was in the dining hall that he first saw Luther's sentences on indulgences. Although one was not allowed to speak a word there, he nevertheless laughed, jumped up with joy (he was tall and rather corpulent), and said: "Ha, ha, ha! he has come who will do it to you; but among them he understood the monks and priests. From this we see that this man, even before Luther preached against indulgences, had hoped for the redemption of Israel from the Babylonian captivity of the Antichrist. Lutherus makes his report in the preface to the Alkoran of the Minorites, 1) and thinks that the monks had persecuted him tremendously, D. Martin, of blessed memory, once said of this honest little monk: "I am fond of Flecken, because he was a man full of consolation, also his words were exceedingly consoling. As soon as I had my sentences printed, he wrote a very beautiful letter to me; I wanted to give ten guilders for it, so that I would still have it. The content was something like this: "Venerable Doctor, go ahead and carry out your project. For I, too, disliked these papal abuses at best. The monks were also angry with him. For he said to Steinlausig: "He is there who will do it. So he never held a mass, which was a good sign.

123) Narrative of how Georg von Zedlitz, Lord of Neukirch in Silesia, where God's word had been loud and pure from Johann Hussen's time on under his father Siegmund von Zedlitz, a sworn enemy of the clergy, when he heard that a monk in Wittenberg had begun to write and teach.

against the papacy, sent two deputies to Luther, who had to ask him whether he was the swan of which Johann Hus prophesied? and what Luther had given them as an answer. 1518.

From Tentzel's Hist. report, Vol. I, p. 348. Tentzel notes that this story took place in 1518.

At the Concilio in Costnitz, there was also one of Zedlitz, named Siegmund, whom the papists subsequently always hostile, scolded as a Hussite heretic, put him under ban almost everywhere, even in the countryside, and thereby gave cause for him to hostile them again, to have a special prison built for them in Neukirch under the ground without windows, so that they could not know whether it was night or day, and he took those who had put him under ban on roads and footpaths, even from their beds with his people, into such a prison, and had his fun with them, that his ban was much stronger, as they themselves found, than theirs; But he did no harm to anyone's body, as did Köckritz, who had many of them castrated; and because the papacy at that time did not have as much power with fist and sword as it did afterwards, they had to leave him unchastised, even after they had banned him, and there had been great trouble in Bohemia because of religion, the monasteries were torn apart, the monks, priests and nuns were driven out, and many of them were killed. Therefore he also led a rhyme, and wrote it everywhere, as is customary: God's friend, the bishop of Breslau and enemy of all priests; below his name, Siegmund von Zedlitz. This rhyme was also used by Duke Christian of Brunswick during the Thirty Years' War, and was stamped on the well-known thalers: God's friend, the priests' enemy. The above-mentioned Siegmund left behind an only son, named Georg, who was born in 1444 and died at a ripe old age, after having raised a hundred and some eighty children up to the fourth generation. He died in 1552. When he heard that a monk in Wittenberg had begun to write and teach against the papacy, he sent two subjects, called widowers, reasonable people, out to him in 1518, greeting him diligently and asking whether he was the swan of which Johann Hus had predicted. To which he replied: Time would tell what God would want to do with him.

1) Walch, St. Louis Edition, vol. XIX, 1962,? 3. See also Mathesius, St. Louis Edition, p. 19.

Luther's report on how his good friends, especially Carlstadt, did not agree with him. 15 Feb. 1518.

See Appendix, No. 4, § 4.

Luther's relation of the fury of his enemies and how they shouted in all the pulpits that he must be burned as a heretic in fourteen days or four weeks at the longest.

March 21, 1518.

See Appendix, No. 3, § 2 and No. 4, § 4.

Luther writes to Spalatin how he is not deceived that people speak ill of him and consider him worthy of banishment and church censures, but rather rejoices because he is convinced that his cause is from God and is not at all afraid of men.

Jan. 14, 1519.

See Appendix, No. 5, § 2. 3.

Luther's letter to Pope Leo X concerning his disputation on indulgences, with the transmission of his resolutions, so that he would be all the more secure under papal protection.

[May 30, 1518.]

This letter is the dedicatory writing by which Luther assigns his disputationum de inculminum virtutis (St. Louis edition, vol. XVIII, 102 ff.) to the pope. He expresses the hope that he will thus be all the more secure under the protection of the papal name. Luther sent this letter together with the resolutions (handwritten, because they did not appear in print until August 1518) with a letter dated May 30 to his vicar of the order, Johann von Staupitz, for forwarding to the pope. These two letters are therefore prefixed to the resolutions in the Latin editions. In the collection of Lutheran writings published by Johannes Frobenius in Basel, in all editions, namely October 1518, February 1519, August 1519, and March 1520, the letter to Staupitz comes first and is followed by Our Letter. Likewise in voet. Llartini P'utUsrii Ineudrntionum pni-g now, Lasilsas npuck Xcknm no LI. D. XX LlenKk 3ulio. The letter to Leo X is p. 2. In the "Gesammtausgabe" in the Wittenberg (1550), tom. I, H. 100I>; in the Jena one (1579), tom. I, fol. 741; in the Erlanger, opp. vnr. nrS., torn. II, p. 132; in the Weimar one, vol. I, p. 527. Further, in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 176; in Aurifaber, tona. I, fol. 68N; in De Wette, vol. I, p. 119 and in the Erlangen "Luthers Briefwechsel," vol. I, p. 200. German in the Wittenberg (1569), vol. IX, p. 2IN; 1) in the Jena (1564), vol. I, p. 56; in the Altenburg, vol. I, p. 66; in the Leipzig, vol. XVII, p. 115 and in Walch. We have retranslated according to Weimar's. The date set above is not in the original, but Conjectur from the letter to Staupitz.

Newly translated from the Latin.

To the Most Holy Father, Leo X, Pope, Brother Martin Luther, Augustinian, wishes eternal salvation.

Most holy Father! I have heard a very evil rumor that has come upon me, from which I understand that some friends have made my name stink very badly before you and yours, as if I had presumed to diminish the prestige and authority of the keys and the pope; therefore, I am accused of being a heretic, an apostate, a faithless one, and of being called by a thousand names, yes, with disgrace. My ears are ringing, my eyes are flickering. But the one rock of my good confidence stands firm, my innocent and quiet conscience. And I hear nothing new. For with such excellent adornment have also in our country these quite honorable and truthful people adorned me, that is, those who have a very evil conscience, who strive to expose their abominations to me, and to glorify their shameful deeds with my disgrace. But you will deign, most holy Father, to hear the matter for yourself from me, who am a child and clumsy.

In recent times, the Jubilee of the Apostolic Indulgence began to be preached in our country, and this became so rampant that the preachers of it, thinking that everything was free to them under the terror of your name, dared to teach quite ungodly and heretical things publicly, to the great annoyance and ridicule of the ecclesiastical authorities, as if the decrees about the abuses of the indulgence preachers did not concern them at all. And not content with spreading their venom with the most impudent words, they also published books 2) and

1) This evidence for the Wittenbergers is given only in the Erlangen correspondence; that for the Jenaers is missing everywhere.

2) This refers to Document No. 72 and 79 in this volume, Albrecht's Instruction for the Untercommissarien and Tetzels Instruction for the priests.

they spread among the people. In them, to say nothing of the insatiable and outrageous greed, which almost every single point is most grossly redolent of, they have brought forth the very same ungodly and heretical things, and have brought them forth in such a way that they have bound the confessors with an oath to inculcate these very things most faithfully and urgently among the people. I tell the truth, and there is nothing by which they can hide from this heat. The books are there, and they cannot deny them. And this went well with them at that time, and the people were sucked by false hopes, so that, as the prophet sMicha 3, 2.] says, they played the flesh from their legs, but in the meantime they themselves grazed in the richest and sweetest way.

One thing was available, with which they quenched the agitations, namely the terror of your name, threats of death by fire and the disgrace of the heretical name. For it is incredible how much they are at hand with these things, threatening them, even if they only notice a contradiction in their loose things, which are nothing but empty delusion. Surely this does not mean: to appease arousal, but rather to arouse divisions and finally sedition with mere tyranny.

But nevertheless, in the taverns the stories of the greed of the priests and the rumors about the keys and the pope increased more and more, as the common speech of this whole country is witness to. But I was inflamed, as I confess, by zeal for Christ or, if one prefers, by youthful heat; but I saw that it was not in my power to set or do anything in these matters. Therefore, I privately admonished several great men of the churches. 1) Here I was accepted by some, to others I was a mockery, to others I appeared still different, because the terror of your name and the threat of the church punishments kept the upper hand.

hand. Finally, since I could do nothing else, I thought it best to at least work against them in a very gentle way, that is, to cast doubt on their teachings and to arrange a disputation about them. So I issued a disputation note and invited only the scholars to negotiate with me about it, as must also be obvious to the opponents from the preface to this very disputation.

Behold, this is the conflagration of which they complain that the whole world is set on fire by it, perhaps because they are unwilling that I, as a hasty unifier, who am a teacher of divine doctrine by your apostolic power, have the right to dispute in public school, according to the custom of all universities and the whole church, not only about indulgences, but also about divine power, divine forgiveness and divine indulgences, which are incomparably higher things. But it does not move me much that they begrudge me this power, which was given to me by the power of your holiness, since I am forced to begrudge them much greater things against my will, namely, that they mix the tears of Aristotle in the middle of the matters of theology, and argue about the divine majesty, against and over the power that is given to them.

Furthermore, what fortune alone has driven these disputations of mine before all others, not only mine, but also those of all teachers, so that they have gone out to almost all countries, that is a miracle to me. For they were published by our people and only for the sake of our people, and published in such a way that it is unbelievable to me that they are understood by everyone. For they are disputations, not teachings, not doctrines, which, as is the custom, are dark and enigmatic. Otherwise, if I could have presumed, I would certainly have taken care, as much as lies in me, that they would be easier to understand.

Well, what should I do? I cannot retract, and I see that this publication has created an extraordinary hatred against me. I am reluctant to come into the public eye and under the extremely dangerous and

1) Namely the Archbishop of Mainz and the Bishops of Brandenburg, Meissen, Frankfurt, Zeitz and Merseburg. Cf. Documente No. 109 and 114 in this volume. Table Talks, Cap. 31, 8 7. St. Louis edition, vol. XXII, 983.

I am not a man of the same mind, because of the manifold judgments of men, especially since I am unlearned, limited and uneducated; then in our exceedingly prosperous time, which, with its good prosperity in the sciences and many good minds, could drive even a Cicero into the corner, who has otherwise confidently stepped out into the light and the public. But necessity forces me to cackle goose among the swans.

Therefore, in order that I may both pacify my adversaries and fulfill the desire of many, behold, I send forth my little work, in which I explain my disputations; but I omit them, most holy Father, that I may be more secure under the protection of your name and under the shadow of your covering. From this all who wish may see how pure and simple-minded I have sought and cultivated ecclesiastical authority and reverence for the keys, and at the same time how unreasonably and falsely the adversaries have disgraced me in so many ways. For if I were such a person as they want me to be regarded, and if everything had not been done correctly by me out of the power to dispute, it would have been impossible for the most illustrious Prince Frederick, Duke of Saxony, Elector of the Empire 2c., to allow such a plague at his university, since he is above many others a special lover of Catholic and apostolic truth, nor would I have been able to suffer the very strict and highly learned men of our school. But I give myself unnecessary trouble, since those exceedingly lovely people are not afraid to sully with me also the prince and the university with the same disgrace. Therefore, most holy father, I fall at the feet of your holiness and surrender to you with all that I am and have. Make alive, kill, call, revoke, approve, disapprove, as it may please you. Thy voice I will acknowledge as the voice of Christ, who reigns and speaks in thee. If I deserve death, I will not refuse to die. For the earth is the LORD's and all that is therein [Ps. 24:1], who is blessed for ever and ever, Amen, who also upholdeth thee for ever and ever, Amen. In the year 1518.

Luther's letter to Hieronymus Scultetus, Bishop of Brandenburg, in which he sends him his resolutions. Probably on February 6, 1518.

This letter is found in Latin in the Wittenberg edition (1550), toua. I, col. 98b; *in the Jena (1579), toM. 1, toi. 72 d; in Aurifaber, tom. I, toi. 63 d; in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 173; in De Wette, vol. I, p. 112; in Kapp's "Sammlung," p. 390; in the Erlanger^a opp. vur. ur^a, tom. II, x", 126 and in the Erlanger "Briefwechsel," vol. I, p. 148. German in the Wittenberger (1569), vol. IX, p. 19; in the Jenaer (1564), vol. I, p. 52b; in the Altenburger, vol. I, p. 63; in the Leipziger, vol. XVII, p. 114, also in Kapp's "Sammlung." We have taken the presumed date of this letter from the Weimar edition of Luther's works, Vol. I, p. 522 f.. The reasons for this assumption are not given there, as v. Enders notes in the Erlangen correspondence, but if one adds what the Erlangen edition brings for its own dating, February 13, then it is easy to see that Knaake will be right with his assumption. The Wittenberg and the Jena editions, both the Latin and the German, have the date Lubbutbo HxuucU, which Aurifaber has changed into Kubbutbo LxuucU. The latter has been assumed by Tentzel, Bericht, vol. I, p. 345, by Löscher, De Wette and the Erlangen edition opp. vur. and resolved by "22 May". The Erlangen correspondence, which followed a Dresden manuscript, has neither year nor date in the text. Enders assumes the original had stood Subbutbo bx. which was read by the editor of the Wittenberg edition in Lx and resolved by Lxuui. Knaake will have made the same assumption, and he correctly resolved the above date by: "Saturday before Sexagesimä", which is February 6, while the Erlanger incorrectly resolved by: "Saturday after Sexagesimae." In analogous cases, Enders without hesitation took the former type of resolution from De Wette, Burkhardt, Seidemann 2c. into the correspondence, e.g. Vol. I, p. 315; Vol. IV, p. 124, p. 125; Vol. V, p. 157, No. 912. So much is certain, in any case, that the correct date of our letter can be neither the Sainstag before nor after Exaudi, which is the 15th. On March 5, Luther wrote to Scheurl that the Bishop of Brandenburg, whom he had consulted about the reasons for his theses, had not yet given him a reply after a long time, because he was prevented from doing so by many things. At the end of March 1518, Luther wrote to Spalatin that the Abbot of Lehnin had negotiated with him on behalf of the bishop (No. 116 in this volume), and asked him to postpone the publication of the resolutions. Luther promised this, but was soon released from his promise. We translate according to the Erlangen correspondence, which has some advantages over the text of the old editions. In the old translation there are several quite absurd things.

Newly translated from the Latin.

To the reverend Father and Lord in Christ, to the Lord Jerome, Bishop of the Church at Brandenburg, his exceedingly kind and especially gracious Lord, (wishes) Brother Martin Luther, Augustinian (at Wittenberg, salvation). 1)

Since recently, beloved bishop, new and unheard-of teachings about papal indulgences had begun to be preached in our region, so that both very many learned and unlearned people were astonished and moved, I was asked by many, both acquaintances and those who were unknown to me by reputation, in many letters and conversations, what I thought of these new (not to say impertinent) speeches. For a while I was reluctant; finally they pressed me with sharp disputations, so that even the reverence for the pope was endangered.

But what was I to do? It was not for me to establish anything in this matter, and I shied away from contradicting those of whom I most desired to be regarded as having preached nothing but the truth; but these persisted in proving the falsity and nullity [of their sermon] 2) with such clear grounds of proof that they completely overcame me [I confess the truth] and captured me.

In order to satisfy both, it seemed to me to be the best advice, neither to agree with them nor to prove them wrong, but to dispute about such a great matter until the holy church determined what one should hold. Therefore, I arranged for a disputation, to which I publicly invited everyone and privately asked all those whom I knew to be the most learned to open their opinion to me by letter. For I saw that in these matters neither Scripture was against me, 3) nor the teachers of the church, nor the

1) The bracketed words are in the Wittenberg and in the Jena. - Scultetus, that is Schulz, was the son of a village schoolmaster, from Gramschitz in the Duchy of Glogau in Silesia, hence his name. He became bishop of Brandenburg in 1505, died in 1522 (Tentzel, 1,345).

2) Here the old translation offers something that is completely contrary to the meaning.

3) All editions except the Erlangen one have the nonsensical reading suKruAuri instead of rsfrAAuri, which the old translator has faithfully rendered thus: "weil ich sahe, dass ich in dieser Sache für mich habe weder die Schrift" 2c.

spiritual law itself, except for a few teachers of spiritual law, and these, speaking without text, and some scholastic teachers who follow their delusion in the same way, also prove nothing.

This seems to me to be by far the most ridiculous thing, namely, when something is preached and heard in the church of God, that when the heretics ask where we get the reason for it, and we cannot give it, we expose Christ and His church to them for laughter and ridicule.

Furthermore, it is certain that we should not believe the scholastic teachers and canonists when they present their mere opinions, and as it is commonly said: It is shameful for a jurist to speak without text. But it is much more shameful for a theologian to speak without a text; I do not say of Aristotle's (for they speak this more than enough, strongly beyond all measure), but of our text, that is, of the holy Scriptures, of the ecclesiastical canons, of the Fathers.

Therefore, I have considered that this matter belongs to my task and office, namely, to dispute about the most doubtful things, but at the same time, if they are wrong, to assert them most dangerously, since it has been permitted until now that the teachers of the high schools also dispute about the most holy and venerable things, about which no Christian has doubted for so many centuries.

But, dear one, who cannot even grasp with his hands how humble and devoted is the shyness or reverence of those who think that one should not dispute about the power of the church or the pope, but keep silent and give thanks? Why don't they also keep silent and give thanks and leave their unworthy disputations about the power and wisdom and goodness of the one who has given this power to the church? Yes, what is so hidden, both in this supreme majesty and in the most holy humanity, that they have not so nearly defiled it with loud antics, that by stopping with their lies they have almost extinguished the affection and reverence of all hearts toward God? But of this elsewhere.

When I called everyone to this battlefield, but no one came, I then also saw that, my disputations got around further than I had wanted, and were accepted everywhere not as something to dispute about, but as something asserted, so I have been forced, against my expectations and wishes, to bring my childish nature and my ignorance to the people, and to publish the explanations and proofs of the disputations publicly, thinking that I would do better if I put myself to the shame of my ignorance than if I let those err who perhaps think that everything is asserted. But there are some things among them about which I have doubts, some things I do not know, some things I also deny, but I do not stubbornly assert anything, but 1) submit everything to the holy church and its judgment.

Since you, beloved bishop, have been given to us by the mercy of Christ as ordinarius (as it is called) of this place, who not only extraordinarily love good and learned people, which many praise highly in many, but according to your peculiar luminosity and humility also venerate and care for them to the point of endangering your episcopal dignity (far be flattery!). I do not praise you, but the gifts of Christ in you), then it was the right thing for me to offer you (who is entitled to supervise and judge the high school of this place) first and foremost, and to lay at your feet what it is that I have to deal with.

Therefore, most gracious bishop, you will deign to accept this little work of mine, and so that all may know how I do not boldly assert anything, I not only permit it, but also implore you, venerable father, to take the pen and strike out what you please, or light a fire and burn the whole thing; I do not care at all. I know that Christ has no need of me; he will preach good things to his church without me. If the work is not his, then I do not want it to be mine, but nothing and no one's; 3) and because, as I have said, I do not want it to be mine.

1) Erlanger: camouflage, for which we have assumed 86ä with the other issues.

2) pontiuealik here is not "papal", which the old translation offers, but: episcopal.

3) What precedes in this sentence is, as it seems to us, in all editions except the Erlanger in the wrong place, almost at the end of this letter.

Gregory of Nazianzus says that even in the Church it is not safe to speak the truth, especially to grave sinners:

Therefore I do not forget mine, and testify (protestor) with these words that I disputire, not finally decide. I disputire, I say, but do not assert, and disputire with fear, not because I am afraid of the bulls and threats of those who, touched by no fear at all, want everything they have only dreamed to be believed as a gospel. For at the same time the boldness and the ignorance of these people (I confess it) has forced me not to give way to my fear. 4) If this [boldness and ignorance] were not so great, no one but my corner would have known me. 5) I have had to seek nothing but that I might not be a cause of error to anyone. Glory be to him to whom alone it belongs, to him who is eternal, amen. May he keep you for us and guide you long and salutary, dearest bishop. Farewell, yes, I beg you, you will also wish me well. From our monastery in Wittenberg.

Spalatin's praising report of this bishop of Brandenburg, Scultetus.

From Spalatin's annales, p. 37.

In addition, Bishop Jerome of Brandenburg, as the Ordinary of Wittenberg, was kind in all ways, and would have liked to have been involved in things where he could have given a thorough report. For he died in time, and without danger in the 20th year, that he had not reached the right consolation light and knowledge.

Luther's report to Spalatin on how he himself had a verbal discussion with the Bishop of Brandenburg in Wittenberg, and how the Bishop had questioned him extensively, but in a friendly manner. 12 Feb. 1519.

See Appendix, No. 6, the last paragraph.

4) Erlanger: oëære, in the other editions: oreckers.

5) Here the outputs insert the piece shown above.

Luther's letter to his former teacher, Jodocus Trutfetter of Eisenach, professor in Erfurt, in which he especially reminds him that he learned from him to hold the Holy Scriptures in high esteem and seeks to appease him. May 9, 1518.

On his return journey from Heidelberg, Luther had tried in vain to speak to his old teacher in Erfurt, so he addressed this letter to him there. It is found in Aurifaber, Vol. I, p. 59 b; in Löscher, Ref.-Acta, Vol. II, p. 611; in De Wette, Vol. I, p. 107 and in the Erlanger "Briefwechsel", Vol. I, p. 187. Löscher and Walch have erroneously "the 16th of May". We have translated according to Aurifaber.

Newly translated from the Latin.

To the excellent and dear man, Mr. Jodocus] of Eisenach, the theologian and first philosopher, his superior who is always to be revered in the Lord.

JEsus.

Hail in the Lord! I was at the door of your house last night, my dear lord and most revered teacher, and wanted to talk to you and answer orally to your letter that you wrote to me the other day, prompted, as I felt quite clearly, by exceedingly great love for me and more serious concern than I ever deserved. But your servant, who is waiting at the door, said that you were not well enough to suffer my visit, and so I left. Therefore, I am now answering by letter, not entirely to everything you have suggested; this I will perhaps do otherwise, when I have more leisure.

First of all, I thank you for your anxious love, undeserved by me, and I beg you for the sake of the Lord Jesus that you may never suspect that I could be so offended by you that I would defame you with biting and abusive letters, as you write, fearing that I might do so. For I do not take such revenge even against those who are most against me, who proclaim me from the pulpits by name before the people as a heretic, a nonsensical man, a seducer, and as one of I know not how many devils.

How much less would I repay you for the evil to which I owe everything good. I am truly sorry that the suspicion of such great evil against me has arisen in you as well.

Then you dislike my theses, and I suspected that it would come to this. But of those concerning grace and works, 2) you should know, dear Lord, that I do not claim them alone, nor do I claim them first. You know the talent (ingenia) of those who are with us, namely Carlstadt, Amsdorf, Doctor Hieronymus [Schurf], Doctor Wolfgang [Stehelin], the two from Feldkirchen, 3) finally Doctor Peter Lupinus. But all of them are constantly with me, yes, the whole university, except for instance the one licentiate Sebastian, but also the prince and the bishop [of Brandenburg], our ordinarius. Then many other prelates and all insightful citizens say with one mouth that they had neither known nor heard Christ and his gospel before.

It is fair that I do not prefer these good minds to mine, and since, as you know, they are very learned and skilled in scholastic theology, suffer, I pray you, that I may be wise or unwise with them until it is decided by the Church. And, to give also my explanation, I simply believe that it is impossible to reform the Church, unless from the bottom up the Canons, the Decretals, the scholastic theology, the philosophy, the logic, as they are now, are eradicated, and other studies are established. And in this opinion I increase in such a way that I daily ask the Lord that, as far as it can be done as soon as possible, again the Bible and the purest studies of the holy fathers be put on the track. I do not seem to be a logician to you, perhaps I am not; but this I know, that I do not know the logic of any

2) This is the "Disputation on Scholastic Theology," Walch, St. Louis Edition, vol. XVIII, 18 sf.

3) namely Bartholomäus Bernhardt and Johann Dolz, both from Feldkirchen. Walch offers here: "D. Wolfgangi bey der Feldkirchen." - Lupinus is Peter Wolf of Radheim, also called Raättrsnius. - The immediately following "Licentiat Sebastian" is according to Seidemann at De Wette, vol. VI, p. 694: Schmidt; but according to Dibelius and Lechler, Beiträge zur sächsischen Kirchengeschichte, Heft 2, p. 355 probably: Küchenmeister (Erl. Briefw., vol. I, p. 191).

People fear when defending this opinion.

But about the other theses, about indulgences, I have written to you before that I do not like that they have been spread out so far. For you have never 1) heard that this has happened fei, I have also not been able to expect what has happened with these alone, otherwise I would have made them clearer, as I have done in the German sermon 2) which displeases you more than all this.

I ask you, dear Lord and my Father in the Lord, do you not also dislike that the poor people of Christ are tormented and mocked with indulgences for so long? Is then the remission of temporal and arbitrary pardon something so great that it should be necessary for the people to come into danger of faith? For there is almost no one who does not believe that he is gaining something great, the grace of God, as it were, through indulgences. It was good that we ourselves uncovered the matter first, so that people would not, if we covered up the matter, finally notice the pious, as it is called, but rather the exceedingly godless fraud of the indulgence merchants, and pay us what we have earned. I truly confess that I would like there to be no indulgences in the whole church, for which the people of France do not ask in the least. It serves only for profit, yes, only for profit, and for nothing else, as I will say more extensively in my measurements, which, God willing, shall soon be published.

But I am surprised that you could even believe that I was the author of the burning of Tetzel's theses. Do you think that I have lost my common sense so much that I, a monk and a theologian, where it is not my office, should cause such an extraordinary insult to a person in such a high position? But what should I do, since everyone believes everything about me? Surely I cannot resist the tongues of all or hinder them? They may say, hear, believe, each one what he pleases and where he pleases: I will do as much as the Lord has given me, and I will, by God's grace, neither fear nor be presumptuous.

But that I defended the Magister Johannes Egranns, preacher in Zwickau, they did not tell you the truth. He is a learned man and does not need me. Admittedly, I wrote a little letter in which I approved of his all-sayings, which the Leipzig theologians, in order to denigrate him, have quite treacherously pulled off. I could not refuse the man my judgment, since he asked for it so persistently. But if you want to suffer the audacity of your student and most obedient servant, that is, mine: I have learned from you first of all that one must believe only the canonical books, but judge all others, as St. Augustine, yes, Paul and John command.

Therefore, let me be free to do the same against the scholastics that you and all have been free to do up to now. I will follow if I am taught better by the Scriptures or the Church Fathers; without these I will listen to the scholastics, as far as they have fortified theirs with ecclesiastical sayings, and it is my firm resolution that I will not be deterred from this opinion by your reputation (which certainly weighs very heavily with me), much less by that of anyone else.

This, my dearest teacher, what I have written on the journey and in a hurry, take down for the best. If it pleases you that we discuss it in writing, it will be exceedingly pleasant for me. I am ready to suffer and receive your rebuke in such a way that, even if it should be very sharp, it will be quite mild to me. Therefore, speak out against me in the most full manner without all fear, yes, pour out safely. I will not and cannot become bitter against you, God and my conscience are witness;

1) Instead of nns^arn we have assumed nnn^nain, as the old translator did.

2) Sermon on Indulgences and Grace, Walch, St. Louis Edition, Vol. XVIII, 270.

3) Luther's explanations of his Disputation von der Kraft des Ablasses, Walch, St. Louis Edition, vol. XVIII, 100 ff.

4) This is the small letter Egranus added to his writing: ^poloAstiaa responkio aontra äoZlnata ^nas in iVI. I^rannin a aalnmnatorikns invulZata 8 "nt, had preprinted. Walch, old edition, vol. XXI, 592. De Wette, vol. I, p. 103.

That is how I feel about you today. Farewell, my dear father. From our monastery in Erfurt, on the Sunday Vocem Jucunditatis [May 9] 1518.

Yours truly, Brother Martin Luther,
Augustinian.

132 Luther's letter to Johann Staupitz, with which he sends his resolutions and asks him to forward them to Pope Leo X, to whom they are dedicated. May 30, 1518.

In order not to repeat what has already been said, we refer to the introductory words to the 127th document. In the Latin collections and the "Gesamtausgabe" of Luther's writings mentioned there, our letter is found immediately before the above-mentioned letter of Luther to Pope Leo X.; furthermore in Löschner, Ref.Acta, vol. II, p. 180; in Aurifaber, vol. I, p. 66; in De Wette vol. I, p. 115 and in the Erlangen "Briefwechsel," vol. I, p. 196. German in the Wittenberg edition (1569), vol. IX, p. 20; 1) in the Jena edition (1564), vol.I, M.54U; in the Altenburg, vol. I, p. 65; in the Leipzig, vol. X VII, p. 117 and in Walch. We have retranslated according to the Weimar, Vol. I, p. 525.
Newly translated from the Latin.

Brother Martin Luther, his student, wishes salvation to his venerable and rightful father Johann Staupitz, Professor of the Holy Doctrine of God, Vicar of the Augustinian Order, and gives himself to him.

I remember, venerable father, that in your exceedingly sweet and wholesome conversations, with which the Lord Jesus used to comfort me miraculously, this word "repentance" was sometimes mentioned, where we, bearing sorrow over the many consciences and tormentors, who teach a way of confessing (as it is called) with innumerable and indeed unbearable commandments, received you as if you were speaking from heaven: that true repentance is only that which begins from the love of righteousness and against God, and that this is rather the beginning of repentance, which is considered by those to be the end and the completion.

This word of yours stuck in me like the sharp arrow of a strong man, and after it I began to compare it with passages of Scripture that were written by of repentance, and behold! an exceedingly sweet play. From all ropes the words entered into agreement with me, were favorable to this opinion and fell in with it, in such a way that, since before there was hardly a word in the whole of Scripture that would have been more bitter for me than the word "repentance" (although I also eagerly placed myself differently before God and sought to express a fabricated and forced love), for me now nothing is more sweet or pleasant than "repentance". For thus the commandments of God become sweet when we realize that they must be read not merely in books, but in the wounds of the sweetest Savior.

Later this was added, that through the effort and favor of very learned men, who teach us Greek and Hebrew in the most serviceable manner, I learned that this word in Greek is called μετάνοια, from μετὰ and νοῦν, that is, from post and mentem, so that repentance or μετάνοια is a recovery (resipiscentia), and after the received damage and the recognized error a recognition of his evil, which can not possibly happen without a change of mind and love. All this corresponds to the theology of Paul quite actually, so that, at least in my opinion, almost nothing else can explain Paul more appropriately.

Yes, I came further, and saw that not merely from post and mentem, but also from trans and mentem could be derived (may this after all be forcible), so that μετάνοια meant a change of mind and spirit, that it seemed to indicate not merely the change of mind, but also the manner of the change, that is, the grace of God. For this change of mind, that is, true repentance, is very frequently mentioned in the Holy Scriptures. Scripture, as that old Passover (phase == passage) foreshadowed, fulfilled Christ, and long before that also Abraham pictured, since he was a Passover, that is, a Hebrew [xxxxxx, 1 Mos. 14, 13.] began to be called, because he had crossed over to Mesopotamia, as Burgensis teaches in a learned way. 2) Da-

2) Compare Luther's interpretation of Gen. 11:13. Walch, St. Louis ed. vol. I, 715, tz 106, where Luther renounces this view. - Burgensis was called, when he was

1) As with Documente 127, this evidence for the Wittenberg edition is given only in the Erlangen correspondence; that for the Jena is missing everywhere, even in the Weimar edition.

The title of the Psalm [Ps. 39. 62. 77] also agrees with this, where xxxxxx, that is, one who skips, a singer is introduced.

By holding on to this, I dared to think that those were in error who attached so much importance to the works of repentance that they left us hardly anything of repentance except some cold 'amends and the exceedingly burdensome confession, namely, misled by the Latin word poenitentiam agere, which means more a doing (actionem) than a change of meaning, and in no way satisfies the Greek μετανοήν.

While I was thus busily occupied with my thoughts, behold, the trumpets of the new indulgence suddenly began to sound around us, yes, to blare, and the war trumpets of pardons, by which, however, we were not inspired to a right zeal for war. In short, setting aside the doctrine of true repentance, they presumed to exalt-not repentance, not even its very lowest part, which is called satisfaction-but the remission of this very lowest part, so that it was never heard to be exalted so high. Yes, they taught ungodly and false and heretical things with such great prestige (sacrilege, I meant to say) that he who even grumbled against them was immediately condemned to death by fire as a heretic, and guilty of eternal damnation.

Since I could not counter the rage of these people, I decided to decisively make known my dissenting opinion and to cast doubt on their teachings, trusting in the judgment of all teachers and the whole church that it is even better to do enough than to remit satisfaction, that is, than to buy indulgences. And there is no one who has ever taught otherwise. Therefore I have disputed, that is, I have provoked everything that is high, middle class and lowly, to unhappiness over my head, as far as it is by these zealots for the money (ah! for the souls I should have said) can be done and directed. For so these quite lovely people, armed with quite coarse deceit, since they cannot deny what I have said, invent that the authority of the pope is violated by my disputations.

This is the reason, venerable father, that I now step into the public undesirably, while I have always loved my corner, and have more desire to watch the exceedingly beautiful play of the gifted people of our time than to be seen and mocked. But (as I see) even the bad vegetables 1) must be seen among the good ones, and the black must be placed among the white, namely for the sake of adornment 2) and beauty.

I therefore ask you to accept this little work of mine and, by whatever means, to send it to our good Abbot Leo the Tenth, so that it may serve me there as a kind of assistance against the actions of malicious people. Not as if I wanted to involve you in my danger, but this I will have done at my own peril. Christ will see whether what I have said is his or mine, without whose wink not even the pope can speak a word, nor even the king's heart in his own hand [Proverbs 21:1]. For I await him as the judge who pronounces from the Roman chair.

By the way, I have nothing to answer those threatening friends of mine but the words of Reuchlin: "He who is poor fears nothing, he can lose nothing. I have no goods, nor do I desire them; if I have had good reputation and honor, he who loses now loses without ceasing. Only one thing is left, my poor, weak body, tired by constant adversity; if they destroy it by force or trickery (GOTte to do a service with it), they will perhaps make me poorer by one or two hours of my life. I have had enough of my sweet Redeemer and Reconciler, my Lord.

1) EoroNornm inwr olsra is a saying. 6oroNornm or ooroNorus is a bad vegetable that grows wild in the Peloponnese.

2) Erlanger: äeoores instead of: ätzcörls.

He was a Jew, Solomon Levita, after he became a Christian, Paul of Burgos; became Bishop of Cartagena, Burgos, Chancellor of Castile and finally Patriarch of Aquileia, died Aug. 29, 1435, 85 years old, increased Nie. von Lyra's glosses on the Bible (Erlanger "Briefwechsel").

I will sing to Jesus Christ all my life [Ps. 104:33]. But if someone does not want to sing with me, what is that to me? He may howl if he pleases, even for himself. He, the Lord Jesus, keep you forever, my dearest father. Wittenberg, on the day of the Holy Trinity [May 30] 1518.

C. Luther's journey to the General Convention of the Augustinians and the disputation held there. 1)

Luther's report to Joh. Lang that he had been advised against the trip to Heidelberg. March 21, 1518.

See Appendix, No. 3, § 2.

134 Luther's letter to Spalatin, in which he reports on the journey to Heidelberg, as far as Coburg. April 15, 1518.

The original of this letter is in the Anhaltisches Gesamtarchiv in Zerbst. Printed by Aurifaber, vol. I, p. 58; in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 609; by De Wette, vol. I, p. 104 and (according to the original) in the Erlangen "Briefwechsel," vol. I, p. 183. According to the latter we have translated.

Newly translated from the Latin.

To his Georg Spalatin, priest of Christ and ducal librarian in Wittenberg, his beloved in Christ.

"To Wittenberg Magister Spalatin's Handen."

JEsus.

Hail! I believe, dear Spalatin, that you learned from our Pfeffinger 2) everything that we talked to each other, since I met him in the village of Judenbach 3). For among other things, it was a comfort to me that the opportunity presented itself to make the rich man poorer by several pennies. For you know how much it pleases me to make the rich man poorer by a few pennies.

1) Cf. Walch, St. Louis Edition, vol. XVIII, Introduction, p. 3 f.

2) "Degenhart Pfeffinger, a Bavarian nobleman from Alberskirch, Dr. jur. and councillor of the Electorate of Saxony, patron of Luther, died in 1519".

3) Judenbach, a village on the Thuringian Forest, in the Oberland of the Duchy of Saxony-Meiningen.

can be conveniently thnu to fork out a little, especially friends. Because intentionally he also paid for the breakfast for the two foreign companions, together for all of us ten pennies. For now, too, I will, if I can, work so that the Kastner (oeconomus) of our most illustrious prince, who is here in Coburg, 4) pays for us; if he does not want to, we nevertheless live at the expense of the prince.

Of course, I have not yet seen the man, nor do I know whether I will see him. Since we arrived very tired in the evening, we delivered the letters to him by messenger. But he left late for the castle and has not yet returned; I do not know what he will do, perhaps he is too busy to take care of us. Then the messenger Urban 5) himself knows very well that he has been ordered to go with us to Würzburg. Whether he comes or stays, we will, God willing, continue our journey tomorrow.

Everything else stands, thank God, except that I confess that I have sinned, that I have undertaken the journey as a pedestrian. But this sin, since the contrition is complete and the most full satisfaction has been laid upon me, does not need the forgiveness of indulgence. I get very tired, and there are no carts anywhere, and so I become superfluous, all too contrite, repent and do enough.

Until now I was unknown to everyone, except as much as I became known through Pfeffinger's presence. But even in Weißenfels a pastor unknown to me recognized me and entertained me well; he is a Wittenberg magister. I have no other things to write now, only that you pray to God for me, and the father, the venerable Jacobus, who is afflicted with podagra, 6)

4) According to Seidemann, De Wette, vol. VI, p. 644, the Kastner in Coburg was Paul Bader; according to Schlegel, vita I-ÄNK6ri, x>, 4, Conrad Rode.

5) Seidemann-De Wette, vol. VI, 599, note 2, says: "I think Urban is Mühlmann."

61 The Franciscan Jacob Vogt, confessor to the Elector.

greet you from me. Farewell. From Coburg, Thursday after Quasimodogeniti] 1) [April 15], at the fifth hour in the evening, 1518. Brother Martin Eleutherius.

Luther's letter to Spalatin from Würzburg, similar in content to the previous one.
April 19, 1518.

The original is in the Anhaltisches Gesamtarchiv at Zerbst. Printed by Aurifaber, vol. I, p. 59; by Löscher, Ref.-Acta, vol. II, 610; by De Wette, vol. I, p. 105 and in the Erlangen "Briefwechsel", vol. I, p. 185. In Löscher and Walch, as in the previous letter, the 20th of April is given by incorrect resolution of the day of the week. We have translated according to the Erlanger, which brings the original.

Newly translated from the Latin.

His Georg Spalatin, the priest of Christ in Wittenberg.
JEsus.

Heils We finally arrived in Würzburg, my dear Spalatin, just on Sunday Misericordias (Domini), and that same evening we handed over the letter of our most illustrious prince. We did not find Sigismund von Thüngen 2) because he was absent and it was said that he would not return before two or three days.

The venerable bishop 3) himself called me to him after he had received the letter. And since he spoke with me face to face, he also wanted to give me a messenger at his expense on the way to Heidelberg. But since I had found several of my order here, especially the Prior of Erfurt, our Johann Lang, I thanked the extremely kind Für-

1) Walch: "Freytags"; Löscher has also interpreted and resolved Ieriu quinta just as incorrectly: "6. 16.

- The addition of the missing in the original: post HrmsirnoãoZeniti in the editions is correct, as can be seen from the following letter.

2) Sigismund von Thüngen zu Burgheim und Bucholt, Würzburg councilor, courtier and bailiff at Carlsburg, died in 1522 (Erl. Briefw.).

3) Lorenz von Bibra (1495 to February 6, 1519) wrote to the Elector in his own hand shortly before his end (866lr6nc1ort, üist. 4>rM., lik. I, p. 29, [äck. II.): "Your love does not want to let the pious man, Doctor Martinus, move away, because injustice would be done to him." See the next two docs. ' steu, since I did not consider it necessary that a messenger be hired for my sake. For I want to go with them, since I am quite tired from walking. I have only asked that he provide me with written testimonies that would serve me (as it is called) as a free escort. I have received them at this very hour and will leave by carriage, after I have left the letter to Sigismund voll Thüngen with the chaplain of the reverend lord.

If our messenger Urban were given a little more, it would seem all right to me. For he has been forced to go slower on the way for our sake. I would do this to our Hirschfeld 4) if I were present, for this deserves the loyalty and righteousness of this man, and you too be an intercessor for him. I am poor and must be; I have given him too little. The Franks hope for a good wine year, for that is what they are counting on, because this May is looking good. Farewell. From our monastery at Würzburg on Monday after Misericordias Domini [April 19] 1518.

Brother Martin Luther, Augustinian.

Spalatin's report of the godly bishop of Würzburg, Laurentius von Bibra.

From Spalatin's description of the life of Prince Frederick, printed in Tentzel, Hist. Bericht, Vol. I, p. 323. Cf. Seckendorf, nist. 4>utü., lik. I, p. 29.

In this 1519th year, in the month of February, Bishop Lorenz of Wuerzburg, of the family of one of Bibra, an honest, pious, wise man, died, who recently wrote with his own hand to this Elector, Duke Frederick of Saxony, about D. Martin Luther: "Your love should not let the pious man, D. Martinus, move away, because he would be 5) wronged. Which of the bishop's words pleased this Elector of Saxony so much that he sent it to me, Spalatin, rewritten with his own hand, to the Lochau, and also still asked me for this word, a few weeks before their departure from this Jam-

4) Bernhard von Hirschfeld zu Otterwisch, born 1490, died 1551.

5) In Seckendorf and Tentzel: "geschehe", which in the Erlanger Briefwechsel, Vol. I, p. 186, Note 2, is incorrectly resolved by "geschieht".

merthal, by Joachim Sack 1). This bishop of Wuerzburg was such an intelligent, wise and honest man that in one year he became the councilor of the Archbishop of Cologne, the Count Palatine, Elector of the Rhine, and also of the Roman Emperor Maximilian, and at the same time bishop of Wuerzburg. If this Bishop Lorenz von Bibra had lived longer, people who knew him well believe that he would have accepted the Holy Gospel. For he had been very angry with the Romans and did not want to accept their fictitious golden jubilee and indulgences, the longer the less. I have also heard noblemen from Franconia say that if a subject had come and asked him for favors to transfer some goods; if he had heard that he wanted to give a son or daughter to a monastery, he would have said: "Dear, give your daughter a husband, do not give her to a monastery; if you have money for it, I will lend you. He had been so very bad about monasticism, monasticism and nunnery.

137 Another message from this bishop.

From Tentzel, Hist. report, Vol. I, p. 125.

In a written chronicle of Würzburg, this bishop is numbered as the sixty-first, and it is reported that he was elected on May 12, 1495, and consecrated on October 11. In 1518, he attended the long Imperial Diet in Augsburg and helped to speak about the resistance of the Turks and the discord of faith; he was held in great esteem by the emperor and all princes of the empire, all the estates of the empire had a sensation at the Imperial Diet on his advice, and he finally died in 1519 on February 6.

138 Luther's report to Spalatin, from Wittenberg, about his honorable reception in Heidelberg by Count Palatine Wolfgang. May 18, 1518.

See Appendix, No. 7, § 2.

Luther's further report to Spalatin on the disputation in Heidelberg. May 18, 1518.

See Appendix, No. 7, § 3.

1) A Silesian nobleman, at that time among the Junkers (spüsbos) of the Churfürst (Seckendorf).

140 Alting's report that Bucer, Brenz, Billicanus and Schnepf came to the knowledge of the truth through the disputation in Heidelberg.

From [^]ItirAÜ kist. 6661. kalatinas reprinted in the wounisutis pistutis st üttsrariig published in 1701, pars I, x. 142. also in Seckendorf, Hist. imtü., 115.1, x. 29.

Translated into German.

Among the audience were Martin Bucer, Joh. Brenz, Erhard Schnepf, Theobald Billicanus, along with other great theologians, who were very surprised at Luther's astuteness, heartiness, and modesty in the disputation, but after the disputation they went to his house and inquired further about one and other points that they had not sufficiently understood and grasped. In particular, Martin Bucer, who was now no longer a student but a preacher for Frederick of the Palatinate in Heidelberg on the recommendation of Franz von Sickingen, believed that he was entitled to this before others. And as he copied most of Luther's writings according to his skill, he talked to him orally in more detail and asked him about various things, to which Luther answered him clearly and adequately.

The letter of Count Palatine Wolfgang to the Elector of Saxony, which he gave to Luther on his departure from Heidelberg.

May 1, 1518.

From Tentzel's Histor. Bericht, Vol. I, p. 330, who "diligently gathered and copied it from the torn original", printed in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, Vol. II, p.60.

Our friendly service and what we are able to do, all the time before, Highborn Prince, friendly dear Lord and cousin, E. L. Briue, therein was written by the same, that we Doctori Martins Luder Augustiner-Orden Leser Inn E. L. Vniuersitet zu Wittenberg. L. Vniuersitet zu Wittenberg, so er vnns Inn synen Sachn zu einigen Notturfft ersuchen" würde, Im nach vnnsere Vermögen zu behülfflich seyn, haben wir empfangenn vnd mit Vliß gelesennt, vnnd geben darauf E. L. that we, as one and the same transferee, wanted to be helpful to the above-mentioned doctor after all his efforts, on account of E. L. with all his means, if he alone had indicated and requested to do something that was within our means,

However, he did not reveal anything to us in which he needed our help, which E. L. himself probably denied. He has also been so skilful with his arguments that he has not made a small praise of E. L. University, it has also been said to him by many learned people that we do not want to behave E. L. as a sun friendly maynation, but to serve the same, also to give fruit, love and goodness to him.

witnesses we are to do allzytt gevliffenn unnd genaigt 2c. Datum Heydelberg vff Philippi unnd Jacobi [4. Mai] uo, 2c. In the eighteenth.

Wolffgang von GOttes Gnaden Pfaltzgrave Bei Rheyenn vnnd Hertzog Inn Beyern 2c.

Luther's report to Spalatin on his return journey from Heidelberg. May 18, 1518.

See Appendix, No. 7, § 1.

The second section of the second chapter.

From the counter institutions of the Roman court.

Pope Leo orders the new general of the Augustinians, Gabriel Venetus, to dissuade Luthern from his nobility.

143 Pope Leo's letter of January 23, 1518, in which he offers Gabriel Venetus the office of General of the Augustinians.

This and the following document is taken from the Papal Secretary, Petrus Bembus, Writings, lib. XVI, no. 17 and 18, x. 376.

Translated into German.

To Gabriel Venetus, Promagister of the Order of Augustinian Hermits.

After last summer we received Egidius of Viterbo, from the Order of the Augustinian Hermits, whose teacher I have been for some years, into the Order and into the College of my brothers, the most reverend Cardinals of Rome, we have been thinking in particular during these whole months, who would be most capable of holding Egidius' position as Promagister of this Society until the time appointed by the laws to proceed to the election would come, at which time the whole Order itself and the Society could ordinarily single him out and elect him as Head. For, indeed, this great and extensive Order itself, which is divided into eight and twenty provinces, has 1393 buildings and very many excellent colleges, could justifiably demand of us that we see to it that from the great number of the

I was driven by the love and affection with which I have always been attached to this order, as well as by my old kinship and connection with this order, to spare no effort and labor in searching for a man to accomplish what I wanted and ardently desired: namely, that I would bring to this position and make a promagister a man who surpasses all others in honesty, godliness, prudence and erudition. Since you alone, according to the testimony of Egidius himself and of many understanding men, are considered capable of this office because of the many conversations you have had, I hereby also appoint you in Egidius' place as Promagister of the Augustinian Order until the time of the election, and grant you all the liberties, privileges, dignities, income, remuneration, and advantages that you are to enjoy before the other magistrates. And since you will easily see from this how highly I think of you, you will see according to your prudence that you may not only maintain but also increase the confidence that everyone has in you, based on my good opinion of you, through your justice, integrity and diligence. And because I have been told by many, which I was very pleased to hear, since it is a proof of your honesty, sincerity and your good, quiet, gentle and peace-loving disposition, that you never asked for the higher positions, dignities and services in your order, but rather, after the once with glory and honor administered and given to you without your pleading, that you have not asked for a higher position.

If you have refused all other prefectures, renounced all honorary offices, and have much rather been devoted to the beautiful sciences and to the holy divine teachings in silence and tranquility, than have been popular in public offices, and therefore it could easily happen that you would also refuse this honorary rank, which is the highest among all of you, then it shall not be withheld from you that you are not allowed to refuse this office. Accordingly, be cheerful and confident, and prepare yourself to assume the care for the preservation and government of your Order, which has spread so far and almost into all parts of the world, and to take up the office, which I hereby command you of my own free will, joyfully and to administer it magnanimously. Given January 23, 1518, in the fifth year. From Rome.

144 Pope Leo's letter of Feb. 3, 1518, when Gabriel refuses to accept the office offered to him, in which he commands him that, by virtue of his owed obedience, he should take up this office without further delay, and seek to quiet Luthern as quickly as possible, both by letters and by learned and pious negotiators.

Translated into German.

To Gabriel Venetus, Promagister of the Order of Augustinian Hermits.

Your letter, so emphatically as wisely arranged, in which you thank me for the office voluntarily offered to you by me, and reject the same under certain stated reasons why you could not accept it, encloses a request that you be spared with it, partly because of your nature, which would be more accustomed to rest than to public activities, partly because of your all too weak mind and dexterity, which is why you detest high and important things, partly because of your weak physical constitution, has been very pleasant to me, because I can therefore take the opportunity to tell you my opinion frankly. For I am very pleased that you are not puffed up by any desire to rule over others, which is otherwise found in the vast majority of people; and that you, in humble contemplation of your powers and your ability, consider this to be quite small, stems from your, where not perfectly virtuous nature, but from your immense honesty and your not insignificant intellect. As for your qualities, although I have heard them praised and extolled by everyone, I am also very pleased that I have been convinced of them myself from your letter. For the fact that you state in it that you have a weak body and often fall ill does not bother me at all, because you are all the stronger in mind. For I hope that the Lord will give you strength and power so that you can bear his burden, which he has placed on your shoulders through me, with courage and to great benefit. Therefore, this careful apology of yours has done so much for me that I love you even more and think much more highly of you than I did before. However, it did not bring me to the point that I should give you leave of absence. Rather, I can assure you that this has strengthened my judgment of you, increased my affection for you, and refreshed me, so that, since no one has ever been heard of before (but I am speaking of your own brethren) who would have refused this generalship, and most of them, on the other hand, were eagerly striving for it, I would all the more like to see you placed above your order. For I am not at all concerned that you should let yourself be led astray either by avarice, because you have made nothing of the whole matter, or by love or hatred of others, since you have not looked to yourself, in conferring certain honorary positions and offices, or that you should proceed unjustly in the administration of justice and in punishment, since you demand nothing to be done, strive for nothing, want nothing: since it is almost impossible that he who knows how to govern himself rightly should not also do justice to others. Such a man must be given a regiment; such a man must be set above others. Therefore I command you under the law that deals with the resigned office of governor that you take up this office immediately and do not hope that your excuses will be accepted. And that I charge you immediately with something so that the most noble and important part of your office may now be occupied: I want and wish that you may take the trouble to dissuade Martin Luthern, a monk of your order, of whom you will know that he is starting all kinds of unrest in Germany, from lecturing new teachings to our people, which they are to accept, if possible, according to the authority which the prefecture grants you, from his intention, both by letters as well as by by learned and righteous negotiators, of whom many will be found everywhere, who will endeavor to calm and appease the man. If you do this soon, it will hopefully not be difficult to dampen the fire that has just arisen. For anything that is still small and has only raised its head a little will not withstand a great and violent attack. But if you linger and lose heart, I worry that we can no longer provide the means to extinguish the fire, even if we want to. For the evil is gaining the upper hand from day to day, becoming stronger and more powerful, so that nothing seems to be so dangerous as delay. I consider it unnecessary to order you to do everything piecemeal in this matter. Your virtue, your conscience, your righteous nature, your peculiar erudition will already teach and remind you what you have to do and how you have to attack the matter. In general, I recommend to you only this, that you use all your mind and thoughts, diligence, effort and work, so that we reach our goal. This is rightly demanded of you, partly because you now have to command him, partly because you surpass others in intellect and erudition, partly because the common being you serve cares so much about it, partly also because I especially demand it, who love you so much and put so much emphasis on you that you secretly have to thank me for everything. Given February 3, 1518, in the fifth year. From Rome.

The papal confirmation of the new General Gabriel, who was unanimously elected in Venice on June 5, 1519, when deputies of the Augustinian monasteries from all countries had gathered there.

From the writings of Petrus Bembus, lid. XVI, no. 22, p. M2.
Translated into German.

To Gabriel Venetus, General Emeritus of the Augustinian Order.

I waited with longing to see how your election would have gone. For a day passed before I received your letter, in which you reported and mentioned many pleasant things, among which one always pleased me more than the other: first, that Cardinal Egidius had returned from the Spanish legation and had landed at Venice at a time when the sea was completely calm, and that the entire Senate had caught up with him and taken him to a splendid house with great solitude.

I have accompanied. But I am not surprised about that. For this city is very hospitable to distinguished men, and it has always held him in great honor. But I am surprised that he came from such a remote area at that time to attend the election. Oh, how did not this arrival happen at such a convenient time! You thought that there would have been more than 1100 of your brethren to cast their votes, and that you would have received a considerable amount of money for the maintenance of these people from the common treasury. All this is pleasant to me. For it seldom happens, and we never remember, that the Augustinians gathered somewhere in such numbers and stayed together for so many days in a row, nor that they ever spent so much money together. But that you were appointed and declared General of the Order by all their votes in such a way that not even a single electoral vote was against you, I consider that almost a miracle, and not only I, but also those who were with me when I read your letter, especially Cardinal Ruffus, who thinks very highly of you, and could not refrain from bursting into these words: something like that would not have happened at that time. Therefore, I congratulate you, not only that this office has fallen to you, who have always made nothing of it, but rather that the same has been done to you in such an excellent way and with such general applause from your Order that no one among the large number of men could be found who would not have considered you worthy and skilled for this office. But as far as I am concerned, I am also pleased that my judgment of you has been approved by the entire Order, and that it has turned out in such a way that everyone seems to have had the same good opinion of you in which you stood with me. Since this is the case, you must make every effort to ensure that all your brothers recognize and are convinced that you have proved yourself in the administration of the Generalate just as they thought you were before it was handed over to you. This so strange and wonderful agreement of your brethren and my glorious testimony given to you is what has imposed on you the great burden, which will not do you honor if you act rightly, but rather disgrace if you administer it badly. For a man who is considered honest and righteous is not admired and praised at all if he has done something good and praiseworthy; most people demand this.

But if he is carried away by malice or injustice, they do not consider both those on whom he undertakes to act unjustly, but rather themselves to be deceived. But I am by no means writing this because I am concerned that you will not satisfy people's desires, hopes and wishes, but only to incite you to satisfy them completely. By the way, since the Augustinian Order asks me to confirm what it itself ordered and decreed when you were appointed to this office, I have also done so and have added my own words to this letter. Farewell, fear God, hold above justice.

Since Gabriel Venetus, Promagister of the Order of Augustinian Hermits, has called an assembly of his brethren in Venice, and 1100 such brethren from all regions have gathered for this assembly, but Gabriel, for the sake of his virtue and piety, was unanimously elected General of the Order on the day of the election by the named 1100 men, I, Pope Leo the Tenth, recognize this election as valid, consider it approved, approve it and am satisfied that he takes up this office. Given June 5, 1519, in the seventh year (of our papal dignity). From Rome.

B. How one wanted to make the trial of the Lutherans in a nutshell.

Luther is cited before the spiritual court in Rome.

Luther's own report of the papal citation issued to him to appear in Rome within sixty days. Beginning of November 1518.

See Luther's gloss on the Breve of Pope Leo X to Cardinal Cajetan, Document No. 177.

Luther's letter to Spalatin at Augsburg, in which he asks him, after receiving a citation, to have his cause investigated by the Elector in Germany. August 8, 1518.

The original of this letter is in the Anhaltisches Gesamtarchiv in Zerbst. Printed by Aurifaber, vol. I, p. 53; by Löschner, Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 620; by De Wette, vol. I, p. 131 and (according to the original) in Erlanger Briefwechsel, vol. I, p. 213. We have translated from the latter.

Newly translated from the Latin.

To the highly learned and at the same time very best friend, his Georg Spalatin, now at Augsburg, who is to be loved sincerely in Christ.
JEsus.

Hail! I am now in the greatest need of your help, dear Spalatin; indeed, the honor of almost our entire university needs it with me. But it is this, that you stop at our most noble prince and D. Pfeffinger, that our prince and the imperial majesty affect this to me at your pope, that my matter is referred or transferred to German lands, as I have written to our prince. 1) For thus [by dragging the matter to Rome] you see how treacherous and malicious those preachers, my murderers, are out to destroy me. I would have written to Herr Pfeffinger because of this very matter, that he would effect this favor for me with the imperial majesty and the prince through his and his friends' service, but this must be done hurriedly. They have set me a short time, as you can see in this bog (Lerna 2) of the citation. You will read them at the same time with their many-headed monsters (hydris) and abominations. Therefore you will see to it, you love me and hate godless beings, that you soon obtain advice and help from the prince. When you have obtained this, you will report it to me, or rather to the venerable father, our vicar Johann Staupitz, who is perhaps already with you in Augsburg or will be soon. For he is staying in Salzburg and has promised the Nurembergers to come there for the Feast of the Ascension 3). Finally, I ask you not to be anxious or distressed for my sake: "The Lord makes an end of temptation" [1 Cor. 10:13].

Now I answer to Silvester's dialogue, 4) which is quite forest (sylvestro) and completely uncouth. You will soon have the whole, as well as it will be finished. Just the-

1) This letter seems to be no longer available.

2) I, 6ma literally of very many evils that have been brought together and piled up at once against one (Erl. Briefw.).

3) This is to be understood from Assumption Day (August 15).

4) Walch, St. Louis Edition, vol. XVIII, 310. Luther's response to this ibid. col. 344.

This extremely lovely person is both my adversary and my judge, as you will see in the citation. Farewell. Since I am burdened with many writings, I cannot write more extensively. Wittenberg on the day of St. Cyriac [August 8] 1518. Brother Martinus Eleutherius, Augustinian.

Luther's letter to Spalatin, in which he testifies to his courage and asks the Elector to ensure that he is denied a letter of safe conduct. August 21, 1518.

The original of this letter is in the Anhaltisches Gesamtarchiv in Zerbst. Printed in Aurifaber, vol. I, p. 76; in Löscher, Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 621; in De Wette, vol. I, p. 132 and in Erlanger Briefwechsel, vol. I, p. 218 after the original. Löscher and Walch have the wrong date: August 15. We have translated according to the Erlangen edition.

Newly translated from the Latin.

To his Georg Spalatin, priest of Christ, now at Augsburg, librarian to Duke Frederick of Saxony, his learned friend.

JEsus.

Hail! The messenger I sent to the most illustrious Prince Frederick has not yet returned, so I am still waiting to see what the Lord will do through you in my cause. I have heard, however, that the most reverend Cardinal Cajetan has mainly been instructed by the pope to make the hearts of the emperor and the princes hostile to me with all zeal. So much does even the conscience of so great popes fear, nay, so great and so intolerable is the power of truth over the works done in darkness."

But I, you should know, my dear Spalatin, fear nothing in all these things. Even if their flattery or power succeeds in making me hateful to everyone, I still have the position of my heart and the awareness that I recognize and confess that I have everything I have and everything they dispute from God, to whom I also gladly and willingly offer and present it: if he takes it, let it be taken; if he receives it, let it be received; and his name be hallowed and praised forever. Amen.

I do not yet see quite how I could escape the church punishments intended for me if the prince does not come to my aid. Again, I would rather lie in punishment forever than have the prince come under any evil suspicion for my sake. Believe, therefore, that as I offered myself before, so I offer myself now, and say this to whom you will or to whom it seems good to you. I will never be a heretic. I can err in disputing, but I do not want to assert anything firmly, nor do I want to be caught by people's opinions.

It seemed good to our friends, both the learned and those who are well advised, that I asked our Prince Frederick for a safe conduct (as it is called) through his dominions. If he should refuse me this, as I know he will refuse me, then I would have a quite just objection and excuse not to appear in Rome (for that is how they talk). Therefore, if you would also, in my name, send a written notice to the most illustrious prince, in which he would deny me the letter of safe conduct, and leave it to me at my own risk if I wanted to go, you would do me a great favor. But here action is needed soon. The days are hurrying by, and the appointed day is approaching, and the land separates us too far, and business hinders us.

I am sending the explanations of my theses, 1) but printed incorrectly; so my temporary absence has harmed 2). Against the dialogue of Silvester, yes, at the same time as the dialogue itself, 3) my answer is printed in Leipzig, which I will also send to you shortly. I am very sorry that my name and my cause have risen so high and grown so much, that it has caused trouble even for such great princes, and that such a great clarity of such great lights 4) is about me, who am a very small person. I thought that I would be too contemptible, especially as a disputator, than to

1) Walch, St. Louis Edition, vol. XVIII, 100. The printer of the resolutiones was Johann Grünenberg at Wittenberg.

2) in Heidelberg.

3) by Melchior Lotther. Cf. St. Louis edition, vol. XVIII, 344.

4) It seems to us that this is to be referred to New Year's Eve.

My peers, let alone mediocre people should move. Fare well in the Lord forever. Wittenberg, on Saturday [in] the Octave of the Assumption of St. Mary [August 21, 1518.

Brother Martin Eleutherius, Augustinian.

But they [our friends] also advise that care be taken that the date of the writing (as it is called) be anticipated, so that it be dated as written before the evening of Bartholomew [August 23]. And they say that this is not a lie, because it is certain and known that the Prince's heart and mind have always been such that he wanted to deny the permit.

149 Another testimony to his confident courage in a letter to Staupitz, the Sept. 1, 1518.

See Appendix, No. 8, § 1.

2. Luther is granted the right to travel to Rome through the mediation of Lhursach and the concession of the University of Wittenberg.

Luther's report to Lang that the Elector, out of special favor and affection for thorough theology, had taken him and D. Carlstadt into his protection without being asked, and would by no means suffer the indulgence merchants to drag him to Rome. March 21, 1518.

See Appendix, No. 3, § 2.

151: The University of Wittenberg's letter of concession to Pope Leo X concerning Luther's citation to Rome. Sept. 25, 1518.

This document is found in Latin in D. Ooäkr. 8vsvus Veaušwia ^VitzksrjnZis, Oot. 8, 3K; in the Wittenberg Collection (1550), torn. I, tot. 206k; in the Jena (1579), tona. I, tot. 183k; in the Erlanger, opp. var. ar^., tom. II, p. 363 and in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol., II, p. 384. German in the Wittenberger (1569), vol. IX, p. 34k; in the Jenaer (1564), vol. I, p. 106k; in the Altenburger, vol. I, p. 119; in the Leipziger, vol. XVII, p. 171 and in Walch.

1) Most Holy Father, let not H. H. gentleness and right episcopal goodness consider it a sacrilege or impudent audacity that we dare to come before H. Holiness with this writing of ours. Fear of God and the truth

We hope that, instead of our stupidity, H.H.'s most gentle love and favor shown to everyone will sufficiently reconcile and satisfy us.

One, Brother Martinus Luther, professor of the liberal arts 1) and holy scripture, a faithful, pleasant member (as it is called) of our university, has humbly asked us and, trusting in our intercession that it should be beneficial to him, requested a writing to H. H. in which we should give him a testimony to his teaching and conduct, both of which, as he complains (and is publicly in the day), are accused and condemned by some, unfairly.

In addition, he is also currently being cited by force and authority of H.H. through commissaries, with serious orders that he should personally appear in Rome, because he has publicly disputed several sayings about indulgences in the school here. However, because he cannot do what he should and would like to do, due to his weakness and dangerous journey, it is difficult, even impossible, for him to obey such orders. Therefore, we are moved by his need and request to have compassion on him, so that we do not want to deny him our testimony, which he believes is necessary.

4 We therefore ask, most holy father, in all humility and submission, as willing obedient sons of H.H., that you consider this man to be such, whose mind and thoughts have never been tainted with some stain of untruthful, false doctrine, contrary to the Roman Church's opinion, only that he, according to custom and right, like other doctors of theology, has set some matters to debate more freely (but nothing finally decided, much less defended), than some of his opponents could have suffered.

(5) For we ourselves have never wanted to be considered as those who would stubbornly hold something against the common Christian doctrine, but are willing and ready to be obedient in all things to Your Holiness and the Holy Church's opinion and will. We are willing and ready to be obedient in all things to His Holiness and the Holy Church's opinion and will "in Christ Jesus our Lord and God, who will also graciously grant us His Holiness to be asked of us, and through His divine grace may He appear here and there to be followed with eternal glory, amen.

Given at Wittenberg, September 25, Anno 1518.

E. Holiness devout, subservient sons, Rector, Magistri and Doctoren of the University of Wittenberg.

1) artium is missing in Löscher.

152 Letter sent by the University of Wittenberg to Carl von Miltitz, the Pope's chamberlain, concerning this very matter. Sept. 25, 1518.

This letter is found in Latin in the Wittenberg Collection (1550), toru. I, tot. 206; in the Jena (1579), tom. I, lot. 183; in Löscher, Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 385; and in the Erlanger, opp. var. ar^h, tom. II, p. 361. German in the Wittenberg (1569), vol. IX, p. 34; in the Jena (1564), vol. I, p. 1055; in the Altenburg, vol. I, p. 118; in the Leipzig, vol. XVII, p. 172 and Lei Walch.

To the worthy and noble Lord, Mr. Carl von Miltitz, secret chamberlain and apostolic nuncio, our most revered patron.

1. We have heard, not without great sadness and distress, dear and venerable sir, that the venerable father, Martin Luther, Augustinian, Master of the Holy Scriptures and the liberal arts, the most honest and noble member of our university, has fallen into such great disfavor of the holy apostolic see, that he, after being cited and demanded to Rome, with manifold appeals of his faith, godliness and office, which are befitting a Christian man, has not yet been able to obtain that his case be ordered to impartial, unsuspicious judges in Germany, be heard in a safe place and be laid down.

2. For we are attached to the common Christian religion, to the holy apostolic see and the holy Roman church, and are so opposed to them that, if we knew for certain that Doctor Martinus had fallen into such ugly, abominable and godless errors, we wanted to be the very first not only to hand him over to the laws, but also not to suffer him further, separated from us, among us, let alone that 'we would want to be sympathetic and favorable to him, if he had departed from the truth of the Gospel and was in error.

Because we have seen and experienced his skill, diverse knowledge and high intellect in all kinds of arts, adorned with irreproachable morals and Christian conduct for many years, which is known not only to us here, but also in many countries where Christian faith prevails, we think it is our duty to intercede for the pious, God-fearing father, who also well deserves it for us.

4 For if he were not such a one as we testify of him, neither our Christian and most noble prince and lord, Duke of Saxony, Archmarshall and Elector of the Holy Roman Empire, nor our Christian and most noble prince and lord of the Holy Roman Empire, would have him.

Our university founder, patron and favorable father, until this day in his lands,' also we in our assembly, have not suffered.

For this reason we ask you, venerable Lord, most earnestly and most diligently, to command this godly and highly learned man to the most holy of our Lord, Pope Leo X, so that he may obtain what he has offered to do for his defense. Because we know that you are dear, pleasant and valuable to the supreme bishop, we do not doubt that we will obtain what we ask for all the more easily through your support and help, the more gentle and kind the supreme bishop is, educated from childhood by the most excellent and learned men in the best arts.

For this reason, show this friendship to your dear fatherland, so that it may be known that one German does not abandon another, especially because it has such an opportunity for the sake of the pious father Doctor Martin's accident that we do not doubt that if papal sanctity had thoroughly recognized his innocence, godliness and skill, he would find favor with it, and his cause would become good. For we know that D. Martinus will do everything that a Christian theologian is entitled to do, and will not do anything that an impartial judge would reproach him with, as if he had sought unnecessary confusion and bickering.

(7) If you, venerable Lord, will please us in this, we will surrender to you completely and praise your praise without ceasing. Your Honor is well pleased. Given at Wittenberg, September 25, 1518.

Rector, Magistri and Doctores of the University of Wittenberg.

C. About the further efforts of the papal court against Luther.

153 Emperor Maximilian I. Letter to Pope Leo X concerning Luther's cause. Aug. 5, 1518.

This letter is found in Latin in the Wittenberg edition (1550), loiu. I, lol. 203; in the Jena edition (1579), lom. I, col. 1795; in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 317 and in the Erlanger, opp. var. urZ., tom. II, p. 349. German in the Wittenberger (1569), vol. IX, p. 26; in the Jenaer (1564), vol. I, p. 99; in the Altenburger, vol. I, p. 113; in the Leipziger, vol. XVII, p. 169 and in Walch.

I. Most Holy Father, Most Reverend Sir! A few days ago we heard that a brother of the Augustinian Order, Martinus Luther ge-

The brother, who is called the "brother of the church," has spread some conclusions concerning the trade of indulgences, according to the custom of the high schools to discuss it and to converse with others, has also taught much in his sermons about the same trade, and further about the virtue and power of the apostolic ban, among which the several parts are considered harmful and heretical; and that the same trade is now recorded and contested by Silvester Prierias, your sacred palace magister. This deal is all the more displeasing to us, because the said brother, as stubbornly as we are told, intends to insist on his doctrine, and has also received many patrons and defenders of his errors, among whom are also great men and people of great renown.

Because such suspicious conclusions and dangerous doctrines can be recognized and discussed by no one better, more correctly, and more truthfully than by your holiness, which alone, as it is able to do, so it is also responsible to silence and curb the founders and beginners of loose, useless, and foolish questions, sophistical causes, and quarrels over words. More harmful people than these have never existed for the Christian religion, since they alone have in mind that what they have learned should be valid and respected above all others, not 1) what at this time the unanimous opinion of scholars, and of those who have blessedly fallen asleep in Christ, considers pure and thorough doctrine to be right and approved.

There is a very old decree of the papal law on how to appoint teachers, in which nothing is ever decided about sophistry; only that in the decrees it is put in doubt whether it is right to learn it or not, and its study is disapproved by many high learned people.

(4) Therefore, because one despises what is commanded and commanded by papal authority, and accepts only that which is uncertain, even that which is rejected and condemned as unfit, it must certainly follow that such masters sometimes grossly err, deal in dreams, and are blind. We have to thank them that for such a long time righteous teachers, accepted and approved by the church, have not only remained unread, but most of them have also been falsified and mutilated.

5 We are silent that through these masters many more heresies have grown up and arisen than have ever been condemned. Want also swiss

1) This "not", which is missing in the Latin editions, was added by the old translator; as we think, rightly.

I am not aware of the evil rumors and annoyances that have been spread throughout the world by Reuchlin, and now by this most dangerous conflict about indulgences and apostolic authority by these harmful teachers; where your Holiness and the most reverend Fathers' (the Cardinals') authority do not put an end to them, they will soon not only seduce the common simple man, but also attract the favor and chance of great lords and princes, to the ruin of both of them.

6) Then it will follow, if one stands by longer with slumbering eyes, leaving free space and room, that all the world (after which they also strive with the highest diligence) must have before their eyes, instead of the best and holiest teachings, their foolheiding 2).

(7) Out of special deference to the Apostolic See, we wish to make this known to Your Holiness, so that Christian truth will not be falsified by such foolish, impudent disputations and cunning, seductive arguments, which would offend many. For what Your Holiness will conclude in this matter, for the praise and glory of God Almighty and the salvation of the believers in Christ, we want to keep seriously, and see to it that it is kept by everyone in our kingdom.

Given in our imperial city of Augsburg, on the 5th day of August, Anno 1518, in the 33rd year of the Roman Empire, and in the 29th year of the Hungarian Empire.

154 Luther's indication of the cause that had forced him to publish his Resolutions in three letters to Spalatin of Feb. 15, 1518, Sept. 2, 1518, and Nov. 11, 1517.

1) Because the stupid people did not cease to accuse him of being a heretic in all sermons, yes, not only to declare the Wittenberg University infamous and heretical because of him, but even to accuse the Elector and to make him hated by all the world, as if the whole being came from him, since he had induced Luther to do this out of envy against the Archbishop of Magdeburg. He (Luther) finds this very difficult to hear, and therefore asks Spalatin's council whether it should be brought to the attention of the Elector, and he can well suffer that the Elector offers him a disputation or court, wherever or however it may be, only that he be safely escorted and that the innocent Elector not be involved in it; At the same time, he reports how it causes him much struggle to keep himself in check in such a way that he does not sin against Christ and forgive the truth by remaining silent. 2) In the meantime, Spalatinus should only tell everyone, one should only have to do the matter with him (Luther) alone, he wants to give a speech and an answer about it, and be ready to argue with anyone about it; but the innocent Elector should be left alone and not be involved at all. 3) For this reason, he did not allow his positiones to come to court until they had been published in print in everyone's hands, so that one could swear that the Elector did not know anything about it, whom one suspected because of the Archbishop of Magdeburg.

2) Wittenberger: usrüus instead of:

sriaeniass.

See Appendix, No. 4, §§ 5.6. No. 9, §§1.2. No. 11, § 2.

155 Prince Frederick of Saxony's very wise answer to Cardinal Raphael's letter concerning Luther's cause, with the title St. Georgii ad velum aureum. Lochau, July 10, 1520.

This letter is found in Latin in the Wittenberg edition (1550), torn. I, toi, 227 b; in the Jena (1579) torn. I, col. 180 and in the Erlangen, opp. var. arA., tom. II, p. 351. German in the Wittenberg (1569), vol. IX, p. 56d; in the Jena (1564), vol. I, p. 100b; in the Altenburg, vol. I, p. 113; in the Leipzig, vol. XVII, p. 170 and in Walch. Latin and German in Löscher, Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 313. In all editions with the wrong date: "Augsburg den 5. August 1518", and with the note that Raphael's writing is "not available" (ynana ckemdk-amus). However, the original of Raphael's letter is in Weimar, dated "Rornas 3. 1520", and likewise the concept of our letter from Lochau of July 10, 1520 (Knaake, in Köstlin, Martin Luther (3), vol. I, 789,1. note). - Löscher names the addressee: Raphael de Rovere, from the princely Urb mischen family; his name is Raphael Petrucci.

Most reverend in God Father, dearest Lord and friend! After I have read your love letters, given to Rome on April 3, and delivered to me on July 7, I have received and heard of your love in a friendly opinion, especially that E. L. still remembers my most dear Lord Father, of blessed memory.

For I have always provided myself for your love's honor and all good, as E. L. has so far easily been able to hear from my letters; I also provide myself for nothing less to E. L., and am again quite willing and ready to owe E. L. such with thanks.

And because I hear that E. L. has encountered and is supposed to have encountered I don't know what kind of unpleasantness and misfortune, I have borne a heartfelt pity for E. L.. However, if things had turned out better for E. L., as I hope, I would have been very happy to hear that and would have enjoyed it.

Furthermore, I have heard what E. L. writes about D. Martin Luther. God willing, E. L. shall never know that I intend or want to do otherwise, nor shall I have any other mind or will, except that I am against

The following is a list of the most important things that can be done in this way.

(5) Thus, I have never so far undertaken to defend either the writings or the sermons of Luther, and I do not undertake to do so even this day, as I have reported this to Papal Holiness Legate, Cardinal St. Sixti, and even to the Papal Nuncio Carl von Miltitz, both in writing and verbally at the present time.

6 Nevertheless, I have heard that D. Martinus has always offered, if he would be assured with sufficient assurance and free escort from all violence, to appear obediently before pious, impartial, unsuspicious, learned and Christian judges, to defend his doctrine himself, and if he would be told better and holier things from divine scripture, to let himself be instructed and to follow.

I also hear that the Archbishop and Elector of Trier, my good friend, is admitted to him as a commissary, and I have no doubt that he will appear obediently if he is well and sufficiently guarded with free safe conduct. So that no one can blame me for anything in this matter.

8 It would also grieve me from the bottom of my heart that at my age error in the holy general faith should arise and have its continuation; but it would be much more burdensome to me that such errors should be promoted and protected by me. May the merciful God, as I earnestly pray, graciously keep me unstained from this horrible sin.

9 I did not want to behave this on E. L.'s letter, and ask that E. L. will kindly accept and understand this writing of mine, which I hereby command the Almighty God to keep in His grace and protection. Given Lochau, July 10, 1520. 1)

Luther's report, which was actually the intention of Cardinal Raphael.

This and the following number are from the first Eisleben part, p. 2, printed in the Altenburger, Vol. I, p. 151. According to what we have contributed in the introduction to the previous number, there is an obvious "anachronism" in this relation. Aurifaber will not have taken his information from Luther's mouth, but from the collections of his works, and is misled by the wrong dating. About the unreliability of Aurifaber and the Eisleben collection published by him, one should read what we have further explained in the introduction to the 22nd volume, p. 53 ff.

1) In the editions: "From Augsburg, August 5, 1518."

The parish priests immediately became afraid, since Luther's positiones were going out, and Raphael, the Cardinal, wrote to Duke Frederick, the Elector, very kindly, and among other things he indicated: I hear. Your Electoral Grace has a monk who wants to weaken the power of the Christian Church. I would have liked to see Duke Frederick burn me.

Luther's story, which Aurifaber copied from him.

The pope and all the priests urged Maximilian the emperor to schedule an imperial diet at Augsburg; Cajetan the Cardinal also came there; but they had negotiated with Duke Frederick, the old Elector, of blessed memory, that if the imperial diet broke up, he should send me out to the Cardinal.

158a. Luther's report to Spalatin on Cajetan's intention. August 21, 1518.

See the 148th document at the beginning.

158 b. The Vicar General of the Augustinian Order, Gabriel Venetus, orders Luthern to be seized and held in custody bound hand and foot. August 25, 1518.

This piece, because it is important and belongs in this section, we have inserted here from Kolde, Martin Luther, Vol. I, p. 162. Cf. Zeitschrift für Kirchengeschichte 2, 432 ff. 476. Kolde, Augustinercongregation, p. 318. 411. Köstlin, Martin Luther (3), Vol. I, p. 228 f. remarks that we still possess this decree, which was not further known at that time.

His judges did not think of anything else than Luther's condemnation. Above all, they wanted to get Luther under their control. First, he received a formal citation, which arrived in Wittenberg on August 7; then he was to appear before his judges within sixty days. But a few weeks later, it was felt that other means should be used. Hieronymus Ghinucci [Bishop of Ascoli, who, along with Prierias, was appointed Luther's judge] and the Pope himself therefore turned anew to the Vicar General of the Augustinian Order, Gabriel Venetus, - the position of General was vacant. The latter had to say to himself that it might have its difficulties to fight against Luther because of the order, since the relations of his immediate superior Johann von Staupitz to him were well known. But he believed to have found a remedy by basing his hope on the old jealousy between the Saxon Provincial 1) and the Vicar General of the German Congregation. Thereupon he ordered the former - it was Gerhard Hecker, later highly deserving of the Reformation of Westphalia - in a letter of 25. In a letter of August 25, with reference to a papal decree that Luther was an accomplished heretic, he ordered him, under penalty of forfeiture of all degrees, dignities, and offices, to be seized, imprisoned, and held in custody with his hands and feet bound; indeed, he gave him the authority to impose excommunication and interdict, depending on whether it appeared necessary for the execution of the enterprise. It is doubtful whether this order reached his address; an attempt to carry it out was probably never made. Nevertheless, the document is a telling proof of the means that Rome did not shy away from.

v. How Luther's life was secretly confessed with poison and assassination.

Luther's report of this in a letter to Link. July 10, 1518.

Appendix, No. 2, § 2.

160 Luther's report to Spalatin about how a doctor who was a sorcerer had been bought against him, who could make himself invisible at will, and who had been ordered to kill Luther.

April 16, 1520.

Annex, No. 12, § 2.

Luther's report to the same, how von Hutten could not warn him enough about poison, adding that the Elector would not want to grant free access to everyone.

Sept. 11, 1520.

Annex, No. 13, § 8.

1) The Provincial of the Augustinian Order for the Province of Saxony is to be distinguished from the "Vicar" who was set over the Congregation of the Reformed Monasteries or the "Observants" (Köstlin, M. Luther, Vol. I, p. 229).

162: Narrative of how they tried to kill and murder D. Luther in 1520 by trickery, told by him in 1546 at Eisleben.

The following two numbers have passed from the Eisleben Collection, vol. I, p. 24, into the Altenburger, vol. I, p. 546, and the Leipziger, vol. XVII, p. 378. This number is also in the Erlanger, vol. 64, p. 365.

1 In 1520, after the death of Emperor Maximilian, one of them went to Wittenberg to see D. Luther. Luther and pretended to be the emperor's chancellor. When D. Luther left the college after his lecture and wanted to enter the monastery, he offered his hand to the doctor and asked to speak with him. The doctor received him kindly and led him to his room. There he said: "My dear doctor, I am surprised how you can be so bold and offer your hand to anyone so easily; someone could have a gun in his sleeve and shoot a bullet into you, I am alone with you now. To which the doctor replied: How would one get away with such a thing if he had to put his body on it and die? Then the same man had said: If I strangled you and died, the pope would make me a saint and you a heretic whom he would hand over to the devil.

When the doctor heard this, he was a little afraid of him and called his servant Wolf. But the same man soon departed from the doctor and also made his way out of the city. The doctor thought he was a traitor and murderer, and that he was justified in killing him; but God had taken away his courage, so that he could not do anything.

163] A few other histories of how the bishops in Poland, through a Jew, and likewise through a Bohemian, took Luther's life.

Around the same time, some bishops in Poland bribed a doctor of medicine with money (to whom they promised two thousand guilders) and decreed that he should kill Luther with poison, which he then agreed to do. But the same bishops had another doctor of medicine with them, to whom they revealed this as their trusted friend. Who then, through the of Breslau in Silesia warned Luther and told him that a Jew would come, who called himself Franciscus, and would pretend to be a physician, and could speak many languages, and wanted to be a highly famous astrologer; thus his person was finely described, that he had yellow hair, item, well dressed, would also be a polite and experienced man; he should beware of him, because he intended to kill him with poison.

2 Doctor Luther has been waiting diligently for this guest; but over a year ago, one came from Prague to Wittenberg, and joined D. Luther's good friends and became known to him; he wanted to throw a ring or a bismuth apple into a cup and drink to Doctor Luther. Luther's good friends and became acquainted with him; he let himself be heard that he wanted to throw a ring or a bismuth apple into a cup and drink to Doctor Luther. If there were poison in the cup, it should not harm him, for he wanted to take an antidote for it. Since he now came under the suspicion of many, as if he were Franciscus from Poland, he was warned to flee the city, which he did.

Not long after, a Jew came to Wittenberg to the Aurogallo, and wanted to have the doctor's confession 1) through him, pretended to be an astrologer, also wanted to know many languages, and had all the signs on him that those from Breslau had previously written about Franciscus from Poland; only his hair was brown. Now D. Luther had thought that he had dyed his hair so, and had him imprisoned and washed with sharp lye. When the Jew was frightened by this and did not know why he had been washed, although his hair remained brown and he was found innocent, he was made to swear an oath and released from prison.

The impostor came from Poland to Wittenberg over five years ago, was well dressed, and came to Philipp Melanchthon's inn, because he had heard that Philipp Melanchthon was interested in astrology. Because he had let himself be heard against Philipp Melanchthon, he wanted to see D. Luther and make friendship with him, so Philipp Melanchthon asked D. Luther to be his guest. Over the table, the Pole told many princes and lords about Gnesen [genesis == sign of birth (?)] by heart, and said his Judicium on it, and also talked about the Turkish and Tartar religion; for he had traveled through almost the whole world, and could be quite friendly to the people, was also of such sweet, funny conversation, that everyone could tell him the truth.

1) That is, acquaintance.

The man listened with pleasure, and Doctor Luther himself bore a great favor to him.

5. But as the doctor left such a supper, and on the way was very surprised about this man's politeness, arts, kindness and skill, and came to the monastery at his stairs, the doctor remembered what had been written to him by those in Breslau (and the doctor said that the angels must have given it to him and reminded him, otherwise he would have forgotten it), because all the signs agreed, and the rogue had also said to him: Doctor, can you play chess, I will come to you and play with you. But the doctor had traveled to Torgau early in the morning and ordered in the monastery that he should not be let in. While the doctor was in Torgau, the Pole came to the monastery and asked where the doctor had his bedchamber, and had diligently investigated other opportunities.

When this was reported to the doctor in his return, he sent for Philip Melanchthon and the captain of Wittenberg, and revealed to them his suspicion and suspicion of this Franciscus, that he would come to Wittenberg to strangle him. Then the same Franciscus was summoned before the captain and this was held against him. But he denied it to the highest degree, also excused himself, he was not a Jew, also offered himself, he wanted to reject the prepuce, and pretended that he had come to Wittenberg because he wanted to have a bible printed in seven languages there. Since the captain now let him come with good from him, and the rumor of his knavery

When the war broke out, and he came under suspicion of such treason from honest people who even spoke out against him, he secretly rolled away from Wittenberg again.

7 And Doctor Martin Luther said in response: he believed that many of you had been sent to Wittenberg to kill him, but God had frightened these boys so that they would not have had to harm him. He also said that he truly believed that the chairs and backrests on which he preached were often poisoned, and that the Almighty God miraculously protected him.

8) D. Mart. Luther also said the same time in Eisleben that he believed he had often drunk poison, and it did not have to harm him. And he had certainly gotten poison, since he had once been in a convivium in Wittenberg, and went home at night, he became ill in bed, and felt great pain, began to break three times in a row, and soon after had six great sedes; in the same hour he also got a violent thin catharr, followed by an immense great sweat, which had stunk very badly. There had not been a single hole in his whole body where something had not come out. But it had not harmed him, for he was quite healthy in the morning and very merry afterwards. And said D. Mart. Luther said: I believe God thought: You want to forgive him 1) and kill him, so I will make it a purgation for him.

1) In the old edition "him". But "forgive" [vergiften] is transivum and requires the accusative.

The third chapter.

From the Imperial Diet in Augsburg Anno 1518 and the Augsburg world-famous events between the papal legate Cajetan and Luther

First Section.

About the Reichstag itself and the actions and transactions concerning religion that took place there.

164 Emperor Maximilian I requires the prelate of the church at Herrenalb to attend an Imperial Diet at Augsburg scheduled for St. Catharine's Day (Nov. 25) 1517. Oct. 1, 1517.

This document is found in the äoenmentu mormsteriorurn VirtenberAensiruD, Theil II, p. 212. - It actually does not belong here, but we have retained it to preserve equal counting with Walch. In the old edition, it has the completely inverted heading: Wie der Kaiser Maximilian I. diesen Reichs

The first day of the year was announced mostly at the instigation of the papists, in order to have Luther publicly declared a heretic. This document is dated October 1, 1517, but Luther did not appear in public until October 31. This Reichstag is postponed to the year 1518 (Tentzel 1,60).

Wür Maximilian, by the Grace of God elected Roman Emperor, at all times Merer of the Empire, in Germania, in Hungeren, Dalmatia, Croatia 2c. We offer Our Grace and All Good to the Most Reverend Abbot of the House of God at Herrnalb. Our dear and dear Abbot, the princes, rulers and sovereigns of the Holy Roman Empire have described before you at the Imperial Diet in Maintz, out of the misfortunes which have befallen us and the Holy Roman Empire and which are still before us, as has been seen and warranted, and have therefore raised us out of our Lower Burgundian lands and invited us up to the Rhine, But the princes, rulers and sovereigns had still arrived in small numbers in our time, and yet the need appeared to us through great conspiracy, practices, and the actions of our and the empire's repugnant and disobedient rulers, and it became clear from day to day that we should not allow ourselves to be deceived for the sake of such a thing.

For the sake of necessity, conspiracy, practices and deeds, to wait out the same besides the action of the Imperial Diet, which is to be discussed and promoted, we have gone up to Swabia, have left our councillors and authorities in action with the princes, princes and sovereigns at Maintz, and through them have promoted and advertised our and the Holy Roman Empire's necessities and obligations, as is known. 1) However, because such our advocacy and solicitation could not take place or be successful, and therefore we had to turn our and the kingdom's necessities and obligations into another way, and allowed the princes, princes and sovereigns (to spare their persons and property) from the day at Maintz on, they wrote us a letter and reminded us of it, how they could not nor would not, before their departure, have thought 2) of what might give cause and possibility to our and the Holy Roman Empire's obligatory and otherwise pending grievous outrages in the German Nation, and that, if they did so, they would not be able to change their minds, except that they arose from two or three foundations or roots. Namely, from the rights, uniqueness, and security that they subsequently specified in two, namely twenty-eight hundred articles (therefore all things 3) and a number of the three pieces mentioned above), and therein stated what disgrace, insult, complaint, untruth, tail, schedules, checks and

1) The following, about a columnne, is also found in Tentzel's "Historische Bericht", Vol. I, p. 57 ff, but in a frequently different spelling. Tentzel says that the Emperor took this passage from the petition addressed to the Emperor by the German Estates from the Imperial Diet at Mainz.

2) In Walch's old edition: nachgedenckhen.

3) Tentzel: Causes.

The laws of the Holy Roman Empire, the princes and rulers of the German Nation, but also all lesser sovereigns, both religious and secular, widows and orphans, advisers, travellers and merchants, for the sake of these three causes and shortcomings, are incumbent upon us alone, 1) where it is not to be seen, nor to be assumed and averted, that nothing else may result from it, than the destruction and ruin of the Holy Roman Empire, of all of its sovereignty and of the German Nation, and whereupon we are under the highest and most solemn command and are urged to do so, to take these things to heart, to exemplify and give us examples from past histories, to look at and consider the present situation, to advise and help, so that all these things may be seen to be done, and that they may be met and remedied in a proper manner, or at least turned to the least possible advantage, with a request as to what advice and help they may be able to give, so that no lack of property may appear or become apparent to them. 2c., with further content of the 3) Electorate, Princes, Sovereigns and Administrations' writs, which we not only highly appreciate, but also have and still have much mercy on, in humble gratitude to the Almighty, so that his grace may be extended to our and the Holy Roman Empire's Electors, Princes, Sovereigns and Sovereigns, and princes and sovereigns to such early and necessary considerations and counsels, as well as to such kindnesses and faithfulnesses (so that we may have long been here, but which we have never been able to raise), and that his grace will confirm that, if he has thus interceded in you, such wills and kindnesses of ours as we bear in these matters, We have given the princes, princes and sovereigns notice by letter from this time on to the princes of Mainz, and have asked them, for the sake of the court, to rise up from Maintz by their councils and authorities and to go to Augsburg, since we have left our councillors behind us to take up such actions and to continue until they arrive, and a beginning may have been made, after the growing troublesome times, which we have had from the infidels, that the kingdom of hunger and afterward our inheritance must also be taken down to our principality of Austria, because of our other needy affairs, since we are now shortly to be transferred and advised, the may-

1) Tentzel: oblegen wäm

2) Tentzel: mynst büß

3) "the" is missing in Tentzel.

4) In the old edition: and.

(Although unwillingly and with difficulty, but according to the truth and truthfulness, credible information and intelligence about the Turkish attack they recently had on the king of Babilonia, how they completely destroyed him, exterminated him, and conquered all his land and power from him, They have also greatly exhausted the sovereign of Persia, pressed for the holy land of our Lord Jesus Christ with a mighty hand, obtained it and more for their will, and that from this it is no other matter and burdensome to care for and wait for, then when they have accomplished and executed their will in the same mighty places, they will get their sighing defiance into the imperial territory, and for the time being our mighty and tyrannical interventions and practices against Christendom (unless the matters are faithfully considered, and the same are met with unwarranted force and consolation) will be hard to resist before them, whereupon our Holy Father the Pope has also decreed for our holy Christian churches, and for this reason he requests our help and protection, as well as that of other Christian kings, Because we have been informed by our councillors of the day and the departure from Mainz, that the princes, rulers, sovereigns and rulers may not, out of their own authority, have been forced to come up to Augsburg, but have previously requested that they should not be misled and should comply with our councillors from Augsburg. Accordingly, in consideration and mercy of the princes, sovereigns, saints, and councils, the act, petition, and offer of the Diet of Mainz, as set forth in the foregoing letter of theirs, and in consideration of our good faith and willingness to do so, together with the unspeakable grievances and grievances which we, the Holy Roman Empire of the German Nation, and the common Christendom, have before us from all the above-mentioned men and words, and from the towers. We have therefore considered and accepted the necessity of a new Imperial Diet, which we hereby appoint for you and for other saints on St. Catherine's Day, that is, the fifth and twentieth day of the month of November, the ninth of July, in the city of Augsburg, both ours and the empire's, but we intend to spare your and other saints' persons and expenses as much as possible. We therefore recommend to you with all seriousness that you first and foremost secure your authority at the appointed Diet, with full authority and power, together with our and other Stendt councillors and authorities, who have been appointed above.

We have the right to consider and discuss the matters of the council and to agree and compare them until a decision is reached, and if between these acts we personally attend such a Diet and require you and others with your persons, which we will certainly do, then you personally will also hasten to take action against all hindrances, in such emergency acts, and to carry them out and perform them. And so, first of all, by your authority and following people, you personally do not refrain from such necessary actions, but prove yourself obedient and faithful to us and to the Holy Roman Empire, and also keep yourself in accordance with the actions of the curates, princes, sovereigns, and authorities, the actions and the actions (to be done to us in Mainz), and do not deny them, nor do you give anyone else cause for them to do so by your failure to do so. As we have graciously comforted and relied upon you for our needs and the needs of the Holy Roman Empire and the common Christianity, we will also consider and acknowledge this in all graces toward you. Given in our city of Baden in Austria on the first day of October, Anno Domini in the seventeenth, of our kingdoms of the Roman in the twentieth and thirtieth, and of the Hunger in the eighth and twentieth.

Ad mandatum Cesaree Majestatis proprium.

A. The imperial estates make great complaints to the emperor about the Roman court.

165. complaints of the German nation, with the means and counsel against them, to Emperor Maximilian, and the Emperor's edict. 1510 and 1518.

These complaints were handed over to the Emperor Maximilian at the Imperial Diet in Augsburg in 1510 and then brought up again at the Imperial Diet there in 1518. They were initially printed separately, then included by Flacius in his catzloZus tostiniu vsritatis, p. 469. After him, t?rstism8 published them in the second volume rsruna Mrnmn, x. 373. 373. wolf in his Isation. rnworud., p. 202. gvldast has them latin in the constitution. lnperial., tom. II, toi. 119 and German in the "Reichs-Satzungen" Theil I, p. 215 under the title: "Oravawinu Asrmanions nutionis, Beschwerden der Teutschen Nation und des Heiligen Römischen Reichs wider des Pabsts zu Röm Geytigkeit und Tyranny, mit ihren Remedien und Avisen an die Kayserliche Majestät." In 1518 they are reprinted at Schlettstädt euurn lieeutia imperatoris NmxiirüHau in otkeiuu LedmreriLNÄ ack iuererueuturu OermÄuue et Dex Aoriaru. In Tentzel, Hist.

1) In the old edition: with

Report, Vol. I, p. 36 ff., the complaints are found word for word, the remedies in a detailed excerpt. Since Tittel's translation in Walch's old edition is very incomprehensible, we have inserted the better old translation of the first piece from Tentzel here, and improved the following according to his information.

Translated into German.

a. Ten complaints against the Roman See on the part of the German nation and the Holy Roman Empire.

1. That the popes of Rome think and entirely believe that they are not guilty of keeping their forefathers, in whose place they have taken the covenants, pacts, privileges, liberties, and letters, given by them, without any contradiction, in perpetuity, but act and do against them without hesitation, at any person's instance and request, whoever comes, even bad, by all kinds of dispensation, suspension, revocation, and the like.

2. that the election of prelates has often been rejected and overturned.

3) That the election of provosts, which some church capitulars obtained with large sums of money and bought for themselves, is violated; namely, Speyer and Basel, whose bull of freedom to elect a provost was weakened during the lifetime of the one who gave it.

4. that the great ecclesiastical benefices and dignities be reserved to the Cardinals and Protonotaries.

5) That expectativæ gratiæ, that is, letters of expectation of grace, are given without any number, and often their many about a position to be awarded. 2) Therefore, there is much strife, quarreling, and legalism every day, and much money and property is wasted, since not only are great expenses incurred in obtaining the letters of pardon, which never achieve their effect, but it is much more important for all parties to carry out justice. Hence the saying arose among some: whoever brings with him a letter of expectation of grace from Rome, should at the same time put a hundred or two [hundred] gold florins in the box, which he will need to carry out the right.

6. that the annals are strictly demanded without any delay and mercy (even if a bishop reigns only a few years and departs with death). At times, more than one is obligated to give is taken away, because of the new

2) Tittel: "before a collator". Tentzel: "over a oohntnr".

The church in Mainz and Strasbourg is an obvious example of this.

7. that the governments of our churches be bestowed and given to the unskilled and unworthy at Rome, who are better shepherds to feed and herd donkeys than to govern and care for men.

8. that the old indulgences be revoked, suspended, and that new indulgences (with great murmuring and displeasure of the laity against the clergy) be granted and given to collect and raise money.

9. that the tithe is raised under the pretense of fighting the Turk, and yet no Turkish campaign follows.

(10) That the cases which could have been judged and ended in Germany (in which there are also learned and just judges) are brought before the See of Rome without any distinction, which the holy abbot St. Bernard also rejects and contradicts as unjust in his epistle to Pope Eugenius.

b. The remedies against the complaints of the German nation.

If it seemed advisable to their imperial majesty, the highest and most holy pope of the holy Roman church would have to be informed that it is difficult, even unbearable, for the German nation to suffer such great expenses and burdens from now on, to have so many annals to confirm archbishops and bishops, especially since they are supposed to be increased in some bishoprics and even doubled in some. For the Mainz see, as it is said, formerly had only 10,000 florins, and since an elected bishop did not want to give them there, and insisted firmly on this until his end, the one elected after him, who wanted to have the confirmation soon, did not want to resist the papal see, but offered the old sum, namely 10,000 florins. However, he was not able to obtain such confirmation, so he would also give up the 10,000 florins still in arrears from his ancestor. Thus he had to give 20,000 florins, which were undoubtedly entered into the chamber account (or register) in such a way that they were demanded from all archbishoprics up to our time, not only 20,000 florins, but even 25,000, because of new offices and new servants of the popes. Finally, 27,000 florins were demanded by the archbishop.

Bishop Jacob recently had to pay, as the ecclesiastical vicar of Mainz has told. Thus, in the life of a man, 25,000 (that is, 175,000 florins) of the mere archbishopric of Mainz came to Rome seven times for the confirmation of the archbishop. And since Archbishop Jacob held his see for barely four years, the lord Uriel, elected after him, had to pay at least 24 or 25,000 florins as well, of which he borrowed about half from merchants; to pay which he had to impose an assessment or subsidy on his poor subjects and peasants, some of whom have not yet paid off the previous tax or assessment because of the episcopal mantle purchased by the ancestor Jacob. And so our people will not only be oppressed and made beggars (as the most venerable Lord Bernardinus, Cardinal of St. Creuzo and recent legate, well knows), but will also be stirred up to rebellion and, as far as possible, to create freedom for themselves, and will talk at every opportunity about how they want to go along with the clergy.

2 The pope will also have to be reminded that the lands of the Germans have been devastated from time to time by many wars, and the number of the living has been reduced by frequent deaths. Thus the fields lie desolate here and there because of fewer buyers, and the customs duties have also been cut by all kinds of cases, and the mines exhausted, so that the income falls daily, of which the archbishops and bishops (who otherwise also have a lot to spend on honest and necessary expenses) may submit the annals to the apostolic see. At the end of his life, Archbishop Jacob said, not without reason, that his death would not hurt him as much as if his poor subjects had to pay a heavy tax again after his death because of the coat.

3 As a kind father who loves his children, and as a faithful and wise shepherd, let the pope deal more gently with his sons of the German nation, so that persecution does not soon befall all the priests of Christ, or most of them, like the Bohemians, fall away from the Roman Church. At least he would like to act less harshly when an archbishop or bishop has reigned only a few years, as happened with the Bamberg bishops, three of whom died within a few years. How did it go with many other bishoprics? because Germany (according to Aeneae Sylvii testimony) has more than fifty bishoprics; how with the abbots? some of which are confirmed in Rome. Assuming that in Germany there would be a greater income from goods, mines and customs,

Imperial Majesty and the other princes would need treasure and war costs against the enemies, especially the infidels, and to maintain peace in Germany and to let justice be done to everyone, for which the Royal Court of Appeal, which has been ordered quite sacredly at great expense, is extremely useful. Moreover, the imperial majesty needs money to restrain the rebels in the empire and to exterminate the disturbers of the peace and highwaymen, some of whom are not afraid to attack the churches, to plunder their goods, and even to attack and act mercilessly against the clergy.

Finally, our nation needs gold and money not only to rebuild churches and monasteries, but also for hospitals, foundlings, widows, childbeds, orphans, poor girls (so that they do not fall into traps), for the poor of the house, the elderly, as well as sickly persons, even those who are unclean in body, of whom Germany, unfortunately, has a great deal, which is also otherwise populous, because it is not averse to the female sex.

c. Funds for the imperial cities and welfare of souls.

1. If, by order of Her Imperial Majesty, it were obtained from the apostolic see (which the Archbishop of Mainz, Uriel, has obtained) that no one in imperial cities had canonries or vicarages in different churches of one city, but that all had theirs separately and distributed, There would be fewer disputes, the commonwealth would have more benefit, more learned persons useful to the realm and faith could be promoted, more masses could be read, and the entire church service could be conducted more freshly and commendably, as the examples of Basel and Speyer could be cited. For in both cities, according to a quite holy usage, no one can have several canonicates or vicariates in different churches. Therefore, religion and worship are in good condition everywhere. And it is incumbent upon the pope (according to Aeneae Sylvii testimony) to diligently see to it that God is honored and that hymns of praise and thanksgiving are sung to him.

It would also be very helpful for the countries and the salvation of the souls if the pope were to order invariably that in every college there be at least two prebends, which are not included in 1) the graces and 2) the blessings.

1) of sndjootÄk, that is, which the pope, according to his grace, could not confer or give a claim to.

The first two theologians, or one theologian and the other a canonist, could only be promoted.

3) And that competent people, that is, scholars of worldly wisdom, of Canonum or of spiritual law and of the Holy Scriptures, should go the sooner to the pastoral care, it would be expedient that by apostolic decree the monasteries and convents should give sufficient and certain benefits or revenues to the parishes which are incorporated or attached to them. For this is what a pope (as Aeneas considers it) must see to, that the Gospel of Christ, which is the best pasture for the soul, is preached to all in a pure manner, that all error and blasphemy are eradicated, that wars are stopped, and that theft, robbery, arson, murder, adultery, drunkenness, carousing, hatred and evil are done away with. Theologians and canonists seem to be more capable of imprinting such things on people's minds than stingy Roman courtiers. Yes, even learned theologians who are good at preaching can, through their speeches, better preserve and defend the honor and reputation of the pope and the most reverend cardinals.

d. Council or suggestions for her imperial majesty.

(1) As the kingdom of France has its pragmatic sanction (or public church settlement with the pope), after which it goes into forgiveness of the benefits, so the Roman Empire has the concordats of the princes, and imperial majesty is concerned that they be kept. Since then, however, they have seldom been broken by the Roman popes, and the auditores rotæ (or assessors of this so-called Roman court) are said to have always spoken according to them. And if a courtier, by means of any papal exemption (dispensation), should dare to break the same, then the bishop or prince or council of the same place should at the outset defend him, and hold the Concordats in his face, and godly admonish him that he should not act contrary thereto, because such insolence could not be tolerated, and even Turks and Jews should keep faith. Which (Roman) courtier would be so foolish and subject himself to live in any city against the will of the bishop, prince or any other community?

2 Imperial Majesty could also easily learn in France through letters or envoys how the beneficia would be distributed there, and what the pope would have to say at such distribution. This could also be done in the Roman Empire.

that the insatiable avarice of the courtiers be curbed and restrained. If the excellent universities, especially the theological faculty in Paris, approve of the manner in which benefits are dispensed and forgiven in France, then everyone can believe that the imperial majesty and the German princes, if they act in accordance with it, will be safe and pardoned by God. For it is to be considered certain that so many and great prelates, teachers and honest men who live in France and at the University of Paris do not approve of anything that would be done against God and justice.

3. however, may imperial majesty see to it that the archbishops and princes do not separate themselves from them in this holy undertaking and do not make common cause with them because they fear the papal ban; for the people will not tolerate the common ban (interdict) for long.

4. let the Imperial Majesty also see to it or decree that the mendicant monks do not preach against them (their Majesty), as those who like to please the apostolic see, because they fear to lose their liberties or rights, of which it would be desirable that they rhyme with Christ and nature, although they would have long been justly authorized to preach against such avarice and such abuses.

5. may their imperial majesty also prevent the pope from ordering the electors to proceed to the election of a new Roman king, as against Frederick II, the landgrave in Thuringia, and William, count of Holland, have been elected at the pope's behest.

6. may their imperial majesty prevent that not the prelates of the church, especially the provosts, who have the duty to report to the pope.

May Her Majesty prevent our most holy Lord, the Pope, from releasing the subjects from obedience and inciting the surrounding peoples to fall into the lands of the Emperor or the Archduchy of Austria, which these people will otherwise do willingly under the pretense of obedience to the apostolic commandments.

8 Let also Her Imperial Majesty be mindful against the papal ban, which will probably not remain outside of our most holy Lord Pope.

(9) Let the Imperial Majesty also be concerned that the pope does not, by the most pointed little fingers, cause the poor simple-minded people to hate the pragmatics, and the simple-minded to hate the pragmatics, and the pragmatics to hate the pragmatics, and the pragmatics to hate the pragmatics.

He is building the church of St. Peter in Rome at great expense, and is also making armor and fortifications against the Turks in many places, and that he has never harmed anyone with his wars, because he is reconquering the lands belonging to the church or the inheritance of St. Peter, to which he is bound by official duty. Therefore, let the Imperial Majesty think about it and consult how to counter such Roman attacks (where necessary) with the wisest caution.

e. Conclusion and most obedient (faithful) exhortation to Imperial Majesty.

Her Imperial Majesty will be able to do nothing more holy, more pleasing to God, nothing more worthy of praise in eternal times, than to moderate such great complaints and extortions of the German nation, to thereby remove the causes for the laity to persecute the clergy, to take the parishes (some of which Aeneas holds of such high income as Italian bishoprics) out of the jaws of the (Roman) courtiers, who cannot preach, advise nor comfort, that it strengthen the worship, curb the avarice and excesses of the courtiers, and preserve the laymen's right of patronage in both the appointments of canons and the appointment of clergy in the ordinary months; that it also provide for the best of many children in Germany, of noble and bourgeois families, who study divine and secular subjects at universities from their youth; that they also attain spiritual prebends outside the Roman court, without such highly burdensome plagues and costly, even shameful, legal disputes, which can help the Roman Empire with counsel and action and the entire Church with their prayers. For it is no small cause why France flourishes so, that it has so many great and excellent learned people. If the emperor will curb this godlessness, and set Germany, which is pressed with such heavy interest, in former freedom, if he will open the way to prebends for learned and righteous people, then he will justly be called by all a savior of Germany and her freedom, and a right father of the fatherland at all times, He will bring glory to himself and benefit to Germany as if he had acquired a country by the sword, and the country will owe the same gratitude to Maximilian as it does to all those who long before brought the empire from the Greeks to the Germans and ruled in it.

k. P. Rasteriscus to Mr. Jakob Wimpheling, Licentiate of Holy Theology.)

Greetings and Hail! I send back to you, most honored sir, with this my faithful table companion, the contents of the Pragmatica, which you copied very cleanly and faithfully, together with the most wise Instruction for Imperial Majesty. May the faithful God grant that our sharp-sighted and prudent eagle [that is, the Emperor] may also tear it off from the highest pinnacle (that is, the Pope), just like the Prince of the Lilies [that is, the King of France], and keep it, so that henceforth the benefit robbers do not completely devour and ruin the whole of noble Germany. In fact, I cannot praise the matter other than highly profitable and divine, and in truth I praise your diligence and the Roman imperial majesty's zeal for the common nature of Germany most highly. We have (especially in these pernicious and for us troubled times) not considered it necessary to do anything of this or to add to it. I will bring back Aeneas Silvium from Germany's mold as soon as possible, either myself, or send him back to his master with a faithful messenger. I wish [you] to live always most happily, and to use your, although shabby and rough, Rasteriscus (that is, mine) to all your liking honestly. In haste, because this my room mate, a righteous, pious man, whom I command your kindness in the best way, talked into me to continue. Dec. 1, 1511.

g. To the Most Serene Roman Emperor, Major of the Empire, Maximilian, Jacobus Regius.

Since I recently heard that Your Imperial Majesty is getting ready to travel to Rome, I have written to their secretary, Johanni Collauro, to remind Your Imperial Majesty of some things that will add to their high honors and Germany's prestige, in order to obtain them from the Holy Apostolic See and bring them back. For I think that they can obtain everything, since Your Majesty will visit and speak to Pope Julius II himself.

2. Among other things, I have specially informed the secretary, Johannes Collauro, that your ancestor of most charitable memory, Henrich, Roman Emperor, endowed a prebend (which is therefore called the royal prebend) in the Strasbourg church, which infallibly all successors in the Roman Empire had to forgive, and should have to forgive, as your Imperial Majesty still today possesses two similar prebendaries, which her ancestors established in the church at Speyer by their own, the same right of forgiveness (or patronage). How, however, the Roman king obtained such a right in the Strasbourg church (if not through an interregnum), and how it fell to the provost there, I cannot know at all. However, many believe that their imperial majesty could easily regain the same right of patronage from the pope in both months according to equity, that from now on, for God's honor and the church's best, a learned and righteous man, whom your majesty knows, but not NB. a slave of beasts (such as horses and dogs), or of the cook, nor even a whore-keeper or boy-abusing lecher (sodomite), who knows neither scholarship nor godliness, be appointed. For your Majesty and all your successors in the Roman Empire know the lives and gifts of the people much better than they can be known to other such benefactors.

3. But it has pleased me also this [as] most pleasant and pleasing to God, salutary to souls, and most praiseworthy to Your Majesty in particular, if she would bring forth from the Holy Apostolic See, with whom such abuses are to be rebuked, by an irrevocable law, that henceforth no one of lowly origin or wholly unlearned, who, contrary to divine and "natural" law and contrary to the most holy canons, has two or three priesthoods under one roof, three or four prebendaries or canonships in different foundations, which lie within one wall or border of the Roman Empire, or so many fat parishes by some dispensation (soon would have said dissipation or waste), received from the popes, may possess them, since each canonry or parish church may honestly nourish a licentiate or doctor of one or both rights and of the holy divinity, that each one may have enough in one, and live happily thereby. I do not believe that Your Majesty God could accomplish anything more pleasing and more useful to Germany, not to mention that in this way pious young men, who in the higher schools have earned their inheritance with a lot of effort and out of love for the study of God, can be educated.

1) This document is related to what Tentzel, Vol. I, p. 44 reports: The emperor sent on September 18, 1510 his secretary to Jakob Wimpheling, professor at Strasbourg, with the crown of France pruAmabieu sanctions, from which the latter drew the best, and with an instruction (as Rasteriscus calls it in Freher) sent it back to the emperor on November 1.

The church would be better off if they could receive a portion of the spiritual salary, support their fellow heirs in the paternal inheritance for the common good, serve Christ and pray for the welfare of the entire Roman Empire and the emperor. In this way, competent teachers of the holy Scriptures and the holy Canonum could be appointed in all churches, and more easily reach the prebends, and other learned and virtuous people would also come to the inheritance of Christ; there would be no need to wish for the death of others and to wait for it, and there would not be so much quarreling and right-wingedness, with the greatest damage to property and assets in all of Germany, nor so much fraud. The innocent would not be so plagued by those who can do nothing but quarrel, take, complain and plague. Then those who can best move their neighbor or endure the longest in proceedings would not be able to cheat and deceive so much under the pretext of privilege, preference, first place, or regressus, and under the cords of instruments written by their own servants, and the youth, who should put their trust in scholarship and virtuous works, would not have the opportunity to wander about so much, nor be led around with legal disputes. The spiritual state would not stand in such confusion, nor would some, who were not fit for any work pleasing to God or useful to our faith, be disgracefully left to occupy many apartments (stalls) and positions in all churches belonging to an imperial state; and thus the parishes, which are occupied by strangers (barbaros) and sometimes hirelings, would be much better served with scholars, and the divine service would not diminish, and the intercessions for souls would not be omitted; the holy dwellings (places) would not remain empty, the wills would not be destroyed, there would be less loss of letters and deeds of the churches, the freedom of hospitality would not be in decline, the alms, the houses and other church buildings would not perish, the goods and lying grounds would not be alienated; there would not be so much displeasure and grumbling among the people against the priests, because of a few, most stingy and insatiable oppressors. And I am not the first to wish that the priesthoods become many. For Francisco Petrarch, an honest man, also disliked such impiety, who was allowed to write to Urban V in the following form: I have heard that you (the pope) have put a stop to the former ambition, which was cruelly increased by the former license, and that you are capable of doing so, with one or a few benefits, according to each one's learning and virtue. For what is more disgraceful than that some, who, moreover, have attained to it by evil arts, should burst with abundance, while others, who are much better, should perish from time to time from hunger and want? And the wise Gregorius Nazianzenus applauds with these words: It is a great disgrace to our religion and doctrine when the priesthoods are granted more by ambition and favor than by respect for gifts or skill. And Franciscus Picus, the noble prince, in his address to the Lateran Concilium, complains that the churches and temples are commanded to lions, sodomites and wolves.

(4) Your sacred Majesty will already know many other things, in accordance with her great wisdom, which will urge your Imperial Majesty to seek the cessation and moderation of such avarice from the Holy Apostolic See. May our Lord God graciously grant His help and assistance to Your Imperial Highness for the blessed government of the Empire and the spread of the Christian religion.

h. Maximilianus, Emperor.

As we have hitherto honored the highest shepherd of the church and the entire clergy, according to the example of our most beloved father, Frederick III, Roman Emperor, we have also graciously given absent clergy and prelates large revenues of the dignities and parish churches from our country's borders, which we also, if they were lacking due to human weakness, gladly wanted to cover with the imperial mantle with our ancestor Constantino. But since so much results from our charity that the divine service decreases, since divine praise, hymns and masses should rather increase through it: It is incumbent upon us, who have been unworthily elevated to the throne of the Roman Empire, among other things, to see to it that, in addition to the business of war and peace, we see to it that the churches do not perish, that religion does not fall, nor that the divine service is diminished, and that the departed souls, who have done good to the churches and priests from their wealth, are not helped too late, contrary to their last will. Which, unfortunately, we have evidently seen and still see, that it stems from some unspeakable avarice, which cannot be justified by any human being, and which, in conjunction with this, has led to the death of the departed souls.

The church service is destroyed, the last wills of the benefactors are destroyed, and the souls of the departed are saved more slowly from purgatory, the buildings fall down, the churches come down, the freedom of the church is violated, the letters and deeds are lost, the freedom of hospitality and alms are weakened, the inheritance of the parents and the goods of the commonwealths disappear through frequent mobs of such miserly people; clergymen, too, who because of their learning and virtues would be well worthy of benefices, and with their prudence could promote the best of the churches physically and spiritually, are repelled from the prebends, prevented from them, shamefully plagued and unjustly led around with legal disputes, give the laity annoyance, and arouse and increase their hatred and grumbling against other honest priests: For this reason we exhort and request, on account of the office of imperial majesty, out of love for the growth of the divine service and out of zeal for the common good, that from now on no one who has a canonry or vicarage in one of our cities and in the Holy Roman Empire hold another prebend in another church of the same city, if he does not want to cede the first one within a year's time to a capable person who is useful to the church; nor, in order to obtain benefits, disgracefully harass or lead another around by unjust quarrels or prolixity; nor falsely pass off as such a servant someone who has not been properly among his appointed attendants or friends (according to the Concordats of the Princes and Settled Points of the German Nation), to the detriment of the proper assigning persons (Collatorum); nor seek to deprive the laity of the right to grant, or to burden small prebendaries, especially where there are parish churches, with interest, nor use any fraud, cunning, false instruments, bribed witnesses or even concealed simony to obtain the benefices and bulls; nor seek to obtain a recourse (or reinstatement, recovery) or anything else contrary to the sacred canons, against law, equity, honor and reason, under penalty of the vice of offended majesty and our severe punishment, in which not only those who thus offend against God and all honor, but also all their assistants, patrons and contributors, who give their advice, help, shelter and loans, and all messengers, runners, negotiators, intercessors, notaries, guarantors, and other persons, shall be punished.

The people, lawyers and other friends are to be forfeited, that they suffer due punishment for such misdeeds and contempt of this order of ours. From Inspruck [1510]. 1)

Appendix.

If these reminders, useful not only to the kingdom but also to the church, were read in advance, which serve for peace and harmony among one another, they could also be added among many others, and the pope be notified of the fall and collapse of the houses and other buildings belonging to the churches and priesthoods: that e.g. one has been absent for more than thirty years from a parish of our fatherland, which until now has been devoted to the popes, and has gathered and received much and great income in portatis, or sent things that I need their words, and yet, to teach the congregation entrusted to his pastoral care, never ascended the pulpit, nor built anything ornamental in the house, as witnessed and shown before everyone by the miserable rooms of three servants of the sanctuary, which the least brother or shepherd would hardly consider enough for himself; Nor did he do the least thing more to the daily donations and gifts, or only donated a common memorial of his name; nor did he bequeath the least booklet in his will to the book room of the parish churches, or order alms to be distributed to the poor. To this one could also add that an unskilled and foreign Roman courtier, who is as badly suited for singing, sacrificing (reading mass) as a tame or wild donkey, as his well-known and good friend always called him, living in laziness and idleness, can thus gather more priesthoods in all kinds of ways, than a basic scholar, who is well suited for the promotion of the divine service, in disputes and for all council and defense of the Roman church. Furthermore, that a becker or cook, whore-keeper or knave, yes, with honor to report, a sodomite, who has rich prebends and parishes, thus enjoys and devours more of Christ's inheritance than probably the most diligent and faithful governor of a populous large parish with his most vigilant assistants, Yes, even chaplains, who in turn assist the same assistants, when they have much to do in administering the sacraments and hearing confessions, even in the canonical hours, masses and vigils (Metten) Absingung and in

1) This is the year given by Tentzel, Vol. I, p. 43 f.

to give a helping hand. Such assistance and relief will hopefully always be provided in our fatherland by six chaplains, after the right to grant such chaplaincies out of the kindness of the Holy Apostolic See has been transferred to the mayors of our commonwealth, who from now on will not entrust them to anyone who does not personally have their seat to await the service and fulfill the last will of the founders. It also seems to serve imperial intentions very well what the most venerable Bishop Erhard in Liège recently reminded in a most Christian way in the Princes' Assembly in Augsburg Anno 1518. 1)

166 Erhard von der Mark, Bishop of Liège and Prince of the Holy Roman Empire, writes to Emperor Maximilian I and the Estates assembled at the Diet of Augsburg in 1518, in which he describes the intolerable abuses of the Roman Court and humbly asks that they be stopped.

From Kapp, Nachlese nützlicher Reformation-Urkunden, Theil II, p. 409.

Translated into German by J. F.

1. To the most holy imperial majesty, the most reverend and high-born princes, lords, prelates, orators of the cities, and all the estates of this respectable imperial assembly, it is brought with due reverence and willing obedience, in the name of both the most reverend in Christ the Father, Lord Erhard of Marka, bishop of Liège and prince of the holy Roman Empire, as well as the entire clergy serving God under him and the holy Roman Empire: that, although many salutary things had previously been decreed in the Constance and Basel Assemblies concerning the granting of certain benefactors and the election of clerical persons to be regularly employed, nevertheless, for the sake of one and other things standing in the way at that time, none of these things had yet been observed and put into practice. The French clergy, after the end of the assembly at Basel, entered into a book certain points in accordance with the general law and the sayings of the Holy Fathers, which at their request, under the title of the pragmatic sanction, were confirmed by their King Carl the Seventh with the French 2).

It freely distributes the sees of the Kingdom of France and of the Delphinat, which become vacant every month, and also arranges the canonical election freely, properly and properly. And because perhaps at that time the pope was worried that something like this might arise among the Germans, he not long afterward sent Johannes, Diaconus of S. Angeli, to the church.

and Cardinal a latere, to Germany to Frederick the Third, Roman King, of Godly memory, and to other spiritual and temporal princes, lords, prelates and orators of the cities of the Holy Roman Empire, where the treaties made by you, Highborn Princes, and your German nation, were confirmed by the Roman bishop, with the approval of the entire Cardinal College, whereby this nation, although it had rendered as much service to the Holy Roman Church as the French, was nevertheless satisfied that it could also only grant its monasteries on a rotating basis, one month at a time; as these and other circumstances are more extensively expressed in the Bull issued on this subject, the originals of which are diligently preserved with the Supplicants. And since the Germans have held such treaties sacred and unbreakable three times, because they are subject to international law, and such treaties have been confirmed by the apostolic see, as has been reported before, everyone knows how they were held on the other side.

2. for there has undoubtedly come out of hell one of the worst furies, which Paul, 1 Tim. 6, 10. Greek ψιλάργυριαν^Λ, avarice.

or greed for money, as a root of all evil, and which has completely taken over the minds of those people who are generally called Curtisans, to such an extent that they seem to think day and night of nothing else than how they can prevent, ridicule and overthrow the proper appointment and canonical election in a thousand ways, and, as people who are otherwise soft and despondent, extort money from the Germans as barbarians. For there are so many pardons to be conducted under many and various adventurous names that a whole day would not suffice to recount them all. However, we want to tell a few, which we got to know with our constant danger, lightheartedly. Therefore, the Exspectanzgratien, the Commenden, 3) in which one can get to the Regularstiften,

3) Luther explains this word in the writing "An den christlichen Adel deutscher Nation", Walch, St. Louis edition, vol. X, 291, tz 50.

1) This is the following document.
2) In the old edition: "at the Bituricis".

arise. Furthermore, the reservations, which are of equal weight, or which bring in several thousand ducats, by which these brave hunters and money cutters, as sons and descendants of Nimrod, fish away whole monasteries, provostries, decanates, personatus, offices, canonicates, prebends, likewise parochial churches, in great quantity, and leave churches without prelates, servants and sheep of Christ without shepherds. This is not contradicted by the C. de nulla, nor by the Constitution Execrabilis, which also circulates among the Indians outside the clergy. For it holds the prerogatives and privileges with the most detrimental, strongest, most violent, unusual and such clauses, which neither the astute Chrysippus, nor the cunning Scävola could grasp, as which lie deeply buried and hidden in the heart box of the pope. We pass over those gratuities with diligence that have been devised to steal the private pens made for old and sickly persons, and easily give occasion for another to long for death. Next to that, new acts of charity come out of this workshop from one hour to the next, which are also granted to the servants of the Cardinals.

3 New confidences and secret friendships are also established, which extend even to those who have hardly ever appeared before the papal table. New protonotariates, new clerics in ecclesiastical matters, are introduced over the seventh number; the number of caplains is uncertain, except for those indicated on the epitaph. Every year new services are raised, although no one, as they say, is served by them; the annals or half of the revenues are made heavier and larger from day to day; the pens of the papal servants, even of those who have been dismissed from office and have died in the fatherland, are drawn to the Roman court as reservata, contrary to the express content of these contracts. However, the entrance and departure fees, the indulgence fees, and the auxiliary fees shall also be suspended by law in the simple monasteries, with the clause on resignation or death, even if they have not benefited either the ecclesiastical or the secular state, for all months. Is it not now in the day that by these inventions those, who should draw them in the proper way, are deceived? Thus, from an abuse of this freedom, some worldly wise men (philosophatri) of lions, whom they call artistas, have undoubtedly, by their all too much rude begging and pleading, although with the greater loss, as they say, of their many years of accumulated fortune, brought about the unheard of fullness of the lion.

The power to distribute monasteries of the otherwise not unknown members of this holy realm has recently been acquired by the dioceses of Liège and Utrecht, so that it seems as if the ordinary conferment has completely disappeared in all places.

4 For every ten years they demand two endowments from every collatoribus, be they of any kind, and be they as important as they want. They also undertake to squeeze two church foundations out of all monasteries, churches and collegiis that have something to give, at the same time, through the church censures accumulated in their letters, since hardly ever have so many foundations stood empty every ten years under a proper collation, which would have been much better served if they were provided with righteously learned men, who were capable of presiding over their office and creating benefit, rather than with such shrewd heads. Incidentally, the monasteries, against their knowledge and will, which were given away by godly kings to respectable and venerable monasteries, are often incorporated into other collegiis, monasteries and dignities. And since so many prelatures, honorary offices, churches, chapels, altars, which cannot be named nor counted, weigh down the conscience of the Roman Court, it attaches some of them to a more glorious priesthood for life, as if then the care to be taken for the pasture of Christ's sheep would cease, or the papal and truly divine bull would itself administer the offices and services incumbent upon it in various churches. For God does not allow Himself to be mocked, who knows that people's thoughts are vain. One sets aside titles of honor that dispute with each other, and makes one devour the other. How much strife and contention arise from day to day. For hardly any priest of the order grants a chaplaincy, lest every sycophant come here, disturb the owner, accuse him at court, fabricate a petty cause. The Roman court fights on both sides for a little money, and investigates the matter to our greatest expense, even if the whole estate should go to it. Finally, the dispute is settled and the sycophant, or false pretender, is reserved half of the income for his annual salary. This too is considered nothing special, that all the income of the priesthood, which is called standing, immovable (fixi), is given to one at court for salary; but one leaves him only the mere title with the incidental emolumentis for food and drink. And a wretched man is still raised by the hope that nowadays the payments, important as they may be, can be paid without simony for cash.

money. Therefore, our pastor, after selling all the household goods and gathering money from all sides, frees the pen, which is weighed down with large sums of money to be paid out. This is the way to empty our coffers. Thus the German money, to which even the shoulders of Atlas are not equal, flies over the Alps, to the amazement of nature itself. Those who have experienced it know how much money the overmatched annuities and the use of the pallium eat up for the Germans; although Pope Leo the Other, according to Platinum's report, forbade to give the least for it, and King Louis, whom the Roman Church otherwise placed in the number of the saints, likewise denied this by a royal order. Finally, consider for yourselves, most godly princes, how far religion and worship have been degraded by the robbery and theft of these monasteries. For even a simple ass-kicker, not to say a lottery boy and court orator or rabulist, understands that one has much to thank such noble and brave men in Germany with all justification. They are only shepherds in appearance, who neither with words nor works feed the flock of Christ, which care and office they entrust to their poor wage-servants with a penitential carene. But as is generally seen, they are not concerned with the sheep themselves and their salvation, but rather with pulling the wool over their eyes. They eat the sins of the people, for whom they neither pray nor sacrifice; honest and righteous priests, on the other hand, let them go begging to the detriment of the spiritual order. In your schools, people are lax, indolent and disgruntled, because unworthy people take away their well-deserved wages in front of their mouths. Mass offerings and other sacrifices of praise, which were instituted by your ancestors at great expense, have ceased, and the godly hands of the benefactors cry out for vengeance, depriving these money cutters of their so desired refreshment. If you, O most Christian emperor, and you, most devout princes, prelates, lords, venerable elders, wise heads of cities, have come together here for common benefit, we call for the sake of the German nation's common, not to say supplicants' private offense, which seems to be important enough, we appeal for help, and humbly ask you to enable our most holy Lord Pope Leo the Tenth, through your joint letters, to prevent this and other intolerable abuses, with which a large book can be out of fatherly love and vigilant loyalty to the shepherds, and to insist on the unbreakable observance of the treaties formerly established with the apostolic see, as we have thought above, may not arise, as you have all requested and desired from the bottom of your hearts, with the further decree that if his Holiness should desire to draw up and establish with you some other treaties more beneficial both to the said See and to your nation, he would communicate them to your distinguished assembly, otherwise you would be held above the common law and the statutes and decrees of the holy fathers. We do not doubt that he who is so kind by nature and instructed in good arts from his youth, who therefore knows very well what St. Gregory wrote to the bishop of Arelat, Vigilius, and said: As we hold over ours, so we also hold over the rights of any church. Far be it from me that I should offend what I have decreed with my priests in any church, because I do not mean well with myself when I do violence to the rights of my brethren. We do not doubt, I say, that the so long desired pope will give a desired answer to your so holy and blameless request.

167 Emperor Maximilian I's order, given at Augsburg July 2, 1518, to hold the Concordats of the German Nation in the Liège Diocese.

Ans Kapp's "Nachlese," Theil II, p. 417.

Translated into German by J. F.

Maximilian, by the grace of God chosen Roman Emperor and King in Germany, Hungary, Dalmatia, Croatia, Archduke in Austria, Duke of Burgundy, Brabant, Count Palatine, to the venerable Erhard, Bishop of Liège, ecclesiastical prince, our beloved, and to all and every collatoribus of the monasteries located in the diocese of Liège, our imperial grace and all good beforehand.

Because we well recognize that the treaties of the German nation, which were entered into and made between the apostolic see and the now said nation by our then most beloved Lord Father, Frederick the Third, Roman Emperor, have in many and various ways in this diocese of Liège, with your permission and approval, especially by the multiplication of the treaties of the German nation in the diocese of Liège.

The Holy Roman Empire and the German Nation are in danger of being violated and invalidated by the following abuses: the abolition of the apostolic pardons, reservations, unions, incorporations, appointments and powers of appointment, extended acquaintances, inaugurations, resignations and irregularities, and other abuses of this kind, to the greatest prejudice and detriment of the Holy Roman Empire and the German nation, but we want to remedy and counter this so dangerous storm and the rights of the Holy Roman Empire and said nation detrimental consequence, according to our imperial duty, in good time: We order you all and every one of the aforementioned, as well as all other princes in the Holy Roman Empire who have their territories or offices in the aforementioned diocese, and enjoin you by our highest disgrace and punishment set below, that you, as soon as you have received this letter, you shall without delay remove as unlawful owners all and any who, in prejudice to the ordinary collators and the treaties of the said nation, have invaded the monasteries of the said diocese, or have allowed others to come into their possession; those who have been duly legislated upon, and who have entered, as it were, through the door of the sheepfold, and have sought out the lawful and canonical possessors, and have made answerable to them of such revenues by your tithe takers and payers, and others, they may have names as they please, in a real and effectual manner, and for the rest, let no one, be he of any standing, office, or honor, as he pleases, by virtue of certain letters, or of the aforesaid apostolic pardons, or of other letters, even those issued, issued by us, or extorted by force, although it has never occurred to us to approach anyone in favor of the treaties and concordats, to accept him as an independent foundation, or to take the liberty of accepting him, of conceding possession, or of speaking about the revenues. If anyone should dare to act contrary to this imperial decree and will, let him know that he has thereby deprived himself of all the privileges and liberties granted by the Roman Court and contained in the Corpore Juris, and shall be punished by imperial excommunication and confiscation of his property. What punishments, if you should be guilty of them, which is far away, we want to demand them from each of the above-mentioned, by virtue of our power, and have the present edict duly executed. In witness whereof we have made this letter and caused it to be kept with our attached seal. Given in our imperial city, July 2, 1518, of our empires, the Roman in the thirteenth, the Hungarian but in the 39th year. Sealed by the king, and thus by the emperor's own order. Renner.

B. The papal legate is denied his request for money for the Turkish war.

The report of Achilles Pirminius Gassarin that the estates of the empire did not want to allow either the priestly tithes or the further collection of the indulgences to continue.

From Cyprian's Urkunden zur Reformationgeschichte, Theil II, p. 40.

Translated into German.

The more praised emperor started to hold a great imperial diet, attended by six princes, in the month of Julius, whereupon the tithes, so far imposed on the priests in the German Empire, and other extortions of money from the mob through the letters of indulgence, were completely refused to the Lord Thomas de Vio Cajetan, Pope Leo of the Tenth (who soon after was truly overcome from the Scriptures as the Antichrist and was quite clearly revealed to the whole world) Cardinal Tituli St. Sixti. Sixti, has been completely denied.

169: Raynaldus' excerpt from a speech delivered by the Cardinal Legate Thomas de Vio.

Speech in which he asks the Germans for money for the Turkish War.

From the uuuul. nun. 1518, toio. XX, no. 85 sqq. Translated into German.

The new and unusual name of the tenth, twentieth, or fiftieth part should not frighten you; they would be frightening to me, too, which I gladly confess, if they only occurred. But since they are not to pay the fiftieth, twentieth and tenth part, but only to deposit it in a safe place and with the condition that, if it is not needed at the appointed time for the campaign, the money will be returned to those who have deposited it, you will consider it something godly and holy, and not unpleasant for any Christian man.

So let them refrain from fearing, since there is nothing to fear; and from saying that this procession is only a pretense to dazzle the people, so that the insatiable desire for money will not be so obvious. We, they say, are the Turks whom they want to chase away and drive out of the country; the whole procession is aimed at us. Be calm, and first see how unnecessary and superfluous your fear is; hear how innocently and honestly one deals both with the first confirmed and with all peoples; we do not want to hold the office of treasurer or collector and have the money in our power. The pope does not seek yours, who is willingly and abundantly to distribute what is his among you. But why should we bother to show what the pope's mind is, since it is worth the effort to prove it ourselves. Find out for yourselves, and all those who are so afraid will find out, that all the gold and money that has been contributed is in such a safe place that neither the collectors nor the custodians will receive any of it, but that the entire sum will be used for the benefit and promotion of this procession, or will be returned to those who have given it. We are by no means trying to lead the German treasury to Italy, but the pope wants the German soldiers to be paid from the money received, and he wants the slightest fraud to be committed. Because you also clearly see that the Christian communities, religion, empire, temples, cities, are coming to your protection, they call to you for help and prostrate themselves at your feet. If you abandon them, you Germans will abandon yourselves, if we all stick to Maximilian's flag and expect protection from nowhere but the Roman Empire, even if it concerns your cause as well as that of other countries, since Germany borders on the Turkish Empire before others. For if the Turkish fleet can pass more easily through Italy, the Turkish infantry, on which all luck in war depends before it makes an incursion into Italy, must head for Germany; we would deny that Carinthia, Styria, Croatia, and Hungary would be front walls of Germany.

It is impossible to express how much the most gracious Pope Leo cares about this matter: he cannot refrain from these thoughts day or night; he does not deal with anything else over the table; he has a heartfelt desire to sacrifice not only what is his, but even himself, even blood and life for the Christian religion and the German Empire. Only one thing is left, that this imperial council announces the war campaign against the Turks and brings it to a conclusion. The Roman Church is waiting for this. All heads and members of the Christian community are looking to this most noble assembly. If nothing is agreed now and the matter is postponed until another meeting, all our hopes will turn to water. Be careful that such a postponement does not give the enemy the opportunity to make peace with the Persians and other neighboring powers, but that it does not bite with the German princes and bring the Christian nation into the greatest misfortune.

Consider for yourselves that this great assembly is the foundation on which the whole work of the procession rests; and if you hesitate long, other Christian princes will undoubtedly withdraw their hands and hearts from it and speak: If Germany, who is most interested because she gets her glory from the honor and majesty of the Roman Empire, who is also responsible for protecting the church, gives a negative answer and postpones the conclusion of one assembly to another, what shall we do? we will follow her example. And so, your delay will bring about the downfall of the Christian community, which is far away. As an excuse, many will plead the freedom of the absentees and say: "We have taken an oath to our church not to do anything that would harm its well-being without its knowledge; we have no authority to interfere with absentees; we first want to consult with them and present the matter at the next convention. That is, with your permission, as much as to say that we do not want to. No one asks you to do impossible things; to break the loyalty that one has to keep even to one's enemies is something we make up our own conscience about; we seek nothing but what concerns you and is within your power, namely to take a decision on a war campaign against the Turks, to think of a way to raise money without doing injustice to anyone; and finally to take a voluntary oath from those who are present that they will help faithfully and honestly so that the above-mentioned will be carried out. This does not conflict with the keeping of your oath and your duty; it does not exceed the limits of your possessive power; nor does it oppose the freedom of the absent. Therefore, remove delay from the way, for it is generally harmful and dangerous.

From this it was clear and obvious that the pope did not proclaim the holy war in order to extort money from the Germans, because he had

He did not want to send a penny to Italy, but rather that the German people should contribute to the preservation of their nation by a joint resolution of the German council; On the other hand, those who advised against this war allowed themselves to be taken in by the vice of avarice out of a mere impiety to the detriment of the Church, by refusing, as first indicated, to contribute any money to the glorious work to be undertaken and carried out for the restoration of religion. But by no means did Pope Leo try to enrich the Mediceans with the German money and to buy them new principalities for it, since he himself had in mind to advance with a hundred armed ships before Constantinople and had already sent envoys to various kings.

17V. Answer given by the princes of the German Empire to Cardinal Cajetan and other papal legates at Augsburg in 1518.

This answer came out under the following title: responsio principum Germaniae, data reverendissimis dominis legatis sanctissimi domini nostri Leonis X. et ceteris oratoribus in August. Vindeli- cor. 1518 per eruditissimum dominum Richardum Bartholinum Perusinum, capellanum reverend. cardina! Gurcensis in litteras relata. 1518. quarto.

Translated into German.

The Cardinal, titled St. Sixti, made his entrance into Augsburg with a rather Persian splendor, as befitted an emissary of the Roman court, for he was resolved either to return to Rome or to be met by the Emperor together with the German imperial princes when he entered Augsburg.

In order that the plea of the papists might be heard in the assembly of the imperial princes, a special meeting was held for this purpose. The papal delegates went there and were received in the second gate of the palace by Marquard von Stain, supreme commander of Bamberg, a brave and handsome man, who represented the emperor in this, as well as by the Cardinal of Mainz and other German princes. First of all, the papal letters and apostolic credits were read, in which the Roman Pontiff informed the German imperial princes of the great danger facing Christendom, and how much they were in danger.

that they needed the help of such considerable states of the empire. He also exhorted them to be concerned for their own honor as well as for the welfare of the whole Christendom, considering their power and the good hope they had everywhere. After various things had been said about this matter by both parts, the Cardinal of the title of St. Sixti gave a very delicate and appropriate speech to the princes assembled there, and after he first of all appealed for their goodwill and testified that they were good ambassadors, he presented the actual reason why they had been sent here; namely, because a particularly great danger was now imminent for the whole of Christendom. He tried to prove this from the many victories that the Turks had achieved for some time. He also took evidence from our own discord at that time, and exhorted the estates to undertake a campaign against the enemies of the Christian faith, because now there were more reasons to begin the war in an active way against this enemy than to keep it away from them in a defensive way. He took evidence from the prosperity, usefulness and religion, as well as from the power, bravery and good state of warfare in which the German Empire currently stood, to show that the estates were both obliged and able to do the same. He added that they would not be able to escape from this matter without the involvement of a disgrace, since the welfare of the whole Christendom depended on the present imperial assembly. In explanation, he cited the example of Emperors Henry and Otto, who had very often saved Christendom from being harassed by foreign enemies; and the closer Germany was to the Turks than Italy, the more zeal and vigilance they should reasonably show, so that they would not only look after and advise their own best interests, but also those of the general public. Finally, in the name of the Roman Pontiff, with many beautiful and thoughtful words, he exhorted the estates assembled at that time to peace and unity.

After the German princes had discussed this proposal together, they replied that they had understood the will and opinion of the Most Holy Father both from the credentials read to them and from the delicate and well-placed speech delivered by the Cardinal, and that they wished to make the necessary mature deliberations for themselves on this important matter.

The most reverend gentlemen envoys should already now give the Roman Pontiff the assurance in the name of the German imperial estates that they would contribute everything that could help His Holiness to defend and protect the Christian name. For in such an important matter they would never let themselves be lacking. With the next, however, they wanted to communicate a more circumstantial answer to this.

When the German princes of the empire had deliberated for a few days on what answer they wanted to give to the papal envoys (for so much time had passed), a speaker from the priestly college of Liège appeared in the prince's court and would have made a speech if he had not been forbidden to do so by the German princes, who at that time had various other annoying matters on their minds. However, they ordered him to put down on paper what he wanted to say and to hand it over in writing. As he had his speech 1) already written out, he handed it over immediately. But it contained nothing but invective and blasphemies against the Roman court. In it, he recounted all the intrigues, vices, knavery, mischief, and frauds that were encountered at the papal courts in those days. He testified that everything was fundamentally corrupt, that nothing good, nothing godly, nothing just and holy was found there anymore. This, however, and various other things were only mentioned and carried out because all legal claims to the benefits of the clergy had been taken away from them. The situation was now everywhere and in all things as the great thieves and swindlers in Rome wanted it to be. It had come to the point that one could no longer promise anything certain because of the many recourse, access and secret reservation in the ecclesiastical office. Expectations, revocations and thousands of other things were all the same, and it would not be long before the previous reservationes mentales would be transformed into reservationes pedales et tibiales 2). Yes, what was most intolerable was that the most stupid and wretched people, who possessed neither virtue nor learning, who had been educated only in the cattle stables or in the cookshops, and who had evil, depraved minds, would be elevated to the most important positions of honor.

1) This is the Document, No. 166.

2) that is, they would be turned into hand and foot cuffs.

in their, the Liège, order; therefore they most humbly requested and entreated the German princes to restrain the unruly outrages of the papal court henchmen; and as all this had been done without the foreknowledge of the very best and holiest Pope Leo the Tenth, they did not doubt that if the German imperial estates heard the complaints led by and to the colleges, those would be seriously punished who in such a way disgraced the Roman court before the world and deprived it of its prestige.

After this and various other pertinent matters had been read, the discussion to be held on the matter was postponed until the afternoon.

In the meantime, the papal letters that he [the Pabst] had given to his envoys were read. For since he had hitherto been accused by many partly of avarice, partly of arrogance, he endeavored to avert such accusations from himself, and to persuade the princes that it was so far from him that he should ever undertake anything out of ambition, that he would gladly leave the honor of defending the whole of Christendom to others, if they would only lay their hands earnestly on such protection. As for the accusation of avarice, he was accused of it improperly, since he had wished nothing else than that the German princes would announce war to the Turks, from which they would certainly have the greatest benefit.

(7) When the princes read this, they are said (as I have been assured) to have been very displeased about it; they also let themselves out harshly against those who scattered such seeds of dissension, since they now had to take care of public affairs rather than being able to decide what this one and that one wanted to bring up.

But this seemed to them, as the estates of the German Empire, to be the most indecent thing, since they were not afraid to write that the princes should be forced by force if they did not want to be moved by reasons.

Response:

9th When the princes wanted to communicate the answer that was to be given to the envoys of the pope, and which they had written in Latin, they thought it good to subject it to the assessment and censorship of the emperor before it was made public. However, as far as I can assume, it was neither accepted by the emperor, nor was it published.

The same was announced the following day in the following manner.

(10) When the envoys and spokesmen of the Roman Pontiff and the King of France, and on the imperial side the Bishop of Triest and the Provost of Waldkirchen, had met and discussed among themselves the answer of the princes of the Empire, they went to the Emperor. The spokesmen of the King of Poland also met. And after the emperor and the others had organized a session, the bishop of Trieste spoke as follows:

Most Sublime Emperor!

After the princes of the German Empire had well and variously considered what had been presented to them by the most dignified envoys and spokesmen, they had well understood that what they had been asked to do about a campaign against the Turks was a very important and precarious matter. Considering that this matter was of the utmost importance and that more time was needed to consider it, they thought that they could not make an explicit statement about it now. But as soon as each of them would have returned to his hereditary lands, each of them would consult his estates, and what they would deem good would be announced at the next meeting, which, however, was to be scheduled before their departure.

11 The bishop of Trieste presented this briefly and delicately, and perhaps with more caution than our condition and that of the times required. For he did not bring along everything that he had written out and with which one already publicly carried oneself. Therefore, it will not be unhelpful if I communicate here what was actually written by him.

answer as it had been drawn up in writing.

Since the princes of the German Empire had many things to consider that could not be hurried because of the great importance of the matter, there were three causes in particular that could be sufficient to prevent an enterprise against the Turks, if not completely, then at least to postpone it somewhat.

The first is because the power of the enemies is so predominant that at least from Germany fifty thousand men of arms would have to be provided for a war against them. To which end the annual pay and an incredible amount of food would have to be found.

The army would have to pass through Thrace and Mösia, where there is no livelihood to be had and no booty to be taken. The Germans would therefore have to rely on their forces alone, and not on others, to settle their accounts. After various other things, which could reveal the greatness and difficulty of this matter, had been presented in many and emphatic words, he touched on the following points

3) On the other hand, also that very modest and delicate thing that caused the most stir among the common man at that time. This was a main obstacle, because the priests and monasteries could hardly be made to pay tithes, since in Germany no place could be found that was not filled with everyday complaints about this, since up to now the occupation of the ecclesiastical offices had been such that neither the concordats or treaties of the German nation nor international law had remained unoffended. The other nations, the French, Hungarians, Poles, Danes and Britons, enjoyed their liberties without any offence; the treaties and alliances which the Roman Pontiff had recently established with them were held sacred; only the Germans had to be the prey of everyone, even of the strangest people; It is so far away that the courts of the princes, the free imperial cities and ecclesiastical estates are free from the deceit and oppression of the Roman court, that rather all their rights and liberties are curtailed, invalidated, abolished and destroyed, and even the episcopal rights are not spared; hence the so-called patrons and rabulists have gained their wealth at the Roman court. Before one could attain something certain and become entitled to a small spiritual benefit, one had to go through various burdensome procedures, in which each one was set up only for money-making, so that because of terrible expenses and great effort, the church utensils and altar cloths often had to be moved and sold. And it would still be good, if only this would help. For in Rome new canon laws and statutes were daily being devised; and if everything was lacking, silence was not lacking, whereby all law and equity were overturned. Hence it had come about that the ecclesiastical goods were completely exhausted because of protracted processes or many expenses (without which nothing could be obtained in the present state); it was also no longer a secret that one was even ill-disposed against the pope there. For this purpose

4) Thirdly, the complaint of the laity was added, which made this matter even more difficult. They said freely and publicly that they would give as little as the twentieth or fiftieth part of their fortune for this purpose. And if the princes wanted to force them to do so, it would be the greatest injustice, since they had already been plundered in so many ways, and their sovereigns had been led around by the nose by the Roman court. They should count for themselves how much war tax they had already had to pay; but they had not started a war against the Turks with it, but had been in a scramble to seize the money they had collected. He also refers, not unreasonably, to the annals, which are said to have been intended for war against the Saracens and Turks from the beginning. He had good reason to ask where these astonishing sums of money had come from, and what had been done with the variously advertised plunders of ecclesiastical properties? So that such a thing would not happen with the tithes demanded from the clergy and the twentieth part from the laity, which has happened up to now, and that would become a custom or rather law, which necessity once requires, they would prevent their part with all their might, so that such impositions would not break down.

These, then, are the reasons why the German princes, in considering such an important and precarious matter, must take time for reflection, so that first of all the people may be soothed by an amicable presentation, and then everything may be arranged for the undertaking and execution of such an important matter with due deliberation.

C. What edicts have been drafted from the imperial deliberations) and from the imperial farewell.

171: The Pope and a commission assembled in Rome sent a letter to Emperor Maximilian I, telling him how to proceed with a campaign against the Turks throughout Christendom. 1517 and 1518.

From Goldast's 6o "8titut. imp., tom. II, p. 127. - The proposals belong to the year 1517, the emperor's answer to the year 1518.

Presented and considered at the Diet of Augsburg in 1518.

In the name of God, amen. Since the undertaking of important things is very well thought out, Her

But since, when good advice is taken, it must also be put into effect without delay, we have also put the considerations that must be made about a very necessary campaign against the Turks into a certain order and explained them in a few chapters. To wit,

1. whether it would be advisable to undertake such a war?

2) Whether it must be conducted in an insulting manner or only in a defensive manner?

What are the most important things that can resist and hinder such a war, or how to remove such obstacles?

4. whether the war to be started should be waged by all Christian princes at the same time, or only by some, and by how many or which ones?

5. what preparations should be made for this, and where the necessities to pay for them should be taken from: namely, first, how to propitiate God; second, where to get money; and third, where to get the soldiers. With regard to the money, it should again be considered in what way it can be collected, how much is required for this, and by whom the account for it should be kept. With regard to the troops, however, it would have to be considered: from which nation they should be recruited, and how many foot soldiers as well as cavalry would be necessary. This would be part of the deliberations on the preparations for such a war.

6 As for the conduct of the war itself, it would have to be considered, firstly, by which route one should go to meet the enemy, by sea or by land, or by both routes at the same time. Secondly, whether the army to be formed should be divided into two parts, a sea power and a land power, or whether it should be left together. Thirdly, what route the army should take on land or where it should be brought to the ships. Fourth, where the army is to assemble, and where it is to attack the enemy first or foremost. Fifth, what arrangements to make so that our army does not lack the necessary sustenance. There are two other external circumstances that are useful and necessary for the conduct of this war:

First, how that which is conquered or captured in this war, if God gives happiness and victory to it, is to be distributed among the Christian princes; who is to do the pronouncing, or whether the distribution of what has been conquered is to Avoidance of all disputes should be postponed until after the end of the war.

Secondly, whether one of the infidel princes, who is afraid of the power of the Turks or believes himself to be dangerous to them, could be invited by us to take part in this war.

We have presupposed the main articles occurring in this investigation in their order; now let us make them again in such order and give our opinion about them.

The first chapter.

Whether such a war should be undertaken against the Turks, however.

There is almost nothing left to discuss on this point. It is no longer in our power and freedom, since our eternal and at the same time very powerful enemy has already made the greatest efforts, and will continue to do so in the future, to expel us from our lands and goods, and even to deprive us of our lives; just as he boldly and proudly lets himself be heard to say that now that he has brought the Orient under his control, he will turn with all his strength to the Occident, and will not rest until he has seized the whole of Christendom. Therefore, we must decide either to sacrifice our blood and lives to him voluntarily, or to let it come to the edge of the sword. Therefore, where there is extreme need, there is no room for far-reaching deliberation.

The other chapter.

Whether this war should be waged in an offensive or defensive manner.

There is also no doubt that among contending parties, the one who fights the other party hostilely is better off than the one who only tries to defend himself against an attack. For once it is a mark of greater courage and superior power to attack others than to expect the attack from them. The courage of the opposing party must always begin to grow more despondent the more one sees the one against whom one is to proceed hostile daring and undertaking. On the other hand, what is weak or uncertain on the enemy's side can best be recognized when the opportunity arises. And much of this will be discovered in the condition in which the Turks are standing, when our armies first come to the point where

The enemy's discoveries can be used for our good and to their detriment. Finally, those cities and peoples who have to think only of their own security have no time and means to organize that by which the enemy could be attacked in his own country. Such inconveniences are caused to the enemy when he is attacked in a violent manner, but they are averted from ours by this very means. Various other reasons could be cited as to why it would be more advisable to wage this war against the Turks in an insulting manner; but these can be easily guessed by everyone. However, two things must be kept in mind when starting such a war by insult. First, that the enemy is immediately attacked with such an army that can suppress him; second, that people are at hand and used in the war council who are familiar with the enemy's country and its entire condition. However, these and other things cannot be unknown to a prudent and vigilant commander.

The third chapter.

By what such a campaign can be hindered, or how such hindrances can be lifted.

The greatest obstacle to such an undertaking would probably be the disagreements and discord among the Christian princes, if there were already some of them or if they should arise in the future, which God, by His grace, wants to prevent. For the prevention of such a pernicious evil and the eradication of such a satanic weed, peace would, however, be desirable, all internal disputes would have to be put aside for at least one year, and after the end of the holy campaign, another six months would have to be added. Such a state of peace would have to be confirmed and assured by all princes of the empire in the most binding manner, and would also have to be increased and assured with the usual church censures, banishment, removal from the empire, deprivation of goods and liberties, in such a way that he who would interrupt this state of peace would be considered a public enemy of God and the Christian faith, but all other princes would be obligated to execute the set punishments and censures on him. If, however, new disputes should arise, they shall either be decided by the Roman Pontiff and the College of Cardinals, or the settlement of the same shall be postponed until after the end of the war.

It would also be more holy and salutary if a holy fraternity were established between the princes of the German Empire and the Roman Pontiff, and confirmed by both sides with a sacred oath, and also surrounded with the usual punishments and censures against those who would be tempted to break such a holy union; and all those who would join such a fraternity should commit themselves to persecute with all their strength those who would oppose it; and this fraternity could bear the name fraternitas sancto cruciatio, the fraternity for a holy crusade.

The fourth chapter.

Whether the war should be waged by all the princes of the empire at once, or only by some, and by how many, or by which.

We read in the Acts of the Apostles that after the outpouring of the Holy Spirit the faithful disciples of Christ were One Heart and One Soul. If this great gift of God's grace were now to be encountered among the princes of the German Empire, not only would the divine will be evident from an expected victory, but the whole world would also be converted to His most holy faith, which we certainly want to expect from His grace. Now, a certain number of princes who are equal to each other in power does not seem to be necessary for a single army, but nevertheless, for the sake of all kinds of unforeseen human circumstances, it will be good that at least two princes who are equal to each other in power and prestige, who are also in a true friendship with each other through God's grace, command the army. There is also no doubt that His Sacred Imperial Majesty and the most Christian King of France, for many reasons that we do not want to mention now, because they are known to everyone, would be more suitable than anyone else to lead the army on land; And if the other Christian kings or princes were not personally necessary for this work, especially because of the remoteness of their countries, their active help and support in people and money would nevertheless be quite indispensable. And everyone should be willing and ready to pay them, since he is a noble part of Christianity, has to thank God in heaven for his royal dignity on earth, and at the same time protects his own welfare while defending the general welfare. Accordingly, we consider that through such

The war will be waged happily if all the princes join together and under the leadership of two unanimous commanders. Just as these two powerful princes have already offered to do so, various other kings, princes and nobles have also sacredly pledged to contribute their utmost to such a holy campaign. And we hope that through the heart-guiding power of God the rest will also be moved to follow the example of their godliness and bravery.

The fifth chapter.

Of the preparations necessary for this war, and the means required for it, first of all:

Of Obtaining Divine Help.

As such a war requires great and manifold preparations, it will be important to see how we can be assured of divine support. For in God's hands are the borders and dominion of all worldly kingdoms. Without Him, nothing can be called strong or powerful. And even if we have to fear that he has been provoked to anger against us by our sins, if we take refuge in him with a repentant and penitent heart, he is still the same gracious and forgiving God who once looked upon the Ninevites, whom he had decided to destroy, with mercy and spared them because of their repentance. Just as He, for the sake of the sins of the princes and the people, once gave Asia, Greece, Thrace and Africa, along with many other countries, as a prey to their enemies, so we must call upon Him with all our hearts and ask Him not to inflict a similar calamity upon us. But the way in which God can be reconciled with us is to pray to Him day and night, to fast, to give alms, to sacrifice, and above all to bring Him a contrite, penitent and humble heart. For God is most pleased with this, since, according to the testimony of the prophet, He is not in need of our gifts and sacrifices. Therefore, our whole life must be changed, our hearts must be lifted up to God, preachers of repentance must be sent everywhere and among all nations to exhort people to repentance; the most distinguished clergy and prelates must be reminded to set a good example to others with words and works. If God has been reconciled and gracious to us in this way, He will also give us victory over our enemies.

The second is to raise the money needed for the war.

As for the money, which is the most indispensable part of the war, and how it is to be raised as well as preserved and administered, one has to consider first of all the size of this war and the great power of the enemy, which is certainly terrible because of the size of his empire, especially since it has been increased by the recent conquest of Egypt and Syria, which is certainly terrible because of the size of his empire, especially since it has been increased by the recent conquest of Egypt and Syria, to which must be added the great number of his troops and, as they say, the indescribable amount of money among them; Moreover, he has become proud and bold because of the manifold fortunes of war so far, that he thinks of all high and important things. Now, if an army is to be built that will either equal or precede him, a large sum of money will be required. But we thought that it would be sufficient to find a sum of eight times a hundred thousand gold florins. It will not be too difficult to raise such a sum of money. For if, first of all, the Christian kings and princes would make a considerable contribution from their customs duties to such a holy war, since this war concerns their own affairs; and if the enemy should gain a victory, which God would prevent, they would certainly lose far more than they spend on it. As it is said of this enemy that it is his custom to spare the common man, but that he is a sworn enemy of all princes and nobles. Wherever this enemy has ever gone, he has exterminated the princely houses, suppressed the nobility, and thirsted for their blood in a completely insatiable way. Therefore it is all the more advisable that the princes give up a portion of their revenues and customs duties, and thereby make both their own lives and their country secure; whereby we by no means prescribe a certain sum for them, but leave everything to their prudence and generosity.

The other two ways of collecting money depend partly on the clergy and partly on the laity. The clergy shall pay the tenth part of their income from each year; or, if it be deemed good, they shall pay the twentieth or thirtieth part from their lying grounds, according as their income is great; but what has been divested shall be considered as if different tithes had been taken from it.

would have been directed. Or (if it should seem better, and which should therefore be more carefully considered) one could bring all church goods into one estimate, but especially the goods and income of the monasteries, the cathedral and metropolitan churches, and let those flow an annual benefit from it, who are all time owners of it, as much as the maintenance, need and also moderate comfort of the same requires, but with regard to the difference of their persons and dignities, which accompany them; The abundance of all this, however, could be used for such a holy war. It will be necessary, however, that this assessment be arranged with the deliberation of prudent men according to certain degrees, so that those who have little income should annually give no more than the tenth part; those who have a little more, the fourth and third part; but those who have the most income, two-thirds or even three-fourths of their income. Finally, however, it should be seen that every clergyman has so much left that he can live in a comfortable and honnette way; the rest, however, could all be used for this. This should also be done by the clergy all the more inevitably, the more the possessors of the inheritance of Christ owe everything they possess to God, and their example will also inspire others to follow, so that they will gladly sacrifice what is theirs to God.

As for the laymen, they could, if they are of noble status. If they have hereditary and feudal estates in their possession, they may contribute the tenth part of their property to such a war. The others could be made to pay the twentieth part; but those who must seek the support of their lives by their trade and business should not pay more than their hand can manage and their food suffers. Indulgences will also be granted to those who attend such a cross or army march and defend the Christian faith. From these sources, if the war is conducted in an honest manner, a large sum of money can be raised. For faith is not a dead thing in the hearts of the faithful, and the heavenly fatherland is not always despised, but there are and will be many who will gladly buy eternal life for such a small price, if they otherwise recognize that one fights earnestly and without pretense for the honor of God.

This money can now, according to our understanding, be collected, preserved and calculated in the following manner. Once, that each full professor of a

The city and the diocese belonging to it shall appoint a priest and a chapter master of the collegiate church, who fear God and have a good name; furthermore, each diocesan of a city shall appoint a competent person for this purpose; and finally, each township shall elect one or two, either from its own resources or from the clergy, as they deem most useful.

These persons shall now send in the money in the manner previously instructed, and keep it either in a box or otherwise in a safe place, but in such a way that each has a special key to open it, and no one can get to it without the other; and they shall keep a written account of the whole sum in the most careful manner. And no one, be he of any rank or dignity, shall be subject to lay his hands on such money in an ecclesiastical manner, or to use it for any other purpose than the advancement of the costs of war, and that by avoiding excommunication and that surrender to the curse and wrath of Almighty God, of which he shall be absolved and absolved by none other than the Roman Pontiff, and only at the hour of death and after previous sufficient satisfaction. That such money shall be used only for the conduct of this holy war; and if by chance the war should not be continued, then such money shall be faithfully returned to those from whom it was collected.

But since the entire sum of money cannot possibly be brought in all at once, yet necessity demands that the army be paid its pay, it will be necessary to arrange a settlement with reputable merchants and moneychangers in each province so that they will take over the delivery of money to the army and also convert the incoming money into a cheap profit. And with this work, they will get heaven for their reward. It will also be necessary to assign to each merchant or moneychanger the provinces from which the collected money is to be delivered to them. This seems to us to be the best way to keep and administer the money. At the same time, however, it seems necessary to us that at least the third part of the entire sum be collected in cash right from the beginning, in order to promote the recruitment of soldiers the sooner. The rest could then be brought in with greater ease and paid out to the army in a previously determined manner.

From recruitment of the army.

The greatest strength of an army consists of foot soldiers and cavalry equipped with cuirasses; and in both kinds of armor the Christians do it before others. The foot soldiers, however, will be drawn from those nations that are accustomed to serve on foot and to keep battle order; among them are the Swiss, the Germans (who are therefore called national servants), the Spaniards and the Bohemians. Among them, many will have to be supplied with rifles, because the enemy has a large number of such warriors among his army, who are equipped with rifles. At least sixty thousand men of arms will be required; but the French and Italians will be best used as cuirassiers, and will likewise be needed to the tune of four thousand. Twelve thousand men of light cavalry will also be necessary, especially since the enemy will outnumber us the most in this kind of men. But we will have to choose people who are most accustomed to such warfare, such as the Spaniards, Italians, Dalmatians and Greeks. If such a land power, which has no lack of sustenance and is equipped with all the necessary armaments, is well led, it will be insurmountable, even with divine blessing. For the establishment of a sea power, however, the Venetians and Genoese from Italy, those from France who live in the province of Brittany and other regions, the Spaniards and the inhabitants of both Sicilies, as well as the kings of England and Portugal, will be able to equip a select number of ships and ships' people and oppose the enemy, as will soon be reported.

The sixth chapter.

What was to be discussed and accomplished with regard to the conduct of the war.

Regarding the necessary consultation on the war, which was the sixth point, the following is to be mentioned

First to consider whether to attack the enemy by land or by sea. However, a fleet at sea, and a powerful fleet at that, with all the necessary necessities, seems to be indispensable, especially since the enemy has already equipped three hundred warships and more vessels are being brought in every day, which, we assume, are to be used for the replacement of the cavalry. Therefore, it is now necessary.

that a naval fleet should also be set up to oppose it. If they are occupied from Biscay, Portugal, from Brittany in France, from Normandy, England and Italy, would be badly off if we lacked a considerable naval and if they are supplied with sufficient heavy artillery, force. This alone would make us half as weak as they will not only equal the enemy's naval power in enemy. For in this way the enemy would have soldiers, but will also be able to overwhelm or command of the sea. Moreover, without a fleet, the sea, each nation would have to provide them from of the sea, could not be sufficiently defended. Thirdly, its own resources to the ships equipped by them. we would lose a great deal of our prestige with the enemy and make him even more courageous and war would be left, and who would have an unlimited defiant against us if we wanted to wage war against authority, would be the two kings of England and him without having a fleet in the sea. Finally, we Portugal, both of whom, according to their known would be unequal to him in the entire war, and all our godliness, have offered themselves for it. If, however, preparations on land would be in vain, if we did not the King of England should not be able to undertake make it our business to arm ourselves against him at this enterprise because of too great a distance, this sea as well. For this reason, however, a fleet is entire naval power could easily be commanded by the necessary, and one that must not be afraid of the King of Portugal alone.

enemy. It is true that we will not be able to equal them. Secondly, it would have to be considered whether in the number of warships; nevertheless, it will be the enemy should be attacked with combined or easy, at least not impossible, to muster a strong naval divided forces and armies; and there is no doubt that force against him in another way, namely in the unification of our people and the joining of their following manner: A hundred warships can be forces, especially in the countryside, would be the brought together in approximately the following way. most beneficial. For a divided number generally The most Christian king has many of them in the shares courage and heartiness, which would by no harbor of Marseilles, and he can provide at least means be encountered by an enemy who is swarming twenty. If, in the same way, the Catholic king will be with people, and if he had his entire army together, a able to add eight more to the twelve warships lying division of ours would be exceedingly ready in Sicily, it will not even be difficult for him to do disadvantageous. To that extent, our army will not shy so. The Venetians will be able to equip forty of them; away from the multitude of enemies, nor from the and the Roman Pontiff, together with the College of danger that arises during the battle. Next, it will not be Cardinals, will endeavor to put ten warships to sea. advisable to attack the enemy here and there, but if From the Genoese, however, we will receive thirty we attack him or rather the enemy's capital, it will warships, as well as various other larger ships, which enhance the honor of our bravery and bring great they call carachas or galeones. The kings of France benefit to the whole war.

and England will also be able to provide a large. Thirdly, it would have to be considered on which number of such ships. For they have recently had away and through which country the army should take large number of them built. The kings of Spain and its march. Now a threefold proposal would have to be Portugal will also be able to contribute a considerable made. It could go either through Germany and number of such ships. However, each nation will have Hungary. It would be very convenient, however, if they to maintain this fleet at its own expense, and in some had reached Hungary, because then the army could cases a contribution will have to be made from the taken by ship and easily launched on the Danube general tax and war chest. Now these ships, if they before Constantinople. But this would probably be too are in connection with the aforementioned warships far for some princes and therefore inconvenient. Or with sailors from Spa-the route through Dalmatia and Illyria, which is not far from the sea, could be taken.

is occupied by many areas that are difficult to cross, and is especially inconvenient for cavalry. The third way, in which all these difficulties would be eliminated, would be if the imperial and most Christian Majesties with their troops turned through Italy to Ancona and Brundisium, from where they would have a very convenient entrance into Epirus and Greece. They would be able to pass through these two friendly countries. From Ancona, the troops could easily be shipped across; and once a part of them had gone ahead, their commanders could easily follow.

Fourthly, it would have to be considered where the troops should hold their assembly point, and where they should attack the enemy lands first. The army serving on land could, as already mentioned, assemble at Ancona and Brundisium, but those serving at sea could gather in Sicily, reinforce themselves at the ports of Ancona and Brundisium, and turn with all their might to the enemy shores. In the enemy lands, however, the port of Durach ¹⁾ seems to be the most convenient for the arrival of the ships, although it is in the hands of the enemy. However, it will not be difficult to conquer it if our land and sea power approaches it, since the whole shore is safe and provided with various harbors, and the matter will not be so difficult if one takes people who are familiar with the country.

The first undertaking of the army would have to be directed either at the enemy army or at the conquest of the city of Constantinople. One must immediately go for the main one, and if this is beaten or defeated, the other one will be conquered all the more easily. But this would have to happen no differently than if those who know our and the enemy's forces judged that we were superior to them. If this were not the case, we would not even have to undertake a landing, but would have to be content with the possession of what we have. But we leave this to the wisdom and deliberation of the commanders themselves.

Fifth, as for the provisions needed for the army, it will not be difficult to obtain them if, as we thought earlier, our fleet exercises dominion over the sea. For the merchants will freely depart and arrive from Murcia, Apulia, Calabria, Neapolis and Sicily, and will be able to earn all kinds of livelihoods freely and unhindered.

will be able to bring food to the sea. Those who live in Lombardy, indeed almost from the whole of Italy and France, will be able to bring all kinds of food to the sea by means of some rivers, but especially the Po, and from there it will be easy to transfer it to the other shore; but how it is then to be brought to the army is left to the good counsel of those who are present there. It will only be necessary to see to it that one gets in touch with honest merchants who are in good standing and who will arrange for the delivery of the food to the army for a nice profit; the title and the prestige of commissaries could also be attached to them by each local sovereign, so that they could carry on their business with all the greater vigor.

From some external points.

Of the above two external circumstances, and the first: whether a certain unbelieving prince, such as Sophi in Persia, could not be stirred up against the Turks, whom he hates irreconcilably? should not be unhelpful to discuss; but we cannot place any particular hope in him, but must rather rely on God, on our power and good counsel.

Concerning the distribution of what may be conquered, and so that it may be done so fairly that no one has cause to complain about it or to have a cause for discord, arbitrators shall be chosen for such distribution, The Roman Pontiff together with the College of Cardinals, or the princes themselves may compare among themselves and, after the war is over, decide what is due to each of them from the spoils, according to the proportion of the work and expenses expended on this war. And all others must submit to this decision, avoiding those penalties that were threatened above when the state of peace was mentioned. Or such a holy fraternity would have to be established, by virtue of which what has been conquered would be left undivided among themselves until everything could be decided and divided by appointed and popular persons. For to divide something before one has it for certain is clumsy; but to quarrel about it afterwards, after the war is over, is dangerous. In this way, everyone would soon be able to see how much would fall to him, and would not need to spend time in vain with other people's things.

1) "Durach" is Durazzo in Epirus, in ancient times Dyrrachium.

Up to this point, we have presented our opinion about each piece in particular. But now we want to add one thing and another. For if it were possible for the kings of Hungary and Poland to attack the Turks on the other side with an armed army, there is no doubt that this would contribute greatly to a successful undertaking. For the enemies would be frightened by it and forced to divide their forces at several points. For this reason, however, they can be incited and admonished, and offered the necessary help, but in such a way that the armament of the army discussed above is not deprived of anything. For therein rests the strength of the war and the hope of a victory to be preserved. If, however, without reducing the expenses determined above, something could be given to them by the remote nations, the Norwegians, Danes and Swedes, for example, for the maintenance of an army, then this would certainly be of better benefit to our project.

Similarly, if in addition to the army, which we would like to see united in its forces, as thought above, such a number of troops could be brought to our feet, by means of which we would be able to make an incursion now and then into the enemy countries, and also to occupy the fortresses everywhere well: who does not recognize that such would be beneficial to our undertakings beyond all measure? However, we maintain once again that we must first of all take care only of those things that are most indispensable for war and victory. However, we hope and trust in the Lord that there will be no lack of anything else. For where will one find a noble heart that will not hasten to join in this war, full of a true desire for honor? Where will one find one who is eager to see the world, who should not take up arms on this occasion and march against the enemy? What man will not be impelled by the hope of making spoil to turn with where so great a booty is to be hoped for? Who will prefer to display the specimens of his valor and other praiseworthy qualities before God and man than in so beautiful and holy an undertaking? To all these reasons of motion shall be added the honor and love of God, the welfare of the orthodox church, and the desire to attain the heavenly fatherland. The princes of the earth shall increase their wealth and prestige, the Brave and noble men contribute their courage and bravery, but all others contribute a part of their temporal fortune to this general cause, help to promote the best of God's cause and human society, and in this way acquire an eternal reward. Even if this enemy is very powerful in numbers, wild and cruel, we are still far superior to him in the bravery of our soldiers and in the good conduct of war, which is most important in war, to such an extent that we can certainly promise ourselves a victory, if God will otherwise graciously hear our prayer. Therefore, there will be neither a lack of money nor of brave men. They will try to follow the example of their most noble kings and princes. These princes will thus, through a moderate effort and toil, by means of such a victory, both increase their own fame and glorify the faith in the true God, spread the inheritance of Christ, and prove themselves worthy of being placed by God in such an exalted place; They will make themselves pleasing in the sight of God, and by such holy warfare they will achieve, besides the increase of their temporal fortune, an eternal fame among men, and their names will be inscribed in heaven.

Marching route.

The Emperor will send the King of Poland and the Electors with his troops, the German national servants, Bohemians, Hungarians, Poles, Danes, and those of the German Order of Knights, 70,000 men strong, namely 20,000 cavalry and 50,000 infantry, in good order and accompanied by sufficient heavy artillery, through Hungary.

The King of France will pass through Friuli with the French, Scottish, Swiss, Lorraine, Savoy, Venetian, Florentine, Sienese and Luccian armies, with 4,000 cuirassiers, 8,000 light cavalry, and 50,000 infantry, also with sufficient heavy artillery.

The King of Portugal will lead a fleet of three hundred large and small ships into the sea, among which at least 60 will be warships. This fleet will put ashore 40,000 men, consisting of Spaniards, English, Portuguese, Genoese, Neapolitans, Sicilians, Flanders, where it will be necessary, together with a large quantity of ordnance, and horses to carry them on land. Of Our Most Holy Father, the Roman Emperor

Pabst's fleet could now either unite with this fleet or supply food to another army that is to pass through Friuli on foot. This fleet can also turn to the area of Apollonia and Dyrrachium to await there another army of the king in France. If it should be deemed good, it can turn from there to Peloponnesus, or straight to Constantinople, or unite with the above army, if necessary, at the Gulf of Thessalonica, or go to Jerusalem and Egypt, since another army led by Hungary will not get far from the Gulf of Salonika.

Twelve million ducats would be sufficient for all these undertakings in a period of two years. Now, if the immediate rulers would give the fourth part of their annual income for this purpose; if, furthermore, the ecclesiastical princes would also grant a fourth part for this purpose; Thirdly, if those princes, commonwealths and other secular lords contributed half a tithe of their revenues, and the people paid the fourth part of a penny of every pound in buying and selling, and if the collections collected at the sermons on the cross were abundantly given and diligently sent in, it is to be believed that these five means, if properly used and administered, would amount to far more in revenue than in expenditure, that is, far exceed twelve million.

Consultatio Germanica, that is,

Consultation, which was held by the princes, princes and estates of the Holy Roman Empire at the Augsburg in the year 1518 held imperial days were hired.

In the name of God and under the government of the Holy Spirit, Amen! After our most holy Lord and Father Leo X., Roman Pontiff, together with the whole college of the most reverend Cardinals, also with the participation of the spokesmen of various Christian kings and princes, who have met in the city of Rome for the consideration of the present urgent need of all Christendom, In virtue of the pastoral office entrusted to him over the host of the Lord, he considered and seriously pondered, not without great mortification of his paternal heart, how for some time now the sworn enemies of our most holy faith, the cruel and abominable Turkish people, raged against the Christians, not only in the neighboring provinces, Aetolia, Peloponnesus, Achaia, Arcadia, all of Greece, Thessaly, Magnesia, Macedonia, Epirus, Eubona [Euboea?], Moesia, Thrace, yes, even Constantinople, the headquarters of the former Oriental empire, first troubled by hostile raids, but afterwards also devastated, filled with murder and blood, and finally even subjected to their authority, but afterwards even penetrated into the heart of Italy, and at times let himself be seen not far from the walls of the city of Rome, where the head of all Christendom dwells and the apostolic see has been erected; there he vented his fury, plundered, devastated, and then returned to his fatherland with much booty, rejoicing and exulting. Moreover, this most holy father also perceived that the Christians themselves, either out of a secret doom of God over our sins, or because the vast majority of them look only to their own self-interest, and do not care about the general cause, are listening to the groans of the wretched, the tears of the oppressed with deaf ears and closed eyes, and therefore no efforts have yet been made to oppose the cruel undertakings of this general enemy of Christianity, or to heal the wounds that have been inflicted. And although such things can still be regarded rather indifferently, since this public enemy had not yet spread so far as we now see it apparently before our eyes, over which also some of the previous Turkish tyrants were so much more easily carried by the Christian rulers, who, although they had brought some small countries under themselves, had nevertheless not yet directed their thoughts at all to spreading themselves over the whole face of the earth. But after he had imagined the present state of affairs, and considered how great and powerful this general enemy had now become, as being now not content with those provinces, countries, and empires which his ancestors had formerly taken from the Christians, nay, no longer content with all Asia and a part of Europe, but, after having made the king of the Persians small and crumbly in various field battles, also strangled two Egyptian sultans in a cruel manner, Assyria, Arabia, Egypt, and many African provinces, especially, as they say, Bugia, Tunis, Tremetz [Tripoli]? He also has an insatiable thirst for the blood of Christians, according to his own lust for power, is an enemy of all princes and all nobility, and publicly boasts that, after having conquered the whole Orient and a large part of the countries of the Middle East, he is now going to attack the Westerners, that is, to rage even into the bowels of the Christians, and, since no one particularly opposes him, to make the whole world submissive to him by force of arms, but especially to destroy the Christian church, which was founded by the blood of the crucified Savior Jesus Christ, and to subject the holy Catholic faith to the shameful impure Mohammedan sect, and to force the Christian peoples to abandon their religion, yes, to conspire against it with the cruelest tortures. To this end he has been made even more proud and audacious by the recent victory, since he has brought under his control even that land in which Jesus was born, and Mount Calvary, on which the footsteps of his cross are still to be found, as well as the tomb in which the most holy body of Jesus Christ was laid, and the fatherland of the blessed Virgin Mary and of all the holy apostles. All these places are now trodden upon by the unclean, shameful feet of these enemies of Christ, and are possessed to our own shame by those who, alas! have variously defiled and polluted their hands with the blood of Christians; not to think that the Christians have now been robbed of the opportunity to make pilgrimages thither, by which they were formerly variously comforted.

Now that all this has been well considered, and it is easy to see that the Christians are not only in great danger, since this strong enemy already has two hundred large and small ships in the sea and is preparing more and more of them, but also that there is an unavoidable necessity to fight with this enemy over property and blood, life and salvation, papal sanctities have considered that it is no longer possible to sit still or to postpone deliberations any longer, and with the involvement of all the above-mentioned persons, have deemed it necessary that a general array and campaign be organized against this general enemy of the Christians; They have also decreed that first of all the most high God must be moved by unceasing prayer and supplication, fasting, sacrifices, penitential exercises, by repentant and humble hearts, that he should not be mindful of our sins, but only of his mercy, that according to the same he should also be gracious to us, and that he should govern our minds and hearts for the happy conduct of such an important matter. But that also,

Secondly, that all wars, hostilities and disputes which have hitherto existed among the Christian princes and potentates be cleared out of the way, and either be settled by a lasting, honest peace, or else be set aside for a time by means of a standstill, so that each one may have the freer hand to arm himself for war against this enemy; Thirdly, everything that belongs to such an important matter, namely the manner in which this war is to be conducted, how people, money and means of life are to be raised and procured, is to be elaborated widely and wisely, and such advice, after it has been drawn up in writing by the unanimous consent of all the members assembled at that time, is to be presented to the most insurmountable Roman Emperor Maximilian, as the head of the secular princes, defender of the apostolic see and Christian faith, who at the same time has the greatest experience in matters of war, for examination and consideration, so that he, according to his wisdom and experience in matters of war, if something should be added to or taken away from this proposal, would open his insight and good advice.

1. Although the most noble Emperor, who was already aware of all the above-mentioned circumstances from undeniable samples, and who is also being increasingly confirmed in this regard by written and oral testimonies, has often regretted this state of affairs from the bottom of his heart, and has also often asked the most holy Father, as well as other Christian kings and princes, for help against this spreading distress, and other Christian kings and princes, he has often sought and requested help against this spreading misery, he has often discussed it with the entire German nation and his advisors, and from his earliest childhood he has wished for nothing so much as that he might one day have the opportunity to attend such a campaign: Nevertheless, the ambassador who brought him this proposal and the reports of so many distinguished men was very pleasant to him. And although he recognized that all and every article had been written with great understanding, skill and wisdom, he did not want to omit that his advisors, who were present with him at the time, read through everything carefully, examined it and considered it, and that what they found necessary to remember should be put down in writing.

(2) But the above-mentioned councilors, after having carefully and thoroughly examined everything, found nothing to be added or done that could be conducive to the execution of such a project; especially if the condition among the Christians were such that would like that the sooner the better such a war could be started and such a campaign undertaken. But because such a matter is so important and involves so much work that it will be impossible to carry it out in the coming summer; Since the German empire and people consist of many different countries, governed by many different princes and laws, customs and habits, and it is therefore not possible to bring about a general campaign at once and with speed, but it is nevertheless to be feared that the Turk, who has already equipped a large fleet and made astonishing war establishments, will not rest and refrain from filling one and another Christian province; The imperial councillors have therefore wished to submit in writing, with due deference, some of their proposals as to what should be done in the coming year against these enemies; what could be done in the next two years until a general expedition; what generals the army could lead, what people and money the cause could be attacked with: So that the present year may not pass without the slightest counter-event, and at least something may happen to shift his aim, lest he gain a firm foothold in the recently conquered kingdoms, rule them according to his own liking, allow himself to be worshipped therein, and also assault the other African kings and potentates, of whom he has not yet seized, meanwhile with war, from all of whom he would certainly extort astonishing sums of money, and use them against the Christians without any doubt. However, the said councils want to hand over their opinion in all respects to the most holy Lord and Father, and to other councils of Christian kings and princes assembled there, and not to deviate from the above-mentioned proposals sent to the Imperial Majesty, but to stand by them as wisely considered and reasoned. They are also of the opinion that, if in the coming summer no movements arise among the Christians against this enemy, the latter will in the following years curtail all opportunities for the Christians, and all help that could be expected from foreigners will be displaced, if we do not try to get ahead of him soon. Therefore, this matter must by no means remain suspended until the following year, but rather the African kings and princes must be admonished, encouraged and helped, also the Scythians and Tartars, by means of rewards and pay, to a general enterprise against the Christians.

The Turks will have to bring up the troops before the Turks get ahead of them. Since they lost a great many people in the last wars with the Sultan and Sophi, there is no doubt that they will seek to enlist new troops from the neighboring peoples. If the Africans, Scythians or Tartars could be hired by us first in the coming year, there would be all the fewer people left for our enemies.

The Imperial Councillors have indicated in the following how the money necessary for the war is to be raised, and in such a way that it is bearable for the Germans, although they are not at all willing to present this as a law and guideline to those princes who can make a better proposal for raising money in their kingdoms and countries, but they are willing and ready to let others find their insights. The order in which the war is to begin and the command under which it is to be conducted, so that the Christians are not allowed to be idle during the three-year period set, has also been instructed in the following documents.

(4) First of all, the funds to be raised for this undertaking shall be discussed. Next, how the disputes among the Christian princes are to be settled; by whom and how this can be done throughout Christendom; and also which of the Christian princes are to remain at home during the first year in order to settle all disputes. Thirdly, what is to be done in the coming year and then in the two following years. Each point must be dealt with in due order.

(5) First of all, as regards the maintenance and sufficient pay of a numerous army necessary for this undertaking, three years in succession, Imperial Majesty's Councilors consider it convenient and necessary if the whole of Christendom were to arrange for the fiftieth man to be selected by all families and houses in the ecclesiastical and secular classes and provided for this war; the remaining forty-nine, however, would be required to provide him with his annual sustenance. The maintenance itself, however, as determined above by the most holy pope and his councilors, could be communicated in the following manner: a strongly armed horseman or cuirassier would be paid six ducats monthly, those belonging to the light cavalry four or five ducats, and those serving in the infantry three ducats monthly. Such money, however, would be

The money could be collected if a florin or Rhenish florin contribution were imposed on each house or family every month.

In addition to this money, which was placed on each house and family, the entire clergy in all of Christendom (with the exception of the mendicant order, which has no certain income at all) would have to pay the tenth part of all their income and goods for this undertaking these three years in succession.

(7) Likewise, all those in the secular class, but especially those who have their own houses and families, must contribute the twentieth part of their income for this very purpose.

(8) All, both clergy and secular, including widows, if they have no real estate or income, but possess cash or other movable property, they shall be bound, though in silence, by oath to declare the sum of their property. If an estimate has been made of how much they can use annually, then they, as well as the others, shall pay off the twentieth part.

All manual laborers and day laborers, including those who serve other masters for a certain wage, shall pay half a Rhenish florin for this war. However, if among such servants some are found who either have income for themselves or otherwise possess money and movable property, they shall be put on a footing with those mentioned in the previous article.

Moreover, our most holy Father could send people throughout Christendom and have them preach sermons on the cross and the army. If, by means of such sermons, a king, a prince, or any other common man should be induced to attend this holy war at his own expense, he shall then be exempt from all the above-mentioned obligations and burdens.

(11) Those, however, who for other reasons are prevented from personally attending this holy campaign, may, nevertheless, if they have previously contributed their usual contingent to it, be made partakers of the fruits and benefits of this holy war in another way, if they have contributed something to the happy continuation of this war according to their ability and in true, zealous devotion, or if they have enabled others to make such a contribution.

The necessary number of soldiers will be easily gathered from the whole of Christendom, if both spiritual and secular princes, governors and authorities, bishops and priests, in their countries, provinces, cities, bishoprics and parishes, will take care that everything that is male is counted and written out from man to man.

(13) In the ordinary recruitment, however, it shall be kept as reported above, namely that all houses and families shall always provide the fiftieth man. No less can others be recruited from the collected tenth and twentieth part of goods and income. Regarding the money that is to be collected through indulgences and army sermons, the papal holiness, the imperial majesty, princes, estates and communities in Christendom shall select skilful, honest and prudent men, both spiritual and secular, who will faithfully administer the collected money and then give due account of their housekeeping.

As for the equipment and heavy ordnance necessary for war, the kings, princes, and other commonwealths shall be required, according to their ability and strength, to help each other out as necessity requires. The transport and government of these, however, as well as the corresponding powder, lead and the like, along with all other expenses incurred by the carriage, must be paid from the general war chest of Christendom.

(15) Perhaps it would be more convenient and useful in this war, too, if those who want to serve in it were partly taken in full pay, but partly also provided with subsistence, especially because it will be difficult to find so many merchants who can procure such a large quantity of provisions and food. Those, however, who have taken it upon themselves to supply the army with food, will have to be given freedom to buy out everything through the whole of Christendom, and even to buy, pay for and bring in what they need without delay over the sea. Therefore, it seems to be necessary to appoint commissars of provisions for this undertaking, both on this side and on the other side of the sea, who will be responsible for the acquisition of foodstuffs and will then sell or distribute them to the army.

Such commissions for provisions shall correspond with each other according to the nature of the regions, and thereafter give a faithful and honest account of their administration before the deputies elected by the whole of Christendom.

16. Since it is known that there are many and various disagreements among Christians, especially among various great and powerful leaders, which have not yet been settled to this hour, and therefore it could easily happen that one or the other could fall apart and become apostate when the occasion arises, it is nevertheless important to see that private disputes and domestic hostilities do not benefit the general enemy of the Christian name, that private quarrels and domestic hostilities would not be beneficial to the general enemy of the Christian name, but detrimental to such a holy and necessary campaign, while all others would freely and safely decide to undertake such an enterprise, but would by no means be prevented, stopped or even alienated by such internal discord and unrest: It will be absolutely necessary that all these domestic wars, disputes and discord, which are either now really pending or could arise, be settled among all states without any objection, or postponed until another time. Since it may be a long and arduous task to establish peace and friendship among all and sundry, let at least a six-year standstill be established among all those who have something to do with each other, the cause of their quarrels being as great as it may be; so that all Christian princes, powers and authorities may enjoy true peace and security during this time; and after the three years appointed for this war have elapsed, another three years may remain, during which Christendom may have peace, so that it may not, immediately after the end of such an arduous and dangerous campaign, be involved in a new war and be plunged into harm and unrest.

(17) But what is to be done in each of these three years appointed for war must also be carefully considered, since among the vast majority of peoples in Christendom there is such stupidity and inexperience in these matters, such irrepressible obstinacy, together with an awkwardness and coarseness in manners, that they either do not at all respect or do not even understand what belongs to the general welfare; therefore it can easily happen that when such a general contribution of the tenth year is offered, the tenth year is not paid.

If it is to be carried out from house to house, such people will be found who will resist with all their might, who will not want to be burdened with such a burden, but will prove to be disobedient and recalcitrant.

(18) Therefore, in the next year, which will be the thousand five hundred and eighteenth, (1) serious steps shall be taken to establish and establish such a general treasury throughout Christendom, and to remove from the way all that would oppose or hinder it. Thereupon all wars and disputes pending among Christian princes and potentates shall be set aside and postponed for six whole years; but those who oppose it shall be punished by the apostolic see with the strictest ecclesiastical ban, and by the imperial majesty with the imperial ban and disgrace. Should any of them resist in an audacious manner and persist in his recalcitrance, he shall be warred against with arms by all other Christian princes as a pacifist and punished according to the law. In such execution against the recalcitrant and the disturbers of the peace, the Most Serene King of France shall have the upper hand, and he shall especially enjoin those princes and peoples of Christendom who live towards morning and towards midnight or who border on his kingdom, even against their will and by means of coercion, to pay the contribution as well as to enter into the standstill for six years. Those, however, who live further towards evening and midnight, shall be held to their duty by the Most Serene King of England, as he will bring these decrees to execution in the same whole area. Whoever shall dare to break such a desired retirement shall be severely punished for it. Finally, those who live from the evening until noon, if they should be tempted to interrupt such a general settlement, will be chastised by our most holy Lord and Father, the Roman Pontiff, either directly, or by the standard-bearers of the apostolic see, as their recalcitrance deserves.

19 Therefore, it does not seem to be a bad thing if, in order to calm down all the unrest that could easily arise, as was thought before, first of all the two most illustrious kings of

1) Here, it is evident that these Rathschläge belong to the year 1517.

France and England remained present in their kingdoms during the first year of this campaign, and diligently and carefully awaited the office that had been assigned to them in the meantime. Should necessity now require that the recalcitrant be driven to observe their duties by more severe means of coercion, half of the contribution which is to be demanded from the houses and families could be applied to defray the expenses. What can be spared from such tenth or twentieth part, however, shall be used for the Asrican enterprise, of which something shall be reported hereafter. For the purpose of taming the rebels and recalcitrants, which is to be carried out by the Roman Pontiff and the aforementioned kings, skilled commanders experienced in warfare are to be chosen in all regions, who are to be present wherever necessity may require, and who are to remedy all difficulties in good time.

(20) But what should be done in the next year, before the general campaign is opened, there will be another opportunity, so that in the first year, when a general army is being formed, the Turks will not have a completely free hand to do as they please. For since the Christian princes have good hope that they will be able to persuade the Persian Sophi to take up arms against the Turks, especially since he fell very short in some battles and was abandoned by the Sultan in Egypt in the last campaign, they should also take his entire army with them, And since his whole army has been taken away in such a way that he would rather wish for peace than war, it is necessary to consider how something could be done by the Christians to his disadvantage in Africa, which this tyrant has begun to subjugate for some time. If the Turks should oppose them, they can, on such an occasion, dare to quarrel with them in the expectation of victory, and, with divine assistance, make the beginning of a happy enterprise. If, through the humble prayers and supplications of the Christians, they could reach out further, they would do well to go before Alkair, that is, before the outcast Egyptian king's residence, pursue their victory, and make that city subservient to us, which, by all accounts, would be quite easy to accomplish because it is not particularly fortified. And with the conquest of this place, the Nile River and all of Africa would be given over to the Christians.

The Persian army would fall into the hands of the Persians, but the Turks would be deprived of the opportunity to continue their attacks there. From there, a way would be open to make the Persian king all the more courageous to attack this common enemy.

21. Therefore, it would not be a bad thing if something were to be done in Africa in the coming summer, especially so that those kings who have not yet come under the control of the Turks, such as the kings of Tremez [Tripoli], Fez and Morocco, as well as the Arabs and Libyans who inhabit the mountains, might be encouraged; These could be supported, and with the help of the troops of the Christians they could be encouraged to undertake an enterprise against the Turks, also attracted by pay and rewards.

The supreme commanders of the expedition to be undertaken next year shall be the Most Serene Emperor and the King of Portugal, in conjunction with the Catholic King, as well as with the participation of other princes, except those whose peoples are destined for the undertaking in Poland. In the following two years, these leaders, among others, will remain there and will remain until the end of the war. In order to carry out this plan, to arm and maintain their army, they will need the other half of the contribution of the fiftieth part; no less will they have to use the contribution of the tenth and twentieth part, mentioned above, for their campaign; But especially from Germany, where this money can be raised most easily, just as from there the food and other necessities of war can be procured, and the soldiers necessary for the enterprise, according to the condition of each province, can be taken from it. To support this, the Most Holy King of France, along with a few others, will provide a fleet at sea, so that the Emperor and the King in Portugal will have to act jointly on water and on land.

(23) Above all, however, it will be necessary for our most holy Father, along with others who are gathered in Rome because of this matter, to send skilled persons to the above-mentioned Astrian kings (and if there are others who have not yet relinquished their lands to the Turk), to discover this plan to them through them, and to have them admonished that they, together with the Africans who are subject to them, as

The Arabs inhabiting the mountains, or if they can muster others with them, would also make an attempt against the Turks, as these peoples, after having suffered so much from the Turkish tyrants in the past years, can easily be used for their purposes.

24. The other enterprise of this coming year will be undertaken by the most illustrious King of Poland, both in his name and in so far as he is the guardian of Louis, King of Hungary, and his subordinate army will be brought together from Poland, Hungary, Bohemia, Moravia, Silesia and other countries subject to him; Subsidies will also be handed to him from Lower Austria, and the necessary artillery will be provided by the Emperor's Majesty; Bavaria, however, will be able to reinforce its army with men and supply it with food after the repartition has been made.

Those who do not want to or cannot attend this campaign personally will have to recruit and provide other soldiers by means of the money to be demanded from them, which they will easily find in Bohemia. For the so-called national servants are not to be used for the first expedition, but are to be saved until the other African expedition.

(26) It will be no less beneficial and profitable if the Roman Pontiff, together with his assembled council, will take care that some Scythians and Tartars, who live nearest to the Poles, Russians and Moldovans, will be brought into arms against the Turks by means of proper pay and reward. These, together with those Moldavians and Wallachians who live in the so-called Great Moldavia and Wallachia (and who could easily be divested of the service they have hitherto rendered to the Turks for a certain amount of pay), could dare to make the first raid with the King of Poland in the coming year, and at the same time draw to themselves those who live in Little Wallachia.

(27) Just as the Tartars, in addition to the ordinary pay given to them by the papal court, must be tempted by other decent rewards.

28) When these three nations, the Scythians, Moldavians and Wallachians, join the army of the most noble King of Poland, he will prepare an expedition to Smedra 1) or Chilia.

And when these places have been happily conquered and a sufficient garrison has been left there, the troops can then return to their winter quarters. And this undertaking will be all the easier for the King of Poland, because the tyrant of the Turks does not think so much of this region as of the preservation of Syria, Arabia, Africa, which he has only recently subjected to his control, or of a new conquest of other Asiatic countries.

In the other year appointed for this expedition, which will be the fifteen hundred and nineteenth, the Most Sublime Roman Emperor Maximilian, together with the King of Portugal, will continue the enterprise begun in Africa, go beyond Alcair and Alexandria, and will be able to strengthen his army with the African, Moor and Arab soldiers, especially since from those who inhabit Fetz, Morocco and the Arabian mountains alone, more than a hundred thousand men can easily be raised.

In this second year of the proposed expedition, the most illustrious King of England will be able to approach the Emperor with a fleet to support him; just as our most holy father, the Pope of Rome, together with his cardinals, will not fail to admonish him not to break the loyalty he has so sacredly pledged to the Emperor in this matter. With this King of England will be able to join the King of Denmark, together with the troops of the Grand Master of the Prussian Knights of the Order and Russian archers, of which they have a great number, and which do good service at sea.

These, together with the troops of the Roman emperor and the king of Portugal, will be able to undertake an expedition to Africa and expect a victory, to make Alcair and Alexandria their subjects, to cross the Nile, to bring the Persian Sophi into arms against the Turks, and to bring them to a common understanding with the Christians. The Christians cannot imagine anything easier than this, since the tyrant of the Turks will then not be able to use the Scythians and Tartars, who are too far away from him, against the Persians; moreover, the Christians will see that they can draw the Scythians and Tartars to themselves by promising them richer pay, as was thought above.

32. in this same fifteen hundred and nine-

1) "Smedra" will be Semendria or Smederewo, a fortress on the right bank of the Danube, below Belgrade. - "Chilia" will be Kilia or Kili, a fortified city at the mouth of the northern arm of the Danube.

In the tenth year, the King of France will send all his troops, as many as he can muster except those which he, like other Christian princes, will have to send in the 1518th year. In the tenth year, as many of his troops as he can muster, in addition to those which he, like other Christian princes, will have to send to the Arican expedition in the year 1518, and which will have to be supported by the other half of the contribution to be collected, as well as by the tenth and twentieth penny of all goods and revenues, will prepare for this holy campaign, and will be able to march through Italy and Friuli, Illyria, Croatia and Dalmatia, and from there set out straight for the trading city of the Turks, called Oberbosna 1).

33) Why such a route would be more beneficial and advantageous for the whole of Christendom as well as for the king of France himself than an African or midnight route, can easily be judged from the fact that in the last few years some occidental Christian peoples have been involved in all kinds of wars and quarrels with the king of France, the memory of which could easily cause all kinds of trouble during his passage. On the other hand, with the Christians living towards the east, who never waged war with him, such inconveniences and hostilities are not to be suspected.

34. In the same year, the above-mentioned King of Poland, with his own army as well as with the auxiliary troops consisting of Wallachians, Moldavians and Scythians, will continue the undertakings begun in the previous year and unite with the King of France to besiege the city of Upper Bosna; They will then advance on both sides and besiege the two cities in Thrace, Philippopolis and Adrianopolis, and, if possible, conquer and fortify them and try to remain in them as a rampart. From there, however, the Tartars, Scythians and Wallachians, who will be granted a dwelling in these cities, will go on raids into the neighboring countries, take booty and collect plunder for the maintenance of the army. They will also be gladly accepted if they carry out a raid on Calcidon [Chalkis?] or Negroponte, or otherwise on one of the nearest harbors, and are willing to conquer the same, into which the African fleet, if it first carries out its project in Africa, could then enter in the third year determined for this enterprise, expose the people leading it there, and the latter could then unite with the land forces of the King of France.

1) This is, Bosna Serai, the most important trading town in Bosnia.

In the third year of this campaign, which will be 1520. In the third year of this campaign, which will be 1520, the Most Serene Emperor, together with the King of Portugal, if they have previously liberated Africa (as mentioned above), conquered the cities of Alcair and Alexandria, and dispersed the Turkish fleet (according to the Turks' plan), will have their army cross into Greece, since they will not lack ships and vehicles to accomplish this, unite there with the King of France and Poland, and attack the Turkish capital, Constantinople. And when they have conquered Constantinople, they will penetrate further into Asia Minor or Natolia and other more remote Turkish cities, and try to subdue them, in which they will undoubtedly be helped by Sophi, the king of the Persians. And in this way they will conclude this holy war, when they have defeated and dispersed the general enemy of the Christians.

36) But the above-mentioned Christian princes will be able to win over the Sophi of the Persians by the following rewards, if they agree with him that after the conquest of these provinces half of Natolia, all of Caramania and Armenia will be given to him; but the rest of what has been conquered and won in Asia and Africa, especially Egypt and the holy Jerusalem, where the tomb of Christ is, must remain for the Christians alone.

(37) If by such a happy success Christianity had spread almost three times more and more, it would be necessary to see to it that the conquered peoples were also gradually converted to the Christian faith by mild means.

But those kingdoms, provinces and territories which have been conquered in this holy military campaign shall be divided without all deceit and guile by the Christian kings, princes and estates, according to the pronouncement and decision of certain judges, to whom the Most Holy Father and his entire College of Cardinals shall be elected.

Finally, in order that everything may be expedited and set in motion, it will be necessary for Christian kings, princes and authorities, who, as reported above, will be present at the Arican expedition, to dispatch their emissaries to their imperial majesty, the sooner the better, to consider, examine and set in motion everything and anything that has been proposed here with the same, above what necessity requires,

The Emperor will unite the three years with his Imperial Majesty, and help to accomplish what has been popular in Rome, as well as with all kings, princes and states, and especially what will be popular because of the African expedition, as both the matter itself and the hostile counter-measures in the future summer may require.

(40) The kings, princes and states who will follow the King of France's march will do the same, send their envoys to him in good time to arrange the necessary things, and also stay with him until the matter is finished.

Thirdly, those who go to battle with the King of Poland will send their envoys to him to have the necessary conversation.

42. Finally, the necessity seems to require that all Christian kings and princes send their emissaries to Rome to our most holy father, or confirm those already there, so that they can negotiate the necessary matters with his papal holiness during the three-year expedition and drive it forward. They can also support it with all possible diligence, so that what was once decided together, especially the collection of money, the recruitment and payment of troops, the unity in Christendom, and above all the six-year truce among them, will be unbreakably taken care of and kept.

His Imperial Majesty's response to previous proposal

After His Sacred Imperial Majesty, following the response received from the Princes and Estates of the Holy Roman Empire assembled at the Imperial Diet in Augsburg, which was drafted concerning a general campaign to be undertaken against the Turks, saw and considered very well, that they were still far removed from the intention and desire of our most Holy Father, as well as from the almost unanimous opinion of many other Christian kings, princes and states, so they did not consider it advisable to give the princes and states an answer; where not only for this reason with the envoys of the Holy Apostolic See, as well as the spokesmen of the kings of France and Poland, who are staying with them because it concerns a general matter, diligent inter

The answer to this question has been diligently examined and investigated. But after this very answer has been examined and investigated with all diligence, also in the name of all Christendom, which the assembled princes and estates present at the said Imperial Diet, it has again been unanimously submitted to His Imperial Majesty, who, in this war against the Turks, not only present His Imperial Majesty as Emperor the head of the German Empire, but also represent their sons and brothers, the most illustrious Kings of Spain, Hungary and Denmark, 1) who have granted him their authority to do so, and who are also of the opinion that the King of Portugal, although always at war with the Indians and Moroccans, will not evade such a sacred undertaking: They have decided to give the following answer to the noble Princes and Estates of the Holy Roman Empire on their proposal:

First of all, His Imperial Majesty considered that the princes and estates of the empire, in such an important matter, did not take into account the great misfortune and danger hanging over the heads of the Christians, especially after the return of the tyrant, the Turk, in Europe; as which, as His Imperial Majesty is informed by credible testimonies, not only after having obtained victory over the Sultan of Syria and Egypt, and conquered a part of Africa, but also after having put to flight (which was unknown to them before) the Persian Sophi with his whole army, and thereby almost the whole of Armenia brought to them and conquered, so proudly and wantonly, also by the booty made by the Persians and Egyptians so enriched themselves that they now also equipped a strong fleet, and let it sail with many people from their ports; He is also now turning all his forces against the Christians, since he no longer has an enemy in Asia around him of whom we could hope that he would be able to do something to him.

Furthermore, the emperor, envoys and spokesmen are of the opinion that the assembled princes have not sufficiently considered whether the assembly of such a powerful and world-famous people, on which the other Christian nations have cast their eyes, from whose strength and bravery they expect so much, will be brought to ruin, and thereby give the enemy as much courage as the whole of Christendom a general fright;

1) In the old edition: "Dacien".

and that part of the Lord's host which dwells on the Turkish frontiers and has been our shield and rampart to the present day, still preserves itself in its pitiful condition, will then become a prey to the teeth of these wolves, consequently this enterprise of the princes will not attain the expected outcome and will not only be very harmful to the whole of Christendom, but also to the whole of the German Empire, This will not only be very harmful to Christendom as a whole, but also to the entire German Empire, its princes and estates, and will arouse no small suspicion among other Christian potentates of carelessness, laziness, and all sorts of reproaches that, since others could be found so ready and willing for such a holy and necessary undertaking, only the Germans wanted to remain in a sluggishness and sleepiness, not unlike having lost their way and forgotten the old bravery of their ancestors. Nor can His Imperial Majesty be persuaded to believe that at another meeting, which they want to organize, anything more fruitful will be achieved than at the present one, where only one thing has been wrapped up in another and nothing has been done or decided. All the Electors, together with many other wise and powerful princes of the empire, are with each other, through whose good counsel, wisdom and experience everything can be timely and well considered and decided, if only a good heart, a good will and the proper zeal can be found in each one for the best of his master. Moreover, the Emperor is not unaware of how much work it takes and how many difficulties must be overcome before the Diet can be held; if it were to be separated again, it would be difficult to bring it together again, despite all art and persuasion. Nor can the envoys and speakers understand why the princes and estates should allow such a necessary matter to be postponed, and why they should let so many fine men, who must be brought together with so much trouble and expense, go their separate ways again, almost to the shame of the whole world. If they think they owe nothing to those who are currently in danger, then they should look favorably on their descendants, whom they will leave behind in this very danger if they do not get down to business in time. If they do not want to worry about their descendants, then they should go into themselves and realize that they owe such an undertaking to the Son of God, Christ, without any objection, as He has endowed the holy Catholic Church, in which they were born, with His blood.

They should therefore go to council more seriously, and, if they have first considered the matter carefully with the other Christian kings and princes who would like to join them, they should also attack it unanimously and with one accord, together with our most holy father, joyfully and undauntedly; But always under the condition, which has been presented at any time by the Imperial Majesty and the delegates of the Roman See, namely that all the money collected throughout Germany shall not be used at anyone's discretion, but only for the campaign against the Turks, as the Princes and Estates want and will order.

172. farewell to the imperial diet at Augsburg, which was decided by the imperial majesty and the estates of the empire after the end of the same. Anno 1518.

From Lünig's Imperial Archives, part. Znsnr. oout. I, P. 321.

We Maximilian, by the Grace of God chosen Roman Emperor, at all times Major of the Empire 2c. 2c., publicly confess and declare that, as elected Roman Emperor, Bailiff and Patron of Christendom, we, out of a Christian frame of mind, have considered and taken to heart the outrages and afflictions that are appearing more and more everywhere in the Empire; also the grave matters of common Christianity of our holy faith and German nation, with which the enemy of Christ, the Turk, is daily using and oppressing our faith and common Christian church, and therefore decrees that our and all Christian kings and potentates' embassies come to papal holiness to advise and decide how such frightening objections and actions may be advised and resisted, and further, for the same and other moving causes, to hold a Diet in our and the Holy Roman Empire's city of Augsburg, of the opinion that, with the Holy Roman Empire's estates, in the same right, its estates and the German nation's indignation, also deficiencies and defects of right, unity and peace, according to the Estates' writings, at the next Imperial Diet held in Mainz, and what further necessity requires to be advised and acted upon, so that such outrage, deficiencies and infirmities may be put down, and brought into good, praiseworthy, lasting being, and out of this a tolerable remedy against the Turks may follow to the rescue of our holy faith, and thereupon princes, rulers, and other estates of the empire are required to join us there.

Accordingly, our and the Holy Roman Empire's six princes, all of them in person, as well as other princes and estates, have appeared before us in public, partly in their own persons, and also by embassy, as named at the end of the farewell, and after much practiced action, as well as diligent consultation, which we have done in the matters in question, have united and come to an agreement with said estates, and they with us, in the following farewell.

1. Firstly, as Papal Holiness, we, also Princes, Princes and others of the Holy Roman Empire, by their Holiness' Legation, with name, the Reverend Thomam Tittuch, Sancti Sixti Presbyterum, and Matthäum, Sancti Angeli, Cardinals of the Holy Roman Church, before deliberation and resolution of all other defects and infirmities in the Holy Roman Empire, with which the common Christian church has been challenged for many years and by the enemy of Christ, the Turk, so that there is no end to it, but the more and greater, if there is no public resistance, his power and authority will extend into the Christian blood, and to the spreading of our holy faith: asking His Holiness to open the treasury of the Churches against it, and to offer all his fortune to resist such tyrannical enemy with a public and brave expedition. And therefore, as the elected Roman Emperor, and the rightful bailiff, protector and patron of the Holy Christian Church, requested and appealed to for faithful help and assistance in such Christian work, we, together with princes, princes and other estates, let ourselves be heard against the above-mentioned papal legate with an answer, How we and they, of all parts, bear the good knowledge, also of the same answer given writings in hand, as we and others of the holy realm should and will act with our every subject and kinsman, by which they may be moved to give their help and fortune to such salutary expedition.

2) And namely, that every person in the holy realm, male and female, who goes to the holy sacrament, shall give and deposit the tenth part of a Rhenish guilder for the next three years, every year, for the expedition and the common Turkish campaign. And so that the same

The proposal is so much more pleasing to the subjects, and so much more likely to be appreciated, that all of us, and every other of their embassies, shall inform them in a comforting and credible manner that such a proposal will be used and applied nowhere else than for the Turkish campaign, and that what will fall to each authority will be kept there in good and certain custody until the campaign begins, The money, which is to be given to the people of each place and country, horse and foot, as much as they are sent for, shall then be given from the same money to no one else. But whichever sovereignty cannot or will not send men of war, that they shall give their money and direct to pay others with it by the commissary, which any prince or sovereignty shall order. In the case of the same commissioners, the subjects, where the procession does not proceed, are to demand their money again, so that they too may be answered without any refusal or delay.

3. that our and the Holy Roman Empire's princes, rulers and other sovereigns, who have jurisdiction, government, or who otherwise have noticeable trade, elevation and food, after they are of higher status and nature, also more than the subjects, are due and owed to give and give to such Christian expedition, as much as their devotion in such being or it will please them.

4. to all of this, that we may be comforted by the support of papal sanctity and the Roman Church, according to our given answer. And every authority shall have diligence on behalf of its subjects, so that the poor may not be so highly burdened against the rich in this respect. All of which, as indicated and stipulated in this our agreement, we, as well as our and the Holy Roman Empire's princes, rulers and other estates, shall and will faithfully apply to our and all of their subjects and relatives with all diligence and earnestness, and also help to promote our property, so that our and ours may nevertheless be felt and found obedient by papal holiness, other potentates and common Christendom, in a faithful, Christian spirit and opinion, also of the Holy Roman Empire and the common German nation.

5 And what we and the Estates thus, after diligent efforts, obtain and maintain among our subjects and theirs, that we and they want for the next Imperial Diet, so that we can be sure of it in our and the Holy Roman Empire's interest.

We, as well as the princes, prelates and counts in our own persons, and the estates through their fully authorized attorneys, are to appear without delay and without hindrance, to notify each other, to discuss it on both sides and finally to decide. Also, that which is thus received by the subjects and finally decided between us, is to be made known to Papal Holiness by his own message, in addition to and with other necessities incumbent upon the realm. The further need for such a Turkish campaign of captains, cavalry captains and the like shall be discussed and decided there in the same way.

6. Furthermore, as all kinds of indignation, also lack and infirmities of right, unity and peace of the estates of the empire, as above, have been brought before us in writing at our next Imperial Diet at Mainz, and we therefore together with the estates here to avert them, also to handle our established land peace, to more substantial and constant purification, reformation, order, occupation and abstention of our imperial chamber court, In addition, we also undertook to take due and necessary notice of the excessive delicacy with clothing and adornment, drinking, weddings, kidnapping of money and property from the German nation, the coinage, the country's small fare, the disorders of the lower, also foreign courts and other things, and also to act and argue on them publicly, but for this reason, for obvious reasons, nothing was decided this time. And because of the obvious necessity to further deliberate and act in the above-mentioned matters of our Imperial Court of Appeal, as well as in the other articles mentioned above, with the advice and will of all parties, so that all errors and deficiencies may be eliminated, We have left these matters pending until the above-mentioned future Imperial Diet, when action must be taken for the sake of the Turks.

7) However, in order to ensure that the rights do not stand still in the meantime, but are continued, we wanted to speak and act with] chamber judges, assessors and all relatives of our chamber court until the aforementioned future Imperial Diet in Worms, and to proceed in the matter of our chamber court and the parties.

8. We also want, so that it may be seen by men that we are inclined to promote justice, and that for this reason no deficiency may be attributed to us, to send out our letter of command to all 1) those who still owe their petition for entertainment in respect of our Court of Appeal, to submit the same petition from this hour to Worms, so that judges, assessors and other relatives of our Court of Appeal may be moved and have their entertainment the sooner, and in all of this may most graciously be given sight of, and other relatives of our Court of Appeal, may be moved and have their entertainment at the indicated time, and in all this graciously to provide insight, so that before judged and granted settlements, and presently of the Holy Roman Empire, no one is burdened against equity on account of such proposals.

9 And especially ours, also the Electors, Princes, Councillors and Deputies, if we send them for the next account of our Court of Appeal, according to our order at Costenz, shall consult and judge this year on demand, the entertainment, how that may be granted by the decree, also by the notice, there, as is permitted and commanded in the said order.

10. In matters concerning the Lords of the Ladders, on account of the cities of Beern and Vicenss and other matters included in their petition, also those which have been brought forward and handed over by our Regents at Insbruck and others, likewise Thomas Index's half-obtained execution against Danzig and Elwigen [Elbing], the same matters, with all their appendices and circumstances, shall remain pending until the next Imperial Diet, when they shall be subject to further action and resolution, and shall not be acted against in accordance with our recently issued mandate.

11) All and every of the above mentioned points and articles concerning the help against the Turks and other 2) things, we promise, as much as we as Roman Emperor, also us and our dear son Carolen, King of Hispania 2c. 2c., that we, as Archdukes of Austria and Dukes of Burgundy, will execute them without any danger. In witness whereof we, as elected Roman Emperor and also as Archduke of Burgundy, have hereunto affixed our Imperial Seal.

We, the princes, prelates, counts, lords, and free and imperial cities of the Holy Roman Empire, as well as the princes and other ambassadors and rulers sent by the states, confess that

1) In the old edition: "anfalle" instead of: an alle.

2) In the old edition: andern.

and declare, in and by virtue of this letter, that the above-mentioned points and articles concerning help against the Turks and other matters have been established and set up with our advice, good knowledge and will by the Roman Imperial Majesty, our most gracious Lord, and that we have united all and sundry with Her Imperial Majesty, and Her Imperial Majesty in turn with us, and do so in the name of the Holy Roman Emperor.

By virtue of this letter, we promise to comply with and perform all such things as may concern or concern each of our sovereigns and friends, on whose account he has been sent to leave here, or his own, over whom he has authority, and also to pledge to all of them, to the best of our ability, 1) faithfully, without danger. Date ut supra.

1) Perhaps: to live.

The second section of the third chapter.

Of the Augsburg Acts between Cajetan, the Elector of Saxony, and Luther.

A. From the Cardinal's dispatch to Germany.

173 Raynaldus reports how Cardinal Farnesius was supposed to take up this legation, but because he hesitated too long, the pope chose Thomas de Vio, or Cardinal Cajetan, in his place.

From the Raynaldus anualss ack au". Okr. 1518, tow. XX, § 52.

Translated into German.

Furthermore, since Cardinal Farnesius was appointed from the aforementioned envoy, but he remained in his place and was too slow in getting ready for the journey, or perhaps even fell ill, the pope appointed Thomas de Vio, or Cardinal Cajetan, in his place; which Paris de Grassis explains thus: "The pope has today, as on ... April, the most reverend Lord Thomas, called Cardinal St. Sixti or de Minerva, was dispatched as envoy to Germany in the place of Cardinal de Farnesio, and after a closed meeting he was accompanied by the whole Collegio to his house near St. Maria on the broad street; but I immediately gave him instructions by the Pabst's order, according to which he must act in his legation." This legation was, however, of the greatest importance, in that its purpose was to stifle and eradicate the seeds of Lutheran heresy, to unite the remaining Bohemians and Hussites with the Church, and to rally the Emperor, along with the King in Denmark, Sweden and Norway, against the Turk.

174 The instruction given to the papal legate a Latere, Cardinal Cajetan, by the papal minister Paris de Grassis for his journey to Germany. Dated May 5, 1518.

From the Ockor. Davnalckus A""alss ack an". 1518, "o. 53 reprinted in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 310 and in Kapp's Sammlung einiger zuin Päbstlichen Ablaß gehörigen Schriften, p. 413. In Kapp also German with notes.

Translated into German by M. J. E. Kapp.

To the beloved son Thomas, Titus St. Sixti Cardinal Priest, 2) of our and the Apostolic See to our dear sons in Christ,

2) The cardinals, among others, are named after /o^a. or'sor LesseUr Dissertationibus statuit liomanas Leslssias coruplscsutiibus, which he held in 1714 pro lckssritia at Erfurt, is nowadays divided into three classes, namely 6arcki "alss Lxissoxos, Drssd'isros st Diaconus. Each has its Htuolos, which are small dioceses or churches to which the cardinals are assigned. These lituli, however, do not all have certain income, but find only to the memory of old or devastated churches attached. Cardinal bishops are six, named by the cathedral churches, as 1) il Vsssovo ck'Ostia, 2) il Vsssovo cki Dorto, 3) il Vsssovo 61 Dalsstrina, 4) il Vsssovo cki Drssati, 5) il Vsssovo cki 8adi "a, 6) il Vsssovo ck'Al>auo. The titles of the priest-cardinals, of which Cajetan was, find fifty, and are enumerated byp . 229 following: 1) 8a "stas Ma rias trans l'adsrii". 2) 8. prints "tianas. 3) 8. daursntii 1" dusiua. 4) 8a "etas Trinitatis i" naouts Diusio. 5) 8. marssllini st Dstri. 6) 8. vuZustini. 7) 8. Oassilias. 8) 8. Drissas. 9) 8. Marias cks ara sosli. 10) 8. Vlsxii. 11) 8. Draxschis, 12) 8. Marias cks Dass. 13) 8. Marias VuMloruru. 14) 88. yuatuur corouatoruru. 15) 8. loa""is st Dauli. 16) 8an-Maximilian, elected Emperor, and Christian, illustrious King in Denmark, 1) Sweden and Norway, as well as to all their kingdoms, all and each of the provinces, lands and oerters subject to them and adjacent to them.

After we have today your prudence, for the sake of the very holy and very necessary campaign against the enemies of the Christian name, to our much beloved sons in Christ, Maximilian, elected Emperor, and Christian, noble King in Denmark, Sweden and Norway, and all his kingdoms, and the countries subject to them, to our and the apostolic see's legate a Latere as an angel of peace, on the advice of our brothers, to decree in another letter, as contained in the same in more detail: In the end, with mature deliberation, we have well considered in our minds how it would greatly contribute to such a holy procession that the Kingdom of Bohemia, which was formerly catholic, should be restored to its former glory by the mere effect of ctae Mariae super Minervam. 17) S. Anastasiae. 18) 8. Sixti. 19) S. Honuphrii. 20) S. Sylvestri. 21) S. Mariae in via. 22) S. Basilicae duodecim Apostolorum. 23) S. Salvatoris in Lauro. 24) S. Pancratii. 25) S. Martini in montibus. 26) S. Bartholomaei in Insula. 27) S. Clementis. 28) S. Ioannis ante portam latinam. 29) S. Thomae in Parione. 30) S. Agnetis in agone. 31) S. Marcelli. 32) S. Marci. 33) S. Sabinae. 34) S. Susannae. 35) S. Nerei et Achillei. 36) S. Laurentii in pane et perna. 37) S. Crucis in Hierusalem. 38) S. Martini in montibus. 39) S. Mariae de populo. 40) S. Balbinae. 41) S. Hieronymi Illyricorum. 42) S. Stephani in monte Coelio. 43) S. Mariae trans Pontinae. 44) S. Caroli ad cursum, vel Biagii in Anecio. 45) S. Eusebii. 46) S. Petri in monte aureo. 47) S. Chrysogoni. (This title was held by Archbishop Albrecht as Cardinal, as can be seen from the preface of my locale, p. 13). 48) 8. tznirini ot lu1itta6. 49) 8. 6a6sar6i. 50) 8. ?6tri in vinenla. Besides these fifty priest-cardinals, 1^korio Eineio was one more, who died in 1653, and had the title 8. Oaiixti. The Cardinaldiacones have their titles from the following churches: 1) 8. Maria6 in via lata. 2) 8th Dnstaoliii. 3) 8. [Mtüae. 4) 8. L1aria6 in portiou. 5) 8. [NMii pisinrn. 6) 8. Maria6 novao. 7) 8. Maria6 in oosnoäin. 8) 8. moolai in oarooro. 9) 8. door^ii äa voimn anronin. 10) 8. maria6 in iuario. 11) 8. ^äriani. 12) 8. oosnrao ot Dannani. 13) 8. Naria6 in Oorninioa. 14) 8. Viti 6t 1loä68ti. Otherwise the Cardinal äo Nontalto, ^l6xanä6r^6r6tti N6pos, Pabst 8ixti V., when he was Cardinaldiaconus, used the title 8.1anr6ntii in vanr38oo. From which it can be seen that especially the number and title of cardinal priests is not bound to a certain number (Kapp).

1) With Kapp: "Dacien".

The enemy of the human race has fallen into all kinds of error and heresy, and may be brought back to the obedience of the holy mother, the contending church. Because we have considered that your prudence, according to its peculiar erudition and prudence, magnanimity and suggestions, the barons of said realm, noblemen, military persons and municipalities, the most distinguished lords of the cities, bailiffs and other sworn officials of other countries and cities, as well as all kinds of citizens and inhabitants of whatever rank, honor and dignity they may be, together with their followers, to the true faith in Christ and to the right path, if the aforementioned Maximilian, elected Roman Emperor, lends a helping hand; we also draw confidence in the Lord from your prudence, wisdom and experience, which have been known to us with a special faithfulness and sincerity in important matters, that you will be knowledgeable and able to disperse and still the winds of error that sweep to and fro, and also to restore the kingdom to the form of its former majesty; We also hope in the Lord that, when the kingdom itself will have returned to the obedience of the Holy Roman Church, since it has always been considered warlike, it will rise not only for worldly honor, which it has always received in the war against the infidels, but rather for the defense of the Catholic faith against the Turks, the common enemies, and will follow the banner of the invincible cross. We give you power, authority and authority, with all and every one of the said empire and the bordering parts, of whatever rank and dignity they may be, if they wish to come back to the light of the true faith and leave and shun such heresies, to renounce them after first swearing the customary abjuration of their heresy and heresies, and to take an oath that they will not do such things for themselves in the future, nor to give counsel, help and assistance to others who undertake such things, according to the manner customary in the church, and to restore and accept them to our and the church's bosom, as well as to the grace and blessing of said see; further, to negotiate, compromise, and settle with them in our and the apostolic see's name, even under such terms, covenants, conditions, forms, additions of penalties, annulments of obligations, commissions, cauteles, clauses, and solencies, in such manner as you shall best and most conveniently compromise or settle with them.

to act with them, to make settlements, to confirm and fortify, and to command that what is fortified be kept inviolable here and there, under penalty of banishment, suspension, and interdict, and below we give you the faculty, authority, and power to do so.

Therefore, you shall take upon yourself the burden we have placed upon you for the salvation and blessedness of souls, as well as for the increase of the Christian faith, and you shall also prove to be so diligent and strong to fulfill it that, through your efforts, diligence and reputation, all error and heresy will be swept out of this realm and other neighboring countries, which are, as it were, infected with a protracted pestilence, all error and heresy will be swept out, uprooted and completely eradicated, so that the vineyard of the Lord of hosts may bear fruit, once the harmful heresies so detrimental to Catholic purity have been taken away; that from this and from such a truly holy and praiseworthy work, you may not only earn the palm of eternal glory, but also, by your applied diligence, faithfulness and sincerity, commend yourself more and more to us and to the aforementioned Holy See. Given in Rome at St. Peter's, Anno 1518, May 5, in the sixth year of our papal reign.

B. What gifts Cajetan brought to the Emperor and the Elector Albrecht of Mainz from the Pope.

175 Jakob Manlius of Freiburg, imperial historiographer and councilor, tells of two events that took place in Augsburg in 1518: 1. the investiture of Albrecht of Brandenburg, archbishop of Mainz, with the dignity of cardinal. 2) Pope Pabst's legate gives Emperor Maximilian a sword and hat.

This writing is from the Manlius Ilistoria auoruva aoturo anno 1518 oto. reprinted in Frehers scriptor. rer. Oerinanie., torn. II, p. 397.

By LI. August Tittel translated into German.

To the Most Reverend in Christ Father and Highborn Prince Fabricius of Ceretto, from the Marquises of Finale, of the Holy Order of Knights of the Most Holy John the Anabaptist Grand Master in Rhodus 2c., sends this letter to Jakob Manlius of Freiburg, a teacher from Breisgau, of the most godly Maximilian, Mehrer of the Empire 2c., historiographer and council 2c.

Just as the Maccabees, the brave brothers and servants of the true God, used to fight most fiercely against the shameful idols and despisers of the divine service, so now the manly brothers of the Order of Knights of St. John the Baptist, forerunner of the Lord, as protectors of the true faith, use to fight against the arch-vile enemies of the Catholic Church. In this way, no greater happiness can befall them on land and sea than when they see two swords, which the Savior remembers in the Gospel, coming to their aid. Therefore, most reverend Father in Christ and most dear Prince, it has seemed good to me, for the praise and honor of Almighty God and our Sustainer, also of all the saints, and no less for the glory and everlasting memory of the things of the praiseworthy and contentious German nation, and for the joy and acceptance of you, most reverend Father, and of your most worthy brethren, to tell the story of the excellent gift, seldom heard in Germany, so that the most holy Leo X., Roman Pontiff, the most holy Emperor Maximilian, King of the Romans and sanctified Emperor of Christendom, as well as Albrecht, by divine grace of the Holy Roman Church, of the title of St. Chrysogoni Cardinal Priest. Chrysogoni Cardinal Priest, the Holy See of Mainz and the Church of Magdeburg Archbishop, as well as of the Holy Roman Empire through Germany Archchancellor, Prince and Primate, the Church of Halberstadt Administrator, Margrave of Brandenburg, Stettin, Pomerania, the Cassuben and Wenden Duke, Burgrave in Nuremberg and Prince of Rügen, to receive Christianity, to describe in a common and easy way.

History.

Let it therefore be known to your most reverend fatherhood that on the most blessed ninth Sunday after Pentecost, which was the first of August in the year 1518, the most reverend in Christ Father and Lord, Mr. Thomas, of the title of St. Sixty Cardinal Priest, of the most holy Leo X., Pabst, Legatus a Latere, a man filled with all virtue praise, at six o'clock in the morning on the very same day, according to apostolic commission, went out on foot from the palace in the city of Augsburg with his court, and with the most reverend in Christ Father and Lord Matthew,

St. Angeli of the Holy Roman Church Cardinaldiaconus, Prince in Gurk, Coadjutor of Salzburg and of the apostolic see in Germany Legatus a Latere, his colleague, went to the house of the most reverend in Christ Father and Prince Albrecht, the new Cardinal 2c, on foot. Which, when the said prince found out, he immediately went to meet them at the door, and accepted them most kindly; and then all three went at the same time to the same little church, and there the above-mentioned most reverend lords, legates of the aforementioned (new) cardinal, took the duty, which all who attain to the highest cardinal dignity must first take, in the name of the Roman pope. Whereupon the very same new Cardinal's Chancellor, a man worthy of great praise, publicly read aloud our most holy Lord's breve to the aforementioned Cardinal, the content of which reads word for word thus:

Leo the X, Pope.

Beloved son, apostolic greeting and blessing! Your fraternal dignity, which comes from the noble Brandenburg dynasty, and from the very old and highly respectable family in Germany, and which has always sought to earn its illustrious ancestors for holy succession to us and to the Holy Apostolic See, we have elevated to the highest Cardinal dignity, above which nothing greater can be bestowed by the Governor of Christ, both because it is worthy in itself, and because it has often and imploringly been highly praised and proposed to us by our most beloved son in Christ, Maximilian, chosen Emperor, both by letters and messages, and therefore thought how such a thing might happen at a good time and opportunity, that thereby our opinion might be fulfilled and your brotherly love's dignity and honor might be best satisfied. So the opportunity of this time has seemed to us very convenient and honest, yes, very praiseworthy, since one must act from the holy move against the enemies of the holy cross, that your brotherly love, adorned with such honor, could make itself the better deserving for us and spreading of the Christian religion. Therefore, your present promotion will not only be dear to you, but also most pleasant and decent, because your prudence, faith, religion, and devotion to us and to the said See require such things, and because of your great merits and virtues we alone, among very few, have made you a Cardinal. We have

We have also placed our good hope in the giver of all good things and in you, that, since you have previously sought to do us and the holy apostolic see and Christendom good service, you will be able to fulfill your office and our godly desire all the more freshly and diligently, as you have now been endowed with these most holy and high honors. Therefore, to the praise and honor of Almighty God and of the whole heavenly host, and to the adornment of your person, and to the eternal glory and reputation of the illustrious Brandenburg family, we have made you a Cardinal this 24th of March, in our secret Consistory, with the advice and consent of the Cardinals elected by our other brethren of the Holy Roman Church. Is it therefore left that you, who were before and still are great and rich in the church and in the field of the Lord because of the Mainz Elector of the Empire, but because of the Magdeburg Church Primate in Germany, and thus in the church and in the field of the Lord, now that you have still been adorned with the Cardinal burden and dignity, hear what such dignity means and what God Himself demands of you, and diligently consider what is due to you, also our beloved son Thomas, of the title St. Sixti Cardinalpriest. Sixti Cardinal Priest, our legate, who will act (with you) from the holy and necessary (move) against the perjured enemies of our faith, who only thirst for the blood and destruction of Christians, and will take care of everything on our behalf, and whose godly and well-intentioned proposals, and will take care of everything on our behalf and listen to its godly and well-meant suggestions, which are ours, and will also carry them out properly, so that the most beautiful part of the world in Europe, which now looks small, will not only be saved from the hands of the wicked in our time, but also their empire and their fierce power will either be converted to the holy faith or eradicated. But those who will follow us and our holy and godly desire and comply with us, so that they step onto the right path, will attain the promised reward of eternal bliss. Given in Rome, at St. Peter's under the Fisherman's Ring, May 8, 1518, in the sixth year of our papacy.

After the breve had been read, the most reverend Legates with the venerable Mr. Felix Turpinus, Ceremonial Mifter, a considerable learned and pious man, put on the new Cardinal the red-colored Cardinal's robe, which is commonly called a cap. Then they unanimously left the house and the church, and with the new Cardinal in the middle, the Cardinal St. Sixti on the right, and the Cardinal St. Angeli on the left, they went to the highly famous and holy Maria, the Virgin, Cathedral Church in Augsburg. As they entered, the right side of the choir remained suitable for the emperor, but they took the left. So the new Cardinal had the first seat, the Legate of the title of St. Sixti the second, and the Legate of St. Angeli the third.

When the said Cardinal Princes heard that the Emperor was coming, the Cardinal of the title of St. Sixty got up from his place and went to the high altar of the same choir. Then he dressed himself properly (as it is customary to do) to say mass. While getting dressed, the Holy Emperor and several princes, both churl and others, went with a large entourage to the choir of the said church, which the Legate of St. Angel and the new Cardinal soon met gracefully and nimbly. The Emperor, as a hero who can never be praised enough, after having wished the Mainz prince, as the new bridegroom, happiness with the most praiseworthy appointment and testimonies, cheerfully led him to his left, went into the choir with him, and there entered the uppermost place to the right, which had been hung for him with golden ornaments. The other one after him was held by the Cardinal of Mainz; the third one by the most illustrious Prince Ludwig, Count Palatine on the Rhine, Duke in Bavaria, Elector; the fourth one by the most illustrious Prince Friedrich, Duke of Saxony 2c., Prince; the fifth, the most illustrious Prince Casimir, Margrave of Brandenburg; the sixth, the most illustrious Prince Frederick, Casimir's brother; the seventh, Prince Johann Albrecht, another brother; the eighth, the most illustrious Prince Johannes, Landgrave of Leuchtenberg; the ninth, the most illustrious Duke Anton of Lorraine.

4 On the other, left side, opposite, first stood the most reverend Cardinal St. Angeli, Legatus a Latere. Angeli, Legatus a Latere; secondly, Marinas Carraceiolus, our most holy Lord Pabst's Protonotarius and Nuncio to the most Serene Emperor; thirdly, the most reverend Father in Christ and most Serene Prince Christoph, Archbishop in Bremen and confirmed Administrator of the Abbey of Verden, Duke of Brunswick and Lüneburg; Fourth, the Most Reverend Father in Christ and Prince George, Bishop of Bamberg; Fifth, the Most Reverend Father in Christ and Prince Gabriel, Bishop of Eichstädt; Sixth, the Most Reverend Father in Christ, Prince Christoph, Bishop of Augsburg; Seventh, the Most Reverend Father in Christ and Prince John, Administrator of Regensburg, Count Palatine of the Palatinate, and Bishop of the Holy See.

Rhine, Duke of Bavaria; eighth, the Most Reverend in Christ Father and Serene Prince Arnest, Administrator of the Church of Padua, Count Palatine on the Rhine, Duke of Bavaria; ninth, the Most Reverend in Christ Father and Prince Henrich, Bishop of Ratzenburg; tenth and last, the Most Reverend in Christ Father and Prince Peter Bonomus, Bishop of Trieft, of the Imperial Majesty's Council.

After these princes had settled down in the manner and order described, the people had become silent and silence had been commanded, the most reverend of the title of St. Sixty began to say mass. His house priest stood at the side of the altar, where the Gospel was read, holding the cross, and from behind a court servant from the famous Ursine family, holding a sword and hat or helmet. At the side where the epistle is read, however, stood the courtier, the son of the legate's brother, who held the red hat with his hand on for the new cardinal. After the mass was over, and it was certain that the new Cardinal had just been received by the Apostolic See, March 24, in Rome among the Cardinals, the Legate of the title of St. Sixty, after having first addressed the sacred and invincible Emperor, the churl and other princes, summoned him to the altar, the content of which had recently been this speech:

Most Sublime Emperor! Pope Leo X, through the intercession of Your Imperial Majesty, is now doing an excellent and therefore rarely done work on earth. There are often cardinals in the world who give some excellent splendor of themselves; but to find a man who is praiseworthy in all respects is something difficult. He has appointed Albrecht, the archbishop of the church in Mainz and primate of the German nation, who is adorned with excellent gifts of fortune, body and mind, as cardinal priest of the Holy Roman Church. He is of high birth, fresh and beautiful body, blooming youth, splendid intellect, sagacity, divinity, wealth, dignity, power, majesty and prestige; he also shines in chastity, godly nature and spiritual austerity in such a way that his light shines before all men. In addition, since he shines at the same time as the emperor's and the pope's elector or prince, we are also illuminated by the papal fame, but you are also illuminated by the imperial elector's fame. Such a common adornment, honor and benefit should be celebrated with common joy. Therefore come forward, most noble prince and most venerable lord, and come to receive the jewel of cardinal dignity due to your virtue.

When he came here and humbly fell on his knees before the altar, the envoy explained to him what such dignity entailed, what God demanded of him, and what he had to do, if possible, against the cruelest enemies of our faith, who thirst for the blood and destruction of Christians, both himself and in the name of the Pope. And since he presented himself as an obedient and willing son on all the points presented, the legate decorated his head with the red hat. Thereupon the new Cardinal with his hat remained kneeling in front of the altar in the Faldisterio 1) until the hymn of praise to St. Augustine and Ambrose was gloriously intoned with organs by the singers of imperial majesty (who also solemnly sang the entire mass). After that, when the legate of the apostolic see read some collections and prayers, the new cardinal stood up, and with beautiful figure and excellent courage went from the altar, stepped before the most august emperor and other princes, and through the learned man Laurentius Zoch, doctor of both rights, gave thanks to said new cardinal's chancellor in a loud and sublime voice as follows:

It would be right, most noble emperor, most reverend in Christ fathers and lords, of the holy Roman church Legati de Latere, and most noble princes, a quite learned and eloquent man, should hold a speech in this most respectable and almost divine presence or assembly of yours, and should have such a gift to speak, which would be perfectly suited to your majesty, to the greatness of the cause and to the reputation of this place. But I, since I do not find such a thing in myself at all, would have to fear that it would either be misinterpreted or reckoned to me as presumption if I had undertaken this office of my own accord and on my own impulse. But since the most reverend in Christ the Father, the most noble Prince and Lord, Lord Albrecht, Archbishop of the Holy See of Mainz and of the Church of Magdeburg, Prince, Primate, and now Cardinal Priest proclaimed (or appointed) to the Holy Roman Church, command and will compel me to give thanks now, even if it is far beyond my ability, and even the most learned Demosthenes and most eloquent Cicero would not be enough: so I will, trusting in the grace of your most sacred Majesty and your most reverend Majesties, not out of impudent presumption, but merely out of humble obedience, I will recently state what the most reverend Lord, my Prince, can show towards Imperial Majesty and your most reverend Majesties, gratitude and a discerning mind. But before I say what I have been commanded to say, there is only one thing that comes to mind, namely, that the most reverend lord, my prince, has not in the least sought this high cardinal's dignity, because his most reverend glory has not at all concealed it, that such an attained dignity requires a great deal of effort and care, and for such a rich pound also exact account must be given, as it is well known that the cardinals themselves represent the holy apostles, and just such a thing would be required of them, which they have accomplished with great courage and strength. However, since their most reverend (devotion) saw our most holy Lord's mildest and most loving disposition towards them, in order to propose to them such a dignity, for which the Imperial Majesty, according to the special grace bestowed upon them, took more trouble than they themselves felt like, their most reverend fatherhood modestly recognized and accepted this honor offered to them and the care and trouble connected with it, and thus obediently surrendered to their loving and kind request: Therefore, for this infinite good deed, she first of all gives thanks to the Triune God on her knees, not the due, but all possible and human thanks, as well as to His (Christ's) never enough praised Mother, the Virgin, and the whole heavenly host; at the same time, she heartily invokes God's most gracious Majesty to graciously assist her in fulfilling these divine offices and the accepted dignity for the growth of the holy Catholic faith and to do all that is necessary to satisfy them. Hereafter, it also offers its infinite gratitude to Your Holiness and Your Imperial Majesty, and also confesses its obligation to them that they have deigned to regard their most reverend glory with such high veneration or dignity in grace. For whatever honor or dignity her most reverend lordship enjoys from this, she has entirely to thank your holiness and majesty, likewise you, the most reverend lords Legates a Latere, and the holy (ecclesiastical) council, that they namely include his most reverend lordship in their most eminent order and dignify her with her excellent voice and testimony.

1) "Faldisterium" will probably be the same as in English talclikäör⁶ or kalästool, the seat of a bishop in the choir of the church.

want. Whereby, at the same time, she bequeaths that she herself, and all that she is able or can serve, may at all times willingly present both to the Pope's Holiness, as well as to Your Imperial Majesty and Your Most Reverend Majesties, with devout wish that the all-good and all-governing God may bestow upon both the Pope's Holiness, as well as your Imperial Sacred Majesty, as well as you, most handsome and most reverend Legates, for the benefit and extension of the Holy Church, with long life and all good, and finally, after laying down this tabernacle, crown you with the imperishable crown of honor for your great merits and praiseworthy deeds!

(7) After which the Imperial Majesty, through the most reverend Prince Peter Bonomus, answered in her name: It should not have been said, most reverend in Christ Father and most illustrious Prince, to your most reverend father's imperial saintly majesty that she did her part in the holy apostolic see for this now accepted dignity, and that she, however unwillingly and against her will, made it her business to promote it to this highness by her diligence, effort and reputation. For although your most reverend fatherhood, out of peculiar modesty, had decided to refuse the honor and to avoid such cardinal dignity, the Emperor nevertheless considered that it did not behoove him to look at what was proper for your most reverend fatherhood's modest manner, as well as what the imperial highness and prestige were entitled to do in this, whether or not they were able to do it. What has therefore been granted to your most reverend father by the most holy Lord Pope Leo the Tenth and by the holy Cardinal College, is all to be attributed not to the efforts of imperial majesty and the highest reputation, but to their own virtues and merits. Since this dignity has now been granted to her, God grant that she may enjoy it at all times, happy and healthy, with all happiness, both for her honor and for the benefit and salvation of all Christendom, and also for the eternal fame and glory of the entire German nation! They can be assured by the Emperor that even if he did not benefit from the merits of their noble ancestors and lineage, which have nevertheless been of great use and honor to him, as he hereby confesses, he could still have been brought to far more and higher things for them by the mere prestige of your most reverend fatherhood. To which he hereby also still further, for the preservation and increase of their dignity and honor, all his help, diligence and reputation willingly offered and promised.

8) Thereupon the Lord Legate drew out an apostolic letter with his hand and presented it most respectfully to the Most Serene Emperor, which was then read by the excellent jurist Jakob Spiegel, Imperial Majesty's secretary and counselor, to the following effect:

To Our Son Beloved in Christ, Maximilian, Emperor Elect, Ever More 2c., Leo, Pope X.

In Christ most beloved son, salvation and apostolic blessing! Since our beloved son Thomas, of the title St. Sixti, Cardinal Priest of the Holy Roman Church, our and the Apostolic See's Legatus a Letere, comes to Your Majesty for causes concerning the general good of Christendom, which we have had presented orally by another letter as well as by the Cardinal, we have deemed it good to have a sword and hat, which were consecrated with our hands on the glorious and solemn feast of Christmas, or on the day of the birth of our most blessed Lord JESU Christ, to be given to the same legate, in order to present them to your Majesty, knowing full well that they have often been honored with this magnificent gift by the Roman Popes. But because under this gift there is still a secret of the spiritual power, the protection and handling of which is primarily incumbent upon you, as you are the Advocate of the Holy Church: By this gift we have also wished to renew and make known our esteem for your virtue, and the testimony of your excellent affection for the faith of Christ, especially since such gifts and consecrated arms to Your Majesty can at no time be presented more cheaply and more opportunely than now, since Christendom is challenged and endangered by the undertakings of the cruelest enemies, and is therefore in great need of their godliness, bravery, prudence, prestige and magnanimity. And it is true that Your Majesty, according to their high rank, must always be girded with the sword at their side, so that they would be ready and willing to subdue the wicked and protect the pious, so that their highest dignity would serve both to protect justice and to punish injustice and wickedness. Now, however, they do not have to be girded with it, but rather already twich it and let it flash with the right hand of their power. For what greater cause or occasion can there be than this, by which we are not put in little fear or of aught else?

We are not only in danger of losing our honor, but also our lives and welfare, if Christianity is not supported by the unanimous counsel of the princes and especially by their protection and umbrella? This, however, we have desired of Your Majesty all the more eagerly and eagerly, either to do the glorious work and to let the common salvation be entrusted to her, or have desired it as a high glory and prize, because she has often assured not only us, but also the whole Christian world, of her effort, loyalty and help, both in writing and through envoys. By what promise, how everyone has become so joyful and confident, and how it has so uplifted the hearts of all believers, I would gladly write, if I were not assured that Her Majesty already knew.

Since it is thus, take, you brave prince, and take up arms, and send yourself, of the holy sword that we send you, to use sharpness against God and your enemies, as a duke of the holy war, as a protector of the peoples who honor the true God, as an avenger of the barbarians. For what greater praise and name can you carry off, and what more glorious care and effort can you exert, than when you use the very highest dignity, to which you are exalted, and your peculiar bravery, to what the greatest and Catholic emperor's godliness and the bravest duke's joy requires? As for us, we will, as our duty and love for your Majesty implies, at no time and on no occasion refrain both from exalting and praising your godliness and magnanimity, and from displaying our highest and constant benevolence towards you. But it is up to your well-known and universally praised wisdom to see and see to it, when the time and the occasion arise, and when danger arises (which, if you are not controlled, will finally affect everyone), that your excellent bravery and majesty may bring you glory and salvation and benefit to the world! Given in Rome, at St. Peter's, under the Fisherman's Ring, the 15th of May in the year 1518, of our sixth papacy.

After reading such a letter, the Emperor, on the admonition of the legate, went to the altar of the Lord and there received the consecrated weapons, namely the sword and hat or helmet, which signify the service of the spiritual power, as a faithful duke, protector and protector of the Catholic faith, but the legate then made this speech to the said Emperor:

Most Sublime Emperor! We know that the Apostle Peter had two swords, one to be whole, the other to be so that you must draw it or shrug it. The same now hands to your Majesty in his successor Pope Leo X., his greatest governor on earth, to whom all authority in heaven and on earth has been given, this sword, which is called the protection of the evangelical truth, which also secretly signifies the apostolic authority over kingdoms and peoples, and besides the divine in the born, It is also a sacrament to the divine omnipotence dwelling in the born, although in the flesh small, Jesus Christ, because it has well deserved the Roman and apostolic chair and the one who sits on it, and also has a glorious praise of bravery, magnanimity, godliness, devotion, justice and wisdom. And this sword belongs to your majesty, because it is hers. That it is theirs is sufficiently proven by the use, since they, during the episcopal office or service, annually at Christmas, when they are present, let this drawn or bare sword, with the helmet on the head, swing or flash it, as a protector of the evangelical truth, when the Gospel of John is read. For they alone have the name of a protector and bailiff of the church. That it be and may be theirs requires the present course of our times, when all eyes, Lord, are waiting for you to open your hand to grasp this sword, to twitch it and to bare it against Christ's enemies. Take, invincible emperor, the helmet of the Holy Spirit in the dove of precious stone, so that the inner seat of the mind and the spirit may be kept still and fruitful without cunning and deceit by the Holy Spirit, who distributes and protects gifts in the form of the dove. For a Christian emperor must not follow the wild customs of pagan tyrants, but must show himself to be so just, brave and a magnanimous prince of victory that he always remains kind, friendly and quite majestic, even when he is gentle with the dove. Take this your sword, too, so that not only justice and judgment, the fortress of your chair, are secretly communicated to you, but also all confessors of the evangelical truth are placed under your protection. Let then thy hand be firm, and thy right high against the fury and wrath of the Turks; let it also be for good fortune and salvation that this day, which is common to the first Roman pope 1) as well as to the first emperor, should come to this sacred ceremony has to serve. For this day is suitable for Petro, the prince of the apostles. But also Octavius, after he overcame Cleopatra and Antonius today, brought the world domination to himself and received the name Augustus from increase of the empire, and gave such to the month Sextilis. May our Lord Jesus Christ grant to your ever-increasing Majesty that with this quite happy sword of today, after the conquest of Constantinople and Jerusalem, she may spread and increase the Roman Empire and the apostolic church to the ends of the earth!

1) On the margin: It happened on August 1, when St. Peter's chain celebration also falls (Kapp).

10 After the speech and the reception of the sacred weapons, the bishop of Trieft, at the Emperor's command, gave thanks:

The Most Sublime Emperor, Most Reverend Father in Christ, has most graciously and kindly accepted this gift, presented in the name of our Most Holy Lord Leo X., Pabst, from your most reverend fatherhood, has most willingly and kindly accepted this gift, and bids her, for the honor of the Holy Apostolic See and for the needs and concerns of Christianity in general, to offer not only her property and fortune, but also her life and blood, as she has always desired from her earliest youth, as often as the opportunity presents itself. Which highly important cause, although it seems to require a fresher youth and stronger physical strength than it now has, is nevertheless not to be abandoned or abandoned because, covered under the helmet of the Holy Spirit and the shield and defense of the faith, it would, even where the forces are lacking, nevertheless by good counsel and undaunted courage, under Christ's guidance and help, always promote such a holy undertaking and necessary campaign against the enemies of the faith more than it would hinder it.

After everything had taken place and been accomplished as desired, the legate, standing at the altar, gave the blessing to the people and then took off the priestly robes and put on the Cardinal's robes and ornaments, and then went out to the church with the emperor and other princes and cardinals present. The emperor, however, with both legates and the apostolic nuncio, as well as the princes, princes and other estates of the empire, led the new cardinal back to his palace; afterwards, however, he also accompanied both legates to their inn. Finally, the emperor and the princes each returned to their homes. Thus this noble and glorious act was accomplished, and the gracious, mighty

God has given His grace to this. To whom be honor and glory forever and ever! Amen. Done in the city of Augsburg. In the year of Christ 1518, August 1.

C. From the Pabst's order to the Cardinal in Augsburg.

176 Pope Leo X's breve to Cardinal Thomas Cajetan, Legate a Latere, on how he should behave against Luther and his followers. Dated 23 Aug. 1518.

This document together with the following is found in the so-called XuZustnna, which Luther still let go out in 1518 at the beginning of December under the title: Martini lmtber XvAvst: apnä. D. b,e-.

Zatnrm ^ostolicnrm ^uAnstae. 12 leaves in quarto. Printed by Johann Grünenberg in Wittenberg. Reprints were published by Melchior Lotther and Valentin Schumann in Leipzig. Another edition by Johann Frobenius in Basel lacks everything that the original print contains after Luther's letter to Cajetan of October 14 (Weim. Ausg.). These ^cta are printed in full in the Baseler Sammlung Lutherscher Schriften of March 1520, Bl. kr 4d and from it in D. M. lmtberii lnenbrationnin par8 nna. Lasileae apnä Xäain?etri M. D. XX, Mense 3nbo, p. 264. In the "Gesammtausgabe" they are found in fragments. Our writing is in the Latin Wittenberg (1550), torn. I, col. 204b; in the Jena one (1579), torn. I, col. 181; in the Erlanger, opp. var. arA., tönn II, n. 354; in the Weimarschen, vol. II, p. 23 and in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 437, in Adam Petri 1. e. p. 277. German is found in the Wittenberger (1569), vol. IX, p. 31b; in the Jenaer (1564), vol. I, p. 302; in the Altenburger, vol. I, p. 115; in the Leipziger, vol. XVII, p. 174 and in Walch. Walch's edition is the only German one that brings the Xeta complete, namely in this volume (after the old edition) Col. 739-746; (687-689 duplicate); 691-712; 746-756 and 656-664.

To our beloved son Thomas, our Cardinal Priest of the title Sancti Sixti and of the Apostolic See Legate de Latere, Pope Leo X.

1. our beloved son! Hail and apostolic blessing. After it has come to our ears that one, called Martinus Luther, hermit of the Order of St. Augustine, got into the wrong mind. Augustini, got into a wrong mind, defended some heretical articles, contrary to the teachings of the holy Roman church, as right, and about this, out of his own thirst and iniquity, defiantly and stiff-neckedly despising the compulsion of obedience, allowed some sayings, even books of shame, to go out through the printing press in various places in Germany, without questioning the Roman church, which is the master of the faith.

Since we now wanted to punish his outrage (and foolishness) paternally, we ordered the worthy, our dear. Brother Jerome, Bishop of Ascoli, of the proceedings of the Apostolic Court of Appeal, that he should admonish the said Martin Luther to appear before him personally, and to examine him on the above-mentioned articles, and what he thought of the faith, to give an answer, with avoidance of certain punishment; as then the above-mentioned Jerome, Bishop of Ascoli, has let such an admonition go out against the said Martin Luther, as we have heard.

Now, however, it has recently come to our attention that the said Martinus is abusing our kindness and friendliness, and thereby becoming more foolhardy, so that he is making things worse, and continuing stubbornly in his error and heresy, and has also let some other conclusions and books of shame go out, in which some other heretical errors are included, which has not a little frightened and distressed our minds.

4. Therefore, according to our episcopal office, in order to counteract the above errors and to prevent this poison from becoming so rampant, nor from polluting and poisoning the hearts of the simple, we hereby command, by this present writing, your prudence (for which we take all good care in the Lord, because of your special skill, manifold knowledge and experience in all kinds of things, also righteous devotion towards us and this holy see, which you are an honest, respectable member), you will, as soon as you have received this writing of ours, without any delay, because this matter is obvious to us from common rumor, also from sight, and therefore cannot be excused in any way, summon and force the said Luther, who has already been declared a heretic by the above-mentioned Jerome, bishop of Ascoli, to appear before you personally.

(5) You will also call upon and take to your aid the arm or power, both of our most beloved Son in Christ, Maximilian, elected Roman Emperor, and other princes of Germany, of all communities, universities and potentates, both spiritual and secular. And if you become powerful, you will keep him safe and secure until you receive further orders from us that he be brought before us and the apostolic see.

(6) And if he should come before thee, smite within himself, show true signs of repentance, and, without need of himself, beg mercy and pardon for such iniquity and thirst, then we give you power and authority to graciously accept him for the unity of the Holy Mother of the Church, who never shuts out her bosom to the one who returns.

(7) But if he persists in his stubbornness, despises worldly power or authority, and you are not able to gain power over him, we give you equal authority and power in all places of Germany to proclaim him and all who follow him, even by public commandment and proclamation, after the manner of those who 1) were publicly posted in the town halls in former times, to be heretics, banished, accursed and cursed, and to command that all believers in Christ shall avoid them as such.

8. And so that this epidemic may be eradicated the more quickly and easily, you shall admonish all prelates in general, and each one in particular, as well as other ecclesiastical persons, both secular and regular, who belong to any order, including the mendicant orders, then also dukes, margraves, counts, barons and all commonwealths, universities, and potentates (with the exception of the highly esteemed Maximilian, elected emperor) by our power and authority, even under the sentence of banishment and other subsequent punishments, admonish and require, if they want to be held and regarded otherwise as faithful, that they accept the said Martin Luther, together with his followers and followers, in prison and send him to you in good custody.

9. But where, since God is for, which we cannot be persuaded nor believe, said princes, commonwealths, universities and potentates, or one belonging to them, would in any way house or harbor the said Martinus, or his followers and followers, or would show the same Luther counsel, help, assistance, encouragement or favor, publicly or secretly, by themselves or others, for whatever cause and in whatever way: of the same princes, commonwealths, universities and potentates, and of each of them cities, towns, country and villages, as well as the cities, towns, villages, country and villages, where the above-mentioned Martinus would go or escape, as long as the said Martinus would remain there, and three days after that, we want to subject to the church's interdict.

10. areas, nevertheless, all and especially all the above-mentioned princes, commonwealths, universities and potentates, about said penalties,

1) Here we have followed the reading of the Weimar edition: quae (referring to edicta), while all other editions offer Hui.

As far as the ecclesiastics and the above-mentioned regulators are concerned, they are to be deprived of their churches, monasteries and other ecclesiastical property or income, and as incompetents to possess them henceforth, they are also to be deprived of their fiefdoms.

11. But as far as the laity are concerned, except for the Emperor, they shall be dishonorable and incapable of all proper actions, deprived of Christian burial and fiefs, which they have received and obtained from us and the apostolic see, or also from whatever secular lords, and thus fall into the above-mentioned penalty, if they do not comply with your command, request and admonition, without any withdrawal, objection and plea, and completely abstain from all advice, help, favor and stay of the aforementioned Luther and his followers.

(12) But to those who are obedient in this, we give you power to grant plenary indulgence, or any recompense and special grace of your liking, according to the present Scripture. Against this shall not be valid all kinds of exemptions, privileges and liberties, whether they be confirmed with an oath, apostolic assurance, or any other kind of fortification, and granted to all kinds of ecclesiastics and religious, whether they be religious, also to mendicant persons, likewise to churches, monasteries, 2c., item, orders, or also to secular persons, in any way whatsoever. And although in the same it is expressly provided and prevented that they may not be banished, suspended, or have an interdict imposed upon them, yet this decree of ours appended and delivered shall annul and render void the preceding one. Which letters or privileges content and opinion, as if they had been written and written from word to word in the present letters, we consider to be expressed, and by virtue of the present ones we want to specially and expressly abolish and abrogate, and have abolished, together with all that is contrary to and against them.

Given at Rome, at St. Peter's under the Fisherman's Ring, the 23rd day of August, Anno 1518, of our Papacy in the sixth year.

Jacobus Sadoletus.

177 D. Matt. Luther's gloss on the above papal breve to Cardinal Cajetanus.

This epilogue by Luther to the preceding papal breve is found immediately after the breve in all editions given in the preceding number, separated from it only in the Latin Wittenberg edition, tow. I, col. 2145. - There are several times two

The authenticity of the Breve has been questioned by Leopold Ranke, "Deutsche Geschichte im Zeitalter der Reformation", 4th ed, mainly on the basis that Luther received the citation to Rome on August 7, 1518, in which he was granted a period of sixty days to travel, but now the pope is supposed to have written already on August 23 that Jerome of Ascoli had already declared him a heretic who should be forced to appear personally before Cajetan, who, if he becomes powerful, should hold him in safe custody. But the weightiest recent authorities hold to the authenticity of the bull; so Seidemann in De Wette, vol. VI, p. 599, note 6; Köstlin, Martin Luther (3), vol. I, p. 790 sd p. 233; Knaake in the Weimar edition, vol. II, p. 22, note, and Kolde, Luthers Stellung zu Concil und Kirche, p. 115 f. The latter says that with the nature of the judges, especially Sylvester Prierias, such an acceleration of the process was not so inconceivable; that Leo X, in a contemporaneous letter to the Churfürst sdem 179. Finally: "If Luther at first considers the breve to be spurious, this cannot be taken into consideration at all, since he has often made such statements in pretense, in order to be able to attack his opponents more sharply under this pretense. (Cf. quite the same process with the bull of excommunication.) Accordingly, the breve is to be considered genuine."

In the original print, in all copies that have become known up to recent times, our writing has a blackened passage at the beginning, which makes eight lines, the first paragraph, illegible. Also all reprints and the editions begin only with the second paragraph, with omission of the first word: vsinds. The reason for this is as follows (as we can see from the Weimar edition): "Prince Frederick saw the publication of the Vota Vugu- stunu with great reluctance; in the middle of the printing he put a stop to it. It was too late: the sheets had already been sold individually; only the third had not yet run out; Luther now believed that he could not hold back this last piece either; however, a passage that was particularly displeasing to the Elector was covered with printer's ink." Only Niederer, in whose copy the passage was "not so hard blackened," succeeded in penetrating something behind this dark veil. He was able to "bring out or guess" quite a number of words. The Weimar edition also made an attempt to eliminate the secret in the 2nd volume, p. 3. But later, D. Buchwald found a copy in the Zwickau Rathsschulbibliothek in which the passage is not blackened, and reported it in the 9th volume of the Weimar edition, p. 205, which we make use of here. - It was not until the end of October 1518 that the Breve came into Luther's hands. See Appendix, No. 14, § 3. - We have changed only little in the good old translation.

Afterword by Brother Martin Luther to the preceding breve.

First of all. The pope writes to all cardinals and bishops as to his venerable brothers. To this one cardinal priest St. Sixti he writes as to his "beloved".

Son" and "beloved son". This has been so much noted that the memorable author in this breve has forgotten even his tricks, and writes, 1) that the bishop Jerome of Ascoli is called a venerable brother by the pope. For also from this deceiver the proverb had to be confirmed, in which it says: A liar must have a good memory. 2)

Secondly. Who told the pope that I had abused his kindness, since he had me cited by Jerome, bishop of Ascoli? Because at the same time that the breve is given, or yes, that I should have abused this kindness, I had not yet heard anything about the citation, as you will hear afterwards in the date. But the nasty white raven one in Germany, since he saw my constant courage, has croaked out such raven song.

Item 2: That I stubbornly persisted in error and heresy after Jerome's citation and admonition, and let other booklets go out, is a public lie. For not only before the breve was given, but also before the admonition was issued, they had stopped printing and selling my little books, except for the explanation of the sayings on indulgences, which I had not yet completely finished when I was cited. 3) But one can well smell that my apology, which I let go out, displeased some plate and cap servants. Which, since I did not want to give way to them, they invented a pope for me, who dreamed or saw of persistence in the deed, and of shouting, so worldly and not excusable. 4) For Leo X, whom they invent, is perhaps born inter rationem rei rationabilis, et rei rationantis.

3. znm last, which is the very finest,

1) 8 2 in the breve.

2) What caused the Elector to have this paragraph erased by printer's ink is Luther's not unclear reproach against Cajetan, which he made to him again not long after in his letter to the shorter interpretation of the Epistle to the Galatians (St. Louis edition, vol. VIII, 1359), that he had invented this breve.

3) Luther received the citation, as follows, on August 7, the rrsolutiones went out on August 21. Cf. St. Louis Edition, Vol. XVIII, Introduction, p. 14.

4) This refers to H 3 and 4 of the breve.

this breve is given August 23; but I have been cited and admonished August 7, 5) so that between the date of the breve and the citation sixteen days have passed. Now, dear reader, you will find that Jerome, Bishop of Ascoli, either before he served me with the citation or on the sixteenth day after the citation was served to me, proceeded against me, passed sentence, condemned me and declared me a heretic.

4 So I asked: Where are the sixty days given to me in my citation, which began on the 7th day of August and ended around the 7th day of October? Is this the style and manner of the Roman court, that they cite, admonish, accuse, pronounce judgment, condemn, declare a heretic on one day, especially one who is so far from Rome, and knows nothing of all this? What will they answer to this? Perhaps they have forgotten that they would have purgatoried the brain with hellebore before they were at work with this lie to inflict it.

In the end, dear reader, let my faithful admonition be dear to you, let it be with my theses as it may: as much as they may yield to indulgences, I admonish you that you do not fall into my foolishness one day. For I believed before that time that the merit of Christ was truly given to me through the indulgence, continued in this foolish delusion, taught and persuaded the people that because the indulgence was such a noble treasure, one should not refrain from redeeming it, much less hold it in low esteem or despise it. But I, a fool with no understanding, did not realize that by this speech I had almost made a salutary commandment or a necessary advice to those who were free to redeem or not to redeem indulgences, to permit sin and to abate good works.

6) To this, my mind and good sense brought me, by delusion and dark words of the extravagant be-

5) Not August 21, as stated in Kolde, Luthers Stellung zu Concil und Kirche, p. 115.

6) The preceding, according to the Latin, reads thus: that by this speech I made almost a salutary commandment or at least a necessary counsel out of what was permitted, what was at will, what was indulged.

I have been mistaken. I have erred, dear reader, therefore recant my error, of which you will be a witness.

(6) But when I saw, after opening my eyes, that all doctors were unanimous in teaching that it is better to let indulgences go than to redeem them, and that those are more blessed who do enough by themselves than those who redeem indulgences, and that indulgences are nothing else than the forbearance of good works, by which satisfaction is fulfilled, I soon realized that it followed from this that one could despise indulgences, indeed that it would be the best advice to disregard them, even to let them go.

(7) But that one should despise, forsake, and hold in low esteem the holy, sacred, and unsearchable merit of Christ (that is, as it was then interpreted and understood, indulgences), was terrible and blasphemous, and was considered that such was not useful advice, but the words of a raging, godless man.

But this moved me very much, and penetrated that the indulgence itself, without the name of Christ's merit, was despised, and only by the title of Christ's merit was considered the noblest treasure, and therefore (unfortunately!) the holy merit of Christ, which can be compared to no treasure, had to serve and be a cover for the dishonest, shameful profit of the indulgence merchants. For what Christian, if he only heard to call, would keep silent, if the most precious treasure, namely the wounds, the blood, the agony and the sweat of anguish of his most sweet Beatificator, were offered to him, who did not also want to offer his life, let alone money, with joy in a mild manner? But again, how heartily it would grieve thee, if thou shouldst see that the wounds, the blood, the agony and the sweat of the blood of thy all-loving Lord Christ should serve only for shameful, accursed gain, and shouldst see Christ sold and sold again, not by one Judas, but by innumerable Judas, in addition every moment!

(9) Wherefore let not the name of Christ deceive thee, neither deceive thee: remember that it is declared of Christ, that many false Christs (and false prophets) shall come in his name, and shall shew great signs and wonders.

The first step is to make sure that the chosen ones are also led astray (where possible).

Now, I assume that my 58th thesis 1) is false, and that the merit of Christ is the treasure of indulgences. But consider what will follow from this on account of necessity, if you must say and confess that Christ's merit is to be abandoned and held in low esteem. Item, that those are more blessed who do not redeem the merit of Christ, than those who seek it with all devotion through the indulgence. And because the merit of Christ (according to its nature and character) primarily stimulates and drives to good works (because it should be the treasure of indulgences), but in the indulgence, since it is contrary to itself, good works are left behind, and what it does according to its nature and God's will, it dissolves again according to the will of the pope.

I have done, dear reader, what I should; if you persist in this error, you are mistaken through no fault of mine. Farewell. _____

Luther's verdict on this breve in a letter to Spalatin. Oct. 31, 1518.

See Appendix, No. 14, § 3.

v. How the Elector of Saxony acted on Luther's behalf at Augsburg.

179 Pope Leo X's request to the Elector Frederick of Saxony to hand Luther over to Cardinal Cajetan, to follow in the footsteps of his ancestors, and this "child of malice not to protect. Dat. 23 Aug. 1518.

This writing is found in Latin in the Wittenberg edition (1550), tona. I, toi. 203k; in the Jena (1579), tom. I, toi. 180k; in the Erlangen, opp. var. ar^h., toru. II, p. 352 and in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 443. German in the Wittenberger (1569), vol. IX, p. 31; in the Jenaer (1564), vol. I, p. 101; in the Altenburger, vol. I, p. 114 and in the Leipziger, vol. XVII, p. 173.

To our beloved son, the noble Lord Frederick, Duke of Saxony, Elector of the Holy Roman Empire, Hail.

Beloved Son, salvation and apostolic blessing! When we think of your exceedingly noble lineage, and

1) Cajetan at Augsburg had turned against this in particular. Compare Kolde, Martin Luther, Vol. I, p. 173.

Remembering you, its head and ornament, as you and your ancestors, above all the praise with which your lineage is adorned, have especially desired this as the first and noblest, that through you the Christian faith and religion, and the honor and dignity of this Holy See (as is right and just), should remain unchanged in the old and noble state, and the honor and dignity of this Holy See (as is just and right) have remained unchanged in the old, laudable state, we cannot support the idea that anyone who abandons the faith, or rather rebels against it, should, trusting in your highness' favor and grace, so brazenly let his pride and malice take over.

2. But because we have heard, and it has reached us everywhere, that a child of wickedness, Brother Martin Luther, a hermit of the Congregation of St. Augustine in Germany, has forgotten his habit and his vows, which consist in humility and obedience, and boasts in the Church of God that, being assured of your protection and protection, he fears no man's authority or punishment: although we know that this is not so, we have nevertheless deemed it good to write to your Highness, and to admonish her in the Lord that, for the preservation of her name and honor, as a pious Catholic prince such as you are, she may keep the adornment of the glorious fame and good report of your praiseworthy lineage unsullied by such calumny, nor alone avoid the guilt of what you do; for in our opinion there is still no guilt in you; but also prevent the suspicion of such guilt, which this brother's iniquity intends to inflict on you.

3) And because it is known to us by announcement of the most learned and ecclesiastical people, especially of the beloved son, our holy palace Magister, that the said brother Martin Luther dares to assert many ungodly, heretical things, and to publicly defend them as right, we have ordered that he be demanded to answer, and have ordered our beloved son Thomas, of the title St. Sixti, our presbyter-Cardinal and of this holy see de Latere Legate, who is well experienced in all theology and philosophy, 1) what he shall do in this matter. Sixti, our Presbyter-Cardinal, and this Holy See de Latere Legate, who is well experienced and skilled in all theology and philosophy, 1) what he should do in this.

(4) However, since this action affects the glory of God and the purity and truth of the Christian faith, and since it is the proper office of the apostolic chair, which is the master of the faith, to judge who teaches rightly or wrongly, we again admonish your Highness and command that in virtue of the holy obedience, that she will take care of God, ours, and her honor, and that she will see to it that this Martinus Luther is handed over to the power and judgment of this holy see, as the above-mentioned legate will demand of you. This will be a pleasant and beneficial work for the Christian faith, and especially honorable for your Highness, because of the promotion of godliness and religion. For it is to the honor of thy name, and especially to the blessedness of thy soul, that people living in our time, or who will live in the future, may not one day complain and say: The harmful heresy in the church of God would have arisen through the help and favor of your most noble people, to which danger your wisdom is guilty.

(5) If, however, your Highness may have something good in mind for Martin Luther, when the matter has been discussed before the apostolic see and the truth has been investigated, he shall either, if he is innocent, be sent back by our gracious will to where he came from; or, if he is found to be of a wrong mind, your mind shall be freed from all error. In accordance with our fatherly attitude and our pastoral office, we do not want to impose punishment on innocence, and we want to leniently offer the bosom of our kindness to repentance.

Given in Rome, at St. Peter's, under the Fisherman's Ring, August 23, 1518, in the sixth year of our Papacy.
Jacobus Sadoletus.

Luther's message to Joh. Lang about what the Elector of Saxony had arranged with the Cardinal on his behalf. 16. 1518.

See Appendix, No. 15n, § 3.

181 Myconius' report on how Elector Frederick had obtained from Cajetan, at great expense, that Luther should not come to Rome, but that his cause should be settled in Germany.

From the Myconius list. reform. p. 30.

Around the same time, a Legatus from Rome, a Cardinal, called Thomas Cajetan, tituli 8. Sixti, arrived. Then Duke Frederick, Elector of Saxony, obtained with great discomfort that the Pope did not want to force Luther to Rome, but to commit, examine and judge the matters in German lands. For this purpose, he offered to bear the expenses and to present Luther.

1) namely in the preceding decree, No. 176.

182: Handwritten letter from Elector Frederick to Spalatin, from which one can see how favorably he felt toward Luther.

From Seckendorf's nist. butb.,¹Ub. I, x>. 53, § 41, sdd. (b).

Although Prince Frederick hid his favorable attitude toward Luther from most people, he did not hide it from his confidants. There is a handwritten letter from him to Spalatin in which he sends him the news he had received from Augsburg, where Luther was at that time, and adds: "It concerns our Martinum, his things still stand well, and the Pfeffinger also comforts well.)

183 Spalatin's letter of intercession for Luther's cause, addressed to the imperial minister Hans Renner on the prince's orders after the departure of Prince Frederick from Augsburg.

This letter is found in the Wittenberg edition (1569), vol. IX, p. 58b; in the Jena edition (1564), vol. I, p. 107 b; in the Altenburg edition, vol. I, p. 120; in the Leipzig edition, vol. XVII, p. 172 and in Löscher, Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 445.

Favorable Hans Renner, my diligent request is that you, as I have spoken to you today regarding the most noble Elector of Saxony, Duke Frederick, my most gracious lord, faithfully remember D. Martin Luther, Augustinian Order, against Roman Imperial Majesty, my most gracious lord, faithfully remember, and bribe you that Imperial Majesty prescribe him against Papal Holiness, to let the made complaint and citation rest, and to order the matter out, to the bishops of Würzburg and Freifingen, and to an unsuspicious university to interrogate. For D. Martinus can suffer all universities in German lands to be commissioners and judges, except Erfurt, Leipzig, and Frankfurt on the Oder, which have made themselves suspicious. For Doctor Martino, for many reasons, does not want to be done in any way, and it is also impossible for him to appear in person in Rome. My most gracious lord will undoubtedly recognize this in all graces toward you, so I am kindly willing to deserve it. 1518.

¹) Seckendorf translates the last words: et bonam kavit.?k6k8nMru8 - and Pfeffinger gives good hope. - Seckendorf also gives the location where this letter is in the Weimar archives.

184 Luther's letter to Spalatin, in which he regrets the inconveniences that have befallen the Elector because of him and does not want anyone to take care of him.

Sept. 2, 1518.

See Appendix, No. 9, U 1.2.

185 Staupitzen's letter to Spalatin, in which he asks the latter to cheer up the Elector: he should not look to him, nor to Luther, nor to the Augustinian Order, but above all to the preservation of truth, so that it may come to light, and see to it that there is a safe place where one may speak freely without fear. Dated Sept. 7, 1518.

From the Latin Jena edition (1579), toru. I, col. 363 b.
Translated into German.

1. salvation and grace from our Lord Jesus Christ! What you write about our Martin Luther, dearest friend, and although it sounds harsh in itself, it is nevertheless sweet through your pen, since you let us feel your love and thus comfort us through fear. He does not deceive who has promised that he will be the third where two are united in his name.

Since your worthiness is so fervent in love, and at the same time I see how much you make an effort to impress this on others as well, one and no small cause for despondency has already been removed. For such unanimous godly wishes must necessarily be heard. At the same time, the voice of the Holy Spirit from heaven enlightens and strengthens: "When you see that injustice is done to the poor, and that authority prevails over justice, and that righteousness is taken away in a country, do not be surprised, for there is a higher one above a high one, and there are others above these higher ones, and the king of the whole earth that serves him rules over them. One must take legal remedies, seek the intercession (or assistance) of the saints and the pious, not so much to obtain life as the truth; and if none is to be found, one must serve the king who rules over the whole earth, suffer, die for the truth, as we must live for the truth more than ourselves.

3 Therefore, fellow disciples of Christ and followers of the gospel truth, pray with me that our Lord Jesus Christ may shine through Himself to us, who is the light of the world, the truth, the way and the life of believers, and that He may give us to seek Him, the humble, humbly, to think moderately of ourselves, but when we have found Him, to proclaim Him steadfastly and confidently.

4 Then admonish the most noble prince, your lord and mine, that he be not weary because of the deceitfulness of them that seek to overthrow the truth with the tongue of a serpent, neither be dismayed at the roaring of the lion. 1) For it is written of him to whom the truth of God is a shield: "He has commanded his angels over you, that you do not strike your foot against a stone; on vipers and basilisks you will walk, and tread on lions and dragons" sSs. 91, 4. 11. ff]. Only her Serene Highness should refrain from her own, Luther, Staupitz, or even the Order; only strive that she may handle the truth, that the truth may come to light and, after the darkness has been dispelled, see to it that there is only a safe place where one can speak freely without fear, of which even a stout-hearted man would be capable.

I know how the Babylonian, not to say Roman, pestilence rages against those who contradict the abuses of those who sell Christ. For I have seen a preacher, who taught the truth, torn from the pulpit by force, and though at a great feast, dragged away by ropes before all the people and thrown into the dungeon. Others have seen even more cruel things.

So far I have not seen that the slightest thing has been lacking in your active participation or the most noble prince's protection. Dear, help further that her Serene Highness, in view of the highest and eternal truth, remains in such a sense, for which more is due to you than we two, Martin and I, who are indeed two, but with you one in Christ, the eternally highly praised Lord, either are or are able to be. Be well. From our monastery, Sept. 7, 1518.

Your worthiness
most devoted brother
Johannes von Staupitz.

1) Here is a play on words with the name of Pabst Leo: 4 "orn8.

E. Luther matured after Augsburgs, although some good strangers wanted to keep him away from it.

186 Staupitzen's letter to Luther, asking him to leave Wittenberg and come to him secretly in Salzburg. Sept. 14, 1518.

See Appendix, No. 15d.

187 Luther's report to Wenceslaus Link, how Johann Lang had told him that Count Albrecht of Mansfeld had warned him in writing not to let Luther leave Wittenberg, because everything was in place to kill him, along with Luther's thoughts about it. July 10, 1518.

See Appendix, No. 2, §§ 2-4.

The report of Myconius on Luther's conversation with the Franciscan Provisor, Johann Kestner in Weimar, on the journey to Augsburg. End of Sept. 1518.

From the Myconius liist. reform. p. 30 reprinted in des Scultetus unvul. evunZ. unn. 1518, p. 26 and in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 446.

Doctor Martinus moved to Augsburg in September 1518, lay one night in Weimar in the Barfüßerkloster, where he still held a mass, and was still one with the monks. And when the monks' provisor, Johann Kestner, said out of compassion: "O dear Doctor, the whales are, by God, learned people. I am worried that you will not be able to preserve your things from them. They will burn you. Luther answered: "With nettles it would work, but with fire it would be too hot. Dear friend, ask our dear Lord God in heaven with an Our Father for me and his dear child Christ, whose cause is mine, that he may be merciful to him. If he only preserves it for him, then it is already preserved for me; but if he does not want to preserve it for him, then I will not be able to preserve it for him either, so he must bear the shame.

F. Luther's arrival at Augsburg on October 7 and report to his good friends that he had encountered the matter and had found great protection and love among the Augsburg patricians.

189 Luther's letter to Melanchthon from Augsburg, in which he says a heart-moving farewell in view of the probability of suffering death for the truth.
Oct. 11, 1518.

This letter is complete only in Aurifaber, vol. I, p. 85; in Löscher, Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 630; StrobelRanner, p. 13; in De Wette, vol. I, p. 145 and in Erlanger Briefwechsel, vol. I, p. 244; but incomplete in the Latin Wittenberg edition (1550), tom. I, col. 207; in the Latin Jena (1579), tom. I, fol. 184 d and in the Erlanger, opp. var. ar^h, tom. II, p. 364. similarly incomplete in all German editions, namely, the Wittenberg (1569), vol. IX, p. 35; in the Jena (1564), vol. I, p. 107; in the Altenburg, vol. I, p. 119; in the Leipzig, vol. XVII, p. 186 and in Walch. We translate according to the Erlanger Briefwechsel, which has corrected De Wette's text according to the 60ä. vrs^{gä}.

Newly translated from the Latin.

To Philipp Melanchthon, professor of the Greek language in Wittenberg, who is highly esteemed in Christ, highly learned and most beloved friend.

JEsus.

Hail! I accept our Johann Böschenstein, 1) my dear Philipp, rather as recommended by you than that I let him be recommended to you. I see that he is a timid man and of little reliability, which, I fear, will keep you from closer association with him; but you, as well as the others, show him heartfelt mercy, not harshness. Carlstadt will give you news about my affair. There is nothing new or strange going on here, except that my name is on everyone's lips in the city, and everyone is eager to see the man who is like him.

1) Johann Böschenstein from Esslingen, born 1472, died 1532, came from Ingolstadt to Wittenberg as the first professor of Hebrew. He left Wittenberg as early as April 1519, then spent a short time in Heidelberg and later in Zurich, where he was Zwingli's teacher in Hebrew (Erl. Briefw.).

a Herostratus caused such a large conflagration.

You prove yourself a man, as you do, and teach the young people the right doctrine. I go to be sacrificed for you and for them, if it pleases the Lord. I would rather die and, which is the most difficult thing for me, also be forever deprived of your exceedingly sweet company, than that I should revoke what is rightly said and become a cause for the best studies to be destroyed among these, as quite incomprehensible, so also exceedingly fierce enemies of science and studies 2).

Italy has been cast into palpable Egyptian darkness. Thus, all of them do not know Christ and what Christ is. Nevertheless, we have them as lords and masters of faith and life. Thus, through the wrath of God upon us, what the prophet says [Isa. 3:4] is fulfilled: "I will give them young men to be princes, and children shall rule over them." Fare well, my dear Philip, and turn away God's wrath through devout prayer. Augsburg, Monday after Dionysius [Oct. 11], 1518.

Brother Martin Luther.

190 Luther's report to Spalatin of his arrival in Augsburg and his indisposition on the way; likewise, how he had himself reported to the Cardinal after his arrival; how many distinguished town councillors and friends took care of him, showed him all love and good, wanted to effect an imperial escort letter, and warned him against the Cardinal; whereby he especially praises D. Peutingen as a very good friend. 10 Oct. 1518.

See Appendix, No. 16, §§1-3.

191 Luther's further report to Spalatin that he had informed Staupitz of his arrival at Augsburg and that he had promised to come there; as well as that the Franconian deputy of the

2) The words: kos - Uostos form in the Latei nishes the beginning of the new paragraph. But already the old translator has drawn them, as it seems to us, suitably to the preceding.

who had left Augsburg shortly before his arrival, even spoke honestly of him; at the same time, he lets the Wittenbergers take leave of him in case he comes back to Wittenberg or not.

See Appendix, No. 16, U 9.10.

G. Of the cunning plot of Urban de Serralonga, one of Cajetan's ibgeschickten, with Luther M Augsburg.

Luther's report in a letter to Spalatin, how this sent Urbanus visited him and what kind of conversation he had with him. Oct. 10, 1518.

See Annex No. 16, U 4-7.

193 Another report by Luther of this Urban de Serralonga's repeated visit and other conversation.

From the Altenburg edition, vol. I, p. 150. A very similar report also in Löscher, Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 455.

On the third day the orator came, expostulating with me, and said: why do I not come to the Cardinal, who is waiting for me graciously? I answered: I must follow the gentlemen's advice, to whom the Elector recommends me; such, however, is that I do not go to the Cardinal until I have received the Emperor's escort, as soon as I obtain that, I want to come. He was upset by this and said: "How does he think that the Elector will take up arms for his own sake? I replied, "I certainly did not want that. Where does he want to stay, he continued? Under heaven, I said. He, on the other hand: If he had the pope and the cardinals in his power, what would he do with them? I was ready with the answer: I would show them all honor. But he bit his finger in the manner of a Welshman and said: Ha, ha! So he went away and did not come back.

194 Georg Spalatin's report on this.

This report is found in the Wittenberg edition (1569), vol. IX, p. 36; in the Jena edition (1564), vol. I, p. 108 b; in the Altenburg edition, vol. I, p. 121; and in the Leipzig edition, vol. XVII, p. 178.

As soon as D. Martinus came to Augsburg on the Friday after Sanct Francisci 1) next past in this year 1518, he let himself be reported to the legate, with humble offer to present himself as the obedient one, according to his opportunity.

2 On the following Saturday, Doctor Martinus was required by the legate to appear before him.

3 Now the Lord Urbanus, Orator, has ordered Doctori Martino not to appear before the legate in any way, unless he has been with him before.

So Urbanus came to Doctor Martina, talked to him in many ways, and wanted to persuade Doctor Martinum to humble himself in every way, and not to refuse the legate's request in any way, but to contradict his teaching, sermons, and disputation.

Now Doctor Martinus was worried that Urbanus was more on the legate's side than his. For this reason, he had no other choice but to show himself obedient and humble, and to let himself be shown that he was wrong in everything. Urbanus was glad of this, and said that he wanted to go to the legate beforehand, and that he should follow him; for all things would be bad, and would easily be laid to rest.

6 But Doctor Martino was advised by sensible, loyal friends not to enter into any dealings with the legate, because he had first obtained his escort from the Roman imperial majesty and from the council of Augsburg. Doctor Martinus followed the same advice.

So the said Urbanus came to Doctor Martino, had a long talk with him, and told him what he was doing, the matter would have no need at all. He was not allowed any escort, the legate would be willing and inclined to reject the matter in a friendly manner; if he were to take escort, he would make his cause all the worse, and the like.

1) There is an error in this date. Friday after Francisci is in the year 1518 the 8th of October. In contrast, Luther himself writes in his letter to Spalatin that he arrived in Augsburg on Marci, 68t post Franciscum, which is October 7. This however was in the year 1518 a Thursday. Probably we have to do it also here with a wrong dissolution of tkrin Quinta.

But Doctor Martinus stuck to his opinion and said to Urbano: his most gracious lord, the Elector of Saxony 2c., had given him away to many honest people. Now, however, he had been advised by good friends and many others not to undertake anything without escort; he had to follow them. For he would have to worry, if he did not follow them, and the other suggestion was not good enough, they would write to the Elector of Saxony, his most gracious lord, that he, Doctor Martinus, did not want to follow them, and this or that misfortune would have befallen him.

9 So Doctor Martinus awaited the imperial escort, which was given to him on the Monday after Gereonis [Oct. 11].

A very harsh letter from this Urban de Serralonga against Luther to the Elector of Saxony, in which he demands that the Elector keep the promise he made at Augsburg, and that Luther be chased out of the country or stoned because he would not recant. Casal July 3, 1520.

From Tentzel's Hist. report, vol. II, p. 168. Translated into German.

Most Serene Prince, Most Reverend Lord, Most Worshipful Lord!

1. my humble greeting beforehand ! In the last few days I have written to your Serene Highness in detail that there was a public rumor in the city of Rome that the Auditor of the Apostolic Chamber, on the orders of the Pope, had made some very unfriendly statements against you, as if you were a real enemy of the Christian religion, about which I am quite astonished.

I am very sorry and not a little surprised that such evil things have been reported to the most holy (father) and the aforementioned auditor. The most illustrious House of Saxony has never had such accusations upon it. I fear very much that all the aforementioned and even worse things come only from the venerable father, Doctor Martin Luther. Not only has he not wanted to repent of anything because of the past, but he also continues and becomes more and more angry against the Most Holy Apostolic See. I know well that he will be aware enough that it is difficult to lick the sting; but the worst thing is that the rumor is going around as if he does everything because he relies on your Serene Highness' grace and protection; which will remind you that I have often been assured that if the said Luther persisted in such his evil opinion, they would not only not 1) protect him, but even expel him from their high princely grace and the entire dominion of their Serene Highness; and have already announced such holy and catholic resolution in many places. And as I have news from the city, a bull has been issued against said Luther in the full Consistorio (or Cardinals' Assembly), which still uses all grace and leniency against him, as I hear. For it is stated in said bull that if he wants to recognize his error within a certain time, he should not be excluded from the grace of the apostolic see. Therefore, after careful consideration of all this, and especially because of the offer of mercy made both against the most reverend Cardinal St. Sixti, then in Augsburg with the Emperor's papal legate, and against me, I humbly ask for the special grace that it may not obscure their most Christian name, which is known throughout the world, and so godly other praiseworthy deeds done by your Serene Highness 2). And it is in truth something shameful that slanderers and lying blasphemers, against due and right, should boast of their evil works. They must be blotted out of the book of the living and not be written with the righteous. And that little brother must not give cause for such great shame. Many things, undoubtedly false, have already been written and printed against the honor and glory of your Serene Highness. Therefore arise, Lord, for it is a time to speak and a time to be silent. And those who have written such an ugly report must be condemned to eternal curse and be revealed! But Martinus himself must not remain in his evil opinion. So everything will be forgotten and done.

For this reason, and in order to prevent all consequences, I humbly ask Your Serene Highness to deign to make it so that D. Martin himself repents of having committed so many and such great errors and wants to be a pious and faithful son of the Holy Apostolic See. And if

1) In Latin, a von seems to be missing here, which the old translator already added.

2) Here, too, a "not" is missing in the Latin, which the old translator also added. It seems as if something was omitted in the text, for example, that the evil speakers must be silenced, to which äslrsaut sutkoeari would refer.

If he does not want to do this, let it be done in such a way that he is no longer tolerated in the entire dominion of your Serene Highness, but that he is not only publicly hounded out, but also stoned, so that it may be established everywhere that your Serene Highness... will not protect nor suffer, but will keep and fulfill what she promised in Augsburg. And I would rather have that than to be given 10,000 Rhenish florins.

My most gracious wife with the most illustrious prince and princesses is quite well, and always commands the grace of your Serene Highness, asking that on occasion she take them and their children and state (or country) into special and kind protection and recommend them in the best possible way to Imperial Majesty.

In these regions there is nothing new, except that the most Christian king should unite with the king in England, and great efforts are being made on both sides.

As for the Turkish fleet, it is very large and is due to leave, but it is not yet known where it is likely to go. The Christians are in fear everywhere. However, there are reports that in the Orient, in the Sultan's Oertern (or lands), there has been much rebellion and outrage against the Turks, and it is said that a new Sultan has been elected. If only all the wars of Christendom went to those regions!

There is talk that the Duke of Savoy should take a daughter of the King in Portugal as his wife. In these areas everything is quiet, and I will not write anything else for this time, except that I ask your Serene Highness that she deigns, if I can do something to please her, to command me as her most faithful servant in this. If she does so, she will find my person with my little fortune always completely ready for all favors, and then I will believe that her Serene Highness will still have me in gracious remembrance if she does so, as I then most humbly command myself to her grace. Casal, July 3, 1520.

Your Serene Highness' most humble and obedient servant Urbanus of Serralonga.

Inscription.

To the most illustrious and highborn Lord, Lord Frederick, by the Grace of God Duke of Saxony 2c., the most famous Elector of the Holy Roman Empire 2c., my most esteemed Lord.

H. Of Luther's three interrogations by Cajetan.

1. from the first interrogation.

Spalatin's report of Luther's first audience with Cardinal Cajetan at Augsburg.

This number is a continuation of Report No. 194, and is found in the works of Luther given there immediately after.

On the next Tuesday after that, Doctor Martinus went to the legate and took with him his host, the prior of St. Anne's in Augsburg, and two of his brothers, also Doctor Wenceslaum Link, and another brother of his order.

When Doctor Martinus came to the legate's inn, the legate sent for the Nuncio Apostolico; and when Doctor Martinus came to the legate's chamber, he found the legate, and with him Apostolicum Nuncium and Urbanum. Doctor Martinus fell down before the legate, as Urbanus had instructed him. Then the legate called him to stand up again.

So the whales almost crowded around Doctor Martinus and wanted to see him, and came into her chamber much below.

4 The legate has again called Doctor Martinum to stand up, and certainly together with the Nuncio Apostolico and Urbano hoped nothing else, because Doctor Martinus would sing how and what they wanted, and do a contradiction without any refusal.

5th Now that Doctor Martinus had risen again, and neither the Cardinal nor anyone else had spoken, Doctor Martinus took it for granted that such silence meant that it was his due to speak. And therefore almost said this opinion:

Most venerable father, at the citation of papal holiness and the request of my most gracious lord, the Elector of Saxony, I have appeared as an obedient subservient son of the holy Christian Church, and confess that I have let these and these positiones or disputation sentences go out; and in obedience I am obliged and willing to hear what I am accused of, even if I had been mistaken, to let myself be instructed better.

The legate then said: "Dear son, Papal Holiness has ordered me to act with you on three articles in her breve. The first one,

That thou shalt make a contradiction of thy doctrine, propositions, and preaching. Secondly, that you no longer subject yourself to this. And thirdly, that you renounce it completely.

007 And first thou shalt make a contradiction in the following two articles: First, that thou sayest or settlest that the treasure of indulgences shall not be the merit or suffering of our Lord Jesus Christ. Secondly, that you say that a man who wants to receive the reverend sacrament must actually have faith.

8 The legate also let himself be heard as if he wanted to let go of St. Thomas and other Opiniones, from the Holy Scriptures and act friendly with him; but as soon as the legate opened his mouth, his whole speech was nothing else but pure Thomas, Opiniones and scholasticism.

9 The first article the legate has wanted to move with some extravagans in Clementini's, which starts: Unigenitus, and pretended that the suffering of our dear Lord Jesus Christ and indulgences should be one thing. The other article, about the holy faith, the legate has moved with pure opinions.

In his answer, Doctor Martinus indicated that there were two extravagants: one of Pope Clement VI, the other of Pope Sixti IV, of the same sound; he knew them well and had read them both. For the legate had said how he would be so bold that he could write such extravagans, unread, differently than he held them; had considered it as if Doctor Martinus had never read them. But Doctor Martinus thought that the legate himself had never read them, because he had read them from several entries.

The disputation has grown to such an extent that Doctor Martinus has said that he does not consider the extravagants to be sufficient proof of such great things. For they perverted the Scriptures and did not introduce them properly.

Then the legate spoke: The pope has power and authority over all things. To this Doctor Martinus answered: Salva Scriptura, that is: Yes, it is true, but so far that the holy scripture would not be torn apart by the pope.

13 Then the legate made a mockery of it, saying: Salva Scriptura! The pope, don't you know, is also over the Concilium, because he recently punished and damned the Concilium in Basel.

14 Then said D. Martinus: But the University of Paris has appealed against it. Says the legate further: "The people of Paris will take their punishment for it. I do not know how it happened that D. Martinus alleges Gersonem; then the legate said: I know nothing of the Gersonists. Then D. Martinus said: Who are the Gersonists? The legate said: Let us leave it, and fell on another opinion. For D. Martinus at that time always answered him to one article after the other.

15 On the other article, concerning the holy faith in the reception of the holy sacrament, D. Martinus quoted several sayings from the Holy Scripture. The legate laughed and said: Loquitur de fide generali. Martinus said: No.

16 The legate's Magister Ceremoniarum also wanted to talk a lot about it, as a No^tsr Qostsr; but the legate resisted him so much that he left Doctorem Martinum satisfied in the legate's chamber.

After this action, the Magister Ceremoniarum followed D. Martin into the courtyard and reproached him with a sophistical argument, which D. Martinus answered with a rather scathing reply, and thus also rejected him.

So Doctor Martinus clearly noted from this first action that the legate wanted nothing but a contradiction.

(19) Martinus said that he did not know how to revoke a single word in the article concerning the faith in the sacrament, but if he could be shown to be wrong in the other article, he would let himself be shown wrong. But he would know that the article concerning faith was right, consistent, and well-founded.

20 The Cardinal has also never challenged any other article, although he once said that perhaps there should be more articles.

When D. Martinus returned to the inn from this first action, he found Doctor Staupitzen, the vicar, who had come to Augsburg. To him, D. Martinus denounced the dwindling trade, and that he might not come to a proper answer, but that one alone, although unheard and unconquered, wanted to have a contradiction from him.

22 Doctor Staupitz thought it would be good to obtain from the legate that D. Martinus send his answer in writing to the legate. Martinus send his answer to the legate in writing. Thereupon also D. Martinus acted accordingly.

2. from the second interrogation.

197 Spalatin's report of Luther's second audience with Cajetan, Oct. 13.

Continuation of the previous report, which can be found in the works of Luther listed in No. 194.

On the following Wednesday, D. Martinus has brought about that three Imperial Majesty's Councillors, as the Dean of Trent, Doctor Peutingger, and another, whom D. Martinus does not know to name, and Mr. Philipp von Feilitzsch, Knight, have gone with him to the Legate on account of my most gracious Lord. He also had his notaries and witnesses with him, protested, and made it clear that he was first of all subjectively willing and willing to be examined by public or secret disputation, and to submit to the judgment of the holy Christian church and all those of high standing.

2. secondly, he has offered, in his own person at Augsburg, or at other ends, to indicate the cause of his doctrine and writing, and to answer his positiones or propositions either in public or secret disputation.

Thirdly, he has offered to answer the Lord Legate in writing to his objections and reproaches.

4th To the fourth, of the four universities, Basel, Freiburg im Breisgau, Leuven and Paris, to suffer judgment and recognition of his positionum, so he erred with ichten 1). He has also not yet received any transfer of his answer, given to the Lord Legate, and therefore caused to appeal.

Fifth, he is once again submissively obligated to suffer all the above-mentioned interrogations and findings, and otherwise to appear before equal judges and unsuspicious safe ends as befits a Christian man.

The legate said that the protest was not allowed, because he wanted to settle the matter in a fatherly and amicable way.

7> But nevertheless again based on the two articles, and wanting nothing else but a contradiction, and with D. Martinus constantly whistled and purred, and let him come to no answer at all.

8 Then D. Staupitz asked the legate to give D. Martins space to tell his answer and not to fall into it. Martins space to tell his answer and not to fall into it.

9th Then the legate came again with his extravagans, has had such a life with it that some named imperial majesty councillors have worried, Doctor Martinus would be killed by it, until they have been informed so much by D. Martinus that they have believed him.

Among them, a quick allegory from the legate of St. Thomas' Opinion has arisen, so that Doctor Martinus could not obtain more than at last, upon much request, that he should put his answer in writing.

Luther's written report to Spalatin in a letter of October 14, how the Cardinal dealt with him in the third interrogation. 2)

See Appendix, No. 17, §§ 2-4.

199 Luther's letter to D. Andr. Carlstadt, especially about the third interrogation. Dated Augsburg, Oct. 14, 1518.

The Latin original no longer exists, but only the translation in the collections: Wittenberger (1569), vol. I, p. 59b; Jenaer (1564), vol. I, p. 119b; Altenburger, vol. I, p. 132; Leipziger, vol. XVII, p. 185; Erlanger, vol. 53, p. 3 and De Wette, vol. I, p. 159.

1. happiness and bliss! Respectable Doctor. Take little for much, for the time and the matter presses me to do so; at another time I will write to you, and also to other more people. For these three days my cause has been in a very hard state, so that I had no hope at all of coming to you again, and that I would miss nothing more certain than the ban. For the legate wanted in all ways that I should not dispute publicly; so he also did not want to dispute with me alone, and always boasted that he did not want to be my judge, but would deal with me fatherly in all matters. But nevertheless he did not want to hear anything else from me except this word: I contradict, I recant, and confess that I have erred. Which I did not want to do.

But most of all, these two articles have been fought over. First, that I

2) This and the following number actually belong to the third audience.

1) ichten == something.

that indulgences are not the treasure of the merit of our dear Lord and Savior Christ. Secondly, that a man who wants to go to the most reverend sacrament must believe 2c.

The legate, on the other hand, has set the Extravagans in Sexto Decretalium, 1) which starts, Unigenitus. He firmly relied on it and completely presumed that I was overcome by it; therefore, he wanted to force me into a contradiction. He drew for himself the common opinion and delusion of the scholasticorum or school teachers, of the power and effect of the sacraments, and of the uncertainty of the one who receives the reverend sacrament.

4 After the legate had done and acted all things with power and force alone, I have only today, through the intercession of many people, obtained permission to put my answer in writing. The above-mentioned honest extravaganza, Unigenitus, has been moved and proven against the legate and his authority, as I hope, by divine counsel, so that the legate, ashamed of everything else, has abandoned it, and desires my absence to talk to the venerable father vicar, Doctor Johann Staupitz, alone. When the vicar came to him, he kindly offered himself. But we do not believe the whales any further than we see; for the legate perhaps pretends it all fraudulently.

But an appeal is made to me, as much as it is possible, well judged, founded and convenient and in accordance with the matter. It is also my opinion that if the legate refuses to deal with me by force, he should let my answer about the two articles mentioned go out, so that the whole world may note his unwisdom and ineptitude. For truly, from his opinion flow many inconsistent and heretical sentences and opinions. He may be a renowned Thomist, but he is an obscure, hidden, incomprehensible theologian or Christian, and for this reason he is as adept at judging, recognizing and judging this matter as a donkey is at playing the harp.

For this reason my cause is in so much more danger that it has such judges, who are not only enemies and angry, but also unable to recognize and understand the cause. But like all this, God the Lord rules and lives, to whom I entrust myself and all that is mine, and I have no doubt that help will come to me through the prayers of some godly people, as I almost let myself think that prayer is being done for me.

(7) But either I come to you again unharmed and unspotted, (2) or else I turn away banished to another place: so be at ease, hold fast, and exalt Christ confidently and undaunted.

8) Mr. Christoffel Langenmantel 3) does so very faithfully to me that I am disturbed by his so great care.

(9) I have the favor and fortune of all men, with the exception perhaps of the bunch who are in league with the Cardinal; although the Cardinal also constantly calls me his dear son, and has told my vicario that I have no better friend than him. But I keep it, as above, for honor's sake. I know that I would be the most beloved if I spoke this few words: rovooo, that is, I recant. But I do not want to become a heretic by contradicting the opinion by which I became a Christian; before I will die, be burned, expelled and maledicted 2c.

(10) Fare well, my dearest Lord, and show this my writing to our theologians, to Amsdorf, Philippo, Otten 4) and others, so that you may pray for me and also for yourselves. For here your cause is dealt with, that is, faith in the Lord Christ and the grace of God. Given at Augsburg, on St. Calixt's Day [14 Oct.] 1518.

2) That is, not banished.

3) 8pal. annal68 ap. Uenek. II, 596: D. 6dri8topüom8 I^anZenmantel, Oanonio. IHi Sinkens. "te., ^n8U8l6N8i8, a OonsiliarÜL Oaes. olim Maximiliani (Erl. Briefw. I, 249).

4) Otten, that is, Otto Beckmann, born in Marburg in Paderborn, inscribed in Wittenberg under the rectorate of Scheurl in the summer semester of 1507, canon and professor of eloquence in Wittenberg, held in high esteem by Luther and Melancthon, but left Wittenberg as a result of the Reformation and became provost at the Aegrdienstift in Münster; in 1530 he was sent to the Imperial Diet in Augsburg as defender of the papacy.

1) 8sxto Veoretalium is wrong; about 8extn8 Deeret. is from Bonifacius VIII, who had already died before Clemens VI, from whom the UniMnitus originates (Grl. Briefw. I, 249). - In No. 202 the extravagant is correctly named, also in No. 203.

200 Luther's protestation handed over at this other audience in the presence of notaries and witnesses.

This writing is found in Latin in Löscher's Ref.Acta, vol. II, p. 463; in the Wittenberg edition (1550), tonr. I, tot. 209; in the Jena edition (1579), tom. I, toi. 186d; in the Erlanger, opp. var. ar[^]., tom. II, p. 371; in the Weimar, vol. II, p. 8, and in Adam Petri, D. Äl. l'uttisrlu luoudrationurn pars una. Lasileae 1520. menss 4u1io, p. 266. German (incomplete): in the Wittenberg (1569), vol. IX, p. 39d; in the Jena (1564), vol. I, p. 113 d; in the Altenburg, vol. I, p. 125; and in the Leipzig, vol. XVII, p. 187. Completed in Walch.

Translated from Latin.

I, Brother Martin Luther, Augustinian, protest in particular and testify publicly that I hold the Holy Roman Church in special honor and follow her in all my present, past and future words and works. If anything of mine has been spoken or should be spoken contrary to it, I will have it considered as if I had not spoken it. However, since the most reverend lord 2c. at the given command of Sr. papal holiness has given the lecture and wanted to compel me, for the sake of the disputation I held on indulgences, to make myself comfortable with these three pieces, and, first, to come to my knowledge and recant my error; second, to guarantee that I would not rehear the matter in the future; and third, to assure myself to abstain from everything that could cause unrest in the church of God: I, who have disputed and sought the truth, could not have acted unjustly by such inquiries, much less have been persuaded to recant unheard and unconquered.

2 Therefore I protest today that I do not remember that I should have said anything contrary to the Holy Scriptures, contrary to the teaching of the Church, contrary to the decrees or laws of the popes, or contrary to right reason, but everything that I have said I still consider to be right, true and Christian today.

3 Nevertheless, because I am a man and can err, I have barked, and hereby submit to the Recognition and proper pronouncement of the Holy Church, and of all who know better.

4. however, I offer myself to the abundance, here or elsewhere publicly, in my own person, to give cause and answer to all that I have spoken.

If this does not please the most reverend Legate 2c. I am willing and inclined to put my answer in writing to his objections, if he would raise them against me, and then to suffer a decision and recognition of the doctors of the renowned universities in the empire, Basel, Freiburg im Breisgau, and Leuven, or, if even this would not be sufficient, the university of Paris, which has always been the most Christian and the most excellent in the Holy Scriptures.

3. the third and last interrogation.

201. Luther's report of this his third audience with Cajetan.

See Appendix No. 17, §§ 4-7.

202 D. Joh. Rühel's account of what happened at this third audience with Luther before Cardinal Cajetan. [Oct. 15, 1518.] 1)

This writing is found in Latin in the Wittenberg (1550), tom. I, toi. 207 p; in the Jena (1579), tona. I, toi. 184d. German in the Wittenberger (1569), vol. IX, p. 35 d; in the Jenaer (1564), vol. I, p. 108; in the Altenburger, vol. I, p. 120 and in the Leipziger, vol. XVII, p. 177.

1) I have considered it good that I also inform E. F. Gn. of this, among other things, for the new newspaper. The day before I wrote this to E. F. Gn., namely on Thursday, we, Mr. Philipp von Feilitzsch, Knight, and I, 2) by order of our most illustrious Lord, Duke Frederick of Saxony, Elector 2c. were in the plot, so the Roman Car

1) This date results from the words at the beginning of this letter: "The day before.... before I wrote this to E. F. G., namely on Thursday." Thursday was Calixtus, October 14.

2) Marginal gloss in the old editions: D. ^okannes Lust, sureeonsultus.

The first time, the Cardinal of the Order of Preachers (who, as far as we know, is otherwise an honorable man) met with D. Martin. There D. Martinus presented his answer and explanation about the sayings on indulgences, which the Cardinal had previously rejected because he thought that he had acted against the Pope and the Roman Church in them.

2 Among other things, the Cardinal alleges an extravaganza of Pabst Clement VI, on which he stood stiffly and vehemently, as on a certain ground, to maintain his opinion through it against D. Martinum, namely: that the merit of Christ would be distributed through the indulgence. But D. Martinus, as a sincere Christian man, confessed that the same Extravaganza in Clementis was well written, but would not allow it to be added to the Cardinal's opinion 1) and confirmed, which grieved the Cardinal, so that he soon took recourse to the books and searched for this Extravaganza; and looking at it diligently, he found that D. Martin's opinion was right. Martin's opinion was right. However, he did not let himself notice it, but managed as best he could to excuse and embellish this error of his with apparent words. And because he was only concerned about the indulgence, we did not let him challenge it, because he did not speak or intend to act against our religion in any other way. In contrast, D. Mart. Luther proved quite a masterpiece by defending his opinion against the legate much more skillfully than the whales who were around the legate would have liked; which pleased Mr. Philipp von Feilitzsch and me beyond measure.

3 Afterwards the Cardinal demanded and requested, since he refused the disputation to Doctor Martin, who would have liked to see that it was done in favor of the truth, that M. Luther should recant the article concerning faith in the reception of the sacrament in his sermon. But Martin refused, freely admitting that his doctrine of this article was right, and founded and confirmed with testimonies of the Holy Scriptures; if he recanted it, he would not only be acting against his conscience, but also against the pope himself; as the extravagans, on which the cardinal stood, clearly and publicly show.

Finally, when the Cardinal insisted that he should make a retraction, V. Martinus asked him in full humility that he, the Cardinal, would send his answer in writing, together with his most submissive request and always ready will, to Pope Leo X. He also requested that His Holiness not be so strict and hard judgment. For he would see and wish nothing better than that truth would retain victory and the upper hand. And if he were overcome by certain true causes and proofs that he had been mistaken, he would not be ashamed or afraid to recant his error in honor of the truth. But the Cardinal nevertheless persisted in his opinion.

1) In the German editions: "beilegte", but in Latin it is patroinari.

There is no one else here who would dare to publicly dispute with D. Martino. The monks and other opponents of his, all of whom had written much against him during the Imperial Diet shortly before, are nowhere to be seen. So we took our leave of the Cardinal, and spent the same day in the evening with D. Staupitz and D. Martino. Mart. Luther held communion.

6 Subsequently, the same day, the Cardinal summoned D. Staupitz, to whom he said, among other things, that he was now well satisfied with D. Martin, and that he would also be heartily favorable to him. I cannot know what will follow. The Cardinal is trying hard to urge D. Martinum to recant. But so far he has not been able to persuade him to do so; he will never persuade him to do so; D. Martinus, as I have heard, will let everything that has been done with the Cardinal go out publicly in print. May God help the truth, amen.

Luther's written answer to the Cardinal, handed over during the third interrogation, in which he declares the extravagant teachings of Pope Clement VI to be the doctrine of man. Oct. 14, 1518.

This document is found in the Latin Wittenberg edition (1550), toru. I, toi. 209 d; in the Jena (1579), tom. I, toi. 1865; in the Erlanger, opp. vur. ars., tom. II, p. 372; in the Weimar one, vol. II, p. 9; in Löscher, Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 464; in Aurifaber, tom. I, toi. 87; in De Wette, vol. I, p. 149; in Adam Petri's D. Umtderrü lueu5rationuin pars unu. Lusi16U6 1520. IN6N86 äulio, p. 267 and in Erlanger Briefwechsel, vol. I, p. 249. German in the Wittenberger (1569), vol. IX, p. 40; in the Jenaer (1564), vol. I, p. 114; in the Altenburger, vol. I, p. 126 and in the Leipziger, vol. XVII, p. 188.

To the Most Reverend Father in Christ and Lord,
Mr. Thomas, Cardinal of the title of St. Sixti, Legate of the Holy Apostolic See 2c., Brother
Martin Luther, Augustinian, wishes Heil.

Most Reverend in God Father and Lord! How even I do not refuse, but quite willingly

I have humbly wanted to protest in this epistle of mine, so that I may answer for what was held against me yesterday and indeed completely naked [unproven]. For two articles have been held against me by your Reverence.

2. first, the extravaganza of Pope Clement VI, which begins: Unigenitus etc., in which it is supposed that the treasure of indulgences should be the merit of our dear Lord Christ and the saints, which I deny in my theses, as it can be seen. I therefore answer this first article thus:

3. This extravagance was not unknown to me when I wrote my theses on indulgences, but after I was quite sure of it, and knew that this would be the opinion of the whole holy Christian church, that our dear Lord Christ's merit in the spirit may not be commanded to men, nor given through men and by men, nor be given through men and by men, as this extravaganza seemed to read, I wanted to leave it untouched and command other pious people to signify what annoyance, fear and repugnance I would have suffered to protect the Pope's dignity and authority.

For it occurred to me, and I was also moved, first of all, that the Pope's words in the same Extravagans were quite bare, and a weak remedy against a quarrelsome or heretical man. - Item, that one might say, it does not rhyme that a prince would speak without law; rather as Mal. 1) 2, 7. is written, one should not seek the words of men from the mouth of the priest, but God's law.

(5) I was also moved by the fact that the same extravagant forces the words of the Holy Scripture and misuses them for an alien purpose. For what is said of grace, by which man becomes righteous before God, it draws to indulgence. For this reason, I thought that the same extravagant would do more to show and remind people out of a good opinion to uphold indulgences, than to prove something with a consistent, solid proof.

This also challenged me, that it often happens, as is the case today, that the Decretals err and are contrary to Holy Scripture and Christian love. For although one must hear the Roman pope's Decretals as the voice of St. Peter, as is written Distinet. 19. in Decretis, but the same is understood, as said in the aforementioned place, only from the Decretals or Papal laws, which are not contrary to the Holy Scripture and the previous Popes' statutes.

I was also moved by the fact that St. Peter was punished by St. Paul because he did not walk according to the truth of the Gospel, Gal. 2:14. Therefore, it is no wonder that St. Peter's successor also erred from time to time. Nor is St. Peter's teaching accepted until it has been approved by St. James the Less, bishop of Jerusalem, and the whole church, Apost. 15,13. ff. Therefore, this rule also has its origin in the law, that a law is valid when it is confirmed by those who follow it and keep it.

8 Moreover, how many of the first decrees or papal statutes have been improved by subsequent ones! Accordingly, it could well come that these extravagans would also like to be improved with the time. Also, in the first book of the Decretals, in the title de Electione, in the chapter Significasti, Panormitaus shows that in a matter concerning the holy faith, not only a general council, but also every Christian believer is above the pope, if he has better sayings, counsel and cause' for himself than the pope, as Pauli's example with Petro, Gal. 2, 14, shows.

9 This is also confirmed by this word of St. Paul 1 Cor. 14, 30, where he says: "If a revelation happens to another who is sitting there, then the first one is silent. Therefore St. Peter's voice is to be heard in this way, so that St. Paul's voice is freer, who punishes St. Peter. But the voice of our dear Lord Christ is far above the voice of all other men (let them be called what they will and who they will).

10 But this troubled me, and gave me the most trouble, that much-thought-of extravagans, as it looks at me, have some quite obviously false and unfounded pieces.

1) In Latin: Laekariaiu.

has in it: First, that it says that the saints' merit is a treasure, when the whole of Scripture testifies that God rewards more richly than we deserve, as St. Paul says in Romans 8:18: "I hold that the suffering of this present time is not worthy of the glory that is to be revealed in us."

Also, St. Augustine says in the first book Retractationum, chapter 19: "The whole Christian Church prays to the end of the world: Forgive us our trespasses. Therefore, its merits cannot overflow onto others, since they are not even sufficient for itself. For this reason, even the wise virgins would not give their oil to the foolish. Matth. 25,9."

12 Further, St. Augustine says in the 9th Book of Confession: "Woe to the life of man, however honorable and praiseworthy it may be, if a judgment should pass over it without mercy. Also the prophet Ps. 143,2. says: "Lord, do not enter into judgment with your servant, for before you no living person is righteous."

Accordingly, the saints are not blessed by their merits, but only by God's mercy, as I have more extensively indicated in the explanations or explanations of my sayings on indulgences.

14. Nor was I so sacrilegiously foolish that I should step aside from so many and so great quite clear public testimonies of the holy Scriptures because of a few decrees of a pope and man, which are also so ambiguous, dark and gloomy; but rather held quite properly that the words of holy Scripture, which indicate that the saints' merits are too few and too little, should be far preferred to human words, which say that the saints should have too much and spare merits; because the pope is not above but below God's word, according to the saying of St. Paul. Paul Gal. 1,8. f.: "If an angel from heaven would preach to you gospel other than you have received, let him be accursed." This also moved me in part, that said Extravagans says that such treasure is commanded to St. Peter, yet no indication of it is found either in the Gospel or in some Scripture.

15) Since I was almost displeased and saddened by this vexatious matter, as I have said, I resolved to keep myself calm.

I was forced to behave and listen to what others thought of it, because I saw that my theses are and remain true to this day. But now that I am forced to refrain from what I should have expected from others, but most of all from the pope, to whom alone it belongs to interpret and explain what he has decreed, I will nevertheless, by means of divine grace and my small intellect, for the protection of the pure and honest truth, submit to harmonize my theses or propositions on indulgences with the Extravagans, and to maintain them both in truth.

(16) First of all, I will (to speak according to what is apparent to reason) as if indulgences were nothing at all. For surely indulgences are nothing else than the remission of penance, that is, good works, such as almsgiving, fasting, praying 2c. Therefore, it is certain that indulgences are a good that frees (donum privativam), since they allow that the deserved punishment is not suffered, or that men do not make an effort to do good works. Therefore, in the Extravagans, indulgences are necessarily taken quite improperly as a treasure, because in reality nothing is given, but it is permitted that nothing be done.

17 Secondly, there is no doubt that the pope has this treasure not as in a bag or box, but in the word, or the keys, or in his power. For in distributing this treasure, the pope does not open a box, but the will and the word, and so he gives it.

Thirdly, therefore it follows that the treasure of indulgences is the merit of our Lord Christ, not in Himself nor actually, but according to the effect and inauthentically. For the pope does not distribute the merit of our Lord Christ in himself, but from the merit of Christ, that is, through the keys which the Lord Christ has earned for his church to be given to her. For it is in the power of the keys that satisfaction is abated. So it is clear and evident that I have rightly said in the 60th thesis that the keys of the church, given by the merit of the Lord Christ, are this treasure. And according to this opinion, it is true that the Lord's Christ's merit is the treasure of indulgence; but that Christ's treasure and merit are not actually understood in Himself. And according to this opinion, the much-mentioned Extravagans agrees with my thesis.

19 Fourthly, that this is the opinion of Pabst in this extravagance, is proved by Pabst's own words, when he says: This treasure is commanded by the Lord Christ to St. Peter and his descendants. Now it is clear and certain that nothing is commanded to St. Peter, but these keys of the kingdom of heaven, which are the merit of Christ (that is, given by the merit of Christ), but in effect, not actually, as I have said; and the other treasure of the divine word, of which the Lord says to St. Peter, "Feed, feed, feed my sheep," John 21:17.

Fifth, it is certain that this understanding of the treasure of indulgences is unknown and unfamiliar to the common people who believe in Christ, as my 56th thesis states. For these words: treasure, merit of Christ 2c., are generally only spoken in an inauthentic and obscure way, so that the simple people do not know nor understand what they mean. Therefore it believes and knows no other way, because it receives a certain, present good, as it were a gift or grace, while it receives nothing else than the office of the keys, by which it is released, that it is not sufficient for sin, and thus receives a good, which is of no use to it, nor is it improved by it, and for this reason is unreasonably called a treasure. And this treasure is inexhaustible and abundantly great and infinite. For the power of the keys is inexhaustible, which stands without means in the merit of our Lord Christ. But the indulgence follows indirectly from the merit of Christ. Therefore also the merit of Christ of the indulgence can be called treasure, but indirectly.

(21) Sixthly, likewise, I would also leave it to be said that the merit of the saints is this treasure, that is, that the merit of the saints, having been incorporated by the faith of Christ and having become one kitchen with him, are now the same, and do and work the very things that the merit of Christ does, according to the saying: The life of the righteous is not his, but the life of the Lord Christ, who is in him.

As St. Paul testifies in Gal. 2:20: "I live, yet now not I, but Christ liveth in me." For the merit of the saints, as of the saints, would be nothing, even damnable, as I said above, and as St. Augustine says: Where I am not, there I am most blessed. For Christ and the Church are two in one flesh.

22. seventhly, nevertheless it is certainly true that the merit of our Lord Christ is not really and without means the treasure of indulgences, so that it profits or gives something, as the simple common man understands it. For when it presents a present gift, it does so not as a treasure of indulgences, but as a treasure of the grace that makes alive. For thus the merit of Christ in himself is actually given, without means, without indulgences, even without the keys, by the Holy Spirit alone, never by the pope. For man becomes one spirit with Christ through love, and therefore partakers of all his goods. This is exactly what my 58th thesis says: It is also not the merits of Christ, for these work grace of the inner man, without the pope.

In short, it is evident that if this extravaganza is to retain its dignity, the merit of Christ must be understood in two ways. First, it is actually in Himself; therefore, it is a treasure of the spirit that gives life, and is actually distributed and given by the Holy Spirit alone, to whom He wills.

(24) Secondly, not actually, but according to the letter and according to the effect, so that the treasure is and is called just this, which the merit of Christ has wrought. And just as the Extravagans introduces the sacred Scripture inauthentically, so it also speaks of the treasure inauthentically, of the merit of Christ inauthentically, and takes everything inauthentically. Hence it is that it is so obscure, difficult, ambiguous, and gives great cause for cheap dispute. But I have actually spoken of the matter in my theses.

25 Whoever then has a better opinion, let him show it to me, and I will revoke this opinion of mine. For it is not my place to interpret or interpret the canons or laws of the popes, but to answer for my theses in such a way that they are not regarded as such.

as if they were contrary to the papal laws. I therefore humbly await whether the pope has a different opinion, so that I may be informed of it, in which case I am willing to accept it and to obey it.

But I want to have said all this in honor of the apostolic chair and the most reverend Lord Cardinal 2c. For if I were allowed to speak my opinion freely and unhindered, then I wanted to prove, prove and maintain that this very Extravagans is actually, straightforwardly and publicly for me and my thesis, and against the most reverend Lord Cardinal's opinion. For the text speaks with clear, expressed words, that the Lord Christ has acquired this treasure of the church 2c.

27 This word, "has acquired," clearly proves, and conclusively establishes, that the merit which the Lord Christ has acquired is something different from the treasure which the Lord has acquired. For the cause is something different from the effect, as the philosophers also say. Therefore my thesis stands unconquered, namely: That the merits of Christ are not the treasure of indulgences, but that the merits of Christ have acquired indulgences. Nevertheless, I submit this also to the knowledge of the Church, as above.

[Answer of D. Martin Luther to the other article, of faith.] 1)

(28) The other article, which the Cardinal held against me, Doctor Martin, is this: that in the explanation of my seventh thesis I said that no man can be justified before God except by faith alone; that is, that it is necessary for a man to believe with certainty that he will be justified, and not to doubt at all that he will obtain grace. For if he doubts, and is uncertain, he is not justified, but rejects grace and casts it away. This theology, they hold and say, is new and outrageous, and also erroneous.

To which I respond like this:

29) First of all, this is the truth, which is true, unconfirmed, and unchangeable, that no

Man is righteous, because he believes in God, as St. Paul Rom. 1, 17. proves from the prophet Habakkuk, Cap. 2, 4, where he says: "The righteous will live by faith. Therefore, he who does not believe is already judged and dead, John 3:18. Accordingly, the righteousness and life of the righteous is his faith. Therefore all the works of the believer are alive, and all the works of the unbeliever are dead, evil and damnable, according to this saying Matth. 7, 18. 19: "An evil tree cannot bring forth good fruit, but every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire.

(30) Secondly, faith is nothing else than believing what God promises or says, as Paul says in Romans 4:3: "Abraham believed God, and this was counted to him for righteousness" [Genesis 15:6]. Therefore, both word and faith belong together by necessity, so that it is impossible for faith to be without the word, as Isa. 55:11. is written: "The word that goes out of my mouth shall not return to me empty."

Thirdly, I must now prove that a man who wants to go to the reverend Sacrament must believe and not doubt that he will obtain God's grace, but must have a certain trust; otherwise he will receive the reverend Sacrament for judgment.

First of all, I prove it by this saying of the apostle, Hebr. 11, 6: "Whoever wants to come to God must believe that He is and will be a retributor to those who seek Him. From this it is evident that one should not doubt, but firmly believe that God is a retributor to those who seek Him. If one must believe that God is a retributor, then one must also believe above all that He makes us pious and righteous, and gives His grace as often as we desire it in temptation, without which retribution is not given.

Secondly, at the risk of eternal damnation and the sin of unbelief, one must believe these words of Christ: "All that thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven" [Matth. 16, 19. 18, 18.]. Therefore, if you go to the Sacrament of Penance and do not firmly believe that you have been delivered from

1) This superscription is in the German Wittenberg and Jena editions.

If you are absolved of your sins in heaven, you will go to judgment and condemnation. For thou believest not that Christ the Lord speaketh the truth, saying, "All things thou shalt loose on earth," 2c., and thus by thine unbelief and doubting makest Christ a liar, which is a grievous sin.

34. But sayest thou, How shall I keep myself, if I feel unworthy and unskillful for the Sacrament? To this I answer as above: By no preparation or work dost thou become skillful or worthy of the reverend Sacrament, but by faith alone. For faith alone, adhering to the word of our Lord Christ, makes one righteous, living, worthy, and skillful; without this faith, everything else that you undertake leads either to presumption or to despair. For the righteous will not live by his willingness, but by his faith.

35 Therefore, do not be concerned about your unworthiness. For this very reason you are going to the holy sacrament, that you, being unworthy, may be made worthy and righteous by the Lord, who seeks to make sinners, not the righteous, blessed. But if you give faith to the word of our Lord Christ, you honor the word of the Lord Christ; and by this work you are justified, alive, worthy 2c.

Thirdly, the Lord Christ has praised this faith to us many times in the Holy Gospel.

37) First, when he speaks to the Canaanite woman, Matth. 15, 28: "O woman, your faith is great; be it done to you as you wish. Here it is clear and evident that this is not about the common faith, but about the special faith, which was directed to help the daughter, who was afflicted by the devil, as the mother asked, and believed with all confidence that Christ, the Lord, would and could do this; therefore she obtained what she asked for. But she would not have obtained such things if she had not believed so. That is why Christ showed her such grace and benefit; not because of her preparation, but only because of her faith she became worthy.

38. secondly, the Lord praises Christ.

this faith when he said to the two blind men [Matth. 9, 28. 29.]: "Do you believe that I can do these things to you? Then said they unto him, Lord, yea. Then touched he their eyes, and said, Be it done unto you according to your faith." Behold, they were sure that what they had asked would come to them, and it came to pass without any previous preparation. But if they had doubted, they would not have asked rightly, nor would they have obtained such benefits.

39 Thirdly. The centurion says to the Lord Christ [Matth. 8,8]: "Speak only one word, and my servant will be healed. He does not believe in general, but he believes that if the Lord speaks only one word, his servant will be healed. And as he believes, so it happens to him.

40 Fourth. John says, Cap. 4, 50: "The king believed the word that Jesus said to him," namely, "Go, your son lives." And by this faith he purchased life for his son. Thus, every person who wants to come to God and ask for something must believe that he will obtain what he desires and seeks, or he will obtain nothing.

41. fifth, saith the Lord Marc. 11:24: "Verily I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall ask in your prayers, believe that ye shall receive it, and it shall be done unto you."

42) Behold, he says: "everything", nothing excluded, "what you ask". Now it is obvious that in every sacrament we ask for something (for no one goes to the sacrament who does not ask for grace and forgiveness of sins). That is why one should hear Christ here, when he says: "Only believe that you will receive it, and it will be yours." Otherwise everything in the holy Christian church would be dilapidated, and nothing certain nor permanent; that is very bad.

43. sixth, saith the Lord, If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, and say unto this mountain, Remove thyself thither; and if ye doubt in your hearts, verily I say unto you, It shall be done [Matt. 17:20].

44 And if you go through the whole Gospel, you will find many more examples, in all of which, especially not the common one.

but special faith, which seeks counsel and help from Christ the Lord in the present distress. Therefore, a certain faith is necessary for him who is to be absolved from his sins, because the sacraments of the New Testament were instituted for the practice and constant use of our faith, as Magister Sententiarum testifies.

45. seventh. Therefore the Lord often punished the disciples, Peter and others [Matth. 8, 26], because they had a small, weak faith. He does not speak of the common faith, as they say, but of the special faith, which each one should show in present danger and need, as is evident.

46. eighth, Jac. 1:5 ff. it is written: "If any of you lacks wisdom, let him ask of God, who gives to everyone simply, and if no one asks for it, it will be given to him. But let him ask in faith, and doubt not. For he that doubts is like a wave of the sea driven and wafted by the wind. Such a man only thinketh not that he shall receive anything of the Lord." This is a clear saying, which also urges me to this opinion, namely, that no one can receive grace or wisdom who doubts whether he will receive it. I also do not see what one can answer against this.

47. ninth, the most holy Virgin, God's mother, Mary, would never have conceived God's Son if she had not believed the angel's message that it would thus come to pass. Therefore she said, "Be it done to me as you have said." [Luc. 1, 38.] Therefore Elizabeth also praised her faith and said: "Blessed are you who have believed, for what the Lord has said to you will be fulfilled" [Luc. 1, 45].

48: About this faith of the blessed virgin, St. Bernard and the whole Christian church is astonished, as she herself sang and proclaimed in her hymn: "From now on, all children will call me blessed", Luc. 1, 48]. 1)

49 So Anna, Samuel's mother, believing the word of Eli the priest, went her way, and saw no sorrow as before [1 Sam. 1:18]. But because the children of Israel did not believe the word by which God promised them the land of Canaan, they were killed in the wilderness by the destroyer.

50 In short, what we read of glorious, great deeds in the Old and New Testaments, we read that they were done by faith, not by works, nor by common faith, but by special faith, which was directed to the present miraculous work, or what they practiced, obtained or suffered by faith. Therefore, nothing is so highly praised in the Scriptures as faith, especially Abraham's faith, Rom. 4:3, which was directed toward the birth of Isaac, his son; nevertheless, such faith was counted as righteousness to him.

(51) This is what happens to us in the holy sacraments: if we believe, we obtain; if we do not believe, we go to the sacrament and to judgment.

52 The tenth. St. Augustine, in his interpretation of the Gospel of John, says: "When the word comes to the element, it becomes a sacrament; not because it happens, but because it is believed. Behold, baptism cleanses from sins; not because one is baptized, but because he believes that baptism washes and cleanses him from sins. Hence also the Lord said to Mary [Luc. 7:50.], when he absolved her, "Thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace." Hence flows the common saying: The sacrament of faith does not make a man righteous, but the faith of the sacrament, without which it is impossible for the conscience to have peace, as Rom. 5:1. is written: "Now that we have been justified by faith, we have peace with God."

In the eleventh place, St. Bernard says in the first sermon on the Gospel of Annunciation: "First of all, you must believe that you cannot have forgiveness of sin except through the mercy of God. But above all this, do thou also believe that thy sins are forgiven thee by God.

1) What we have enclosed here in brackets is an explanatory addition by the old translator.

will be given. This is the testimony that the Holy Spirit bears in your heart, saying, "Your sins are forgiven. This is what St. Paul means when he says [Rom. 3:28], "We hold that a man is justified without the work of the law, through faith alone." All this is said by St. Bernard.

(54) These and many other such clear and loud sayings of the holy Scriptures force, urge, saw and lead me to this opinion, of which I have said.

55. Therefore, most reverend in God the Father, because Your Reverence is gifted by divine pardon with glorious, beautiful, great gifts, especially with a high intellect, I humbly ask that Your Reverence's fatherly love graciously deal with me, have compassion on my conscience, and show me the true light by which I can understand this differently than before; and not force me to revoke that which, even according to the testimony of my conscience, I cannot hold otherwise than that it is such that I must necessarily hold to it. And since these scriptural passages are certain, I cannot do otherwise, and know [Apost. 5, 29.] that one must obey God more than men.

Therefore, may Your Reverend Fatherly Love ask our most holy Lord, Pope Leo X, for me, that he not be moved with such severe disfavor and unkindness toward me, that he cast my soul into darkness, which seeks nothing but the light of truth, and is quite willing and ready to yield, to change, and to revoke everything, if it is instructed that the sayings are to be understood differently.

Nor am I so presumptuous or so eager for vain honors that I would be ashamed to recant what I have taught unjustly; indeed, it should be my greatest joy that truth prevails and prevails. But that I am not urged to do anything against the conviction of my conscience. For I believe, and hold it beyond all doubt, that this is the opinion of the holy Scriptures. May the Lord Jesus reign and uphold your reverend fatherly love forever, amen.

Luther's report on how the Cardinal behaved during and after the delivery of this written declaration.

This writing follows in the immediately preceding number, but it is found (with the exception of Walch) only in the Latin editions, namely in the Wittenberg (1550), tom. I, fol. 212; in the Jena one (1579), tom. I, fol. 189 d; in the Erlanger, opx. var. ur^Λ, tom. II, p. 383; in the Weimar one, vol. II, p. 16, in Adam Petri's D. N. ^Λuttierli Meudrutionum xurs unu. Lusiloue 1520. ra6U86 3ulio, p. 272 and in Aurifaber, vol. I, p. 95.

Translated into German.

When I handed this over the next day, he first scorned it and said that it was empty words, but that he wanted to send it to Nom. Then, in Judea, he insisted on the recantation and threatened with the ban he had been ordered to impose, and if I did not recant, I should go and not come before him again.

(2) When I had heard this, and had seen that he persisted in his mind, and would not hear the scripture, and I had also strengthened my resolution not to recant, I departed without hope of coming again. For although he said, and still boasts, that he would deal with me fatherly and not as a judge, I could not feel such fatherliness other than that it was stricter than all judgment, in that it only demanded that I recant against conscience, and would not, or rather could not, even show me error and convict me of it. For when he had seen that I rejected the little fiefs of the scholastic conceited masters, he promised that he would act against me with the Holy Scripture and the Canons, but how he understood this, I again do not know. For he has never brought up a syllable from the Holy Scriptures against me, and could not do so to this day, even if he wanted to, since it is unanimously admitted by all that there is nothing about indulgences in the Holy Scriptures, which rather only praise faith, and think as little of indulgences as they are full of the doctrine of faith, so that it is impossible that he could refute one or the other of those two articles from them.

But when I drew scriptural passages for myself, the man, acting in a fatherly manner, began to invent glosses for me from his own head. And he who was so attentive to the extravagant against me, nevertheless acted as if he knew nothing of the Canon, by which the church forbids: no one should explain the Scriptures from his own head, and one should, as Hilarius says, not bring the mind into the Scriptures, but out of them. Nevertheless, I did not resent his violence to Scripture, because I know that he appropriated this way of interpreting from the long habit of the Roman court and the use of the scholastic differentiators. For it has long been believed that whatever the Roman Church says, condemns, and wants, all others must soon say, condemn, and want, and no other reason need be given for it than that the apostolic see and the Roman Church hold so. Therefore, because the holy Scriptures have been abandoned and the words and statutes of men have been accepted, it has happened that the church of Christ is not fed with her charge [Luc. 12, 42.] nor with the word of Christ, but is not infrequently governed according to your will and the iniquity of a wholly unlearned flatterer, and it has come so far with our unhappy condition that we are beginning to be forced to recant and deny the Christian faith and the most holy Scriptures.

4 Furthermore, if this is how it is to be with the retraction, then I do not see what else can come of it than that I retract the first retraction with another following one without end. For if I were to turn his own word against himself, perhaps intentionally, he would soon invent another idol of his heart for me (for Thomistic theology is immensely fertile in distinctions and a real proteus), which I would have to obey with a new retraction. For since he does not wander on the solid rock but on the sand of his thoughts, I would have nothing to do all the time but to always recant.

5 When I had received the order not to come before him again, I nevertheless remained on the spot for the rest of the day. Then he had my venerable and dear father, the vicar Johann Staupitz, come to him and, as it is said, with many words dealt with him that he should try to bring me to a voluntary recantation. I remained there the following day and was told nothing. The third day, namely Sunday [October 17], I also stayed and wrote, but nothing was answered. The fourth day I also stayed, and nothing happened. After I had endured the same silence also the fifth day, I finally, on the advice of good friends, especially since he had previously boasted that he had orders to have me and the vicarius thrown into the dungeon, after I had finished the appeal, which I wanted to have filed, left there, claiming that I had already shown my obedience with sufficient danger.

Luther's report to Spalatin on how poorly the Cardinal Cajetan was versed in the Scriptures and otherwise, and on the poor scholarship of the papists in general.

See Appendix, No. 18, § 2.

The first part of the book is a short description of the first part of the book.

From Myconius tust, rek., p. 31.

When Martinus came to Augsburg to the Cardinal, he sat down in his majesty; and because he was a very trustworthy man, he boasted as if he himself were the pope. And before he performed the action with Luther, he said: Orator, huick äoeuisti? Lutherus answered: IntorroM 608, Hiii M6 auckiorunt, 1ü 8oiuut, yuiä äoeuorim 6Zo. It was equally ridiculous that JEsus and Pilate came together again; and Annas came forth again with his question: What do you teach? After that, the Cardinal presented Luther with three pieces that he should do in short:

1. He should come to his senses again, convert and recant his errors.
2. should agree to beware of the same errors.

3. refrain from doing anything that might disturb the holy church.

Luther replied that he knew himself to be neither guilty of error nor of disturbing the church; but if he were to be referred to it, he would gladly recant. The Cardinal brought forth two pieces from Luther's propositions, namely, that he had written that the passion of Christ was not the treasure from which the preachers of indulgences had to sell the forgiveness of sins; item, that faith should be necessary for the reception of the reverend sacrament. But since Luther proved these two articles orally and in writing from divine holy scripture, the arrogant legate would not be satisfied, but Luther should recant. But when Luther did not want to recant the public truth and deny Christ, he [Luther] finally went so far that he kept silent and did not want to write further, when the pope and the legate also kept silent to those who wrote and shouted against him. 1) But the legate would not; Luther and Christ were to be silent, those were to have power to blaspheme to their liking. I have often heard from Luther that our Lord God did not let him sink any lower, because he had gone through so much. Afterwards, Cardinal Campegius at Augsburg miserably complained to Philip Melancthon that Cajetan had acted very unwise and evil, that he had at one time denied Luther this condition.

Luther finally offered to send the Cardinal all his reasons in writing, and to suffer the verdict of the three high schools: Basel, Fribourg and Louvain. However, he was unable to obtain anything; instead, he was told badly: rovoea, rovoou.

I. How the Cardinal had Staupitz deal with Luther.

Luther's report of this to Spalatin.

See Appendix, No. 17, U 8. 9.

Myconius reported what strange words had escaped the Cardinal when Staupitz demanded an audience for Luther.

From Myconius trist, rob, p. 33. Cf. Löscher, Ref.Acta, vol. II, p. 477.

The Cardinal Doctor Staupitz also admonished him that he should, as a supreme general

1) "laid in" - imposed.

Luther force him to recant. But since Staupitz did not know how to do it, since he would have been overcome with writing, but the Cardinal should still try himself on him, the Cardinal answered: Ego nolo amplius cum hac bestia loqui. Habet enim profundos oculos et mirabiles speculationes in capite suo [I do not want to talk further with this beast, because he has deep eyes and strange thoughts in his head].

K. How Luther asked the Cardinal for clearance, but was unable to obtain it, was not allowed to proceed, and took leave of him in writing.

D. Martin Luther's first letter to the Cardinal before his departure, in which he offers to remain silent if only his "opponents" would also remain silent; however, he could not recant without the recognition of the Church. The 17th of October 1518.

This letter is found in Latin in the Wittenberg edition (1550), toni. I, col. 2156; in the Jena (1579), tom. I, toi. 192; in the Erlanger, opp. var. urK., toill. II, p. 393; in Aurifaber, vol. I, p. 96b; in Adam Petri's M. Imtborii iueubrationuin pars una. Basiloae 1520, inonseluiio, p.280; in Löscher's Ref.-Acta,vol.II, p.479; in De Wette, vol. I, p. 161 and in Erlanger Briefwechsel, vol. I, p. 263. German in the Wittenberg (1569), vol. IX, p.44.b; in the Jenaer (1564), vol.I, p. 121; in the Altenburger, vol. I, p. 136 and in the Leipziger, vol.XVII, p. 198. - Löscherbericht 1.e.: "Luthersandteam 17.October,which was the 20th Sunday after Trinitatis, the prior of Pomezau or Pomesan to the Cardinal, and let ask for gracious dispatch, also at the same time hand in the following letter." This will be based on Spalatin's report, Wittenb. Ausg., Bd. IX, Bl.38b and Jenaer, Bd. I, Bl. 112. Both write: "Pomesaw".

To the most reverend in GOD Father and Lord, Thomas, Cardinal Priest of the title St. Sixti, of the Holy Apostolic See Legate de Latere throughout Germany 2c., his Lord to be feared and highly revered in Christ, salvation and all subservience.

Most Reverend in God the Father. I come again, not in person, but by writing; may your reverend fatherly kindness graciously hear me.

2. the venerable, my most beloved

Father in Christ, our Vicarius, D. Johannes Staupitz, acted with me to humble myself, to drop my own delusion, and to submit my opinion to the knowledge and judgment of pious and unsuspicious people, has also praised and commended your reverend fatherly love so much, and has completely persuaded me to this end, that I am now of the strong confidence that your fatherly love means me with all faithfulness. This new tale and the announcer have pleased me very much and highly; for this man has the reputation and faith with me that I know of no one in the world whom I could obey and follow better and more surely than him.

3 Similarly, my dearest brother, Magister Wenceslaus Link, who was educated in the same doctrine and studies with me from his youth and has grown up with me, has done the same to me from your fatherly love.

In short, your venerable, fatherly love could not have moved me more strongly or more kindly than through these two mediators, each of whom has me completely in his hand and power; I want to keep silent about your reverence's great kindness and high understanding, through which, as I see, your fatherly love does not seek what is mine, but myself, which could have shown itself differently toward me, where it wanted to, namely, with pure violence. For this reason, my fear is gradually diminishing and has already been transformed into a special love and true filial reverence for your reverend fatherly kindness.

Now, most reverend Father in Christ, I confess, as I also confessed before, that I have certainly shown myself too immodest (indiscretum, as they say), violent and too little reverence towards the name of the supreme bishop. And although I have been very violently provoked to this lack of reverence, I now realize that it would have suited me well if I had done my thing more humbly, more gently, and with greater reverence than has happened, and not thus

If I had answered the fool according to his foolishness, I would have been like him. Prov. 26:4.

I am now quite sorry for this and ask for mercy; I will also denounce this to the people from time to time in all the pulpits, as I have already done many times. I will also henceforth, with God's help, endeavor to improve myself and speak differently. Yes, I am ready in all things, without needing to say, that I will not remember this trade of indulgences with a word from now on, and when this matter is settled, I will go to rest, only that those who have moved me to start this game, and have given great cause for it, will also be set a hurried measure in speaking, or silence will be imposed.

7 Furthermore, most reverend in God, and now also most beloved father, as far as the truth of my teaching is concerned, I would gladly recant everything at your reverence's and my vicarius' command and advice, if my conscience would allow it in any way. For I know that I should not so much concede to any man's command, counsel or favor that I should speak or do anything against my conscience.

(8) Also, what St. Thomas and other teachers say does not have so much standing that it would be enough for me in this question, because I have thoughtfully disputed their opinion, having read them diligently and thought them through. For methinks they do not stand on sufficiently firm ground. But this counsel alone remains, that I may be overcome by a better cause, which is. (If I were otherwise worthy), that I might hear the voice of the bride (the Christian church) concerning it. For it is certain that she hears the voice of the bridegroom (Christ).

9 I therefore ask in all humility and submission that your reverend, fatherly love may let this uncertain deal reach our most holy Lord Leo X, so that it may be recognized by the Church and decided, either to be revoked with a clear conscience, or to be believed with earnestness. For I desire nothing else than that I may hear the judgment of the Church, obey it and follow it. Nor do I know what use my recantation would be in an uncertain and unknowable matter, for I am concerned that it might seem fair to me-

1) From this passage it has been concluded that Link was Luther's classmate at Magdeburg, but this conclusion lacks any justification. See Köstlin, Wart. Luther (3), Vol. I, p. 777 a6 p. 35, note 3.

I would not know myself what I would consider certain and right, or what I would recant.

May your reverend fatherly love accept and understand this petition of mine, written out of true humility and submission, and let me be graciously commanded as a son. [Given on the evening of St. Lucia (Oct. 17), Anno 1518. 1)

Your most reverend fatherly love subservient son, Br. Martin Luther,
Augustinian.

21V. D. Mart. Luther's other letter, in which he takes leave and remembers his appeal.

The 18th of October 1518.

This letter follows immediately in all the issues listed in the previous number.

To the most reverend in GOD Father and Lord, Thomas, Cardinal Priest of the title St. Sixti, of the Holy Apostolic See Legate de Latere throughout Germany 2c., his Lord to be feared and highly revered in Christ, Brother Martin Luther wishes salvation and surrenders himself to him.

Most reverend in God, Father! Your fatherly kindness has seen, yes, I say, and sufficiently recognized my obedience, that I have come here on such a distant journey, in such great danger, in addition so weak in body, and indeed poor in food, and have appeared before your reverend personally by order of our most holy Lord Leo X. I am very grateful to him for this. Moreover, as I have thrown myself, together with the printed booklet of the explanation of my sayings on indulgences, and all that I have, at the feet of His Holiness, and now expect and will accept what His Holiness deems good, she will condemn my cause, or will pronounce it right. And I am fully aware that I have omitted nothing that is due to a submissive and obedient son of the Church.

2 I therefore do not intend to spend any more time here in vain, just as I do not intend to spend any more time here in vain.

1) This date was added by Aurifaber. There is no doubt that it is correct.

can. For I lack sustenance; also I have been more than too much of a burden to the dear fathers, the Carmelites, 2) and still am, especially because your fatherly love commanded me with a living voice: where I did not want to recant, I should no longer come under the eyes of your reverence; but what and how much I could recant, I have indicated in the previous writing.

For this reason, I am leaving in God's name, and I will see that I get to another place where I can stay. And although I have been advised, even by those who could move greater people than I am, that I should appeal from your most reverend paternal goodness, yes, from our most holy Lord, Leo X, who is badly reported, until he is better reported (for I know that by appealing I would be doing our most Serene Elector a greater favor than by recanting), I would not have appealed, as much as I could have. First of all, because I do not consider it necessary to appeal and to bring this matter before a judge, because I have (as I said) placed everything in the judgment of the church and expect nothing but its pronouncement. For what more do I have to do, or what more can I do? Nor is it necessary that I be accused or allowed to answer, because I do not cling to my words, but to what the church will recognize, nor do I want to argue as an opponent, but rather as a disciple.

4. secondly, that I am almost convinced that this trade is annoying to your reverend paternal kindness, and that my appeal is very pleasant.

Therefore, as I am not guilty of anything, I do not have to fear the punishment. However, praise God, I am so sensible that I fear the punishment much less than error and false delusion in faith, because I know that the punishment does not harm me, even benefits me, if right faith and understanding of the truth are with me.

(6) Therefore, by the cordial mercy of Christ, and by the great kindness shown to me by Your Reverence, I ask Your Reverence for the blessing of the Holy Spirit.

2) Luther lived in the Carmelite monastery because there was no Augustinian monastery in Augsburg.

May this obedience of mine, which I have hitherto rendered and fulfilled, be graciously recognized and graciously reported to our most holy Lord, Pope Leo X, for my benefit, and may my departure and appeal, which I have made on account of my need and good friends' advice and great reputation, be interpreted for the best. For this your word and cause I have not been able to overcome: What do you want to revoke? Wilt thou, by thy recantation, make us a law of faith? Let the church first condemn, if anything is to be condemned, and follow thou their judgment, and let them not follow thy judgment; and so I must give way overcome, and justify them. Your fatherly kindness, which I esteem highly and worthily, is well in Christ. From the Carmelite monastery at Augsburg, on the day of St. Luke the Evangelist [Oct. 18], 1518.

Your most reverend paternal son, Brother Mart. Luther, Augustinian.

L. Of Luther's Departure from Augsburg and Appeal Left Behind.

211 Myconius' report of how Luther, having heard that Cajetan had let himself be told of his imprisonment Augsburg away.

From Myconius bist, ret., p. 33.

When the Cardinal no longer wanted to let Luther before him, he badly proposed the revocation, and let himself be heard that he had orders that he should take both Staupitzen and Luther in prison and send them to Rome: when Martinus noticed that they wanted to go with him in the usual Cardinal manner, by force and not by right, he made a public appeal, and they both parted from each other.

Luther's appeal left behind on his departure from Augsburg, commonly called the first, from the proceedings of Cardinal Cajetan, to Pope Leo X. Dated October 16, 1518.

This act of appeal was notarized on October 16 and received on October 22 by posting the document executed about it to the cathedral.

to Augsburg full legal force. A single print of the appeal does not exist, perhaps it never went out. The printer Frobenius in Basel received a copy of this appeal from Augsburg, which he incorporated into his edition . It is found there

Bl. cf d. From this it is printed in the Basel collection of March 1520, Bl. Xx 45 and after it in D. M. Imiierii lueuprutionum purs unu. Lusileno uxuā ketri M. D. XX. Äense Julio, x. 282. The latter edition is followed by the Latin Wittenberg edition (1550), toin. I, col. 217; Jenaer (1579), tom. I, fol. 193p; Löscher, Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p.484. According to the Frobenius edition, it is found in the Erlanger, oxx. vnr. ur^Λ, torn. II, p. 397 and in the Weimar edition, vol. II, p. 27. - According to the Eisleben part I, sheet A 26, "Doctor Aurbach in Leipzig" helped to form the appeal; but according to Köstlin, Martin Luther (3), vol. I, p. 229, Luther had worked it out with the help of D. Auer in Augsburg; the notary gave it the solenne form and provided it with his seal. - We have made a new translation according to the Weimar edition.

Newly translated from the Latin. .

1. in the name of the Lord, amen. In the year following the same birth, 1518, of the Roman numeral 6, on a Saturday, which was the 16th of the month of October, of the Pabbacy of our most holy in Christ Father and Lord, Lord Leo, by the divine providence of the tenth Pabbacy of that name, in the 6th year, in the presence of myself, a public notary, and of other witnesses who were specially called and requested for this purpose. In the presence of myself, a public notary, and other signed witnesses, who were especially called and requested to do so, the venerable father and lord, Martinus Luther, of the Augustinian order, professor of the Holy Scriptures, and in the school at Wittenberg, which belongs to the diocese of Brandenburg, the most distinguished lecturer, has appeared in his own person, who has and holds in his hands, especially for himself, a slip of paper of an appeal and appointment, according to the sound and content of which, as he himself said, he wants to appeal from a commission which, as he affirmed, had not been well instructed by the aforementioned our most holy father, the pope, and was appointed at the request of the fiscal procurator of the same pope, and from the alleged judges and citations, and everything and anything that has resulted or may result therefrom, also from any complaint; as he then publicly presented such a note, and immediately, as its contents state, invoked and appealed to the above-mentioned most holy our Lord Pope and to the same apostolic see, and asked Apostles' Letters 1) to submit and protest, all and everything, to the apostolic see.

1) The term apostolos is a legal one and means in the Pandects: Report; here it is as much as a letter in which permission is given to bring the matter before a higher authority.

each done as is written in this note, which note, Appeal and Appellate Content follows from word to word and reads thus:

2. Since the legal remedy of appeal, for the comfort and protection of the oppressed, has been rightly decreed, all rights also yield and allow that one may appeal not only from the grievances and violence that have already occurred, but also from those that are yet to occur and will be tolerated: Therefore I, Brother Martinus Luther, Augustinian, professor of the Holy Scriptures, and in the University of Wittenberg, which belongs to the diocese of Brandenburg, ordinary and most distinguished Lector, say especially before you, a public notary, as before a public and credible person, and these here present witnesses, of the will and nobility to appeal and apostle to ask and take, and bring forward:

(3) Because in the matter of indulgences there are various and uncertain opinions among teachers, both among canonists and theologians, even in these matters the holy church has nothing certain and definite to this day, except what can be seen from C. quod autem unb C. cum ex eo, and from several others, that indulgences are the remission of a penitential pardon imposed on someone by his judge. 1) But pardon can be nothing else than these very best works, prayer, fasting, almsgiving, as this is the unanimous opinion of all theologians and the whole church. And from the C. Abusionibus, in the gloss on the word mendaciter, it is clear and public that through indulgences souls are not pulled out of purgatory, because the same are reserved for God's judgments. In addition, it is uncertain, and not yet decided by the Church, what the manner of salvation is, and how far it applies, by which indulgences are given to the deceased; especially since not only punishment but also guilt is forgiven in purgatory, as is said in Distinct. XXV Qualis. It is certain, however, that all guilt is forgiven by God alone, by means of a

The first step is to forgive the pouring out of grace, which cannot be poured out through indulgences.

(4) According to this, in things that are doubtful and subject to conjecture, it is not only free to dispute, and it is permissible for one wise man to contradict another (but especially in things that are not commanded, nor advised, nor necessary for salvation), but it is also dangerous to persistently assert one fully contradictory part, and forbidden by the Holy Spirit, in the words of 1 John 4:1: "Test the spirits whether they are of God," and of Paul [1 Thessalonians 21:21]: "Test everything and keep what is good. 4, 1. it is said: "Test the spirits, whether they are of God", and in Paul [1 Thess. 5, 21.]: "Test everything, and keep what is good", so that also the church, by government of the same Spirit, in the Cle. C. Abusionibus, that the preachers of indulgences should not be allowed to present to the people anything other than what is contained in their letters.

5. I have relied on these rights, yes, on these commandments, and have begun to dispute on this subject, moved by the intemperate shouting and too immodest proclamation, so that some spread the indulgences in our countries, as apostolic (as they said) commissaries and indulgence merchants, so that even under the pretext of indulgences they took outrageous and annoying measures of avarice, to the great scorn and derision of the Roman Church, to the contempt of the keys of the Church, and to no small harm and detriment of the reverence due to the apostolic see. Then, for the seduction of the people, they have brought up new doctrines, so that they have taken the liberty of teaching with quite incomprehensible words and of scattering booklets among the people that indulgences are always indulgences, that man obtains God's grace, which makes him righteous, by selling the inestimable gift as grace, and other things, which their booklet now and then indicates, which is called Instructio summaria 2), and is full of quite inconsistent and false sentences, to their own and those who are the authors of them, shame and disgrace.

6. 7. And although I do not know about faith, not about good morals, not about God's or

1) Here, Luther has lost the construction he started; the missing epilogue follows in the sense of § 5 (Weim. Ausg.).

2) In this volume No. 72.

I did not dispute about the commandments of the church, but about indulgences (as I said before), which are neither commanded, nor advised, nor meritorious, so that without them the church of Christ would nevertheless be well off, and perhaps it would be better for her, and through more merits, which are abated by indulgences, the faithful would be saved; Indeed, even the scholastic doctors expressly say that it is better that one should suffice by himself than that he should redeem indulgences, I have thereupon so disputed that I have subjected this whole disputation not only to the church, but also to the judgment of every one who has a better opinion, who has a better opinion, but above all to the Most Holy in Christ, our Father and Lord, Mr. Leo the Tenth, the present pope, as can be clearly seen from my letter which precedes my explanations [of the theses on indulgences]. And I have acted on doubtful, free, uncertain, not yet decided, and for the sake of blessedness not necessary matters of dispute, so that there can be no just cause and occasion to cite me or to drag me before the court, and rightly I should also be free and safe from all complaints of spiteful and evil people, since all those who dispute about important, necessary and divine matters are also safe.

8.9 Nevertheless, there are some mammon servants and restless miserly men who do not give pasture to Christ's sheep, but seek only milk and wool from them, and fear that on the occasion of this disputation the faithful of Christ will become aware of their deceitfulness, which seeks only profit and avarice, and thus their profit, as is right, will be completely destroyed, like a fire burned with thorns. And since they preached about indulgences not only immodestly, but also fraudulently, even to the deception and harm of souls, completely deviating from the opinion of the pope and from the holy decrees of the fathers, they have also added this evil, that with unworthy and lying boasts, in order to adorn their avarice and godless tyranny with it, they have asked me from the most holy pope, our lord, Mr. Leo the Tenth 2c, and by the excellent Lord Marins of Perusco, 1) sei-

1) In Luther, probably due to a reading error, there is always de Perusiis instead of: de kkruscns (Weim. Ausg.).

The aforementioned Lord Marius, on their impetuous persistence against me, as one suspected of heresy, and who would have acted to the dishonor, contempt, diminishment, and dishonor of the keys of the Church, ordered the most venerable fathers in Christ, Jerome of Ghinucci, bishop of Ascoli, auditor of the Chamber 2c., and Silvester Prierias, Order of Preachers, Magister of the Apostolic Palace, ordered the thing, yes, rather they extorted it through him.

10) These judges and auditors, 2) although they are suspicious of me (yet always without prejudice to their honor), because the venerable father Silvester has elsewhere sufficiently shown his bitter attitude against me, in the dialogue, 3) which he has published against my theses, in which he has followed his opinion more than justly, and has judged and condemned me as a heretic, a nonsensical man, and with many other opprobrious names. Then it is presumed with probability that he shows more favor to his brothers, 4) whom this matter primarily concerns, than to the cause, so that through him the adversaries themselves would become judges in their own cause. Also, the Thomists, although they do not agree among themselves against me, have often been found to be such people who, for the sake of their opinions, have subjected themselves to greater and different things than anyone's merit would have required and the equity of the law would have permitted. Finally, since this venerable father alone is instructed and instructed in scholastic theology, and is very little practiced in the holy Scriptures, as can be seen from his various writings, and this matter requires judges who are very well versed in the holy Scriptures and the church fathers, it cannot be assumed that he can even judge rightly in this matter. But the venerable father in Christ, Mr. Jerome, bishop 2c., is rightly feared: he would like to give his other colleague

2) Only where we let § 11 begin, this subject is resumed.

3) Walch, St. Louis Edition, vol. XVIII, 310.

4) the Dominicans, who were engaged in the trade of indulgences.

(I want to have said this in peace and reverence and without any insult), and easily leave the judgment to the father Silvester for the sake of his theological profession, although he would be skilled enough in other civil matters and the like. But since it is sufficiently clear that this, as far as faith and heresy are concerned (as the adversaries say), lies outside the scope of his profession, both are therefore extremely suspicious to me.

11 [These judges, I say,] have had me cited and summoned to appear personally in Rome, in a place that is only the most suspicious and not safe, since it is known to all how much and against how many have been raged who entrusted themselves to Rome, even against those who had safe conduct, and it is clearer than the bright noon that even the best pope, our most holy Lord Leo X., and many other reverend lords Cardinals have often been in danger of death 1) and they do not live there safely, so that one could almost say of Rome according to Isaiah [Cap. 1, 21.]: "Justice dwelt within, but now murderers."

12 And even if everything would be safe and without danger in Nom, such a long journey is quite impossible for my weak body, also so many dangers on the way and especially the persecution of all adversaries, which are so great and so many that the great and princes, both spiritual and secular, have advised me and announced for certain that I should by no means go outside the walls of Wittenberg, because they would know for certain that I would be pursued either with sword or with poison. And since I belong to a mendicant order, have nothing of my own, and live under the obedience of another, I would certainly be sufficiently prevented from appearing by this poverty alone.

(13) Since I cannot go to Rome because of such a legitimate fear, which can befall even a steadfast man, and prevented by these entirely legitimate causes.

I have requested through the most illustrious Prince Frederick, the very powerful Elector of the Holy Roman Empire, Duke of Saxony, Landgrave of Thuringia, Margrave of Meissen, that the matter be entrusted by the Apostolic See to some learned, righteous and honorable men to judge it in a safe place, before whom I would also be willing to appear there and to do everything that is in accordance with justice.

14 Since the most holy Father and Lord in Christ, our Lord Leo X., as his goodness and love of truth and justice are rightly praised throughout the world, had [graciously conceded this, it was] brought about by the adversaries, who feared for their cause, 2) that it was transferred to the person of the most reverend Father and Lord, Mr. Thomas, of the title of St. Sixti Priest and Cardinal, of the Holy Apostolic See Legate de Latere throughout Germany. Sixti Priest and Cardinal, of the Holy Apostolic See Legate de Latere throughout Germany, hoping that since this most reverend gentleman 2c. belonged to their Order, their frail and bad cause would be the more easily helped by this good head.

15) Although this most reverend gentleman 2c. might justly seem suspicious, because he might be of the party and opinion of the opponents, and for several other probable causes, nevertheless, as he is in every respect a very learned and affable man, he first of all showed himself fatherly and kindly toward me and received me, but afterwards, wanting (as he says) to advise me, he simply insisted and urged that I should recant my sayings before they were discussed, he simply insisted and urged that I should recant my sayings before they were discussed and decided upon, with rejection and setting aside of the most respectable protestation, namely, that I would be prepared either to answer again publicly or to give an account privately in writings, and that all that was mine should be submitted primarily to the judgment of the saints.

2) Here, the Weimar edition has the note: "In this sentence, something must have fallen out in print", but has made no attempt to add what is missing. We have, based on the Basel edition of Adam Petri, which brings this marginal note: ^äversurli eurarunt (tomino Oarä. eorurruttenckarQ eausam, inserted before per utlversurloZ: bernMiter ouu6688i886t, ktkeetuui 68t.

1) In January of the previous year, an assassination attempt had been discovered, which had been made against Leo by a Cardinal with the knowledge of other Cardinals (Köstlin, M. Luther (3), Vol. I, p. 229).

The first is to submit to the Roman Church, then to the famous high schools of Basle, Fribourg, Louvain, and, if necessary, also to the old mother of high schools, the University of Paris, which, as it is the most flourishing in theological matters before others, is also the most zealous.

16 He set all this aside and despised it, and did not even want to instruct me or indicate in what matters and in what way I had erred, so that I could revoke the recognized error, except that he held up two articles against me, to which, as I hope, I answered quite superfluously, as can be seen in the writings that I have sent to the most reverend Lord. But he wanted to drive me badly and merely to recant, by threatening me that if I either did not do so, or appeared in Rome within a certain given period of time, which was fixed in the citation by the above-mentioned presumed judges, he would have me and all those who adhered to me, and all those who adhered to me and were favorable, under the sentence of excommunication, and to subject all others, whoever they might be, to whom I should turn, to the ecclesiastical interdict, and said that he had sufficient orders from the above-mentioned See for all these things.

(17) By this I find myself afflicted, injured and oppressed, since even today I confess that I have only disputed and submitted everything to the feet of our most holy Lord, Leo X. that he may kill, bring to life, reject, approve, as he pleases, and acknowledge his voice as the voice of Christ that dwells in him, and I protest lawfully that I do not want to say or hold anything that cannot be proven in and from the Holy Scriptures and the Fathers of the Church and the Holy Canons, as can be seen in the book of my "Explanations" 1).

(18) With regard to this, I protest again, as I have often protested elsewhere. Therefore, I appeal from the aforementioned most holy Lord, our pope, who is not well informed, and his supposed commission, which is based on the above-mentioned

I have the right to appeal to our most holy Father in Christ and Lord Leo, by divine providence the tenth pope of that name, from the alleged judges and the aforementioned citation and the alleged proceedings which may be instituted against me and are to be instituted against me, and from everything that has taken place and will take place therefrom, and from any of the same, also from any future burden which may arise therefrom, to our most holy Father in Christ and Lord Leo, by divine providence the tenth pope of that name, who needs to be better instructed, 2) and appeal in this writing, and ask for apostolic letters the first, the second and the third time, urgently, even more urgently and most urgently, that they be given to me, if there is anyone who will and can give them to me, and especially from you, Mr. Notary, written testimony, submitting myself, and those who adhere and wish to adhere to me, herein to the protection and defense of our aforementioned Most Holy Lord, the Pope, after he has been better informed. And I protest that I will pursue this appeal of mine in due time and place by way of annulment (per viam nullitatis) and otherwise, to the best of my ability, reserving to myself the liberty 3) to add, subtract, amend, correct, and better shape it, always without prejudice to any other legal advantage.

Concerning all of the above and every detail in particular, the venerable father D. Martin Luther, professor of sacred theology and appellant, has requested that, instead of the testimonies of the apostles, one or more instruments, public or public, be made and prepared for him by me, the undersigned public notary. This was done in Augsburg, and there in the monastery of the Order of the Carmelite Brothers, in the same year, Roman interest number, days, months and pontificate as above, in that there were present the venerable men, the gentlemen Wenceslaus Steinbeiß and Bartholomäus Utzmair,

2) In the old translation: "that I may be better instructed".

3) The Weimar edition has here, after the latio ad Oonolium 1518, corrected the wrong reading of all other editions: optirus (with addition of taeltats), and set oxtions.

Priests of the Augsburg Diocese, who were called and requested as witnesses to the above.

And I, Gallus Kunigender of Herbrachtingen, layman, of the Augsburg diocese, public notary both by sacred apostolic and imperial authority, because I was present at the handing over of the aforementioned appeal, the appeal, the submission, the request for apostolic letters, the protestation, and all the other and each of the foregoing things, while they were happening and being acted upon, as is foretold, have been present and personally present at the same time with the aforesaid witnesses, and have seen and heard all and every particular thing so done: Wherefore I have written this present public instrument with my own hand, and have hereunto executed, signed, published and set forth in this public form, and with my common seal and common name, requested and required for the authentication and witness of all and every of the foregoing things.

An old written message from Augsburg about Luther's departure from that city.

From Löscher's Ref.-Acta, Vol. II, p. 491.

In Augsburg, a man is painted on a house, along with the words: Down there, with the date 1540; this is supposed to give a reminder of the man who showed Luther a way to escape from Augsburg from the hands of his persecutors. Many want to take it for an angel who appeared to him in such a form; the papists, on the other hand, take it for Satan, and also had this painting and the scripture erased a few years ago, but later it had to be restituted for eternal remembrance. The year probably refers to the time when this painting was made.

Luther's own message to Spalatin about his departure.

See the 204th Document, z 5: "I stayed there even the following day" 2c.

215 Conrad Adelman's, canon of Augsburg, letter to Spalatin, written shortly after Luther's departure, in which he praises Luther's wise procedure against the Cardinal immensely and at the same time asks Spalatin very imploringly to let Luther's

The prince should recommend the matter to the Elector so that he may try to reconcile him with the pope. Date Augsburg 18 Oct. 1518.

This letter is found in the Wittenberg edition (1569), vol.IX, p.603; Jenaer (1564), vol.I, p.123; in the Altenbürger, vol. I, p. 138 and in the Leipziger, vol. XVII, p. 202.

My dear Mr. Spalatin! Your letter has been more pleasant to my brother and me than that which has come to us from you, our good friend; but it has been much more pleasant to us that we have presently seen and addressed the dear Lord Doctor Martin Luther, both adorned with virtues and manifold teachings. We have often requested him as one whom we love dearly, 1) and have shown him our good opinion.

But you will give me credit: He was not well kept away from you, and especially not provided with that which he would have needed most. But as for all that, the imperial councilors took him into their escort, which you should have thought of first. When he was escorted, he appeared before the legate with more courage and confidence. But what happened before the legate, you will hear for yourself from D. Martinus, when he now, God willing, comes home again, so that I may not be annoying to you. For there would be a long song to sing about it here.

But there is one thing I do not want to keep from you, that Doctor Martinus offered himself against the legate in such a way that it almost looks good to a Christian man. The first offer was that he would hand over everything he had ever let go out to our most holy father, the pope, in order to justify everything that his holiness loved and, if it pleased her, to eradicate all such things.

4 Secondly, he had discussed Opiniones, and thus had not decided anything final, as is commonly done far and wide in the universities of the German nation. And if they wanted to, he wanted to discuss it even further and more. And if someone came with a better reason and certain sayings of the holy scripture, he would be willing to leave his opinion and follow the better one.

(5) Further, if the Holy Christian Church wished to establish and issue a ruling on the matter, he wished to submit it to the decision and judgment of the Holy Christian Church at this time.

1) "requested" - visited.

be. Nor has it ever been his opinion to write, speak, or preach anything that would be against the papal chair, or the pope, or his honor, and that would diminish his dignity.

If you now, my Spalatine, note that this is the opinion of D. Martin, then it will behoove you to have diligence with our most gracious Lord, Duke Frederick of Saxony, Elector 2c., that his C. F. Gn. will act with papal holiness by writing or faithful message, that his holiness will accept this lamb, commanded by his holiness, amicably and graciously, according to the image of our most gracious Blessed Maker, and let himself be graciously satisfied with the offerings touched. For Pope Leo is, as I have understood from many people, kind and gentle; and, if he would not be drawn into a different opinion by his court servants, I believe that my most gracious lord, the Elector of Saxony, could easily obtain that the Pope would again accept Doctor Martinus graciously.

My brother has refused to give you his greeting. I command myself to you, and I am inclined to serve you, and to do what I may for your salvation and honor. Given at Augsburg, 18 October, Anno 1518.

Luther's report to Spalatin on how the notary had at first been too fearful to knock the appeal on the door of the cathedral in Augsburg after his departure, but finally dared to do so after the coaxing of D. Frofch.

See Appendix, No. 19, § 3.

Luther's report to Spalatin that the Carmelite prior, Licentiate Joh. Frosch, who had hospitably received Luther at Augsburg, would come to Saxony because the Elector had promised him a banquet [for his doctorate].

See Appendix, No. 14, § 5.

218 Luther's report to Spalatin on the arrival of this Prior Frosch, who managed to have his appeal heard at Augsburg, along with an enclosed request that he be given the promised banquet at the Elector's house.

See Appendix, No. 19, §§1-3.

M. How the timid Staupitz escaped from some of Cajetan's threatening places from Augsburg quickly without leaving, along with other samples of his timidity and fickleness.

219 Myconius' and Luther's reports on how Cardinal Cajetan had let it be known that he was also quite unwilling to have Staupitz and Link imprisoned and sent to Rome, and on their removal, which happened soon thereafter.

See the 208th and 211th documents, as well as the 204th at the end.

Luther's letter to Staupitz, before the latter had turned away from Saxony, in which he reminds him of the words of encouragement that Staupitz had spoken to him at Augsburg, and by means of which he now seeks to cheer Staupitz up in his pusillanimity, but otherwise still deals with him quite familiarly and confidentially, as souse, and reports all sorts of things to him.

See Appendix, No. 20, §§ 1-3.

221. Luther's somewhat more serious and sharper letter to Staupitz, after he had left Saxony and turned to the Archbishop of Salzburg, in which he already half and half sadly takes leave of him, accuses him not indistinctly of fickleness and of the denial of Christ to be worried about, But at the same time he once again faithfully and earnestly admonishes him not to be ashamed of Christ's sufferings, but to steadfastly confess his Savior before men, if he does not otherwise want Christ to be ashamed of him one day.

See Appendix, No. 21, § 3 to the end.

Luther's letter to Staupitz, in which he tells him how he, Luther, cannot well believe that he can accept the abbey without harming the truth, and at the same time refutes and tries to disprove many evil opinions that have been brought to him by his enemies. Dated June 27, 1522.

This letter is found in Latin in Aurifaber, vol. II, p. 75; in Seckendorf, nist. lmtb., lib. I, x>. 48, 8 37, ack. II; in De Wette, vol. II, p. 214 and nn Erlanger Briefwechsel, vol. III, p. 405. German only in Walch.

Translated into German.

To D. Johann Staupitz, Ecclesiastics at Salzburg.

1. grace and peace in Christ, amen! Venerable and most worthy Father! I have not heard about your abbey both from the prior's letter in Nuremberg 1) and from the common rumor, which claims this so constantly that, if I had not seen your letter, I would have had to believe it. In the same way, I believe, lies are brought to you about us. And although I do not want to withdraw you 2) from God's will, I cannot yet fully grasp, according to my simplicity, whether it could be God's will that you become an abbot, nor does it seem advisable to me; 3) however, I do not want to be contrary to your spirit, nor do I want to judge it. But one thing I ask for the sake of Christ's mercy, that you do not easily shine upon our slanderers, neither against Wenceslaus nor against me. For that you write that mine is highly exalted by those who lie in whorehouses, and that many annoyances have arisen from my newer writings, I am not surprised and do not fear. We have certainly acted and still act here in such a way that we teach the pure word without noise to the people, which both the pious and the wicked use. Both the pious and the wicked can use it. You know that this is not in our power. For we have undertaken to persecute by word the impure celibate state, the impiety of the masses, the tyranny of the ecclesiastical orders, and everything that has been introduced by men and erected against the wholesome doctrine, and to do what Christ preached beforehand.

1) Wolfgang Volpracht (not Link, as Seckendorf states), who together with the provosts Georg Peßler at St. Sobald and Hector Pomer at St. Lorenz abolished the mass in 1524 (Erl. Briefw.).

2) te is found in the 606th (lotban. and at Seckendorf.

3) Luther's warning came too late. Already on April 26, Staupitz had received a dispensation from the Penitentiary in Rome to change his order; on August 1, he entered the Benedictine Order and on August 2, the convent unanimously elected him as its abbot (of St. Peter in Salzburg); on August 6, he was invested as John VI (Erl. Briefw.).

that his angels will gather out of his kingdom all abominations [Matth. 13, 41.]. It must be destroyed, dearest Father, the kingdom of abomination and destruction, the Pabst, with his whole body. 4) And this he does now without us, without hand, by the mere word. His end before the Lord has come. The matter is beyond our comprehension and understanding. Therefore it does not take place that I care about it, since someone [namely Christ] is able to do this, 5) and 6) it is quite reasonable that after the greatness of God also great movements of the minds, great aversions and great abominations arise. Do not be mistaken, my father, about all this. I have good hope. You see the counsel of God in these things and His great hand. Remember how my cause has always, from the beginning, appeared to the world so fearful and unpleasant, and yet it has increased day by day. It will also increase what you fear so much now. Just have a wavy patience. Satan feels his wound, that is why he rages so and throws everything through each other. But Christ, who has begun, will tread him down, although all the gates of hell rage against him in vain.

2) Jacob, 7) the prior in Antwerp, has been imprisoned again, and it is thought that he has already been burned, and other two with him. For it was certain that he would have to be killed because of the withdrawal of the recantation. The Sophists hasten to their doom

4) In this sentence we have omitted nibi after Seckendorf.

5) The translation proposed by Köstlin against Walch and De Wette (M. Luther (3), Vol. I, p. 813 ack p. 685 j, which also the Erl. The translation suggested by Köstlin against Walch (M. Luther, I. I. p. 1313 ack p. 85 j), which is also applauded by the Erl. correspondence, is: "that I should wait until someone is able to grasp it.

6) With the Eoä. Ootbau. we have instead iM^us adopted.

7) Jakob Probst (Ilacobus kraspositus), also called Jakob von Apen (laeobus lpsrsnsis) (^urüäbsr, tom. II, fol. 205). In another place (Vurikubsr, toin. I, col. 70 b) is found by reading out the word lpsrsnsis, which may have been abbreviated: ilaeobus KprsnA. And this Spreng has remained to this day in all collections of letters (from Aurifaber), namely in De Wette, vol. II, p. 207 and in the note vol. II, p. 179. vol. VI, p. 697. in the Erlanger Briefwechsel, vol. III, p. 397 and in Walch vol. XXI, 791. He got the name lpsrsnsis from the Augustiuerkloster in Mern, where he was brought after he had made his recantation. - Only in Köstlin we find (M. Luther (3), Vol. I, p. 640): "Jakob Probst from Upern (later erroneously called Spreng)."

which will come upon them because of the innocent blood they shed. Amen!

(3) They also counsel how to burn me, but I provoke Satan and his scales daily more, that the day of Christ may be hastened, which shall destroy the Antichrist. Farewell, my dear father, and pray for me. Greetings to you D. Hieronymus [Schurf], the Rector Amsdorf and Philippus. I want to apologize to you for Wenceslaus. He is a righteous man and teaches the gospel rightly, that is, the fear of the saints and wise men, as it is due. Wittenberg, Friday after the Octave of Corpus Christi [June 27] 1522.

Your Martin Luther.

223 Another letter from Luther to Staupitz, in which he complains about the suspended correspondence, and presents him with the danger of denying Christ at his abbey, and considers it necessary to abandon it, if he were otherwise still the old Staupitz. Wittenberg, Sept. 17, 1523.

This letter is found in Seckendorf, List. I^{uttl.}, lid. I, p. 48, 8 37, ackst. II (b); in Strobel-Ranner, p. 92; in De Wette, vol. II, p. 408 and in Erlanger Briefwechsel, vol. I V, p. 230. German in Frick-Seckendorf, p. 138 and in Walch.

Translated from Latin.

To the venerable Father in Christ, Mr. Johann, Abbot of St. Peter Benedictine Order of Salzburg, his Superior in the Lord, Father and Preceptor.

Grace and peace in Christ our Lord! Venerable Father in Christ! Your Honor's silence is all too unreasonable; what we must think of it, Your Honor can judge for himself. But even though we are no longer dear and pleasant to Your Honor, we must certainly not forget or be ungrateful to Your Honor, through whom the light of the Gospel has begun to shine out of the darkness in our hearts. However, I must also confess that we would have preferred that you had not become an abbot; but now that it has happened, we must interpret it for the best on both counts.

and let everyone have his opinion. I, with your best friends, am not so sorry that you have turned away from us as that you have become the property of the notorious beast, your Cardinal, 1) who is free to do whatever he feels like doing. The world can no longer bear it, but you must suffer it and remain silent about it. It would be a miracle if you were not in danger of denying Christ. We pray and "wish" that you will be freed from such a tyrannical dungeon and returned to us, and we also hope that you will think of it yourself. For as much as I know Your Honor, I cannot rhyme these two contradictory things with each other, namely that you should be the same as you have been if you intend to remain in that state; or if you are still the old one, that you should not intend to resign from that state. But because we think and wish the best of you, we still have good hope for the latter, although your long silence weakens such hope very much.

I have therefore taken the liberty of sending this letter to you for Brother Achatius, 2) a former prisoner of your monastery, but now free in Christ, as I hope. Yes, if you are still who you were towards us, then I dare not only to ask for forgiveness for him that he left without permission (this, I hope, you will give him abundantly), but I also wanted to earnestly ask for him that you give him something from your rich monastery, so that the poor and needy man can begin a better way of life. For he has also asked me to do this. And since I was in doubt, I took the best hope and leaned on this side, so that I could still be sure of everything good for you. But since you have changed, which God forbid, I do not want to lose more words (that I speak freely), but ask that God be merciful to you and to all of us. You see now, venerable father, how doubtful I write.

1) Matthias Lang.

2) This Achatius cannot be, as Seckendorf assumes, Arsacius Seehofer, because he was in Ingolstadt at that time. An Achatius was among the electors of Staupitzen to the abbot (Erl. Briefw.).

because by your silence you leave us so lukewarmly in uncertainty as to how you feel, since you are quite sure of us what we think and believe, and I am also assured that you do not despise us from the bottom of your heart, even if we were quite displeasing to you. I will certainly not cease to wish and pray that you may be turned away from your Cardinal and the Papacy, as I am, indeed, as you yourselves have been. May God hear me and take you and us to Himself, Amen. Wittenberg, Lambert's Day [17 Sept.] 1523.

Your son

Martin Luther.

N. Luther puts the story of his trade with Cajetan into print under the title: Acta Augustana.

Luther's preface to the Acta Augustana.

Beginning of Decembers 1518.

The exact title and location of the Acta Augustana has already been given in Documents No. 176, No. 177 and No. 200, so we do not consider it necessary to repeat it here. The two following numbers also belong to these, therefore also to the same time.

To the devout reader, Brother M. Luther wishes salvation!

Forgive me, dear reader, for so often spoiling your time with my chatter. I do it very reluctantly, but this time, too, you should attribute it to necessity. It has pleased heaven that I should have become a tale of the people, which I confess I must so ascribe to the Lord that I also lay it entirely on the people who have such godly ears that the most lovely and godly truth annoys them to the point of the most idolatrous ungodliness of heart, mouth and work.

They have long since plagued Johann Reuchlin as a secret counselor (secretarium consultorem), now they also plague me as a question-asking disputator (quaestionarium disputatorem), and want to suffer neither counsel nor disputations. We ver

We see ourselves in the future that they will even challenge people's dreams and thoughts before unholty idleness. For who is safe from these monstrous wild beasts' teeth, since they also devour those who secretly advise or even publicly demand to be instructed? Dear God, what a new and wonderful crime it is that one desires to be taught and seeks the truth, and that too in the church and in the realm of truth, since one must give account to all who demand reason. But of that another time.

225 Luther's relation under the title: Actions of the Venerable Father D. Martin Luther, Augustinian, with the Apostolic Lord Legate at Augsburg.

This immediately follows the previous document.

Now, my dear reader, my matter is this. I see that books are going out and false rumors are spreading about my stories in Augsburg, whether I have done nothing there but wasted time and money, if not that may be called enough, that I have heard a new Latin language there, namely that teaching the truth is just as much as disrupting the church, but hypocrisy and denying Christ is just as much as nursing and bringing up the church of Christ. For I do not see how else you could be other than un-German (barbarus) against the Romans, and they in turn against you, where you do not understand this eloquence, if you otherwise surpass Cicero in eloquence.

In order that neither the friends may exalt the matter too much, nor the enemies too much disparage it, I myself will herewith state what was held against me there and answered by me, and at the same time also reveal by this testimony that I have rendered more than diligent and faithful obedience to the Roman Pontiff:

3. Firstly, that I, as a poor weak man, nevertheless set out on foot on such a long journey and in so many dangers, and that I did not, in anyone's judgment, assert any exceedingly just and reasonable reasons for staying outside; secondly, that I was shot in front of those who were to blame.

nen, which could be discarded by the party of the adversary cheaply by me.

4 These difficult or unfair circumstances, however, (as much as I can smell) seem to me to have been so prepared by these friends for their own sake, and to have prepared everything in such a way that they did not set in motion an investigation of the truth, but my ruin all the more easily, and seem not to have expected that I would come, but to have wished that I should remain disobedient on the outside, so that they would then immediately let the ban go, and triumph in an unheard and unrecognized matter. I could conclude this with a fair degree of certainty from the fact that they did not look for what they wanted to accuse me of until after my arrival. And to this day my writings are still in the house of Caiphas, since they are looking for false testimony against me and have not yet found it. I also see that this new custom and the new law of the Roman court has begun, that they first catch Christ and then search for what they want to accuse him of. However, I have been accused of two things, or rather only one thing, which would like to have a semblance, namely, the little fist of the extravagant; as you will soon hear.

5 Therefore, that the most noble prince, Elector Frederick, Duke of Saxony 2c., would not have made an effort for me in vain (for he had graciously provided me with food and letters of recommendation, and had already graciously endeavored beforehand that the matter would come to a commission outside of Rome), I came to Augsburg and was accepted by the most reverend Lord Cardinal-Legate quite graciously, and almost too graciously, for he is in every respect a different man in all things than the mighty brother hunters.

6th Then, having said that he would not dispute with me, but would settle the matter peacefully and paternally, he presented three things to me by order of the most holy pope, as he claimed:

- 1) I should think better of it and revoke my errors,
- 2) Promise to refrain from doing so in the future,

3) As well as anything that might disrupt or disturb the church.

I, who saw that I could have done this in Wittenberg without danger, without so much trouble, and that I should not have sought such things in Augsburg, immediately asked him to instruct me in what I had erred, for I could not think of any error. Then he brought before me the Extravagante of Clement the Sixth, which begins: Unigenitus 2c., because I had claimed against it in the 58th thesis: Christ's merit would not be an indulgence treasure. So he insisted that I should recant, and insisted confidently, as if he already had the victory in his hands. For he thought and trusted quite certainly that I had not seen the extravagant, perhaps trusting that it was not in all editions.

(8) Secondly, he reproached me for having taught in the seventh thesis in the explanation that faith was necessary for one who wanted to go to the sacrament, or he would come to judgment. For he wanted this to be considered a new and erroneous doctrine; rather, anyone who went would be uncertain whether he would obtain grace or not. And by this impertinence of his, especially since the Italians and the others of his entourage smiled at it, even raised a loud laugh after their manner, he caused me to seem to be overcome.

9. To this I replied: that I had not only carefully looked at this one of Clemens, but also at the other extravagant one of Sixtus the Fourth, which is almost the same or similar to it (for I had really read both of them with the extensive verbiage, behind which there is nothing at all, and thus it completely loses credibility; so full is it of ignorance), but it would not have had sufficient standing with me, both from many other causes and especially from this, that it misuses the sacred Scriptures, and twists the words (if the ordinary mind is to exist otherwise) quite brazenly to a quite different sense, which they do not have in their place, but rather the opposite one. Therefore, the scripture, which I follow in my thesis, is absolutely preferable to it, and in it nothing is proven, but only the Opinion of St. Thomas told and quoted.

(10) Then he began to praise against me the authority of the pope, that he was above a council, above the Scriptures, yes, above everything in the church. And to prove this, he referred to the rejection and abolition of the Council of Basel, and thought that the Gersonists were also to be condemned with Gerson.

Because this was something new in my ears, I denied that the pope was above the Concilium, above the Scriptures. After that I also praised the appeal of the University of Paris, and we mixed in a confused speech many things about repentance, about the grace of God. For I listened to the other objection above with great sadness, for I would never have thought that this should ever be put in doubt. Thus we were in agreement on almost nothing, but (as it is wont to happen) as one thing gave rise to another, so one contradiction soon gave rise to another.

But since I saw that nothing would be accomplished by such a quarrel, and that much would be started, but nothing would be finished, and that we indeed raised nothing but many extravagants, especially since he (who was in the place of the pope) did not like to have the appearance that he had left, I asked for time to think it over.

The next day, when four of the Imperial Majesty's councilors were present, I brought a notary and witnesses with me, and protested actually and in person before the most reverend Lord Legate, reading it as follows:

See above the 200th document.

Hereupon he came back to yesterday's disputation of the first objection, because this seemed to be very favorable for his opinion. But since I kept silent and promised to answer in writing after my protestation, he was again quite confident. But he finally allowed the written answer and we parted.

The answer itself is like this:

See the 203rd and 204th documents.

226 Luther's emphatic resolution, in which he deals almost throughout with the prestige and power of the pope.

This document follows in the ^etis immediately after the 204th Document.

1 Now I must address you, my reader. I have indeed given this last answer of mine with great reverence and, as it were, placed it in the will and good pleasure of the pope, but I do not believe that I have done it in such a way as if I doubted the matter itself or ever wanted to change my mind. Divine truth is also a ruler over the pope; for I do not wait for vain human judgment when I have recognized God's judgment; but because I had to maintain reverence for the one who administered the pope's place, and because even what is said with full truth must be presented and defended with humility and shyness. But you can take the first (answer) as you like, because there is no danger that it will stand or fall. Nothing is lost to indulgence if it had been overcome and false; nothing is lost to it either if it had prevailed and been true. And it obscures little for the main thing, except that by dragging it in, it is cunningly sought to blaspheme the whole disputation. For if I had wanted to act more proudly, I could not have been forced to say one word, since the whole disputation has already been attributed and handed over to the pope, so that nothing more is due to me than to wait for the verdict. But the whole sum of blessedness lies in the latter answer. You are therefore not a bad Christian, whether you know the extravagant or not, but you are nothing else than a heretic, if you deny the credibility of the word of Christ. What I am suppressing and concealing here, you, my dear reader, will, I believe, not without sighing well notice.

2. but I will not restrain you that nothing is sought by this disputation but the true understanding of Scripture, which the so-called sacred decrees in many places, if not falsify, at least obscure for us with twisted and ill-guided words and, as it were, obscure the brightest sun with clouds.

ken. Once, when a Roman flatterer will stir against me, I will act a little more expansively and, if God wills, prove to be a legal theologian, who, however, will earn little favor, especially with the flatterers of the Roman court. For my heart has long desired to engage in such a war game as Joshua did against those of Ai [Jos. Cap. 8]. 1) In the meantime, I give you this foretaste that my thesis really goes against those extravagants, and is therefore false, erroneous and to be revoked. Therefore I also hereby solemnly revoke it in these writings and speak of myself condemned, and finally even say: that it is so set by me, and still so well pleases me until now, that if it were not set, I would still want to set it. Secondly, I reject, condemn, and abhor that extravagant as false and erroneous, and cheap to reject, and confess that it would have been good that it had been written in other words; not that it is false in its sense, but that it errs in theological sense, because it puts the words against the quite obvious opinion of the text.

This is my retraction: Now I have done enough, even to the adversaries, I hope. What? Do you, my reader, think me nonsensical or drunk? No, I am not ranting, but speaking sensible words. In order to prove this, I will make it clear even to the most simple-minded that the popes in their decrees do violence to the words of Scripture. For the most reverend legate has received this with the greatest displeasure, that I would not have spared even the papal sanctity (for so he writes to the most noble prince Frederick 2c.), and said things that one does not like to repeat, namely, that the pope twists and abuses the Scriptures.

4 I must therefore endeavor to show that it is impossible for him to deny that the Scriptures have at times been violated. First, the Decretale de Constitut says. 2) If the priesthood has been changed, the law must also be changed. These are the words of the apostle to the Hebrews [Cap. 7, 12], when he says that the temporal priesthood of the law has ended and has been abolished, since the eternal priesthood of Christ now follows after it. This is the true and actual meaning of the words. But the meaning of this decree is this: the priesthood of Christ is transferred from Moses to Christ, and from Christ to Peter. This is how the jurists interpret it, and the pope allows it or considers it good. But who does not see that this interpretation of the words is quite unsuitable, twisted and highly abusive (abusivissimam), yes, of such a kind that "because" it is not moderated with great effort, it is at the same time quite unlearned and ungodly? For it is most ungodly to say that Christ's priesthood and law are abolished and at an end, that Peter is priest and lawgiver, and Christ is done away. For this is what the word translatio [in the Vulgate] actually means in your apostle. I do not desire to have Peter or Paul as priest, because he is also a sinner who does not have what he could sacrifice for me or for himself, in order meanwhile to refrain from the shameful presumption to which such a conception smacks, namely, that Christ's priesthood was transferred to Peter alone, as if the other apostles had remained laymen or had been appointed priests and apostles by Peter.

5 If I now put this thesis in this way: The priesthood of Christ has been transferred neither to Peter nor to the pope: and the most reverend Lord Legate held this Decretal up to me with its majestic giving and thunder and wanted to drive me to recant, but I answered: the pope is twisting the Scriptures and misusing their words, and my sentence is true in a theological sense, but the decree is perhaps true in some other, misused sense: do you think I should shrink from the threats of a man's word, so that I might be frightened, as if I had said something that one did not like to say, and had not spared the pope's holiness? I want to honor the Pabst's holiness, but I want to worship the holiness of Christ and the truth.

6 Likewise, when I read the passage Matth.

1) Namely, he first gives the appearance that he has overcome, but then turns around and destroys them completely.
2) The istveeretaliu Ore^oriilid. I. tit. II. (46 aonstitutionidus) eap.
3. (with the initial words Dranslato kaosrúotio). sWeim. Aug.^

16,18. f.: "You are Peter, and to you I will give the keys of the kingdom of heaven", "What you will solve on earth" 2c., either in the schools or in the chawl and taught this sentence: One cannot prove by these words that the Roman Church is preferred or placed above the other churches in the whole world, and the most reverend Lord Legate opposed me (perhaps with anger at the inequity of what I said) dist. 21, where Pope Pelagius cries out with such a loud voice that the Roman Church is superior to all other churches, not through conciliar decisions, but through the wording (voce) of the Gospel (he even says: according to the sound, not according to the sense), and invokes the passage of the Apostle Matthew for this purpose: do you think that I should leave the evangelical mind above this and accept the mind of Pelagius, who boasts that he follows only the voice, but not the sense of the Gospel? No! Not as if I condemn or deny the new world domination of the Romans of our time, but because I do not want to let the Scriptures be distorted, and reject some unrighteous people's foolishness, which binds us the church of Christ to time and place, since Christ says: "The kingdom of God does not come with outward gestures" 2c. [Luc. 17, 20.] And they dare to deny that he can be a Christian who does not stoop under the Roman pope and his decrees. Thus, for more than 800 years, they have been expelling from the Church of Christ Christians throughout the Orient and Africa who have never been under the Roman Pontiff and have never understood the Gospel in this way. For even in St. Gregory's time the Roman pope was not hailed as a general bishop; indeed, Gregory himself, though a Roman bishop, yet most vehemently persecutes the name of a general bishop and a bishop of the whole church, in more than six epistles, that he has no hesitation in calling such a name nefarious and unholy, which yet in our day is called the Most Holy. For just as Peter did not create or make the other apostles (for this is what is called today when bishops are appointed), so the successor of Peter did not make a successor of the other apostles. Yes, even the

The other bishops never called the Roman bishop anything other than a brother, colleague and co-bishop, as Cyprian did Cornelius, and Augustine did Boniface and others. Therefore the holy fathers did not understand the passage of Matthew: "I will give you the keys of the kingdom of heaven" 2c. according to the meaning of this holy canon, as if it were said to Petro before all others, but one, they say, stands for all, so that an equality of all would be expressed, in that all and each answer exactly what Peter answers. Hence also this saying in another place in the number of the majority expresses the same opinion [Matth. 18, 18.]: "What you bind on earth" 2c., and what is said to one is said to all. Yes, even on the holy day of Pentecost the Holy Spirit did not descend on Peter first, nor is it read that he first blown on Peter on earth, which, if it had happened at once, would not have made Peter the first world ruler before the other apostles. Therefore the above canon may be true, I admit that; but in an abusive way. My thesis, however, is correct according to the evangelical and true understanding. If Pabst's supreme rule can be proven, one would rather prove it from Rom. 13,1: All authority is from GOD, and all that is there is decreed by GOD. By virtue of this passage, I say, we are thrown (if one actually wants to speak) under the Roman chair, as long as GOD wills, who alone, but not the Roman pope, changes and establishes the kingdoms. Many such things, my dear reader, you will find in the sacred decrees and several others, which, if you use the nose of the bride who looks against Damascus [Hohel. 7, 4.], that is, of the flesh and blood, will often annoy you by their smell. 1)

7 I now say of the extravagant thus: The merits of Christ are not an indulgence, because they work grace even without the pope. This sentence is evangelical, as it is written in many places: that we have been justified and made righteous through Christ's blood and obedience, especially Rom. 5:19: "Through one obedience we are justified."

1) There is an anacoluth in this sentence, so instead of otkenUkris we assumed: te otksnäknb.

sam," he says (and I mean these are Christ's merits), "many have become righteous." But by indulgences no one becomes holy, which to say of the merits of Christ is against the revealed Scriptures. Therefore I do not ask whether this sentence is against the extravagant or intravagant. The truth of the Scriptures comes before me, and afterwards it is to be seen whether the words of a man can be true. For I would certainly never dare to claim that through indulgences we become friends of God, as the extravagant explicitly says and draws the word of the wise [Wis. 7,14.], which speaks of your participation in the eternal wisdom, to the participation in indulgences. Such Scripture was true before the time of the extravagant, and the truth did not first come over from it, and it cannot be said that it speaks of indulgences, since it is known in the whole church that there is nothing in Scripture about indulgences, and thus it necessarily follows that if some passages of Scripture are explained from it, as is done here, violence is done to them thereby, and they are drawn to it improperly and abusively. Nevertheless, out of reverence, I confess that it is true, and I will affirm both their understanding. So they say: Rather you shall keep that (that is, the worse) understanding, and deny the other (that is, the right). Therefore, if I am forced to call my thesis false, I will do so, but at the same time call the extravagant one false twice. For if they accuse me of holding against the common custom of indulgences, I confess that it is otherwise, and that it is done by me with diligence, so that the established opinion may be removed, according to which, as I knew very well, the merits of Christ are called the treasure of indulgences, which, however, seemed wrong to me according to the sound of the words. Therefore, I have put forward this thesis [the 60th thesis]: that the keys given by Christ's merit are the treasure of indulgence. Therefore I have put forward this thesis [the 60th thesis]: that the keys given by Christ's merit are this treasure, in that I do not completely exclude Christ's merits from the indulgence, but interpret them according to a different understanding than the common opinion has. But if I had not wanted to contradict this common opinion with reverence and humility, I would not have said that the keys were given through Christ's merit.

I have included the merits of Christ so that I would not contradict them so harshly. But now I have included them so that I would not contradict so harshly. Yes, I would not have committed a mortal sin if I had resisted the extravagant right to the face and had put on the word of St. Jerome, where he speaks of those who take everything they say for God's law, and thus says: They do not desire to know what the prophets have kept, what the apostles have kept (note: "have kept"), but draw to their own understanding unskilful testimonies, as if it were a high and not rather a quite wrong way to teach, to falsify sayings, and to drag the Scriptures, which dispute against it, to what they will. So certainly does this extravagant one. For the words of Christ's merits, by which sins are forgiven, she draws to indulgences; and how justly this is done, let the reader understand from the following. Christ's merits take away sins and increase merits; indulgences take away merits and leave sins. Can then one and the same text be understood by both in a proper way? I think even an Orestes would say no to it. And yet I have admitted it out of reverence, and asserted it, although with great violence. Finally, since the extravagant is also dark in words and quite digressive in truth (extravagans), saying sometimes that the merits of Christ are the treasure of indulgences, sometimes that they have acquired the treasure of indulgences: so I have said something that can also stand for my opinion against the common opinion. And because of such a doubtful extravagant, twisting the words of God and falsifying the sayings (as Jerome says), should I do a certain retraction, since the error has not been proven? No, I do not want to do that, but I constantly and confidently deny that the merits of Christ are in any way in the hands of the pope, as the words say; he may see how he understands his extravagant.

Let it be enough for this time to have shown that not all the decrees of the popes contain the right understanding of Scripture, and that therefore one can accept without detriment.

The theological faculties are different from the juridical faculties, where many things are permitted that are forbidden here. Furthermore, the power concerning law (juridica facultas) is different from the theological: there, many things are permitted that are forbidden here. The jurists exalt their statutes; much more must we theologians preserve the purity of Scripture, and all the more so since we see that in our time most pernicious flatterers are rising who exalt the pope above the concilium, namely, that after one concilium has been rejected by another, we are left with nothing certain, and finally a certain man, the pope, tramples everything underfoot at the same time, being sometimes above the concilium, sometimes below it. Above it, since he can reject it; below it, since he assumes from the Concilium, as a superior, the power by which he himself is exalted above the Concilium.

(9) There are also some who impudently boast that the pope cannot err and is above the Scriptures. If these abominable doctrines are admitted, the Scriptures are ruined, and consequently the church also, and nothing will remain but the word of a man in the church. But such flatterers deal with it in such a way that they first make the Roman church hateful, and finally even overthrow it and throw it over the heap.

10. Therefore, my dear reader, I hereby testify before you that I honor the Roman Church and follow it in all things, only I resist those who seek to erect a Babel for us through the name of the Roman Church, and want everything they can think, if they can only move their tongues, to call the Roman Church, should be taken for the opinion of the Roman Church, as if there were no more holy Scripture, by which (as Augustine says) we judge all things, against which without doubt the Roman Church neither holds nor sets anything. Among such people, I count the lovely flatterers who have dictated an apostolic breve against me, the contents of which I will publish, so that you may see how cleverly they have used trickery. For, that it was written in Germany, after that but was sent to Rome with diligence, and perhaps was sent back to Germany only at the suggestion of some great man in Rome, I want to make you sure of that by the epilogue that I will soon add, or at least make you suspicious. For this, too, belongs to my complete stories.

From this follows in the Xeta Augustana the breve of Leo X to Cajetan (Document No. 176) and Luther's epilogue to the same (Document No. 177). This concludes the Xota.

227 Luther's table speeches from this trade at Augsburg with Cajetan.

See Luther's Tischreden, cap. 55, § 1. Walch, St. Louis Edition, vol. XXII, 1370 ff.

O. How difficult it was initially for Luther to publish his Acta Augustana.

Luther's report to Spalatin that his Acta Augustana were now being printed.

See Appendix, No. 19, § 3 and No. 22, § 1.

Luther's report on how the Elector was not satisfied with it, but had it revoked by Spalatin.

See Appendix, No. 23, § 2.

Luther's report that the Elector had even hinted that the printed sheets were to be suppressed.

See Appendix, No. 24, § 2 towards the end.

Luther's respectful apology, which he had presented to the Elector, that it was now no longer possible, nor advisable, to retain the last sheets, since the first had already been fetched from the printing press.

See Appendix, No. 25.

232 Luther's report on how the Court finally saw through its fingers, or rather allowed it to.

See Appendix, No. 26 and No. 23, § 2.

Luther's thoughts from his Actis Augustanis to Wenceslaus Link.

See Appendix, No. 24, Z1.

1) The old translation renders the words: statim adclit "Postilla so: "und man gleich die Postilla (das ist das päpstliche Siegel oder Unterschrift) hinzugethan".

The third section of the third chapter.

Of Cajetan's more distant undertakings against Luther after his departure from Augsburg.

A. From Cajetan's publication of a new papal preterate of indulgences.

234 Pope Leo X's new decree on indulgences, in which the point of indulgences is declared to be a proper point of faith of the Church, and with which the pope has decided the questions of indulgences, and perhaps also wanted to give Luther the opportunity to free himself from this dispute with honor. Dated 9 Nov. 1518.

This writing is found in Latin in the Wittenberg edition (1550), tom. I, col. 228b; in the Jena (1579), lom. I, lob 203b; in Löschers Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 494; in Erl. opp. v. Ä., torn. II, p. 428 and in Lünig's eontinuat. I. spoiölöm oolosiastio., p. 147. Latin and German in Kapp, Sammlung einiger zum päpstlichen Ablass gehörigen Schriften, p. 457. - Of this writing Miltitz says in the 277th document: "that he [Luther] jetzund urged the Holy See at Rome to do so, by his writing, that a new Decretalis, which has not been done in many years, is made 2c., which explains to him his dubia completely", and hands over a copy of it to the Elector.

Translated from the Latin by Johann Erhard Kapp and explained with notes.

In the name of the Lord, Amen. Let it be known and known to all and sundry to whom the present copy or instrumentum publicum shall come before the eyes, that in the thousand five hundred and eighteenth year after the birth of the Lord in the sixth indiction, the thirteenth day of the month of December, in the sixth year of the reign of the most holy Father and Lord in Christ, Mr. Leonis, by divine providence of this name of the tenth pope, I Peter Anton Berrus, native of Parma, by virtue of apostolic power immatriculated in the Roman archives and appointed public notary in the city of Linz in the Archduchy of Austria, in the room of the most reverend father and lord in Christ, Mr. Thomas, of the title of St. Sixti of the Holy Roman Church. Sixti of the Holy Roman Church Priest Cardinal, at her Imperial Majesty 2c. 2c. Legate de Latere of the Apostolic See, which room is located in the monastery of the Conventual Friars of St. Francis of said city, by the Reverend Cardinal and Legate personally located there, for the things described below, namely that I have a copy or viäimus Draussum tum [certified copy] of the apostolic letter, the contents of which are indented below, in authentic form, and transcribe the same letter, also make a true copy or transcript, and collate it with the originals which have been presented and handed over to me by the above-mentioned Lord Legate, and after the collation has been made, bring a transcript or such a copy in publicam formam. However, the content of this apostolic letter follows immediately after the beginning of the insinuation of the same written below, and reads thus:

St. Thomas, by divine mercy of the title of St. Sixti of the Holy Roman Church, Priest Cardinal, of the Apostolic See by Her Imperial Majesty Legate de Latere, wishes to all and every Lord Archbishops, Bishops and other Ordinaries of the Order salvation in the Lord and sincere love, that they will give undoubted faith to the present. Our most holy Father and Lord in Christ, Mr. Leo, by divine providence the tenth pope of that name, has sent us a letter which is accompanied by a true leaden bull with cords of hemp,^{a)}

a) In Latin it is called: oum oorckulw ex eanopo; since then it is to be known that also in this way written hemp indicates. It has taught me such the Voeaburarr'us 6" -uo, which is printed in 1490 in 4. and is to be found on the Leipzig University Library, which speaks thus: esk Aenu" kinr. I have also itt of Archbishop Ernst at Magdeburg Publication of the St. Anne's Feast of 1495 ordered by Alexander VI to be celebrated in Saxon lands found: LullaxlumdoaoüiQ eoräula eanna'yr's, and the same is in des Herrn Lünig's Öontinuazione KpieileZii, p. 283. Otherwise it is to be noted here also because of the sealing of this bull that one can see immediately from the cords whether it is a dulla gratiae sGnadenbnlles, which is also called ^rativka, or else bulln ju8titin6 sRechtsbullei. If it is ^rntiosn, it is sealed with silk cords that are either red or yellow. If it concerns exercise of the right, then the cords are from hemp, at which the lead hangs, the Breve however under the Fischerring, in roth wax pressed, expedirt; as also Mr. D. Sismeeorus in its mnt6 rl" KiKillis Vtzturn, p. 52 notes. From which it is clear that this bull was a legal decree. One sees from this way of sealing /vnAr Draetatur rie Vnnulis KiZnatoriis antiaurorum, the HerrVrckerr 'eu " 1709 in 8. have put on, p. 80. van jus Veoletziastium, p. 156. Lesseb' ckiputationes, p. 73.

sealed in the manner of the Roman court, also pure and unharmed, not falsified, not crossed out or erased, nor in any part suspect, but completely free from all errors and suspicion and from word to word the following content:

We, Leo, servant of the servants of God,^b) offer to our dear son Thomas, of the title of St. Sixti, our and the Apostolic See's legate to our most beloved Son in Christ Maximilian, chosen Emperor, salvation and blessedness together with the apostolic blessing.

After your careful arrival in Germany, it came to our attention,^c) that some monks, who are ordained to preach the Word of God, in public sermons, spoke of the indulgences that we and the Roman popes, our ancestors, have been dispensing from time immemorial. In our sermons, we have also written about the errors imprinted in the hearts of many, but it was too burdensome and annoying for us to listen to them: In our other letters we commanded your prudence, in which we have a good trust in the Lord because of its peculiar erudition and special experience in the administration of our affairs, that you might approve, by virtue of our authority, things worthy of approval, but disapprove and condemn that which would be given as erroneous and unjust, even by those who will say that they are willing to follow the teaching of the Roman church.

And lest, moreover, any man should plead ignorance of the doctrine of the Roman Church concerning indulgences and the power thereof, or excuse himself under the pretext of such ignorance, or help himself with a trumped-up protestation, but that they may be convicted of a manifest lie as liable to punishment, and justly condemned: we have thought good to report to thee with the present, that the Roman Church, to which the others, as to her mother^d) have been accustomed to

b) This title of the popes has been dealt with above p. 7.

c) It has been proven in the two introductions to Cajetan's Instruction and to this Decretale that the pope had news of the indulgence controversy before Cajetan's arrival in Germany.

d) This predicate, which Leo gives to the Roman Church, does not belong to the Roman Church at all. The fathers of the Council of Trent, Sess. VII, can. 3. de dapti8mo, paZ. 57 (eäit. (7bMeM Vntv. 1677), the Roman church ornniuin DooisÄaruin matrem er magäskram: but that the latter is false and the latter blasphemous, the same Obemnrtr'us Dxam. Oonoil. Driäent., D. II., I., II., p. 325 last eäit., and only recently the famous Herr Hofprediger zu Dresden LI. Carl -Gottfried Engelschall in the victorious evangelical truth.

The Roman Pontiff, Peter's successor in the office of the keys and JEsu Christ's governor on earth, has handed down (tradidisse), by virtue of the keys, to whom it belongs, that the obstacles in his believers in Christ, namely the guilt and punishment, can be removed, The guilt, which is owed for real sins, through the Sacrament of Penance, and the divine punishment, which is owed for real sins according to divine justice, through the Church's indulgence, For important reasons, it has been customary (consuevisse) to grant indulgences from the abundance of the merits of Christ and the saints to these same believers in Christ, who are members through the bond of Christ's love, whether they are still alive or in purgatory, 1) to distribute the treasure of the merits of Christ and the saints through the granting of indulgences by apostolic power both for the living and the dead, to grant indulgences themselves through the way of absolution, or to grant the same through the way of help^e) heil wider die falschen Lehrrsätze des Tridentinischen Concilli (1720 in 8.), p. 158. The famous theologian of Halle, D. Paul Anton, also dealt with this in his learned disputation de aukorrtate eeetesrae ^ua mater est, which was reprinted in Halle in 1713.

1) The expressions oonsuoV1886 and traäiäi886, which are repeated in the text of the shorter interpretation of the epistle to the Galatians, point to this decree. See Document No. 235.

e) It has been promised above p. 248 that more of the type per moäum sussragär shall occur with this Decretale. Everything is taken from the ZSaMatão, which in its Vnnal. Dool. aä au". 1518, ß 125 thus speaks: Oppugnante etiam Luthero non modo indulgentias vivis concessas, sed etiam defunctorum animabus, quae expiatoris flammis cruciantur, idem legatus apostolicus alio tractatu doctrinam catholicam explicuit sanxitque his verbis: Unde patet, quod indulgentia concessa vivis et defunctis hoc habet commune, quod utraque ex potestate clavium dispensante thesaurum meritorum poenaliu Christi et Sanctorum in remissionem poenae temporalis pro actualibus peccatis debita conceditur: sed modus, quo pervenit indulgentia ad utrosque, diversus est, quia ad vivos, qui illam consequuntur veraciter per modum absolutionis pervenit: defunctos autem, qui etiam illam veraciter consequuntur per modum suffragii liberat, etc. Augustae the XV Octobris MDXVIII. Hanc controversiam cum plures perfidiae fumos illi ostendere niterentur novatores, proximo anno uberius enucleavit.... And in the following year he continues p. 287.] 49 thus continues: Hoo anno eurn novator Dutüorus inäut^ontias oonoossas pro äotunotis Dorpli^riana DuoianaeaHno sourrilitato äoriäorot, oatüolui voro ali^niä äo moäo, <iuo valoant, an adsolutionis, an sutkraZü oontrovoortoront, Ntromas äo Vio 6aräinalis o Oormanioa loZationo Domain rovoran8 controver8iam oäito soripto they oxpionit: Znäukg^ennr aä vvos äe/ert m'amM[Ma6,perMär6r's aetum, seMeet abto grant it. Therefore, all, both living and dead, who have obtained this indulgence, have been exempted from the temporal punishment, which they owe according to divine justice for their actual sins, insofar as this is equal to the indulgence granted and obtained. Decree also by apostolic power, according to the present letter, that all who are under the penalty of the pronounced ban,^f) from which penalty those who fall into it cannot obtain absolution from anyone other than the Roman Pontiff, except in cases of mortal peril, shall thus hold to it and preach it.

And that no one may cite his ignorance of what has been said before in this letter: We therefore command thy prudence that thou admonish and earnestly command all and every archbishop, bishop, and other ordinaries of the Order in Germany, in virtue of holy obedience, and under penalty of suspension from divine offices, that they make known the present letter or its transcript within the time prescribed by your prudence, in their churches, when the multitude of the people shall have gathered there for worship, and that they shall teach the aforesaid doctrine of the

We give you the right to preach and believe in the "first indulgence under the same penalty of excommunication," and that no one may dare to act in any way, directly or indirectly, contrary to this. Nevertheless, we also give you by present complete and free power to proceed against those who take something contrary and disobey, and to punish such with proper punishments as seem good to you, and nothing shall stand in the way of this, whatever it may be.

And because it would be difficult to bring the present letter to all and every place where it would be useful: Therefore, by the above-mentioned power, we decree that the copies thereof, signed by the hand of a public notary requested for this purpose, and bearing the seal of a prelate or other person holding ecclesiastical dignity, or of an ecclesiastical court, shall be given the same credence in and out of court, and wherever else it may be, as would be given to the present letter if it had been delivered or shown. Given at Rome by St. Peter, in the year of the Incarnation of the Lord one thousand five hundred and eighteenth, the 9th of November, in the sixth of our Papal government.

Bembus.

Scriptor Alberghatus.

On the back page of the aforementioned apostolic letter registers with me Bembus.

Since we now order this apostolic letter, which we have received with due reverence, to be dutifully executed, and wish to carry out the order of our most holy Lord Leo, this name of the tenth pope, as well as everything and anything contained in the preceding apostolic letter (as we are bound to do), we hereby intimate, Thomas, the aforesaid Cardinal Legate, by apostolic power, which we administer herein, intimate the aforesaid and from word to word presently indented letter to all and every Lord Archbishops, Bishops and aforesaid Ordinaries of the Order of Germany, also insinuate the same, and make it known, and endeavor, as much as can be done, that the same may come to all and every one; admonish you, all and each of the aforesaid Archbishops, Bishops and other Ordinaries of the Order, and command, for the first, second and third time, in place of and in the name of our most holy Lord Leo the Tenth, in virtue of holy obedience, and earnestly command, under penalty of suspension from the ecclesiastical office, that their aforesaid apostolic letter, or current solutionem; existentes autem in purgatorio (utpote extra Ecclesiae praesentis forum) a Papa absolvi non possunt, sicut nec ligari, et ideo indulgentia, quam auctoritative ex thesauro Ecclesiae confert, illis per modum auxilii ad eorum sublevationem mitti, confidens in divina misericordia, quod acceptabitur ad sublevationem eorum, qui in foro irae et furoris Domini puniuntur purgandi. Et infra: Inter sacramentorum et indulgentiarum efficaciam differentia ad propositum est in hoc, quod remissio poenae per sacramentum sit ex intentione ipsius Christi, cujus est sacramenti operatio, ita quod iste suscipiens sacramentum relevatur a tanta poena, ac si ipse passus fuerit patiente Christo, ut sacramentum baptismi testatur, docente hoc Apostolo ad Rom. 6. et D. Thoma 8. parte quaest. LXIX. Per indulgentiam autem remissionem poenae consequimur, tanquam ecclesia pro nobis illa passa fuerit; quoniam abundantia passionum Christi, et Sanctorum ecclesiae dispensationi credita, intelligitur dona ecclesiae, ut commune ipsius Ecclesiae bonum, ac per hoc per Ecclesiae rectores, ut ipsius Ecclesiae sunt ex intentione Ecclesiae applicanda hisvel illis; devenerunt siquidem passionibus istae ad thesaurum Ecclesiae ex intentione Christi et Sanctorum ad commune Ecclesiae bonum in generali, et commissae sunt, ut ex intentione Ecclesiae ad hos vel illos: et hoc explicatur in forma indulgentiarum pro defunctis, cum per modum suffragii procul dubio Ecclesiae conceditur: deducitur igitur indulgentia ad defunctos non iustitia, sed gratiae divinae acceptione duce, etc. Roma XX Novembris MDXIX.

f) This Npseisni ^xeomvaunieationik I have above.
p. 60 described in detail.

Copy of it, also everything and anything contained in it, within a month after receiving news of it, make it known, fulfill it, also command it and make arrangements for it to be fulfilled, also each one of you fulfill it and make arrangements for it to be fulfilled, as is contained in more detail in the said apostolic letter.

For more faith in all and each of these points, we have had the present letter, which contains the transcript, the intimation, notification and monition, and other aforementioned things, provided with the imprint of our small seal^g). And so that such a letter may be all the more powerful, we have requested the final signed public notary to prepare and publicize an Instrumentum publicum or Instrumenta publica about all and each of the points described above.

Therefore I Peter Anton Berrus, native of Parma, notary public named above and below, took the present letter with due reverence to me, and after I have perused, read and diligently gone through it together with the witnesses named below, who have been specially requested and asked by me for this purpose: I have found, after having read and inspected it, that the vidimus or transcript and the present copy of it, which have been collated with the originals in the most diligent manner, and have been listened to and read against them, agree in all points. Therefore, at the request of the aforementioned Cardinal Legate, I have put this transcript or authentic document into this public form and signed it with my usual seal and name, so that the present document, just like the original, may be more perfectly authenticated everywhere, at all and any places where it will be useful, where it will be useful, is and can be given perfect credence, also so that the present transcript may be relied upon in whatever forum or court it may be, even apart from the same, as if the original apostolic letter itself were present. Concerning which all and any points this same reverend gentleman, the Lord Cardinallegate, has requested of me, the public notary named below, that I issue one or more Instrumentum publica. Done in the city of Linz in the Archduchy of Austria, in the parlor of the aforesaid reverend lord, the lord cardinal legate, located in the aforesaid monastery of St. Francis, in the year, indiction, day, month and papal government as above, in the presence of the noble lords, Mr. Hilarion Ursinus, a Roman of nobility, Mr. Petrus Flavius Aquilanus, and Mr. Johannes Caspar Caracciolus of Naples, as witnesses specially called and requested to the aforesaid matters.

And I, the above-named Anton Berrus of Parma, by apostolic power and notary public immatriculated in the archives of the Roman court, because I was present at the said apostolic letter presentation, reception, requisition, transsumption, collation, exultation, and at all and every of the aforementioned things, since they were done and executed in such a manner as has been said before, together with the named witnesses, and also saw and heard that everything and anything was done in this way: I have therefore made this present Instrumentum publicum, which I have written with my own hand, signed, publicized and put into this public form, and have also affixed my usual seal and name, as well as the imprint of the small seal of the aforementioned reverend Lord Cardinal Legate, as I have been requested and required to certify and witness all and every of the aforementioned items.

Printed at Vienna in Austria with the consent and will of the bishop there. 1)

Because I have found after the collation that the present copy corresponds with the original, I have added the seal of the aforementioned Reverend Sir, the Cardinal Legate, to Peter Anton, Notary Public, who has signed himself above with his own hand, for multiple authentication and assurance of all the above-mentioned points.

Luther's Gedauken opened to Peter Lupinus and D. Carlstadt about this new Decretale, in which he considers Cardinal Cajetan to be the author of it.

See Walch, St. Louis Edition, Vol. VIII, 1359, from the note sign 1) to the end of the paragraph.

1) Here follows a facsimile of Cajetan's seal in the Wittenberg edition. The square oblong seal of the notary Peter Anton Berrus is already shown before in the margin.

g) I do not know what this small seal of the Cardinal looked like, because I have not seen an original of this bull. Perhaps it is just the one that is found in a letter of grace issued by this Cardinal on Sept. 1, Cusus nuni for the Church of the Holy Cross in Dresden, and in the Unsch. Nachr. 17 13 in the third order under the Cardinal Raymundus large engraved in copper.

236a. Luther's opinion expressed by this same Decretale in the Leipzig Disputation at the tenth thesis on July 11, 1519.

In this volume No. 377 in Luther's disputation with Eck on indulgences, in Luther's first reply, near the end.

236 b. Letter of Pope Leo the Tenth to the Swiss Cantons of Indulgence, in which he refers to this Decretal, which should also serve the Swiss as a rule of faith. Dated Rome, 30 Apr. 1519.

This is the 67th document.

B. The Cardinal's correspondence with the Elector of Saxony concerning the Augsburg events.

237 Cardinal Cajetan's letter to the Elector of Saxony concerning Luther's behavior and departure from Augsburg. Dated October 25, 1518.

This and the following writing is found in Latin in the Wittenberg edition (1550), tow. I, tol. 219d; in the Jena (1579), tor". I, toi. 195d; in Löscher's Ref. Acta, vol. II, p. 527; in Aurifaber, vol. I, pp. 106 and 118; in the Erlanger, opp. var. ar^h, toni. II, p. 405 and 411; in the Erlanger Briefwechsel, vol. I, pp. 268 and 284. German in the Wittenberg edition (1569), vol. IX, p. 49; in the Jena edition (1564), vol. I, p. 124; in the Altenburg, vol. I, p. 138; and in the Leipzig, vol. XVII, p. 203.

Most Serene and Excellent Prince! Brother Martin Luther has come with the letter of your Serene Highness. Before he appeared before us, however, he wanted to protect himself with a free and secure escort, which he also obtained from the lords of imperial majesty, through the reputation and favor of your Serene Highness, but not without my knowledge. For the said councilors did not want to grant him escort without my permission. I gave them this answer: they should do as they please, only that my name would not be mixed in. But here I began to wonder. For if your Serene Highness was on my best behavior, there was no need for an escort; but if she did not trust me, he should not have been sent to me as to a father.

2nd Then brother Martin appeared before us, apologizing first of all because of the

He said that he had come to hear us and to confess the truth that we had recognized. 2c. He further said that he had come to hear us and to confess the truth we had recognized. Then we received him quite willingly and graciously and accepted him fatherly. I said at first: he should be asked only in accordance with the true holy scripture and the holy spiritual rights, and if he recognized himself, would henceforth see better, and we could safely sleep without worrying that he would not recapture what he had said, then I wanted to lay down the whole matter by order and authority of our most holy Lord Pope Leo X.

I further admonished him paternally, pointing out to him that his disputations and sermons were against apostolic doctrine, especially concerning indulgences. I also presented to him an extravagant of Pope Clement VI, which was publicly against him, both concerning the cause and the effect of indulgences.

I also referred to the old and common custom of the Roman Church, showed him also a statement about another article of faith in the sacraments, also reminded him that his opinion was not right, but publicly contrary to the holy scripture and right doctrine of the Church, which contradicted it in all things. I do not know what he answered to the clear, light extravagant, and he asked for a day to think it over, saying that he would come back then. I admonished him to recognize himself, so I let him go.

The following day he came again, together with the Father, the Vicar General of the Congregation of the Observants, and accompanied by many others. And since I expected him to recognize himself correctly, he began to protest in the presence of a notary, whom he had brought with him. To this I smiled, admonished him once again in the most friendly manner, that he should cease this useless pretentiousness, strike himself and mend his ways, it would be difficult for him to lick the sting.

(6) Then he added that he wanted to answer me in writing and thus conduct his business, since I had argued with him enough by words the day before. I was surprised at the audacity of the man and said: "Dear son, I have not argued with you, nor do I want to argue with you, but I am only prepared, for the benefit of the most noble Duke Frederick, to hear you in a fatherly and friendly manner (not to argue or quarrel with you), and to admonish and teach you for the sake of the truth, even (if you want otherwise).

to reconcile with the Most Holy Lord, our Pope Leo X, and the Roman Church.

Then he asked me and his vicar beside him, I wanted to hear his opinion in writing. Then I said that I would like to hear it and do everything fatherly, but not judicially. Therefore he left me, and afterwards came back for the third time, handed me a long written note, in which he answered very foolishly to the decree of the extravagant of the pope, not even sparing his holiness, of whom he says that she abuses the sayings of the holy scripture. As far as the faith of the sacraments is concerned, he fills the paper with many sayings of the Holy Scripture that do not rhyme with the matter at all, and which he had wrongly understood.

8 When I had indicated to him that he had no opinion, neither with what was written in that Extravagante, nor with the sayings of the Holy Scriptures, I repeatedly admonished and begged brother Martin, as a son, with great earnestness, not to be wiser than was proper, nor to impose a new doctrine on the church, but to recognize himself and see that his soul was not lost.

9 Not long after that, the Father Vicarius of the Congregation came to me, with whom we discussed this matter for several hours in the presence of the honorable Mr. Urban, Orator of Montferrat and a Master of Theology of the said Order, how this affair could be settled without violating the reverence for the Apostolic See, and also without any taint for Brother Martin. After a while, that Master of Theology, a comrade of Brother Martin, came alone and approved and praised this negotiation.

When this foundation was laid, and I hoped that everything would turn out well, the said vicar took off, did not say goodbye to his host, and I did not know anything about it either. Brother Martin and his companions soon followed, thus deceiving me, yes, more themselves, only very much. However, I received a writing that Brother Martin had left behind him, in which he ostensibly asked for mercy, but did not therefore recant either the errors or the ailments that he had caused in the Christian church.

(11) I, most noble prince, was not only astonished at the cunning and crafty advice and nobility of brother Martin and his followers, but I was also appalled and very frightened by it. For since I most hoped that it should be well with him, I was on the most deceived. But I do not see, in confidence in whom he carries out such. 1)

In this matter, however, I can say three things with certainty: First, the statements that Brother Martin made in his theses in a disputatious manner are, however, in the sermons that he wrote, set down as certain and in an assertive manner, and affirmed in German, as they say. This, however, is partly against the teaching of the apostolic see, and partly condemnable. And believe me, Your Serene Highness, for I speak and say the truth out of certain knowledge, not out of uncertain delusion.

13 Secondly, I exhort and beg Your Serene Highness to exercise her honor and conscience, and either send Brother Martin to Rome, or expel him from her lands, because he does not want to recognize his error by paternal means and ways, nor to keep it with the general church.

14 Lastly, your Serene Highness should know that this so serious and extremely pernicious trade can by no means hang around for long, for the matter will be pursued in Rome. 2) For I have washed my hands, and have written such crafty trickery and deceit to the most holy Lord, our Lord. Your Serene Highness is well and blessed, to whom I cordially submit. Given at Augsburg, on the 25th day of October, Anno 1518.

I ask again and again that Your Serene Highness will not be deceived by those who say that Martin Luther's brother's teaching contains nothing evil; nor that she will not let the honor of her ancestors and her own honor be stained because of a little brother, as she has so often promised.

I speak the truth and will keep the rule of Jesus Christ: By their fruits ye shall know them. This little I have written with my own hand.

Your Serene Highness willing Thomas Cajetanus, Cardinal St. Sixti, Legate of the Apostolic See.

238 D. Mark. Luther's letter of responsibility to the Elector of Saxony in response to Cajetan's complaint. Dated Nov. 19, 1518.

The location of this letter is given at the previous number. At Aurifaber it has the wrong date: November 29.

Newly translated from the Latin.

1) Here Cajetan stabs the Elector.

2) In his reply (Document No. 241), the Elector describes this as a threat.

To the most illustrious and truly exceedingly good prince, Lord Frederick, Elector, Archmarshal of the Holy Roman Empire, Duke of Saxony, Landgrave of Thuringia, Margrave of Meissen, his most gracious lord, his most devoted servant, Brother Martin Luther, Augustinian, wishes well-being and all that a sinner's prayer can do.

I have received, most gracious and most illustrious Prince, through my dear friend, Mr. Georg Spalatin, a letter together with a copy of the letter of the most reverend Mr. Thomas Cajetan, Cardinal of the title St. Sixti, Legate of the Apostolic See, which has been sent to me according to the will of your Serene Highness; but I have received it with reverence and cheerfully. For I see that I have been given a very fine opportunity to state the whole matter. I would like to ask Your Serene Highness only one thing, that your brilliant greatness will graciously listen to this lowly and despised beggar brother who cannot speak well.

First of all, the Reverend Cardinal writes with truth that I wanted my stay in Augsburg to be secured by a free escort. And this I have done not on my own advice or that of your Serene Highness, but on the advice of individual friends and all those to whom I was recommended by letters. With the exception of one, the highly respectable Mr. Orator Urban, 1) who alone dissuaded me with many words. But it was necessary for me that I preferred all of them to the one, so that they would not, if something had happened to me by chance, write that I had despised both the recommendation of your Serene Highness and their extremely faithful service. Then it is not the sign of a stubborn person, but a natural way of thinking that I, who am a German, prefer many Germans, who are known to me before, and who are well known by their life and reputation, to a Welshman. For I hope that this very nation and the crowd will completely

1) Urban of Serralonga had been an envoy of Count William IX of Montferrat at the Electoral Court in 1517. After the count's death, he stayed with Cajetan and finally became his housemate (Löscher, Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 453.).

I apologize that that respectable orator will not be able to claim that he is despised by me.

Therefore, Most Serene Prince, you should not have been reproached for a lack of trust; indeed, more trust was placed in the most reverend Lord Legate than the friends expected, so that they were surprised at my sacrilegious presumption or (as they called it with an honorable name) audacity, that I had entered Augsburg without an escort. For your Serene Highness had indicated to me through my dear Spalatin that I would not need a safe escort: so much did your Serene Highness take care of everything good for the most reverend legate.

I will also go through the other pieces in the letter of the Reverend Lord Legate and respond to them in a few words.

He writes with truth that I have finally appeared and have excused the delay of my coming and the obtaining of a safe conduct. For I said that I had received a warning from people in high places, both spiritual and secular, that I should not leave the walls of Wittenberg, because I would be pursued with sword or poison. Then I also added the aforementioned cause, namely the care of the friends who gave me advice in the name of your Serene Highness. Now I have fallen at the feet of the most reverend Lord Legate and have asked with all reverence and humility for forgiveness, if I had said or done anything wrong, and I am quite ready to be instructed and (as I am also still minded today) to be led to a better opinion.

Then the most reverend legate received me fatherly and most graciously, praised me and wished me luck for this humility of mine. Immediately he presented me with three things that I should do according to the command of our most holy Lord, Pope Leo X, namely, as he said (because when I asked for a copy of the breve, he refused it):

First, that I should go into myself and recant my errors.

Second, that I should promise to abstain from them in the future.

Thirdly, that I am also aware of all other things.

should contain, by which the church could be troubled.

With regard to the first, I asked him to show me in what I had erred. Soon he reproached me for having said in the explanation of my seventh thesis: he who goes to the Sacrament must believe that he will obtain the grace of the Sacrament. For he wanted this doctrine to be contrary to the holy Scriptures and contrary to the right doctrine of the Church. But I said constantly that I would not yield on this point, just as I will not yield today or forever. Then he said: "You may want to or not, today you will have to recant, otherwise I will condemn all your teaching even for the sake of this one article.

And although he said that he did not want to act against me with the opinions of the teachers, but with the holy scripture and the spiritual law (canonibus), he did not bring up one syllable of scripture against me, while I, on the other hand, cited many scriptural passages for myself, as can be seen from my written answer 1); only that he reproached me with the concilia on the efficacy of the sacraments, which I did not deny, because they were not against me. But under the talking he always fell back on the opinion of the [scholastic] teachers. And I wait, desire, ask to this day for a saying of Scripture or the holy fathers that is against this opinion of mine.

And to speak to you, most noble Prince, from the bottom of my heart: I am sorry with all my heart that this subject of our faith is not only doubtful and unknown in the Church, but is even considered false. But, my dear Prince, I testify before God and His angels: Let there be what may become of my other answer [about indulgences], let it be false, let it be against the extravagant, let it be condemned, let it be revoked: I will do all this if it must be so; but this opinion I will dying confess, and rather deny all than revoke it. For be it that the merits of Christ are the treasure of indulgence, so

If for this reason nothing goes to the indulgence, or be it that they are not, then for this reason nothing goes from it; the indulgence remains what it is, with whatever name it may finally be honored and puffed up. I am therefore not a bad Christian if I do not want the indulgence, which he alone exalts and fights for; but if I were to change this belief, I would be denying Christ. Thus I hold, thus I will hold, until the contrary opinion is proved by Scripture and disproves the sayings I have attracted, which has not yet happened, and (if GOD is gracious) never will.

Then, because he was more concerned about indulgences than about this matter of faith, as he writes: "especially (he says) about indulgences," he referred to the Extravagant of Clement VI against my 58th thesis, where I denied that saints and Christ are the treasure of indulgences, as I still deny. Thesis, where I denied that the merits of the saints and of Christ are the treasure of indulgences, as I still deny, at least as it lies and as the words read, however much he may praise the Extravagante as clear and evident; I, on the other hand, say that it is obscure, ambiguous, and unsuitable, as is clearly evident in my earlier answer.

But that he writes in his letter that I had said to the extravagant, "I don't know what, that is not proper to say", he writes as to a layman. This, "which it is not proper to repeat" (in order to reveal the spitefulness of this word, and so that it becomes clear whether this means: to seek me paternally), was that, most noble prince, that I said that that extravagant one did not have sufficient strength against my thesis, especially since she twisted and misused the words of the Scriptures to a foreign meaning. This word "twist and abuse" tormented 2) the man extraordinarily and still torments him, as his letter indicates. For he wanted and still wants that the human words of a pope are accepted without regard to whether they agree with the scripture or not.

But, dear Prince, your Serene Highness allows that I, too, as a layman, should have these

2) This word "tormented" and immediately following "torments" would also like to be translated: "twisted" and "twisted", because it is the same word toruere, as immediately before.

I will treat the matter, that is, roughly and clearly. In the meantime, I want to forget the extremely sharp power of judgment, which is to be feared even by all scholars, with which God has distinguished the mind of Prince Frederick above all that our time has seen. I now say that it is nothing rare and new that the holy Scriptures have been twisted by popes and holy teachers and drawn to a foreign meaning. In order to make it short, I will also make it clear to every gross ox-driver by citing an example which does not belong to the present case (extra propositum, as it is called).

A decree, de constitutionibus, says: Where the priesthood is changed, the law must also be changed. These are words of the apostle in the letter to the Hebrews, Cap. 7,12, where he teaches that the temporal priesthood and the law are finished and at an end, since the eternal priesthood of Christ followed. This is the true and right opinion of the apostle's words.

But in the Decretale this is the opinion: The priesthood of Christ is transferred to St. Peter; for this is how the jurists interpret it. Who does not see that this mind is a strange one, and by all means such a one, which, if it is not tempered with much flourishing, is an exceedingly godless one. For it is utterly ungodly to say that Christ's eternal priesthood has been transferred, that is, that it is finished, and that his eternal law is finished and transferred, so that Peter is priest and lawgiver with the removal of Christ.

I do not want to have Peter or Paul as priest, because he is also a sinner who does not have what he could not sacrifice either for himself or for me, to say nothing of the fact that it is said that it was transferred from Christ to Peter alone, as if the other apostles had remained laymen or had been ordained as apostles by St. Peter. How much more correctly it would be understood that not the priesthood, but only the office of the priesthood was imposed on Peter, or that it was taken in any other sense that would leave the right sense of the apostle intact.

Do I therefore speak ill when, in view of this Decretal, I say this opposite sentence

Since the priesthood of Christ is eternal, is it not transferred to St. Peter? Or will the most reverend legate force me also here to deny the true sense and to accept only the sense of the Decretals? Such things are many in your ecclesiastical law (in juro canonico), by which (to put it bluntly) the Scripture, if not corrupted, is certainly obscured.

I have also done something like this against the extravagant. For it is quite certain that the merits of Christ cannot be dispensed by a man; then they (the merits of Christ) even impose good works of repentance rather than dispensing with them (that is what indulgences do), as Peter clearly says [1 Pet. 2:21.], "Christ suffered for us, leaving you an example, that you should follow in his footsteps." He does not say, He suffered for you, that is, so that you should not suffer, or so that you should be relieved, but He left an example to be followed, not a treasure He left, so that this should be left in place 2c.

For this is actually the power of the merits of Christ, that they arm for the work, not that they make pillows and put pills under the arms and at the heads, as the prophet says (Ezekiel, Cap. 12,18.). Therefore I have set myself against the extravagant, rather against their bad conception, and I still set myself against it. Nor is this the common custom of the church, which he (the Cardinal) exalts, but a corruption and an abuse that goes against the truth of Scripture.

Therefore, I admit that the extravagant is true, but I deny that its sense is that which the attracted words of the Scripture have in their place. These words have been true for more than twelve hundred years before this extravagant was arranged/ and they have not received the truth only from the extravagant or from their time. For if these words of Scripture, according to their proper and right sense, must be understood by the indulgence, then from the Holy Scripture the indulgence could be proven and proved.

1) The extravagant dates from 13th9 (Erl. Briefw.),

The first thing to be done is to make sure that the people of the world are aware of what everyone, except the last man, denies.

Therefore I want to hold both. And they say to me: Rather you shall hold this (namely the worse) opinion, deny the other (namely the better). But this I will not do, but think that it is enough that I have shown such a degree of reverence to the word of a man that I confess it to be true; I will not deny the word of God, who cannot lie (like that one), for the sake of the word of that one. Therefore, it is not "something that is not proper to say" (unless one tries to bring another to death and destruction without a cause), if one says that the pope or the holy fathers have sometimes twisted the Scriptures or misinterpreted them in a foreign sense. Or if one persistently denies this, we will certainly make the pope as well as the saints heretics and ungodly, since it is obvious that they follow an opinion different from that in Scripture, and not in few places, not even rarely.

So much was done on the first day, that is, these two things were reproached to me. For I asked for one day to signify myself, and went away. For I saw that it would not serve my cause to deal with the matter in words, because he, sitting in the place of the pope, wanted that whatever he said should have complete validity with me, again whatever I opposed was hissed out, rejected, even laughed at, if I put on the holy scripture. For I will be silent about the fact that he took it upon himself to raise the power of the pope even above the Scriptures and the councils, by stating how the pope had already passed the council at Basel. 1) When I had mentioned the appeal of the University of Paris, he said: "You will receive your punishment. Finally he condemned I don't know what followers of Gerson 2). For I had mentioned the Concil at Basel or at least Gerson in my "Explanations on the Theses", which had annoyed the man.

1) This had happened at the Lateran Council in 1312.

2) Gerson placed the church above the pope.

In short, that fatherly kindness, which was promised to your Serene Highness so often, consisted against me in this: either I would have to suffer or to recant, because he said he did not want to dispute with me. Therefore, it was the best advice to answer in writings, which at least give the oppressed the comfort that they can also be tested by the judgment of others, and instill some conscience and fear in him who otherwise has the upper hand with words.

The next day 3) zero I returned, and with me the venerable father Vicarius Johann Staupitz, who had arrived in the meantime, and there were four excellent men, councilors of the imperial majesty, present. I began to protest before the notary, whom I had brought with me, 4) that I did not want to say anything, nor would I ever say anything, that was contrary to the teachings of the Roman Church, and that I was ready to be instructed and guided, if I had erred somewhere, by submitting my statements to the pope, then also to four universities, the one in Basel, the one in Freiburg, the one in Louvain, and finally, if this were not enough, also to the mother of studies, the one in Paris, as indicated by my protestation.

Here he again laughed at this counsel of mine, and began to exhort me that I should go into myself and recognize the truth, that he again wanted to reconcile me with the church and the pope, and the like, as if I had already been declared a heretic, an apostate, and standing outside the church. But since I promised to answer not with words, but with writings, and asked that it had been fenced (digladiatum) enough the previous day, he took the word "fenced" full of displeasure and said with a laugh: "My son, I have not fenced with you, nor do I want to fence with you, but rather admonish you and, out of consideration for the most noble Prince Frederick, hear you fatherly and kindly, that is, (as I was forced to understand it) urge you to do nothing but recant. For he rightly disliked my foolishness, that instead of: disputing or arguing

3) October 13.

4) This is Document No. 200.

(which, to tell the truth, we had in fact done the day before) somewhat more delicately than the matter required at that time.

Meanwhile, as I remained silent, the venerable Vicarius stood up and asked (as I had also asked) that he might hear me in writing, which we finally obtained only with difficulty. For he did not want a public disputation, also refused to dispute privately with me, also to answer in writings, he would not allow until this hour, but always insisted only on the word "recant". If I had done so, everything would undoubtedly have been settled in the most fatherly manner, for he is, in my opinion, a very kind man who would have liked to hear the recantation.

When I had returned for the third time, I handed over in writing the answers to the two pieces reproached to me. Of these he first said that they were many and useless words, as he also now writes; that I had only answered foolishly and filled the paper with scriptural passages that did not serve the cause, and that he had given the right opinion of them. But when I finally said that it serves for me that the extravagant says: Christ acquired (acquisivisse) the treasure for his church with his sufferings, he immediately seized the book, read and came across the word "acquired" (acquisivit), but he carefully tried to conceal that he had come across it.

Finally he got up and said: "Go away," he said, "either recant or do not come before me again. But I left immediately, believing that I should not dare to come back, since I had made up my mind not to recant unless I was taught otherwise. Not to mention that the rumor was circulating that the venerable Father General 1) had allowed me to be taken in the eye and put in fetters if I did not recant; but I remained in Augsburg that same day.

It was on Friday afternoon. 2) After

1) Gabriel Venetus. See Document No. 158b.

2) These words are attached to the preceding paragraph in the editions. After that Luther's third the venerable father Vicarius had been called, he negotiated with him that he should make me recant without any stain, as he writes here, that is, with eternal disgrace, which tends to follow those who, out of fear of men, deny the truth against their conscience. This he [Staupitz] did; but when he was asked to refute the scriptural passages to me, he said that this was beyond his ability, and I said: it would be against my conscience to refute, if the scriptural passages were not explained to me differently and better. After that I stayed the whole Saturday; nothing was said to me, nothing was commanded. I also stayed on the following Sunday, where I at least wrote a letter 4) to the most reverend legate, but nothing happened. I stayed also on Monday, I stayed also on Tuesday, and the silence became suspicious to me and all my friends. Fearing violence, I left Augsburg after I had prepared an appeal, and left on Wednesday, confident that I had shown the pope abundantly grave and faithful obedience according to the wording of the citation. But if they should do anything further by virtue of it, it is not to be wondered at if I suffer violence.

Then see, my dear prince, that God truly dwells on high and catches the crafty in their cunning. For he says: "Three things in this matter I can say with certainty."

I answer: If he recognizes that it is put disputation-wise: why then do they torment me wretched and poor man with so many burdens, suck me dry with so many and last audience with Cajetan took place on Friday. We have followed the reading of the Erlangen correspondence, which, according to two manuscripts, draws these words to the following paragraphs. According to the letter to Spalatin of October 14 (Appendix, No. 17), Luther's last interrogation took place on Thursday, as well as according to Rühel's report (Document No. 202). In both of these documents, however, Staupitzen's appointment to Cajetan is also attributed to the same day, i.e., a Thursday, while Luther erroneously places it here on Friday. The remark, which De Wette, Vol. I, p. 146, makes about the incorrectness of the date of the above letter, does not apply.

3) This "he" is also to be referred to Staupitz.

4) The letter is the 209th document.

Do you think that I am a man of expense, that I am overwhelmed with so many accusations and insults, that I arouse so much anger and almost scandal in the church? They are disputations (he says), for which I give thanks. I am acquitted, yes, all are also condemned who have rightly challenged me. For the reverend legate himself, by these words, becomes a witness for us that he acted without cause and unreasonably all against me, and did not write this sincerely. Are they not yet ashamed of their tyranny, which they so clearly confess by their own testimony? For what offense can a disputation be accused of? what a disputator, which I am after all, as he confesses here? What did he want with this letter? Is it that we should recognize that brother Martin has done nothing but disputing? And for this reason his adversaries and the most reverend Lord Legate himself were moved against him, and only deceitfully did they carry out slander and injustice against him? For he was cited because of the disputation, not because of the sermons; for they only learned about the sermons after I had been cited. I can defend these (with God's help) more easily than the disputations themselves. For in the latter I doubted many things and did not know them, but there I spoke out of certain knowledge, not out of imagination.

Now let us see that he claims that what I have said in the sermons is "partly condemnable, partly contrary to the teaching of the apostolic see", because for him it is something else to be condemnable and something else to be contrary to the teaching of the apostolic see; perhaps that he is not condemnable who speaks contrary to the teaching of the apostolic see. And so I am again acquitted and justified, because I am accused and cited primarily and solely for speaking against the teaching of the apostolic see, that is, not condemnable, as is distinguished here.

Oh how I would have liked, most Serene Prince, that this letter had been written by some Silvester Prierias, so that it would only have been allowed to be signed with the full freedom of my mind.

seek. I would truly show how difficult it is to cover an evil and unjust conscience with a semblance of right; but now, deference to a very good and kind man compels me to press down the heat of my flowing heart until another time.

But I do not like the fact that he tries to make a kind of Pilate out of the extremely clever and highly perceptive prince. For when the Jews had brought Christ before Pilate, and were asked what accusation they had brought, or what evil this man had done, they said [John 18:30], "If this man were not an evildoer, we would not have delivered him to you." So also here the most reverend lord legate answers, after he had handed over the brother Martin to the prince with many spiteful words, and the prince wants to ask: What then has that poor brother done? He answers, I say:) "Believe me, Most Serene Prince, Your Serene Highness, for I speak the truth out of certain knowledge, not out of uncertain delusion." I will answer for the prince: Create proof that I can know it is certain knowledge. Let it be in writing, let it be in the form of letters, let it not shun publicity and light: when this is done, then I will send Brother Martin to Rome, yes, even capture and kill him. Then I will take care of my honor and my conscience and not bring any stain on my honor. But as long as this certain knowledge flees the light, and can only be heard through the voice, I will not trust in darkness, since even the light is not sufficiently secure. For that is how I would answer, most noble prince. But your highly enlightened wisdom needs neither a teacher nor a counselor. For these coarse French and Roman practices (Italitates et Romanitates, that I say so) have already become the song of children.

Now your Serene Highness may judge what more I should have done or should do. I appeared against the advice of all friends with such great danger to life and well-being that they still say today that I was not obliged to appear. Then I

I gave an account of my statements before the most reverend Lord Legate. I could have answered according to the freedom that I am entitled to by law. I could have answered a word, and not given myself up for any examination, since my explanations about the theses had been handed over to the pope and made known, so that this matter did not concern me, but I only awaited the verdict. For I had already put aside what I had entrusted to the decision of the church, and yet I suffered out of deference to the most reverend Lord Legate that I was even examined. I have not been deceitful [by leaving], but have withdrawn from violence out of quite justified fear. I do not see that I have omitted anything except these six letters: REVOCO [I recant].

By the way, they may condemn, teach, interpret, either the most reverend legate or the pope himself, but they shall not merely say: You have erred, you have spoken evil; but in writings they shall indicate the error, prove that it is evil spoken, give the reason they have, refute the scriptural passages I have cited, they shall teach as they boast in words that they have done, they shall instruct him who desires to be instructed, asks, also wants it and waits for it, which even a Turk would not refuse me. If I see that it must be understood differently than I have understood it, and then should not recant and condemn myself, most Serene Prince, then let your Serene Highness be the first to persecute me, cast me out, and let the men of our university cast me out; yes, I call heaven and earth against me, and may my Lord Jesus Christ himself destroy me. I also speak out of certain knowledge, and not out of uncertain delusion. I do not want God the Lord Himself to be merciful to me, that no creature of God be favorable to me, if I, having been taught better, should not follow.

If they should despise to instruct me, poor brother and beggar, because of all the lowliness of my state, and to lead me back to the way of truth: well then, do it your most Serene Highness, and ask the most reverend Lord Legate that he may do a little

At least write to your Highness about the things in which I have erred and how I must correct the error, so that I may at least hear from your Serene Highness the reasons and scriptural passages with which they can refute my error. If they should refuse this to your most noble Highness, then they may write it either to the Emperor or to some archbishop in Germany. For what else can I do? It is a strange thing that I am accused of having erred, and cannot obtain it, not even by so great a prince, wherein and wherefore they think that I have erred.

Therefore, your most noble Highness may see: he does not refuse me a public disputation (which to this day I do not refuse either at Leipzig, or at Erfurt, or at Halle, or at Magdeburg, or everywhere where the rule of your Highness extends, or where it applies to safe conduct, but rather even ask for it, and God would that I could ask for it), privately he refuses it in the same way, even in writings he refuses to denounce the error, he refuses the judgment of the four most famous universities. If he now adds to this that he rejects the requests of the most noble and very powerful prince, how can I then suspect anything but pure force and deceit?

Therefore, again, and again, and again for the third time, I ask Your Serene Highness not to believe those who say that Brother Martin has spoken evil before he is heard and taught that he has spoken evil. Peter was wrong even after he had received the Holy Spirit; a cardinal can also be wrong, however learned he may be.

Therefore, your Serene Highness will take care of her honor and conscience by not sending me to Rome. For the man has not to command this to your Serene Highness, since it is impossible that I should be safe in Rome, and this would be nothing else than to command your Serene Highness that she betray the blood of a Christian and become a murderer, since even the pope does not live there safely enough. They have paper and pens and ink in Rome, they have innumerable notaries: it will be easy, to record on paper in what and why I have erred. I can be taught absent by writings with less expense than killed present by deceit.

One thing hurts me in my innermost heart, that the most reverend Lord Legate in his letter covertly stabs at Your Serene Highness, as if I were doing all these things in confidence in the power of Your Highness. For even among us, some liars have pretended that I have disputed these things on the admonition and advice of your Highness, while none of my most trusted friends knew anything about this dispute, with the exception of the most reverend Archbishop of Magdeburg and Jerome, Bishop of Brandenburg. For I humbly and reverently admonished them in private letters before I published the disputation, as it was incumbent upon them to defend against these abominations, that they might watch over the sheep of Christ against these wolves. I knew very well that this should not be brought to the lay princes, but first to the bishops. My letter is available, which has come into the hands of many, which gives testimony of all this. This is how I have acted.

But that now the most reverend Lord Legate would like to attach a stain of shame to your Serene Highness and to the whole flower of the Saxon house and make her hateful to the Pope: so even people nowadays believe that Christ is buried, as if he could not also now speak through an ass and, since the apostles and apostolic men are silent, shout through wood and stones.

But I wish, ask and desire that your Serene Highness in all things adhere to the church and the pope, but be opposed to me in everything, except for this one thing she wants to ask for me (rather for the holy truth, for the honor of the church and the pope, yes also for the honor of the most reverend Lord Legate, finally also for the sake of the good name of your most Serene Highness), that the reasons and scriptural proofs finally come to light, by which, as one thinks, my error is shown. For to condemn me without these [proofs] would be neither for your Serene Highness, nor for the pope, nor for the church, nor for the most reverend priest.

It will be an honorable experience for our dearest Lord Legate. The faithful are trembling, Christ is alive, and there are certainly still people alive who can judge.

But that the most reverend Lord Legate reminds your Serene Highness that if she does not send me to Rome, or chase me out of her lands, the matter will be pursued in Rome 2c.: so I do not refuse very much to go into exile, since I see that I am being set up on all sides by my adversaries, and I cannot easily live safely anywhere. For what can I, a wretched and lowly monk, hope for? indeed, what danger have I not to fear? what evil have I not to fear from my envious ones? since they do not even care to offend your most illustrious Highness, although she is such a great prince, such a great Elector of the Holy Roman Empire, such a great promoter of the Christian religion, so extraordinarily that they threaten him, who deserves much better, as you can see, I do not know what misfortune, if she does not either send me to Rome or chase me out of her lands.

Therefore, lest any harm befall your most noble highness for my sake (which I least of all wanted), behold, I leave your land and will go where the merciful God wills, and surrender to His divine will, He will do with me as He wills. For nothing is further from my mind than that any man (let alone your most illustrious Highness) should be brought into disfavor or into any danger for my sake.

Therefore, Most Serene Prince, I respectfully greet E. C. F. G. and simply bid her farewell, and offer my eternal thanks for all the good deeds she has done me. Wherever I may be in the world, I will never be unmindful of your Serene Highness and will always be a sincere prayer for your and your people's welfare.

Furthermore, that the most reverend legate says that the venerable father vicar left without taking leave of his host, what is that to do with Your Serene Highness? The Vicar was not called, this matter did not concern him. He could go, come back, go away, come as he pleased, at any time.

Hour. Did the gates of Augsburg also have to be closed to those going in and out for my sake? But I am afraid that, wherever it may come from, a cause will be gathered and sought against me. For he who wants a thing where he has no thing must necessarily seek a thing.

But now forgive E. C. F. G. for my rambling. I am still cheerful by the grace of God and give thanks that Christ, Son of God, has counted me worthy to suffer in such a holy cause. May He keep E. C. F. G. for eternity, Amen. November 19, at Wittenberg, 1518.

E. C. F. G. unworthy intercessor Brother
Martin Luther, Augustinian, with his own hand.

Luther's report of this matter to D. Staupitz.

See Appendix, No. 23, ? 2.

240 Luther's request to Spalatin to write him his verdict on the responsibility paper against Cajetan that was sent to him enclosed.

See Appendix, No. 22, ? 1.

241: Prince Frederick of Saxony's reply to Cardinal Cajetan. Dated Dec. 8, 1518.

This letter is found in Latin in Aurifaber, tom. I, tot. 108b; in the Wittenberg edition (1550), tom. I, fol. 220b; in the Jena edition (1579), tom. I, col. 197; in the Erlanger, opp. var. arZ., tom. II, p. 409; in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 542 and in the Erlanger Briefwechsel, vol. I, p. 310. German in the Wittenberger (1569), vol. IX, p. 56; in the Jenaer (1564), vol. I, p. 136; in the Altenburger, vol. I, p. 148; in the Leipziger, vol. XVII, p. 216 and in Spalatin's Annalen, p. 2.

Gott waits.

Most venerable in God the Father, especially dear Lord and friend! We have received and understood all the contents of your dear letter, dated Augsburg on the 25th day of October and delivered to us on November 19, not by a special messenger, but by a random messenger, concerning Doctor Martin Luther, Augustinian.

Because the said Martinus has appeared in your love for Augsburg, as we have agreed and promised with E. L. at Augsburg, that which we have granted has been done enough. We would also have provided that E. L., after he had been interrogated, would have released Martinus according to her many promises, fatherly and good-willed, and would not have urged him to revoke unrecognized and not sufficiently discussed matters, as Martin indicates. For there are many scholars in our principalities and lands, at the universities and elsewhere; but so far we have not been able to be consistently and irrefutably assured by any of them that Martin's teaching is ungodly, unchristian and heretical, with the exception of some for whose private cause and financial gain his teaching was not useful, who, in order to advise their own advantage, have set themselves in opposition to Martin, but so far they have not yet proven their pretense against Martin.

3 For if it came to us with some consistent reason and proof that D. Martin Luther's teaching should not be Christian and consistent, we would, by the grace and help of Almighty God, instruct ourselves in such a way that no admonition and reminder would be needed. For our mind, our will and our opinion are completely ready for the office of a Christian prince who desires to exercise his honor and conscience with God's help.

Therefore, we did not at all expect that we would have to suffer such a threat in such a state of affairs, namely that the Roman court would pursue this matter and that E. L. would have washed his hands, or that we would be required either to deliver Martin Luther to Rome or to expel him from our lands, and yet for no other reason than that Martin Luther has not yet overcome the offense of heresy. For he would be expelled to the detriment of our university, which, as is known to this day, is a Christian one and has many pious and learned and diligent people.

5 We have also not omitted to hold the letter to Doctor Martin E. L. against us. L.'s letter, to which he answered us, as E. L. will see from the enclosed copy.

6 Because D. Since Martin offers to argue on the basis of the verdict of several universities and at certain ends, and to be obediently instructed and at the same time instructed after the matter has been recognized, we think he should be allowed to do so, or at least the error should be reported to him in writing, as we also want to have requested, so that we know, why he must be considered a heretic, and why we too have something to follow and be guided by.

(7) For even we cannot hold that he is to be considered a heretic (since he has not yet been convicted) and that he is to be excommunicated. Finally, we would not like to be led astray, or to be found disobedient by papal sanctity.

8 We did not want to restrain your love, which we blessedly command God the Almighty to abstain from. Date Altenburg on the 8th of December, Anno 1518.

Luther's testimony of his heartfelt joy against Spalatin, which he felt when reading the Electoral reply to Cardinal Cajetan, together with his thoughts about it.

See Appendix, No. 25.

6) How Luther was prompted by this persecution of Cajetan to appeal to a general concilium.

243 Appeal of D. Martin Luther from the proceedings of Pope Leo X against him to a general concilium, Wittenberg, Nov. 28, 1518.

We take from the Weimar edition the following introduction to this document: "Cajetan, the papal legate, had boasted during the negotiations with Luther of the authority to have the heretic monk imprisoned if he did not recant, and it was rumored that the general of the Augustinian order had given his consent to this [see Doc. 238]. On his return journey, Luther himself had received in Nuremberg the document on which the legate relied: it is the deneinverleibte breve to Cajetan of August 23, 1518 [that is, the 176th document]. In this, the reformer already found himself condemned, and even if he initially regarded it as forged (see Doc. 177), it nevertheless showed him what he had to "take care of" in Rome. Thus the time had come which he had set for his appeal to a future general council. Already on the day of his return to Wittenberg, October 31, he informed Spalatin that he would handle it. On November 28, he performed the act before a notary and witnesses: however, we know nothing of a public announcement by notice." - Only with the condition that all copies would be sent to him, Luther had given this document to the press: if the ban would be pronounced over him, he wanted to spread them, otherwise not. But almost all of them had been sold before he was informed by the Luther did not learn anything about the completion of the printing. Since Luther in his letter to Spalatin of December 9 only remembers the act of the appeal, but in the letter to Wenzel Link of December 11 already expresses his disapproval of the printer's procedure, we may well regard December 10 as the day of publication. The Elector Frederick had been opposed to the publication, but he had warned Spalatin too late. To some, the appeal seemed too lofty. Two years later, banned by the pope, the reformer renewed it.

Our writing first appeared in poster form with the superscription: kt ^lartini I,utüor act 6cm-. cJinn, in total 76 continuous lines. After that, three prints probably made by Valentin Schumann in Leipzig, 4 leaves in quarto. Likewise, a cursory impression by Martin Landsberg in Leipzig, and a Basel print. An impression in octavo is available, which is made after the eclitio xrin:ep8. In the "Gesammtausgabe" it is found in Latin in the Wittenberg (1550), tom. I, cob 231; in the Jena (1579), tom. I, col. 2055; in the Erlanger, oxx. var. ar[^], vol. II, p. 438 and in the Weimarschen, vol. II, p. 34. Also in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 505. German only in Walch. This entire document, although a reference would have sufficed (as was done in the Jena edition, tom. II, col. 257 b), is reprinted in the Erlangen edition, oxx. var. ar[^]., tom. V, x. 121-128.

1. in the name of the Lord, amen! In the year of Christ 1518, in the sixth indiction, on Sunday, the 28th of the month of November. of November, the sixth year of the papal government of the most holy in Christ the Father and of our Lord Leo, by divine providence of the tenth pope, the venerable father, Mr. Martin Luther, an Augustinian of Wittenberg, master of sacred theology, and there ordinary senior lecturer of theology, and especially for theology, has, in my presence as a public notary, and in the presence of the witnesses specially called and requested for this purpose, and there ordinary supreme lecturer of theology, and especially for himself, without herewith revoking anything of his lawyers appointed by him in various ways, or thereby depriving them of anything, had and held in his hands a professional or appeal document, in the opinion and intention to appeal, and therefore to seek letters of reprimand (apostolos) to a higher court: saying, telling, appealing and calling, for certain and lawful causes contained and stated in the very note, to the nearest and immediate future concilium lawfully assembled in the Holy Spirit, excluding all other angular rolls and meetings or assemblies, and would be entirely rejected; thereby protesting and doing everything else as it is more fully contained, stated, and described in said Appeal Petition, the contents of which thus read and are as follows:

2. Since the remedy of appeal has been invented by the authors of rights for the consolation and refreshment of the oppressed, and the rights permit to appeal not only from the inflicted, but also from future inflicted and threatened burdens and wrongs, so that an inferior may not refuse to go to the superior, or may close the hands of the superiors; and it is sufficiently admitted that a holy council, lawfully assembled in the Holy Spirit and representing the holy catholic church, is above the pope in matters of faith, so that even the pope cannot order in such matters that no appeal be made from him to the council, because he would then be doing what is not proper to his office; In addition, the appeal is such a defense, which according to divine, natural and human rights is due to everyone and which the prince himself cannot revoke.

3. Therefore I, brother Martin Luther, of the order of the hermits of St. Augustine at Wittenberg, master unworthy of holy theology, and of the same highest ordinary teacher there, have appeared especially and for myself before you, the public notary, as a public and credible person, and the witnesses present here, with the intention and opinion to call, appeal, and to demand and receive the apostles (or referral to higher ones), but with the express and solemn protestation (or assurance) that I do not intend to say anything against a certain holy catholic and apostolic church, which I consider to be the master of the whole world and therein supreme, and against the prestige of the holy apostolic see, also of our most holy lord the pope, if he is well informed, violence. If, however, out of weakness or irritation on the part of the adversaries, I should perhaps miss something that was not said correctly or reverently enough, I am willing to improve and change it.

4. because he who represents God on earth, whom we call pope, as a man like us, adopted from men, and, as the apostle says [Heb. 5:2], surrounded with weakness, can err, lack, lie, become vain, and is not exempt from the common saying of the prophet [Ps. 116:11.], "All men are liars"; and St. Peter, as the first and holiest of all popes, has not been free from this weakness, that he walked in harmful hypocrisy against the truth of the gospel, so that he had to be punished sharply, but still holily by the apostle Paulas, as to the Galatians Cap. 2, 14. is written: We believers in Christ are instructed and made certain by such a glorious example, which the Holy Spirit has shown in the church and left in the Scriptures, that even if a supreme pontiff should fall into the very weakness of Peter or similar infirmities, and command or conclude something If a supreme pontiff should fall prey to the weakness of Peter or similar infirmities, and should command or resolve something contrary to divine commandments, he should not only not be obeyed, but should also be confronted with the apostle Paul, and the lower members of the body should, as it were, take care of the weakness of the body as a whole and remedy it. And for the perpetual and salutary remembrance of this example, it may have happened, as malt not indistinctly recognizes, by special divine providence, that not only St. Peter, but also his salutary punisher, Paul, became protectors and governors of the holy Roman church with each other and at the same time; so that we would always be reminded of this necessary and highly useful example, not only by Scripture, but also by a visible monument, namely both the heads and we members. And if, through the violence of the powerful, one should gain such an upper hand that he could not be resisted, then there is still left the remedy of appeal, which was mentioned earlier, by which the oppressed may be raised up.

5. which also I, the above-mentioned brother Martinus Luther, taking the aforementioned way and intention, thus say and present:

6. that, since in recent times indulgences were granted by some (as they claimed) apostolic com-

They began to preach unrighteous, heretical and blasphemous things in order to suck the money out of the people, for the seduction of believing souls and the highest mockery of the church authority; as their booklet, which is called Summary Instruction 1), clearly shows, especially about the pope's power over purgatory, since it is certain from the Canon Abusionibus etc. that the pope has no power over purgatory, that the pope has no power over purgatory, and that the whole church and all teachers agree that indulgences are nothing but a remission of the penances of satisfaction imposed by their judge, as the text clearly states C. quod untern, etc. But the penance of satisfaction, which the spiritual judge (or confessor) has imposed, is nothing else than works of fasting, prayer and almsgiving 2c., therefore by the keys of the church that cannot be remitted which is not imposed by them; likewise that from 35. Dist. C. Qualis, etc., it is clear that in purgatory not only punishment but also guilt is remitted, but the church can no more remit guilt than it can confer grace:

7 Since I, based on such reasons, have opposed their foolish and dishonest teachings in the manner of disputing, those who raged for gain first began to declare to the people with the most impudent outrageousness, with public clamor, that I was a heretic, and then also to accuse me before our most holy Lord Leo X., through a certain Mr. Marius of Perusco, the Procurator, as one suspected of heresy. And since, through this same Lord, before the persons of the most reverend lords and fathers, Jerome of Ghiuucci, Bishop of Ascoli, the chamber interrogator, and Silvester Prierias, palatii magistri, they finally obtained the order to cite me, they have had me cite or summoned to Rome by them to appear there in person.

8 Since I was hardly safe from reenactments in Wittenberg, much less such a great

I could not undertake a journey or remain safely in Rome, because I was both a poor and a weak and sickly man, and the aforementioned judges were suspicious of me for many reasons, especially because the venerable father Silvester was already my adversary and had published a discussion 2) against me, and was not so well versed in the Holy Scriptures as this matter required, but Jerome was more versed in law than in theology, so it was rightly feared that he would concede too much to Silvester's theology, because the matter did not belong to his science at all: So I have made a request through the most illustrious prince, Lord Frederick, Duke of Saxony, Archmarshall of the Holy Roman Empire, Landgrave of Thuringia, Margrave of Meissen, that the matter be transferred to people who are unsuspicious, but righteous and honest men.

9 Then, armed with crude and rude cunning, they managed to get your most holy Lord Leo 2c. to refer the matter to themselves, that is, to the person of the most reverend Lord Thomas, Cardinal St. Sixti, then Legate of the Apostolic See in Germany; because he was the head of the Order of Preachers and of the Thomist party, that is, of my repugnant party. Sixti, at that time legate of the apostolic see in Germany; because he was the head of the order of preachers and of the Thomistic, that is, of my repugnant party, and so it was easily hoped that he would decide against me for them; or that I, as it seems credible, frightened by the mere sight of this judge, would not appear, and thus be accused of contumacy (or of disobediently remaining outside). Nevertheless, I have relied on God's truth and have come to Augsburg with much trouble and great danger, where the most reverend Lord Thomas, Cardinal St. Sixti 2c. has also accepted me quite kindly. The latter, having set aside my protestation and offer of inheritance, by virtue of which I offered to answer either publicly or privately, before a notary and witnesses, and also before four eminent men, the imperial majesty's councillors, added that I had submitted myself and my speeches (or teachings) to the holy apostolic see and the judgment of the four noble universities.

1) In the original institutio instead of instructiv. - It is read the 72nd document.

2) The "Dialogue," St. Louis edition, vol. XVIII, 310.

I was not willing to submit myself to the laws of Basel, Freiburg, Leuven and the mother of all universities, the famous University of Paris, and only insisted that should recant without fail, that he would not show me my errors, nor would he present me with reasons and testimonies by which the error could be recognized by me, No doubt out of too great partiality against his brothers, and assuming the form of an unjust judge, he finally, if I did not recant, regardless of all my pleading and desire that I wanted to learn, and my requests for instruction, threatened me harshly and cruelly according to the contents of an apostolic breve, and ordered me not to come before his eyes again.

[illegible]

Tyranny and fullness of power only urge the revocation of an opinion which I believe to be true in conscience, and want to tempt me to deny Christ's faith and the right understanding of the revealed Scriptures (as much as my conscience can grasp it): since the power of the pope is not against or over, but for and under the majesty of Scripture and truth, and the pope has not received authority to destroy the sheep, to throw them into the jaws of wolves, and to deliver them into error, and to the teachers of error, but to call them back to the truth (as befits a shepherd and bishop, Christ's governor): and I therefore feel hurt and burdened, seeing that by such violence it will come to pass that no one will dare to confess even Christ Himself or to teach the Holy Scriptures in his own church, and that I will thus also be driven by force from the true, sound Christian faith and understanding to vain and lying opinions of men, and be plunged into seductive fables of the Christian people:

11. Therefore, I hereby appeal from the said our most holy Lord Leo, who is not well reported, and the above-mentioned alleged rulers and judges, and their summons and proceedings, and all therefrom made, or still to be made, and every part thereof, and from all banishment, suspension, and the judgments of the interdict, ecclesiastical penalties, fines, and all other proclamations and declarations (as they claim) of heresy and apostasy which they or any of their number have in any way undertaken or intended, fines, and all other proclamations and declarations (as they pretend) of heresy and apostasy which they or any of their number have in any way undertaken, done, or intended to undertake, do, and intend to undertake, do, and intend to do, and of their nullity (without prejudice to their other honor and respect), as unjust, unreasonable, wholly tyrannical and violent things; as also of all future grievance that may come to me therefore, both for myself, and for all and every one that shall cleave or cleave to me, to a future concilium, which shall be lawfully, and to a safe place, where I, or my attorney whom I shall desire to send, may and may safely come tendered; and to whom or to whom I shall otherwise by right, use, liberty, or otherwise

I appeal and may appeal, and appeal and appeal in these writings, and ask for the first, second and third time, imploringly, imploringly, most imploringly, that the writ of referral to the higher court (or writ of appeal, apostle) be given to me, if there were anyone who would and could give it to me; and especially from you, the Lord Notary, letters of testimony. And testify that I want to pursue this appeal of mine on the grounds of nullity, abuse, injustice or inequity, or otherwise, as best I can, with reservation to add to or subtract from it, to change and improve it, and to make myself partaker of all other legal good that is competent to me or to those who now hold to me and want to hold to me in the future.

12) Since he has now entered (or laid down) this note before me and the witnesses set below, as reported above, he has testified and expressly protested that he could neither come himself nor through a lawyer to the one from whom he has appealed, both for fear of many who would pursue him and his life, and of the one from whom he has appealed, as well as because of the dangerous ways.

Therefore he has requested from me, the public notary, with due diligence, that such a certificate of appeal (apostvlos), as was due to him by law, be issued and given to him. To whom, therefore, at his request, I hereby have such apostles (or appeal slips) as are due to him, or letters of testimony, produced and issued by this public writing. About all and every of which he requested from me, your final signed notary, that one or more public or public instruments (deeds) be made and drawn up.

This was done at Wittenberg, Brandenburg district, in the year, indiction, day, month, and papal government, as above; under the government of the most glorious Maximilian, Roman Emperor, about 3 o'clock, in the Corpus Christi Chapel, situated in the parish churchyard there, in the presence of Christoph Behr, by holy apostolic and imperial authority Vicecomes in Costnitz, and of Hieronymus Papiß, clergyman of the district of Hof (Curiensis), as witnesses requested and called.

Luther's complaint about the printer who, contrary to his promise, issued the printed copies of this appeal under his own hand, in two letters to Wenceslaus Link and Georg Spalatin.

See Appendix, No. 24, § 2 and No. 25.

Luther's report to Spalatin that he had appealed.

See Appendix, No. 26.

Luther wrote to Link that, in his opinion, the matter had not yet begun, so much was lacking that the Roman greats could hope for the end.

See Annex, No. 24, § 1.

D. How the Elector accepted Luther's imperial trousers.

247: Prince Frederick of Saxony's letter to Degenhard Pfeffinger, his minister at the imperial court, to bring about a settlement of Luther's case.

Dat. 19 Nov. 1518.

This letter is found in the Wittenberg edition (1569), vol. IX, p. 58; in the Jena edition (1564), vol. I, p. 134; in the Altenburg edition, vol. I, p. 147; in the Leipzig edition, vol. XVII, p. 214 and in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 550.

Gott walts.

By the Grace of God Frederick, Duke of Saxony, Archmarshall and Prince of the Holy Roman Empire.

1) Dear faithful one, after you know in what way we have left the Cardinal, Doctor Martin Luther, at Augsburg by Papal Holiness Legate, 1) so that we should let him come to Augsburg to interrogate him; as the said Doctor is at Augsburg, 1) so that we should let him come to Augsburg to interrogate him; as the said Doctor is at Augsburg, 1) so that we should let him come to Augsburg to interrogate him; as the said Doctor is at Augsburg, 1) so that we should let him come to Augsburg to interrogate and appeared before the legate, as you know, to hear what he had erred in with his teaching and writings, with the offer of inheritance, when such was constantly made known to him, that he would gladly renounce it and consider himself a Christian man.

1) secreted - arranged.

2 But no further objection or request had been made against him, except to revoke his writings and teachings; that he, because what had been erred in them had not been published, had been complained of, and had therefore appealed. And the legate let himself be heard against the doctor: if he did not want to recant, he should no longer come to him. Thereupon the doctor departed and turned again to Wittenberg.

3 And recently a document was sent to us by the aforementioned legate, in which it is stated, among other things, that the Cardinal reminds, admonishes and asks us to respect our honor and conscience, and either to send D. Martin to Rome, or else to expel him from our lands, because he does not want to recognize his error and keep it with the entire Christian church.

We should also know that this deal would not last long, because they would deal with it in Rome; he wanted to have his hands washed. Which we do not provide, because Doctor Martinus, according to his inheritance, is unconquered in standing appeal.

(5) Since you know that we have sent you several times in this matter to the Imperial Majesty and Hansen Renner sent, and Renner let himself be heard against us, that imperial majesty would write to Rome, and thus see into the matter, so that it would be put to rest. Now we do not know what the Imperial Majesty has done in this matter, and therefore our request is to you, where you are or would be with the Imperial Majesty, to inform her Majesty of this with submission, and thereupon to ask her Majesty humbly to reinstate the matters, so that the matter may be settled and satisfied, or be interrogated by unsuspected persons in Germany.

6 In view of the fact that Doctor Martinus is afraid if he is constantly reported to be mistaken, he will gladly recant and remain obedient as a Christian man. But without this it is difficult for him to make a retraction, as you and every impartial person must undoubtedly respect.

7 You will also request Hans Renner, Zigler, and others, and remind them of the fact that Renner has been put off in this matter, and request them to help you once again to ensure that Your Imperial Majesty will show mercy in this matter.

(8) And what thou wilt accomplish and obtain therein, that wilt thou make known unto us most conveniently by thy writing, that we may be directed according thereto. In this you do us favor to recognize in grace. Date at Grimme, on Friday, St. Elisabethtag j49. November, 1518.

The fourth chapter

Of the negotiations about Luther's cause continued by the papal nuncio Carl von Miltitz under the direction of Cajetan, both at the electoral court and with Luther himself.

First Section.

Von Miltitzens Abfertigung am päpstlichen Hof, seiner Reise nach Deutschland und Ankunft in Sachsen.

A. How Miltitz announced to the Elector of Saxony, and also to Spalatin, the mission carried out to him by the Pope.

248 Carl von Miltitzen's letter from Rome to Spalatin, in which he reports that the Pope has appointed him nuncio and consecrated the Rose to be delivered to the Elector of Saxony.

Dat. Rom, 10 Sept. 1518.

This letter is found in Latin in Tentzel's historical report, vol. II, p. 53; in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 550 and in Seidemann, "Karl von Miltitz", p. 3. - The gaps are filled in by us.
Translated from Latin.

Hail, beloved brother! Today at 8 p.m. our most holy lord, Leo the Tenth, ordered me to hand over the golden rose to the highborn Prince Frederick, and at the same time ordered me to take the indulgence bulls with me and deliver them to his highborn glory. This I did not want to do to you, my so much beloved brother, that you alone deliver this to the most illustrious Lord, I would come and bring all this together, as well as an extensive breve made in the form of a confessional and other things. But before I leave Bologna, I will write more to you, my dearest and most faithful friend. I would also have written to the Highborn Prince, Lord and Benefactor, if there had been so much time. Now everything (to speak so) goes over hill and dale. If ... then I especially recommend myself and ask that you also recommend me to your most noble lord and others to my lords and fathers, namely to Bernhard Hirschfeld, Johann von Weißenbach and Johann von Dolzig, and to all other friends. In all haste the 10th of Sept. 1518. Your servant

Carl von Miltitz, papal chamberlain.

I apologize to others for not writing to them because I have not had time and could not wait longer.

Inscription.

To the venerable and dear man, Mr. Georg Spalatin, [his] extremely dear [friend].

B. What instructions, brevia and letters are given to Miltitz.

249 Papal Instruction or Commissoriale, given to von Miltitz for his journey to the court of the Electorate of Saxony concerning the rose to be presented. Dated Tuscanella, a small town in the diocese of Viterbo, October 15, 1518.

This document is found in Latin and German in Tentzel's Hist. Bericht, Vol. II, pp. 56 and 58, only in Latin in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, Vol. II, p. 554.

After Spalatin's translation.

Leo Babst the Zcehend.

To our beloved son Karl von Miltitz, our honorable chamberlain, nuncio and commissioner. Beloved son. The Blessedness and the Bestowal. Because we in the Lord are particularly if you have modesty, faith and discretion. Accordingly, we have appointed you as our nuncio and commissary, or skilful and commanding officer, the Golden Roses, a gift which, according to ancient custom, the most noble of our princes is required to be given to a future prince, to the beloved son of the noble man Frederick Duke of Saxony, of the Holy Roman Empire. We have accepted him on account of his noble name and his virtue with such an honor and reward, together with several letters of indulgence, to be brought to the same prince in our name, out of the kindness and esteem of the holy muties of the Church. To be considered and set forth in the present letter. The Duke will be moved by these and many other special graces and honors with which the Holy See has endowed his house, to uphold the praise and glory of his nobility and of the Holy Church, and we will wait with reasonable assurance. Because his nobility will do this, he will do a thing that will be pleasing to his Christian mind, and through it, besides the highest Godliness and faith, he will earn the highest praise and honor from God and man, and for this reason he will show us gratitude and goodwill. However, we will publicly order you, in the name of holy obedience and by the penalties of the highest ban and of our grace, if you do otherwise, so that you will fall repudiatively, that you will be judged from above by the same Duke, on the advice, will, and expressed permission of our beloved son Thoman of the title of Tant Sixten Priest Cardinal of our and named Stul in Teutschen Landen Legaten, neither hand over nor answer anything, in any way. nor subject yourself to it, considering all that is contrary to it. Given in Tuscany, under the fishermen's ring, on the nineteenth day of October, in the year five hundred and eighteen, of our Baptism the Sixth.

Jacobus Sadoletus.

Papal decree to the Elector of Saxony himself, in which Luther is most disgracefully scolded. Dated Oct. 24, 1518.

In Tentzel's Hist. report Latin, vol. II, p. 71, German p. 75; in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 556 only Latin. The date, which is faded in the original Latin, was given by Spalatin as Oct. 24.

After Spalatin's translation.

Beloved son. Noble man. The Bliss 2c. the most holy golden roses given with our hands, and on the fourth Sunday of the last Lent (quadragesime) gloriously wept, here most worthily given, and a thing of secret hidden meaning, and a notable adornment of the noble house of the Dukes of Saxony and your nobility in this year, we have so much liber decided by the beloved son Karl von Miltitz to send to our notaries and cameryrs also to your noble faithful subjects the clerics of Meissen diocese, that the same Karl, what we have to do in the most holy procession against the most cruel crime of the holy Christian name, and the sacrilege and excessive error of your brother Martinus Lotterst), wisely and adequately as we trust your nobility and schickl. know how to show it. Noble man and beloved son. We are always afraid of such a delicate and necessary move, and it makes us feel so much better from day to day that we have to worry about the Turk's most unpleasant gryms. And although we may think that he is in delay, yet he is still willing, as much as is possible, to harm the Christians, who, as we have learned, are of the opinion that he will attack the Christians as soon as he is able. Now your nobility is at peace because of the Christians' affairs by God's help, and so many kings and rulers have been amicably agreed upon, among whom you are powerful with arms and strength of mind and spirit, that this holy procession is begun by means of God's prompting, and that we, with your nobility and other Christian kings and rulers, and the holy Christian faith, intend to carry out such a procession, and how much we believe that your nobility, that our comfortable and diligent beger, because of which we have asked for five years, has learned and noted all the cryts in Christianity, not only from our legat, but also from other of our writings and messages, and that all our worries and thoughts are in this very kind and necessary work. Accordingly, we wish to write little of such a move, and to have it pointed out to us by our friend Karl mer. So that your nobility may realize that they can do nothing more righteous to their great and noble comforts, and nothing less to God, than that they, together with other Christian monarchs and princes, turn their comforts to it, and all their fortunes to dissemination.

most holy train. Since we intend and intend to spend this amicably, and to do so with all our creatures, Sathanas presents the son of loss or damnation, Martinus Lothar, 2) of the Order of Saint Augustine, who may preach to the Christian folk, before the words and opposites of your authority, against us and the holy Holy Trinity, which is not only reprehensible according to the most obvious heresy, but is also severely punishable, and since all this is completely hidden from us and your nobility, we do not want to report it any further. And even if we do not want to be punished because of our and your nobility's We do not wish to tolerate such a leniency, so that the gullible folk may easily be led to an evil opinion with the utmost anger. We also know and have no doubt that we will not tolerate such a lame and rude thing, so that the gullible followers of the Lord's evil opinion will be easily angered, so that lazy and rude things will not grow up in the Lord's healthy treasury, and so that the arts of this free Martin will cease, so that he will not plant the roots too deeply and hard, so that they will not be uprooted from the Lord's field, which we have followed, We also know and doubtless consider that it will not little weigh down your conscience, and tarnish your and your most noble ancestors' reputation and honor (who have always been the most powerful opponents of heresy), and shall be contrary and burdensome to your nobility. For this reason, we have ordered the same Charles, our deputy and chamberlain, to have a diligent investigation of this through our writings and letters and to do and take other measures against the aforementioned Martin; also against those who are in bondage to Martin, and who are of his evil opinion. This is further clarified and understood in our constitution and decree. We also remind you of your nobility in the Lord, and ask you cousinly to consider in high esteem your reason and a great and Christian prince's virtue, so that your nobility is adorned with such a good gift and filled with its good odor, to show to the same Charles the aforesaid favor and support, and what the same Charles will show to your nobility on our behalf I will believe no less than ourselves when they hear us speak presently. Then, in that your nobility will do a thing worthy of such a powerful prince of the highest praise, our blessed God, of which the matter is acted upon, and will show us and the named Stul the-

2) In Latin: Lotterst; likewise in the following documents of the same date.

1) Also in Latin: NÄrtini P'otterst.

half in their delicate and honest petitions and requests from day to day more and more gracious and mild. Date "ivitatis vetons Viterliisiois Dio6668i8 8Ub> aimulo xi8oatoris the XXIV. ovt. XV 0. XVIII. of our Pabstthumbs in the sixth.

251 Papal Breve to the Electoral Supreme Minister and Hereditary Marshal in Lower Bavaria, Mr. Degenhard Pfeffinger, concerning Miltitzen's action with the Elector of Saxony against Luther, dated October 24, 1518.

This writing is found in Latin in the Wittenberg (1550), tom. I, toi. 233; in the Jena (1579), toru. I, toi. 208d; and in the Erlanger, opp. var. arZ., tom. II, p. 446. German in the Altenburg, vol. I, p. 254; in the Wittenberg (1569), vol. IX, bl.61But because in all these editions the text is faulty and the date is wrong (Jan. 1, 1519), Cyprian had it printed from the original in his Urkunden vol. II, p. 82 (but also with a wrong date: XXIII ootobr.). From it Löscher, Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 559 has communicated it and corrected the date in a marginal note.

Translated from Latin.

Pope Leo X.

To our dear son, Degenhard Pfeffinger, our dearest son, the noble Lord, Duke Frederick of Saxony 2c., Rath.

Beloved Son, salvation and apostolic blessing!

(1) Out of what heartfelt opinion and fatherly love we have consecrated the most sacred golden rose, which the Roman Popes are accustomed to consecrate annually on the Sunday of Lent in Holy Lent, not without great secrecy, and to dedicate and send to one of the most excellent Christian kings or princes, but this year to the noble, our beloved son, Frederick, Duke of Saxony 2c., who, according to the custom of his noble ancestors, deserves well and may deserve even better for us and this holy apostolic see, your devotion will be understood more thoroughly by our beloved son, Carl von Miltitz, our nuncio and secret chamberlain, who is always at hand, besides other things that concern us and the above-mentioned see's dignity and authority.

(2) Moreover, because we know in what great grace and favor, and indeed justly, your devotion is with the said prince, and how great and highly he esteems your salutary, wise counsel, we admonish the same your devotion in the Lord, and fatherly desire that, out of dutiful devotion and reverence to us and to the said Holy See, to signify with diligence what great honor and delicious gift we have now deemed worthy of thoughtful Princes.

3. Your devotion also wanted to consider how horrible and frightening is the great foolishness and sacrilege that Satan's child, brother Martin Luther, practices by spreading a public heresy, known to everyone, in the holy church, so that the laudable name of such a powerful prince, as well as his ancestors' delicious good rumor, might be stained; as your devotion will hear from our reported nuncio, Carl, who also wanted to remind the said prince of this by salutary counsel and well imagine, so that our and the apostolic see's dignity and majesty would not be blasphemed, nor that prince's honor and good reputation would be stained. That also the sacrilegious foolishness of brother Martin may be resisted, and the error, which unfortunately is all too great, and which the common rabble so easily believes is sown, and which in time would take deep root, may be controlled, especially by your help and faithful counsel, and even eradicated.

4. in which your devotion will do a pleasing service to God, our Blessed One, whose cause it is, and a very pleasant work to us, who seek with the greatest diligence, as much as we can, nothing else than that such noxious weeds, thistles and thorns be eradicated from the Lord's field. For this your devotion in its Christian petition and desire shall find us and the above-mentioned See more gracious and kind. How then your devotion will be heard further and better by the aforementioned Carl,-of which we have been told enough.

Given in the old city of the Viterbian diocese, under the fishermen's ring, the 24th of October, 1518, of our papacy in the 6th year.

Evangelista.

252 Letter from the Papal Vice-Chancellor, Cardinal Julius de Medicis, who later became Pope under the name of Clement VII, to Mr. Degenhard Pfeffinger to assist the Papal Nuncio in his action against Luther with the Elector of Saxony. Dated Rome, October 11, 1518.

This writing is found in the Latin Wittenberg edition (1550), torn. I, toi. 233d; in the Jena (1579), toro. I, toi. 209 and in the Erlangen, opp. var. ars., tona. II, o. 447. German in the Wittenberg (1569), vol. IX, bl. 6ld; in the Jena (1564), vol. I, bl. 138; in the Altenburger, vol. I, p. 254 and in the Leipziger, vol. XVII, p. 218. In all of these somewhat deficient and with the wrong date: Jan. 5, 1519. A more accurate and better impression is in Cyprian) vol. II, p.84 and in Löscher, vol. II, p. 560.

To the strict, honorable Mr. Degenhard Pfeffinger, the most illustrious Lord, Duke Frederick of Saxony 2c, Councillor, our special friend.

1. Most honorable sir, dearest friend! Because the venerable gentleman, Carl von Miltitz, our most holy Lord Pabst Leo X's chamberlain 2c., is now traveling in Germany on some business of papal sanctity, we did not want to let him go to your feast of honor without our writing. For we know the esteem, grace and favor in which your Feast of Honor is held by the Most Serene and Serene Prince, on account of her virtues and sincere disposition, and how she has always had an inclined will to promote the cause of our Most Holy Lord and the Apostolic See.

2. request that your honorable feast also remain in this sense; and because the occasion now arises, that this holy apostolic see faithfully command the most illustrious prince the necessary things, and hold and persuade his lordship to follow in the footsteps of their noble ancestors, whom the enemies of the holy Roman church, where they had their residence, persecuted, and also for some time did not permit to dwell in their lands and cities. Our most holy lord, the pope, and the entire Roman court, certainly have the same friendship for the most illustrious prince.

For his noble nature, noble virtues and deeds give everyone good hope that he will hold his own.

Furthermore, we want to have ordered Mr. Carl your festival of honor most diligently, with a high request that it should help him and his things with the most illustrious prince, so that your festival of honor does our most holy lord and us a great favor. Which is well done.

Ex capite montis, ben 11 October 1518.

Your Julius, Vice Chancellor.

Date: I. Jan. 1519. German in Spalatin's translation in Cyprian, Vol. II, p. 86 with the correct date. In the margin, Löscher has also made the correction.

According to Spalatin's own translation.1)

Babst Leo der Zcehend entbeutt dem Georgio Spalatino seinen geliebten son, seines geliebten sons des Edeln manns Fridrichen, Hertzogen zu Sachßen, diener. His greetings and best wishes.

Out of what great joyful affection and veteran love, we bless and bless the Most Holy Golden Roses, which we present and send to the most distinguished Christian conyge or prince on the fourth Sunday in Lent, out of great mystery. We give this to our beloved son, the nobleman Frederick Duke of Saxony, as one who, like others of his most illustrious predecessors, has held himself in the best way against us and the Holy See. In order that he may also earn much more from us, he will have sent, paid for and delivered to us a few florins of roses. All this will be more fully known and heard by your attention from our beloved son, nuncio, skilful, noble chamberlain and servant Karin von Miltitz. Knowing then that you are in the grace of the same Prince, that he also esteems your noble and wise counsel, we therefore remember and acknowledge your consideration in the Lord, and request you to consider and observe, out of your noble consideration and reverence for us and the same Royal See, what great honor, what great treasure, we have esteemed the same Duke Fridrichen. You should also consider how horrible is the excessive joy of Martin Luther, the child of the devil, which also tastes of secret heresy, and how such a great prince's noble and rudimentary name and praise, as well as the praiseworthy rumor of his predecessors, may well be cleared. You shall advise the said our skilful hornet, and the same Duke, by your salutary counsel, of this. Thereby ours and the said Stul ere also his own of the duke's good reputation. In addition, the reverend Martini Jr's wealth and freedom will be punished, so that, unfortunately, such an old and grievous evil and error from among the common man, who believes it to be too easy and too dangerous, may be removed by your good promotion and advice. In this will your devotion, God of our heaven,

1) This letter is in all respects the same as the one mentioned above, No. 251 (to Pfeffinger); however, according to the older translation by Spalatin himself, it is here indented again (Walch).

253 Papal Breve to Spalatin of October 24, 1518.

This breve is found in Latin in the Wittenberg edition (<1550), tom. I, toi. 234; in the Erlanger, opp. var. arA, tom. II, p. 448; and in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 561. In all these editions with the false Whose business it is to do a pleasing wrck, to us also, who have no greater lead, to clear the dreps 1) and weeds from the Lord's field, to the highest gratitude. On the other hand, in your kind and Christian request, your prayer shall be more gracious to us and to the said school. As then your consideration of the said Charlemagne is to be further ordered. Given in the Alben Statue of the Bishopric of Viterbo under the Fisherman's Ring, on the xxiiiite day of October. Thousand five hundred and eighteen. Our bishopric in the sixth year.

254 Cardinal von Medici's letter to Spalatin against Luther, according to Spalatin's German Translation. Dated October 20, 1518.

This letter is found in Latin in the Wittenberg edition (1550), körn. I, toi. 234l>; in the Jena (1579), torn. I, toi. 2095; in the Erlanger, opp. var. urß., tom. II, p. 450 and in Löscher, ref.Acta, vol. III, p. 7. German in the Wittenberg (1569), vol. IX, p. 62; in the Jena (1564), vol. I, p. 138b; in the Altenburg, vol. I, p. 255 and in the Leipzig, vol. XVII, p. 219. In all these editions with the wrong date: I.Jan. 1519. With the correct date according to Spalatin's translation in Cyprian, vol. II, p. 89 and in Löscher, Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 562. In the Altenburger, vol. I, p. 265 in another translation with the date February 7, 1519 (Seidemann, Miltitz, p. 5).

Respectable Lord and special friend, because the great Lord Karl von Miltitz, our Most Holy Lord's secretary, has in some of his quests consented to the Most Serene Prince and Duke of Saxony. And we will gladly assist him with all possible favor and assistance. Accordingly, we have deemed it good to remind you, as those who are in the favor and esteem of high-born princes, not only to show the good and favorable will of Karl von Miltitz in his own endeavors, But also in some matters concerning the honour and sovereignty of our most Holy Lord and the Holy Roman Church, which he himself will best believe to give, and to advise the Reverend Prince on the matter of the Church. In this way, his sovereignty, like that of his predecessors, will have the church in good protection and protection, in which we will be especially pleased with the Most Holy Lord and ourselves. And we herewith entreat you to be well disposed towards us, Given at Cornet, on the XXth day of October XV C. XVIII Eur Julius Vice-Cantzler.

1) lollium - lollipop, dizzy oat.

255 Papal breve to the Naumburg canon, Donat Groß, October 24, 1518.

This breve, which is identical with the one to Pfeffinger (No. 251) and Spalatin (No. 253), is first printed in Latin and German after the original by the hand of Spalatin in Cyprian's "Nützliche Urkunden", Vol. II, p. 91 and afterwards in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, Vol. II, p. 563.

Beloved Son. The Blessedness and the Favourable Benediction. With what great affection and cousinly love we wish the most holy roses, which are used to be given and sent by the priests on the fourth Sunday in Lent, to the beloved son of the nobleman Frederick Duke of Saxony, as the one who, according to his most apparent predecessors. And that he may still show himself to be good to us, your consideration of our beloved son Karl von Miltitz, our skillful, holy chamberlain and servant, and several other opinions which have been painted for us and for the Holy See, will be heard more commonly. When we now know that you are in the good graces of the said Duke, and that your wise and noble counsel is greatly respected, we therefore remind you and urge you to show your consideration for the Duke, and cousinly request that you consider your gracious consideration and reverence for us and for the same see in the right way. You should also consider how great and terrible is the excessive joy of one of the devil's brothers, Martinus Lothar, who also tastes of the most obvious heresy and may spoil the noble name of such a great duke and his predecessors. And if you have heard the same from our nuncio or the learned ones, that Jhenig berurten Hertzogen raten, dadurch vnser selbst v demselben Stuls eren v und werden, auch vilgedachten Hertzogen ere wol geraten vnd geholfen, vnd genannter Martinus Freuel gedempfft vnd unterdrückt, and that this burdensome error, which is thus seen in the common faithful followers, is put down most of all by your advice and help, in which your faithfulness to God our Saviour, which is this matter, is an acceptable thing, and for us, which we have a greater vindication than to root out the weeds from the master's field, to act. However, your consideration against us and the said school in their

The author is to be found more gracious and more lenient in his kind requests. As then your attention of the same Karl von Miltitz the weyter report volckommentlicher versteen. Date of the old bishopric of Viterbo, under the fisherman's ring, on the fourth and twentieth day of October in the XV C. XVIII. and of our baptism in the sixth year. Evangelista.

To the beloved son Donat Grossen Tumhernn zu Naumburg.

256 Papal decree to the then captain and council of the city of Wittenberg against Luther, issued October 24, 1518.

This breve is in Cyprian's Urkunden, vol. II, p. 98, in Latin and German, in Löscher, vol. II, p. 564 only in Latin.

Beloved Son. The Blessedness and the Benediction. We have not received any complaint from our hearts, and have been informed by many scriptures and rumors of what has been considered and held to be Christian by you and in the faithful followers of the end and the opposite world in Germany, which has always been Christian. And to the Holy Spirit in the lowest and most humble manner, a son of the perditionis filius Martinus Lother, with the advice of the devil, to the most common feyndt vnser selickeit. He is not afraid to be publicly admitted, not only with preaching, but also with vilification, all because it not only smacks and tastes of the most well-known heresy, but is also subject to great and severe punishment, and is longer unacceptable to us and to you on account of your honesty and reverence toward us, and if we do not accept it, it may be too much and too deep in the too easy believing folk, because we then want to be that weed painted with ours, and with the help of your right and fair help and favor out of the good and fertile field of the Lord, to clear it out and to pay it back, we have out of special trust in the faithfulness and honesty of the beloved son of Carl von Miltitz. We have, out of special trust to the faithfulness and speech of the beloved son of Carl of Miltitz, given him, by other writ, some condemnation, which we, as is proper, and as such a wicked and convenient matter requires, intend to be soon and well executed and enforced. All of which we wish to report to you and to show you our cousin's affection for you.

Now we hope that this same Charles will make our prayers easier, wiser, and more useful, so that we can show him your help and goodwill. For this reason we remind and acknowledge your devotion in the Lord, and the painting of the entire Christian church of ourselves, and of all the faithful, kind mother, and of the Christian faith, to which you also confess our own, and to maintain the said church, we ask of the Lord most earnestly and civilly. We would like to consider carefully and faithfully how important it is, and what great reward it would give, if the joy and the damnable sin and the greatness of the reign of Martin were to arise, and to show Charles our Commissioner such convenient chance and support that he may carry out all his duties freely and without hindrance. Therefore, God our Savior accepts this matter. And to please us and the aforementioned Council, with your special praise. Given in the old city of Viterbo bishopric, under the fisherman's ring, on the fourth and twentieth day of October. One thousand. And in the eighteenth and sixth year of our birthright.

Evangelista.

The beloved sonen dem Hauptman vnd Ratßherr der vornemen Stat Wittenberg Brandenburger Bistumbs.

6) How Miltitz set out on his journey to Germany and what he did on the way.

Luther's report to Spalatin that Miltitz was certainly on his way, and that he was not unaware of how the pope wanted to present the prince with the golden rose, along with his thoughts about it.

See Appendix, No. 26, § 3 and No. 16, § 11.

258 Albert de Mironibu's letter to Spalatin, in which he implores him to report whether the long-awaited Herr Carl von Miltitz has finally arrived, and if so, where he has traveled on to and where he is now to be seen; if, however, he has not yet arrived, he is to be contacted.

If he has come, he would like to inform him of this as soon as possible. Dat. 22 Dec. 1518.

This letter is found in Latin in Cyprian's Useful Documents, vol. II, p- 44, after the original.

Translated from Latin.

Hail. Worthy, dear sir! Although Carl von Miltitz promised you in three letters, some of which I have read myself, that he would return from Rome, I have not heard the least about his arrival since I left you. Accordingly, I ask your love very much that you give me news with the bearer of this when he has arrived, and where he has gone from the Elector, and where he can now be found; but if he should not yet be back, which seems more likely to me, then I implore you to give me news of his arrival in writing immediately at my expense, where it can happen without causing you inconvenience. That will be very dear to me. For there are some who want to speak to him about an important matter for urgent reasons. Farewell and continue to love your friend Albert, and if there is any strange news, let me know. From my hostel Mittelfron. In the year after the redemption of Christ 1518, December 22.

Albertus de Mironibus.

Luther's report of how Miltitz, on his journey, had inquired everywhere in the inns what they thought of the Roman See and of Luther, and how they had consistently been more on this side than on the Pabst's; all from Miltitz's own mouth, as he faithfully told Luther himself afterwards.

This report can be read in Luther's preface to the first part of his Latin books, Walch, St. Louis Edition, Vol. XIV, 445.

260 Miltizen's letter to Spalatin, informing him that he had already arrived in Gern and would be with him tomorrow in Altenburg. Dated Gera, Dec. 26, 1518.

This letter was first printed in Cyprian's Urkunden, vol. II, p. 104, from it in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 566.

Translated into German.

Venerable, as a brother highly honored 2c. Our greeting before! Yesterday we arrived in the city of Gera with the respectable gentleman, Mr. Degenhard Pfeffinger, whom we had wished to meet in Bavaria, his fatherland. However, since I had firmly decided to follow the most reverend Lord, Cardinal St. Sixti, Legate de Latere, who was then in Austria with the Imperial Majesty, and heard that the said Lord Degenhard had gone to the most illustrious Prince's court camp, I did not want to pass by without meeting him before he arrived at the Prince. Therefore, I quickly decided to go to the most illustrious prince together with him.

But what the cause was, and for what reason I did it, you will hear from the aforementioned Mr. Degenhard in full, and tomorrow, God willing, you will also hear from me verbally. For I am only forced to forgive a little today, because I am somewhat indisposed. Herewith, I am at your Reverence's disposal, and I ask you to give a nice greeting, especially to Bernhard Hirsfeld, our brother. Farewell. From Gera, Dec. 26, 1518.

Your Reverence's humble servant Carl von Miltitz, apostolic nuncio.

To the excellent and venerable gentleman, Mr. Georg Spalatin, the most illustrious Duke Frederick of Saxony 2c. Geheimsecretär, his dear and as a brother highly venerable Lord.
Altenburg.

The second section of the fourth chapter.

Of the Elector of Saxony's timidity, and how Luther should have left Wittenberg, but should and will finally stay there again.

A. How the court gave Luther to understand that he would like to see him leave Wittenberg.

261 Bavaru's account of the hardships Luther, who had been abandoned by the whole world, had to face, since Prince Frederick not only did not like his return from Augsburg to Wittenberg, but also hinted to him that he would like to go elsewhere.

From the Bavarus Manuscript, tom. I, p. 213, in Cyprian's Urkunden, vol.

Translated from Latin.

When Luther came to Augsburg to Cajetan and did not want to recant, he was alone there, abandoned by all human help and protection, by the emperor, the pope, the legate, the cardinal, the duke of Saxony, Frederick, his prince, his order, even Staupitz, his most trusted friend. Prince Frederick did not like him to return from Augsburg, just as he had not advised him to travel there. As he was not a little dismayed by this abandonment, he consulted with himself where he wanted to go; there was no hope in Germany, nor was it safe to stay in France because of the Pope's threats. Thus, he was in the greatest distress at that time. He therefore went back to Saxony. When he traveled the first day from Augsburg to Mannheim, he had a hard trotting nag, only knee breeches, no knife nor weirs, no spurs, and yet he came so far as Wittenberg. When he arrived there, the noble courtier (curtisanus) Carl Miltitz was there, and he had 70 brevía from the pope to the princes and bishops that they should send Luther captured to Rome to the pope. Prince Frederick, because he was worried that the pope would demand that he take Luther prisoner, gave him to understand that he should go somewhere else where he could hide himself safely. 1)

Luther's report to Spalatin about how, if the papal ban were to arrive, he would certainly have decided to go to France, because the Elector himself wanted him to stay in another place and had therefore already had Spalatin negotiate with him at Lichtenberg.

See Appendix, No. 23, 8 3.

B. Per University of Wittenberg intercession for Luther.

The University of Wittenberg's petition for Luther to Prince Frederick of Saxony when Luther wanted to leave Wittenberg. Dated November 23, 1518.

This letter is found in Latin in the Wittenberg (1550), tow. I, col. 227; in the Jena (1579), tow. I, toi. 202 d; in the Erlanger, opp. vor. urk., tom. II, p. 426 and in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 503. German in the Wittenberger (1569), vol. IX, p. 57; in the Jenaer (1564), vol. I, p. 135; in the Altenburger, vol. I, p. 147 and in the Leipziger, vol. XVII, p. 215.

To the most illustrious Prince and Lord, Lord Frederick, Duke of Saxony, Archmarshall and Elector of the Holy Roman Empire, Landgrave of Thuringia and Margrave of Meissen, our most gracious Lord, grace and peace from our Lord Jesus Christ, with their humble submission.

1 Most Serene Prince and Most Gracious Lord! The worthy man, Brother Martinus Luther, Master of Liberal Arts and Holy Scripture, a noble and highly renowned member of our University, has informed us that the most reverend Lord Thomas Cajetan, of the Holy Roman Church with the title of St. Sixti PriestCardinal, Papal Holiness Legate, has written to E. C. F. G. advising him either to send the same Doctorem Martinum to Rome, or to expel him from their lands, on account of certain

1) The continuation of this report will follow in No. 269.

Positions or propositions, which he has disputed, and now recently presented to papal holiness, with attached instruction, as that he has offered himself for a public disputation, or secret answer, written down. He also requests that his errors be reported to him in writing with attached causes and sayings of the Holy Scriptures and Holy Fathers, by which he may be enlightened to see and recognize his errors.

(2) But he has not obtained any, but has been badly pressed to revise and revoke his doctrine and writings. He was not proven to be a faithful pastor or shepherd before, who is obliged to give an account to everyone who demands the reason for the hope that is in us, not only to those who want to be taught and instructed, 1 Petr. 3, 15, but it is also commanded to punish, reprimand, admonish 2c. those who do not want to be instructed, 2 Tim. 4, 2.

For this reason, the said D. Martinus has asked us, and obtained from us, to request him against E. C. F. G. that E. C. F. G. write to the Reverend Legate or Papal Holiness himself, write to the reverend legate or papal holiness himself, and graciously ask for him that he be informed in writing of the articles and points of his errors, and that next to them either original authority or sayings of the Holy Scriptures be included, from which he could recognize that he had erred and then recanted, but not before he was urged to condemn or recant the same sayings as wrongfully introduced, unless he had first been instructed with clearer sayings that he should and must recant them.

(4) For it is an ancient custom and usage of the holy Christian church, even pointing to the examples of the holy fathers, that those who have taught unrighteously are to be held to recant and condemn their error with sufficient causes shown and testimonies of Scripture, not with mere human commandments or force, as they have hitherto (as he complains) dealt with it.

Therefore, Most Serene Elector, although we may not have refused this pious man his very reasonable request, and give credence to his adverts, we are nevertheless pleased beyond measure that E. C. F. G. means the Holy Church and the Pope with all fidelity, and holds them in high esteem. This is what we say from the heart, and we do not want to speak or be of a different mind in the future. Yes, we also say further, as much as the said Doctor Martinus would be found to have erred in some article, so we will be the first to speak out. For we esteem nothing higher and greater 1) than the knowledge and judgment of the Holy Roman Church.

Accordingly, most gracious Lord, we ask in all subservience this alone now at this time, that E. C. F. G., so some comfort and upholder of this our university, which now by God's grace and E. C. F. G. is the only university of ours. C. F. G.'s gracious diligence, do not want to have any complaint about it, Papal Holiness, after humble submissive request: In their letter (as we know that they can do best without our remembrance) they do not forget to indicate Doctoris Martini's humble request, who deals with it and is worried that the purity of truth is opened and comes to light; but ask that the light may be shown to him by those who say that he walks in darkness.

He does not deny that he walks in darkness (because the Scripture says that all men are liars), Ps. 116, 11. Rom. 3, 4. But he desires that this very cheap grace and benefit, which befits all Christian men in the best way and is very well regarded, may be granted to him, that the light may be kindled for him, and that after displaying the testimonies of truth he may be led out of darkness and not cast into further darkness. Not because he, Doctor Martinus, doubts that the most holy pope Leo X will not do so, but because he is afraid of his enemies' treachery and presumptuousness, and that his detractors might, in the name of the holy church, refrain from that which the holy church, if it knew it, would most diligently abolish and avert.

May the Lord Jesus keep us and his whole church blessed and healthy for a long time, amen. Date Wittenberg, on the third and twentieth day 2) of November, Anno 1518.

E. C. F. G.

understated

Rector, Magistri and Doctores of the University of Wittenberg.

1) In the old German editions: "nichts höhers noch grössers"; in Latin: nilūl suthuius.

2) In all German editions the date uniio Laleind. Okeklukr. is wrongly resolved by November 22. So also in De Wette, Vol. I, p. 188 in the introduction to our letter.

C. How Luther made arrangements to leave so as not to cause the Elector any displeasure on his account.

Luther's repeated request to the court through Spalatin, whether the Elector could not effect a commission in Germany on his behalf with the Pope, so that his cause would be settled before fair judges, because he nevertheless did not want to leave the dear university, which was very dear to him.

See Appendix, No. 18, § 3.

Luther's declaration to Spalatin that he was quite ready to leave Wittenberg, along with notification that he wanted to leave behind a letter of farewell. Dated Nov. 25, 1518.

See Appendix, No. 22, ? 2.

Luther's thoughts, which he freely revealed to Spalatin, that he did not require the protection of secular princes and prelates.

See Appendix, No. 27, U 1-3.

Another such frank declaration by Luther.

See Appendix, No. 28.

268 Another quite exceptional testimony that Luther did not want the Word of God to be protected by men and princes, and that is why he first intended to dedicate his book of good works to Duke John, in order to avoid all appearance as if he had sought the grace and help of princes in his cause.

See Appendix, No. 29, § 2.

D. How the Host finally instructed Luther to stay in Wittenberg.

269 Bavaru's report on how Luther had made serious arrangements for his departure, and also held a banquet with some good friends.

during which first a repeated order arrived from the court to leave, but immediately afterwards a counter-order that he should stay.

This document is the continuation of No. 231, in Cyprian 1. e. p. 385.

Translated from Latin.

Luther was forced to obey his prince, therefore he arranged a meal with his brothers to take leave of them, but did not know where he should go. During the meal, letters arrived from Spalatin in which he reported that the prince was surprised that he had not yet left, and that he should therefore speed up his journey. He was immensely saddened by this news and thought that he had been abandoned by everyone. But he regained his courage and burst into the words: Father and mother are leaving me, but the Lord is taking me away. Soon after this, other letters arrived while he was still sitting over the table, in which Spalatin indicated that if he had not yet left, he should stay; Miltitz had spoken with the prince and declared that the matter could be settled by a discussion or disputation. 1) As soon as the prince heard this soothing statement, he kept the doctor, who remained in Wittenberg until this day, August 12 of the 1536th year.

Luther's letter to Spalatin, in which he reports that he would have already left Wittenberg if his letter had not been received shortly before, and assures him that he is ready to leave even now, if his staying should make the Elector displeased.

Dat. 2 December 1518.

This letter, the original of which is in the Anhaltische Gesamtarchiv, is printed in Aurifaber, Vol. I, p. 105; in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, Vol. II, p. 638; in De Wette, Vol. I, p. 189 and in Erlanger Briefwechsel, Vol. I, p. 308. Only in the latter edition is the postscript found after the original; likewise in Burkhardt, p. 15. We have added it here.

. Newly translated from the Latin.

1) What is said here with regard to Miltitz is not connected with the letter reported in the next number, because this is dated December 2, while Miltitz arrived in Gera only on December 25 and probably in Altenburg on December 27. Therefore, the Elector will not have come to the decision not to let Luther go only because of Miltitz's declaration. Compare Seidemann "Miltitz", p. 7, Erlanger Briefwechsel, Vol. I, p. 309, Note 1,

To the very good man, the highly learned Magister
 Georg Spalatin, his dearest [friend] in Christ.
 Jesus.

Hail! If your letter had not come yesterday, I would have already arranged my departure, dear Spalatin, but even now I am ready for both. The concern of our people about me is extraordinary, and greater than I myself can suffer. Some have insisted and strongly urged that I should hand myself over to our prince for capture, and that he should take me and keep me somewhere, and write to the lord legate that I should be captured and kept in a safe place to answer for myself. Whether this advice is good, I leave to your discernment; I am in the hands of God and my friends.

It is certain that one believes that the prince holds it with me just like the university, which was recently talked about by one of whom I know that he certainly does not tell me lies. At the court of the bishop of Brandenburg, people were talking about me: on what confidence and on whose adherence I would trust. Here one said: Erasmus, Fabricius 1) and other very learned men are his confidence. No, said the bishop, these would be nothing against the pope; the University of Wittenberg and the Duke of Saxony, they are more valid. Thus I see quite clearly that one believes that the prince holds it with me, which displeases me very much. Of course, I would like the university to fear the same in the highest way. But this suspicion against the prince will compel me to leave, if it is necessary to leave; but the prince can counter this in his writings, saying that he is a layman and cannot judge in such great matters; now all the less, since he sees that the university, which is recognized as good by the church, does not stand against me. 2) But these are secondary matters. If I stay here, I will lack a lot of freedom in speaking and writing; if I leave, I will

1) Wolfgang Fabricius Capito. At that time, however, he was not yet a councilor and court preacher of the archbishop at Mainz, as De Wette, Vol. I, p. 189, Note, states, but still in Basel. Capito left for Mainz only on April 28, 1520 (Erl. Briefw. I, 309).

2) See Document No. 263 of Nov. 22, 1518.

I will pour out everything and offer my life to Christ. Farewell. Wittenberg, Dec. 2, 1518, Brother Martin Luther.

The Prepositus 3) at Kemberg has died, and his nephew has requested that I work on his behalf with the most noble prince so that he would be recommended to the university for appointment. For he is a good man. Furthermore, the surviving sister of the Prepositus has contributed much to the welfare 4) of this provosty. Because I do not like to bother the prince, let me, I beg of you, be relieved of this intercession, 5) so that I can answer that I have interceded, because you are also able to do more than I am. Farewell.

271 Luther's explanation in a letter to Spalatin as to how far the talk among the people was true, that in public preaching he had already

I said goodbye to the people.

See Appendix, No. 26.

Fragment of a letter from Wolfgang Fabricius Capito to Luther of 18 Feb. 1519, in which he reports to him that there are many powerful friends in Switzerland and on the Rhine who are favorable to him and who had already made arrangements for his safe residence and support when they heard that he was in danger; however, after he had seen a copy of a letter from the Elector of Saxony to Cardinal Cajetan, he realized that he no longer needed outside help.

This writing is found in the extract from a manuscript, datirt Lusileue. XII. Xuk Äurtii in Scultetus uuuul 6VNUA6l. rouov., p. 45, as in von der Hardt, kist. Uten rek. 1717, Theil V, p. 30. also in Tentzel, Hist. Bericht, vol. I, p. 219 "very erroneous). Complete in Arnold's Kirchen- und Ketzer-Historien, vol. I, 1037 k and in Erlanger Briefwechsel, vol. I, p. 424. According to the latter, we have retranslated and supplemented the excerpt in Walch.

Newly translated from the Latin.

3) According to Lingke, Reisegeschichte Luthers, p. 57, the provost was called Ziegelheim von Spremberg. His nephew, however, did not become his successor, but Bartholomäus Bernhardi (Erl. Briefw. I, 310).

4) Burkhardt: prsekotum. Erlanger Briefwechsel: protootum.

5) Burkhardt: levar. Erlanger Briefwechsel: Isvarl.

Switzerland and the Rhineland all the way to the world's oceans have righteous friends for Luther, and very powerful ones at that, who are not entirely aloof from good studies. Since the Cardinal of Sion, 1) the Count of Geroldseck, 2) a certain learned and extraordinarily righteous bishop, 3) and not a few others of ours had recently heard that you were in danger, they promised not only sustenance, but also safe places where you could either be hidden or stay openly. Since the rumor said that you were in great distress and had to struggle with the greatest misery, there were people who sought to raise a very rich aid through me, and they would have raised it in any case. But this evening we received the golden message: Luther lives and will always live. Then we saw a copy of the letter of the most illustrious duke and true-

1) Matthäus Schinner (Erl. Briefw.).

2) Diebolt (Theobalt) von Geroldseck, a native of Swabia, administrator of the Einsiedeln monastery, a member of Zwingli's closest circle of friends; he later left the monastery and, like Zwingli, fell in the battle of Kappel (Erl. Briefw.).

3) The Bishop of Basel, Christoph von Uttenheim (Erl. Briefw.).

We can see from this that you do not need our little help at all. But if we are able to do something through our good will, we will assist you everywhere. 5) We have printed your Memoirs together, as you will recognize from Frobenius' gift, soon after the Frankfurt Fair. And at the same time, in a month and a half, we have spread them through Italy, France, Spain and England with good luck, for we are thereby advising the common cause, which, we believe, will be helped most if the truth is made known as widely as possible. For by nature the sweetness of truth attracts even the unwilling to love it. Forgive me for having reminded you the other day 6) of Erasmus' suggestion, that is, for having carried owls to Athens.

4) This is Document No. 241, the reply of the Elector to Cajetan of 8 Dec. 1518. The old edition of Walch has in the caption to our document: "an den Cardinal zu Sitten".

5) The following is missing in the old edition of Walch. - With the "Denkwürdigkeiten" (mōrūmenta) are meant especially the Źeta VriZustanu. Compare the 425th document.

6) September 4, 1518, Erl. Briefw. Vol. I, No. 92.

The third section of the fourth chapter.

Of Miltitzen's negotiations with Luther at Altenburg.

From -the personal Zummenkunst of Miltitzen and Luther at Altenburg.

Luther's report of the intimate conversations he had with Miltitz in Altenburg, and how Miltitz let himself

See Luther's preface to the first part of his Latin books, h., St. Louis Edition, Vol. XIV, 445.

Luther's report of this to Joh. Egranus, in which he says, among other things, that Miltitz honored him at audience with a Judas kiss, and also shed tears of joy under his admonitions.

See Appendix, No. 30, U 1-3.

275 Luther's report of this to D. Staupitz, in which he calls Miltitz's hypocritical tenderness Italitäten [Italian ruses].

See Appendix, No. 31, U 2. 3.

Luther's status causae, recently drafted for Carl von Miltitz in Spalatin's house, on the causes of the Reformation movements that have arisen. About 4 or 5 Jan. 1519.

This writing, which is to be set about January 4 or 5, 1519 zn, is found with a preceding historical introduction in Latin in the Wittenberg (1550), toir°. I, col. 234 k; in the Jena (1579), tom. I, col. 209 d and in the Erlanger, opp. var. nr^h., tom. II, p. 450. German in the Wittenberg (1569), vol. IX, p. 64 d; in the Jena (1564), vol. I, p. 141 d; in the Altenburg, vol. I, p. 258 and in the Leipzig, vol. XVII, p. 222. Without the introduction in Löscher, Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 9; in De Wette, Vol. VI, p. 9; in Erlanger Briefwechsel, Vol. I, p. 341 and in Walch. We have only prefixed the last words of the introduction, because they seem to us to be necessary for understanding.

As it was discussed what kind of answer should be given to Carl von Miltitz, the venerable Lord D. M. Luther repeated these five following articles (which before Carl von Miltitz had often referred to in his complaint at court) at Altenburg in Mr. Georg Spalatin's house.

The articles, however, are these:

The first: that the people would be deceived, that they would now have a wrong opinion of the mind of the indulgence.

The other: that D. Luther was a beginner to this seduction or error.

The third: that Johann Tetzel had given D. Luther cause for this.

The fourth: that the bishop of Magdeburg had been able and driven to this deal by Johann Tetzel for the sake of profit.

The fifth: that Johann Tetzel had done too much to him in this imposed trade.

To this I say 1) (Doctor Luther answered and said): no one would have been more guilty that such disunity and discord over indulgences arose than papal holiness itself. Therefore, it alone would be the cause of this great accusation of disobedience against the Roman Church. For the pope, as his office demands, should either have forbidden and resisted the bishop of Magdeburg from seeking so many bishoprics for himself, or indeed should have granted them to him free of charge (as he received them from the Lord).

But because the bishop's ambition was strengthened by the pope, and his greed for money was atoned for, since he had spent so many thousands of florins on the pallia, that is,

2) and in this way, he would have given his indulgence preachers the cause to shame Christ's people in the most disgraceful way (through the indulgence stuff). In addition, the pope would have remained silent and thus approved of the bishop's handling of indulgences, and thus made himself guilty of the third sin.

In this distress, however, the bishop was induced to look for such a journeyman as Johann Tetzel was, who had been engaged for many years in the trade of scraping and scraping together money and pulling off the skin and hair of the people, and who was therefore a skilled master, but otherwise not capable of anything else.

Finally, the same Johann Tetzel, in order to satisfy the bishop's hope and desire, and not to forget his own, foamed and purified the power of indulgences so purely, that is, so great and highly praised and exalted, that now and then all the world has an abhorrence of it.

At first I was impatient with the miserable seduction, great treasure and burden of the poor people; but much more with the Florentine avarice, which the Pope's good simple heart, wherever and wherever they wanted, talked, yes, drove into all kinds of misfortune and highest danger. For experience shows that their shameful avarice and addiction to money is less satisfying than hell. Since I was given the opportunity and great just cause to attack the Romanists' avarice, I did not want to let it pass, and let what was printed before, and will follow, go out against the indulgence.

277 Miltizen's concern, raised at the request of the Elector of Saxony, as to what might be helpful in Luther's affairs with the papal see to settle them amicably. In order to January 11, 1519.

1) De Wette and the Erl. Briefw. I. e.: "Darauf sagte ich und sprach" with the note: "Daraus (sagte ich) antworten D. Luther und sprach" in Löscher; but the words "antwortete D. Luther" seem to be explanatory addition by a later hand. - The Wittenberg and the Jena offer, "Darauf (sagen ich) antwortete" 2c. We have, as can be seen, changed the position of the brackets. - Seidemann and Enders overlooked the presence of our writing in the old editions, otherwise they could not have placed it among the letters. It is, as also the Latin, from the German very different, relation shows, the report, not Luther's, but of another about these negotiations.

From Cyprian's "Nützliche Urkunden", vol. II, p. 134 reprinted in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 843. The time determination is according to Seidemann, "Miltitz", p. 8.

2) In the old editions: marcken.

1. most illustrious, highborn prince, most gracious lord, because your prince graciously begs me to discover my opinion and good deeds to your lordship. Gn. to discover: What may be found useful in the matter of the Bebestlichen Stul and her Martin Lotter, I have done so at Your Curl's request. I will not fail to do so as a faithful servant and, for the sake of my salvation, I will tell your Curl. I will not fail to do so, and, for the sake of my soul, I will tell Your Grace all that may be found useful or fruitful in my case.

2. first, that Your Curl. Your Grace, that doctor Martinus Lotter humbles himself against the Roman Church and in this way he has been willing to use the Church and the Constitution, that the same does not contradict the Church, which we have concorded among us and which we have come to.

3 On the other hand, Your Curl. Gn. may consider that Martin should not preach by any other means than that he should preach for eternity.

4 Thirdly, I believe, most honorable sir, that the matter is quite useful and appropriate, that doctor Martinus is here with your Curl. Gn., I hope to be able to work together with your Curl. Grace. I want to obtain something from him that the church will suffer, but by inscription to Your Grace. Gn. and Jme, and we would also like to agree that Mr. Martinus would be unsuitable to hear the matter before a friendly judge.

5. fourthly, your Curl. Your Grace, consider whether Martinus dared to protect the Holy Roman Churches with his appendages, because during the reign of Pope Julio, the Holy Cardinal, the Roman Emperor, King of France, England, Scotland, Burgundy, and the whole of Atalia, was opposed to the Pope. King of France, England, Scotland, Burgundy and the whole of Atalia, have been against the Babst, and have begun a concilium 2c.: which the Babst has unseen privatized these same Cardinals and their statues, which he has forfeited, so that the holy church has always triumphed and prevailed.

6) Fifthly, Mr. Martinus may not say that he is not allowed to be a lawyer, or to give other instructions of indulgence, or to indicate that he does not want to be heard 2c., if he has urged the Holy See of Rome to do so, by its letter, that a new decree has been made, which has not been done in four years, 2c., which explains in its entirety what decree or bull I have here presented to your Curl. Gn. Copia with 2c. 1)

7 Now may Ew. Curfl. Gn. gnedigister Lord

Consider the above and from it devise another means by which I may at all times show myself to be a faithful and humble servant of Your Grace. Gn. and in truth do nothing that may be detrimental to the matter, so that I may humbly thank Your Curl. I humbly submit to your grace.

278: Spalatin's counter-reflection, also on the prince's orders. Around January 11, 1519.

This document is found in Chprian's "Nützliche Urkunden", Vol. II, p. 137 and in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, Vol. III, p. 845. The time determination is according to Seidemann, "Miltitz", p. 8.

Most Gracious Lord!

1. if one is to do something with Doctor Martinus, one must first of all know from the Miltitz what and how much he should object to the Babst between them, and signify the same objection with expressed words. Considering that perhaps the Miltitz may refuse to demand a more serious objection than the legate has done.

When the legate, according to Doctor Martinus, has not contested the whole matter of the indulgence, then this one article, that the merit of Christ our dear Lord and Savior shall be the indulgence.

3 Because the New Decree of great merit now makes such a report that it is not at all contrary to Doctor Martinus' opinion, it will be necessary to bring a form of objection from Miltitz, and to consider it more carefully.

4) It is also clear that if Doctor Martinus were to occupy Miltitz 2), the legate or other Doctor Martinus would also take another route and contest it, because many changes and prints had been made in the matter according to Miltitz's decision, which could also have changed the opinion of the Babst and legate.

5 If it were necessary, then it would be freely given to Doctor Martinus, that according to his request the matter would be heard and recognized by the four universities Freyburg in Preysckaw, Löven in Nyderland, Basel vnd Paryß. Or, however, that the official authorities have ordered some of the best Westerners, Frenchmen and Germans to a safe place to hear and consider this matter.

1) This is Document No. 234.

2) to satisfy == to saturate, to satisfy.

6) If Doctor Martinus is to make a contradiction according to the first consideration, he must know on which article and which measure.

7. das ander bedenken Miltitz trytt zw weytt. quia verbum Dei non est alligatum. Ita dicit Sanctus Paulus [For God's word is not bound. So says St. Paul (2 Tim. 2, 9.)]f.

8 I cannot estimate what the freemason judge might do on his own according to the third consideration.

9 The fourth prayer is painted as a warning against the Babst. Sic non fecit Sanctus Petrus: neque ceteri Sancti pontifices: qui populum Dei viam veritatis humiliter et fideliter docuerunt [So did not St. Peter, nor the other holy popes, who taught the people of God the way of truth humbly and faithfully].

10 On the fifth consideration, Doctor Martinus would soon see what he should and might do or not do on account of the Nawen Decretal cristlich.

For this, compare Luther's letter to the Elector, No. 536, which belongs here.

B. What Luther promised Miltitzen in this conversation, and how he also fulfilled it, also suggested certain arbiters from Mittihen's request.

Luther's written report to the Elector Frederick of Saxony, who was staying at Lochau at the time, about what he had declared against Miltitzen that he was willing to do. About Jan. 5 or 6, 1519.

The original of this letter is in Oock. 60tū.

379, k. 2. Printed in Chprian's Urkunden, vol. I, p. 386; in the Supplement of the Leipzig edition, p. 27; in Löschner's Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 11; in De Wette, vol. I, p. 207 and in the Erlangen edition, vol. 53, p. 5. Cyprian had it printed after the original, as De Wette says. We reproduce its text with the corrections given according to the Erlanger Briefwechsel, vol. I, p. 343. Pa's letter should be dated around Jan. 5 or 6, 1519.

JEsus!

1st Illuminator High Porter Prince, Gnedigister Sir. It is too much for me that E. F. G. ßo weyt ynn meyne suche vnnd mühe gezogen

1) The "reservations" are to be understood as the five points listed in the previous paper (No. 277) 8 2 ff.

But because of the need and God's will, I ask the Lord for his mercy.

2 Yesterday, Mr. Carolus von Miltitz highly criticized the dishonor and injustice inflicted by me on the Roman Church, and I humbly offered to do what I could to acknowledge it. Now I ask E. F. G. to decide on my concerns, which I would like to make known here to E. F. G., then I would like to do something for you.

3) First of all, I promise to keep quiet about this matter, and to let the matter itself 3) bleed to death (as far as the opposing party is also silent), if I consider it so, they will let my letter go free, it will be all sworn and sung out for the time being, and one or two of them will get tired of the song. Also, if this remedy is not followed, and is further challenged, with force, or 4) words, then the thing will first come out right, and the insult will turn into a serious one, when I still have my word in full. Therefore I consider it best to stand still in the matter.

4) On the other hand, I would like to declare my loyalty to the priesthood, 5) and submit myself humbly, confessing how I have been too hot and too sharp, but not avoiding to be too close to the H. Ro. I do not avoid being too close to the Holy Roman Church, but rather denounce the reason that I, as a faithful child of the church, have fought back against the lesterly preaching, which has led to great ridicule, slander, and anger of the people against the Roman Church.

5) Thirdly, I wanted to send out a cedel 6) to order everyone (them!) to follow the Roman Churches, to be obedient and ruthless, and not to disgrace my writings, but to the benefit of the Holy Roman Churches. I also confess that I have brought the matter to light in an excessively heated and perhaps untimely manner. Then, if the cause had not been so great, I had done enough, and still had a

2) beschlahen (beschlagen) - to consider, consider, consider (Dietz).

3) "let" is added from Cyprian.

4) In the original: adder.

5) This promised letter is the Letter to Leo X, Document No. 283.

6) This "note" is Document No. 281.

The first is that the right of the person to be informed in writing of the matter is a right of the person to be informed of the matter in writing.

6) Fourthly, Magister Spalatinus proposed through Mr. Fabian of Feylitz that the matter was ordered by the High Archiepiscopate of Saltzburg, whose judgment, as decided with learned, unrighteous people, I should hold, or 1) to my appeal, Aries would not be held. Thus, the matter may become urgent and pass away in its own right. But I am afraid that the bishop will not let a judge, so I will not let the bishop's judge either: therefore, if the first decision does not go well, the result will be that the bishop will make the text, and I will castigate him. That would not be good. I have also spoken with Mr. Carol, who says it would not be enough, and yet not the recantation soderet, sinners on the consideration of another went. Weyß E. F. G. if I want to do something more, for the sake of God E. F. G. will do me the favor. I will gladly do everything, everything, so that I am not caused to do anything more. For nothing will come of the revocation.

E. K. F. G.

lord capellan
Doctor Martinus.

Luther's short report to Elector Frederick of Saxony on how he had united with Carl von Miltitz on two articles. About Jan. 6 or 7, 1519.

This letter is found in the Wittenberg edition (1569), vol. IX, p. 65; in the Jena edition (1564), vol. I, p. 143; in the Altenburg edition, vol. I, p. 259; in the Leipzig edition, vol. XVII, p. 224; in the Erlangen edition, vol. 53, p. 7; in De Wette, vol. I, p. 209 and in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 13.

Most Serene, Highborn Prince, Most Gracious Lord.

I do E. C. F. G. humbly to know how He Carol von Miltitz and I finally agree, have decided the trade on two articles.

First, that a common inhibition be imposed on both parties, and that both parties be forbidden to preach, write, and act further on the matter.

Secondly, he wants Carol to write recently to the Holy Father Pope of all things, as he invented, opportunity, and then see that papal holiness orders out, for example, a learned bishop, to learn the matter, and indicate articles that are erroneous and should be revoked by me. And then, if I am taught the error, I shall and will gladly recant it, and not weaken the honor and authority of the Holy Roman Church.

281: Luther's instruction on several articles imposed on him by his patrons. Published at the instigation of Carl von Miltitz, probably at the end of February 1519.

This writing is the "note" promised by Luther in No. 279. It probably appeared at the end of February 1519. In the Weimar edition, no less than 16 individual editions are listed, which belong to the years 1519 to 1524. The editio xrineeps was published by Johann Grüenberg in Wittenberg in 1519 and again in 1520. The title reads: "Doctor Martinus Luther Augustiners Vnterricht aufs etlich artickell die im von sehnen abgunnern auff gelegt vnd zu gemessen Vuerden. 1519." 4 quarto leaves. All other printings are reprints, as, by Melchior Lotther in Leipzig, by Wolfgang Stöcke! in Leipzig, by Silvan Otmar in Augsburg, by Adam Petri in Basel, by Martin Flach in Strasbourg, by Jörg Nadler in Augsburg, by Hans Froschauer in Augsburg 2c. In the collective editions: in the Wittenberg (1554), vol. VII, p. 7; in the Jena (1564), vol. I, p. 165; in the Altenburg, vol. I, p. 293; in the Leipzig, vol. XVII, p. 224; in the Erlangen, first edition, vol. 24, p. 3; second edition, Also in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 84 and in "Mancherlei Büchlin und Tractetlin" 1520. We give the text according to the Weimar edition, but, as with Walch, in modernized language.

To all who see, hear, and read this letter, I, Martinus Luther, Augustinian at Wittenberg, offer my humble service and poor prayer.

It has come to my attention that some people have falsely imagined my writing, especially that which I have dealt with the "scholars" according to its sharpness, to the "simple-minded" people, and have made me suspect in some articles, that even some, otherwise dilapidated in the faith, caused by such imagination, speak shamefully of of the dear holy intercession, of purgatory, of good works, fasting, praying, 2c., of the Roman church power, as if all this should be nothing. Therefore, I must, as much as possible, counter the same harmful tongues and explain myself. Please, any devout Christian would hear me rightly, and not believe my uninvited interpreters more than myself.

1. from the dear holy intercession

I say and stand firm with all Christianity that one should honor and call upon the dear saints. For who can deny that even today God is visibly working miracles in the bodies and graves of the dear saints through the names of His saints?

But this is true, and I have said it, that it is not Christian not to seek spiritual needs more or more diligently than bodily needs from the dear saints.

Where can one find a saint who is called upon for patience, faith, love, chastity, and other spiritual goods, as St. Anne for wealth, St. Lawrence for fire, the one for a bad leg, the one for this, the other for that? Not that everything is to be rejected, but that a Christian man should respect the spiritual more than the goods he sees, even common to animals and pagans.

(4) Some are so foolish about this that they think that the saints have a power or authority to do such things, when they are only intercessors, and everything is done by God alone. Therefore, one should call upon them and honor them in such a way that one calls upon and honors God through them, as Psalm 132:1: Memento Domino David, "Remember, God, David, and all his meekness." Moses also praises Abraham, Isaac and Jacob before God, and the Christian Church teaches the same in its prayers.

1. from the purgatory

one should firmly believe, and I know that it is true that the poor souls suffer unspeakable pain, and one is obliged to help them with prayers, fasting, almsgiving, and whatever one can. But what is the nature of the torment, and whether it serves only for satisfaction or also for recovery?

I do not know, and I still say that no one knows it well enough. Therefore, one should command God, and not gape and cry out as if one were sure of it. We are not commanded to do more than help them. God alone wants to know how he will deal with them.

2 Also that one wants to rush into purgatory with indulgences, and thus fall by force into God's secret judgment, I have no knowledge, and do not yet know how to obtain or prove. Believe it, whoever wants to, I do not want to believe it, unless it is proven wrong. Thus, whether God wills it, I have not denied purgatory.

1. from the indulgence

It is enough for a common man to know that the indulgence is a discharge of the atonement for sin; but that it is much less; for good works are commanded, and we are bound to do them.

2 Indulgences are free and arbitrary; no one sins who does not redeem them, and no one deserves them. Therefore, if someone does not give to a poor person, or does not help his neighbor, and yet thinks to redeem indulgences, he does nothing but mock God and himself. He does not do what God has commanded, and does what no one has commanded him. What more is to be known about indulgences, one should leave to the scholars in the schools, and be satisfied with this understanding.

From the commandments of the holy church.

1. the commandment of God is to be esteemed above the commandment of the church, as gold and precious stones are above wood and straw, as the apostle says in 1 Cor. 3:12, 13, and never despise any of them. Therefore, if you see anyone swearing, cursing, back-talking, or not helping his neighbor, remember and know that he is much worse than he who eats meat on Friday or breaks the commanded fasts. In this way, I have undoubtedly not opposed good works, but have preferred the right good works to the little ones.

(2) Thus I have said that a great perversion is now in the world, that one completely despises God's commandment, covering himself with human rights and works, and now fears the pope and his words far more.

for God and God's word. And when I say this, they say, I resist the pope and spiritual law; 1) but do not want to hear that they brazenly resist God Himself and His law.

3) If one sees an adulterer, robber, liar, it is nothing special, if he can wear a delicious paternoster, keep an idiosyncratic fast, or honors a special saint. But if someone eats meat on Friday, or does not celebrate Saint's Day, or does not keep a church commandment, he must be worse than a pagan, if he could raise the dead. Thus the commandments and works of men shine beautifully; God's commandment and God's work are seen through a dark mist.

(4) Therefore I still say: Mall should keep both commandments, but distinguish them with great diligence. For even if there were no commandment of the church, one could still be pious by God's commandment; but if God's commandment remains, then the commandment of the church is nothing other than a harmful sound cover, and makes a good appearance on the outside, since there is nothing good on the inside. For this reason it is my advice that the commandment of the church be laid down in part in a council, so that God's commandment may also shine and shine for once; for with the lights of many commandments the eyes of the day of divine commandment have been very nearly illuminated. 3)

1. from the good works

I have said, and still say, that no one can be pious and do good unless God's grace makes him pious first; and by works no one becomes pious, but good works are done only by the one who is pious. Just as the fruit does not make the tree, but the tree brings forth the fruit. And as Christ says [Matt. 7:18.], "An evil tree never bringeth forth good fruit." Therefore all works, however good they are, however beautiful that they shine, if they do not flow from grace, they are in vain. Not entirely in vain; for the good works that are done apart from the grace of God, God rewards temporally with riches, Honor, strength, violence, joy, friendship, art, understanding 2c., but they do not attain eternal life.

(2) I have preached all this against those who, looking only at the outward appearance of works, call good that which is often evil in the sight of God, for God judges according to the heart, not according to the appearance of works. This is what is said: God wants us to despair of ourselves and of all our life and works, so that we may realize that we cannot stand before His eyes with all our best works, but only rely on His causeless grace and mercy, and thus walk in fear and let go of our confidence in our good life.

(3) Behold, the works and the life that are done out of such a fearful, humble heart are good, and not those that seem good by heart, how great, much, whimsical they are, done without such reason and opinion. This is what the saying of the Psalter [Ps. 147, 11.], Beneplacitum est Domino etc., wants, "God is heartily pleased with those who fear Him, and yet rely on His mercy." But then one fears, when one realizes that we may not stand before His judgment, and therefore flee from judgment to the throne of mercy, speaking with David [Ps. 143,2.]: "O Lord God, do not act with judgment against Your servant; for no living man may be found right in Your sight."

4 Again, God is displeased with those who know they are safe and insist on their good works. Behold, I have rejected these free, sure, trustworthy good works, so that I may teach (as Scripture does) that the fear of God is the chief good and the whole being of a wise, pious man, and that all wisdom and good works are righteous when one fears God in them and desires His grace. This is called principium sapientiae timor Domini, the fear of God is the head and whole faculty of all wisdom and piety [Ps. III, 10. Sir. 1,16.]. Now notice whether I have forbidden good works or not. For the fear of God is a grace of God, and no one has it before Himself; therefore all good works are evil works where grace and fear are not.

1) In the original: Just.

2) In the original: heyligen tag.

3) In the original: auß gelaucht.

From the Roman Church.

There is no doubt that the Roman Church is honored by God above all others, for there St. Peter and Paul, 46 popes, and many hundreds of thousands of martyrs have shed their blood, conquered hell and the world, so that one may well grasp how special a moment God has on the same church. Whether, unfortunately, the situation in Rome is such that it is better, 1) there is no reason so great, nor can there be, that one should tear oneself away or separate from the same church; indeed, the worse it is, the more one should join and adhere to it, for it does not become better by tearing it away or despising it. Nor should one leave God for the devil's sake, nor avoid the rest of the pious for the sake of the evil crowd. Yes, for the sake of no sin or evil that mail may think of or name, divide love and divide spiritual unity. For love is able to do all things, and nothing is too hard for unity; it is hasty bad love and unity that lets itself be divided by strange sin. 2)

(2) But what the power and authority of the Roman See can do, and how far it is stretched, let the scholars argue. For the salvation of souls is not at all concerned, and Christ has not set and founded his church on outward, apparent power and authority, or on some temporal things left to the world and worldly things, but on inward love, humility, and unity. Therefore, let authority be what it is, great or small, all or part of it, it should please us and we should be satisfied as God distributes it; just as we should be satisfied as He distributes other temporal goods, honor, wealth, favor, art 2c. But we must be careful of unity, and not resist papal commandments.

Behold, now I hope it is evident that I do not wish to take anything from the Roman church, as my dear friends reproach me. But that I do not put up with some hypocrites, methinks I am right in doing so, and should not be afraid of water bubbles to death. The Holy Roman See should be followed in all things, but no hypocrite should ever be believed.

1) In the original: tuchte.

2) In the original: tsurteylen.

282 Luther's answer to Spalatin, from which it can be seen that his friends, especially Spalatin, had urged him to publish this work, thinking that it would make things better.

See Appendix, No. 32, §§1.2.

Luther's humble letter to Pope Leo X, which he had promised Miltitz he would leave out. Probably end of February 1519.

The original concept of this letter is found in the 60ä. Ootbnn. 379, l. 1 with the heading: "Meynung des brieffs zcum Hseiligen] Vsaters Babst." In the same, of course, there is no address. In the editions is set: Lentismuo katri l'onl X. Uontiüoi Nnxiruo 1?. Nurt. Imtberm VuAustiuunus, Lnlutsm N6t6rnnin. Likewise, the place and time designation together with the signature is missing there: Lx ^ldenburZo, 3. Llartii 1519. IV lVnrtinus Imtberus, Ooetor. The Weimar edition, Vol. II, p. 66, notes that the location itself is suspicious of the date, and the place and date were probably added by a chancellor at the time of the no-writing; and Luther's letter was then sent at the same time as the letter from the Elector to Miltitz of March 4, 1519. Luther was, as the letter in the appendix of this volume No. 32 proves, not in Altenburg at that time (March 3). Furthermore, according to § 4 of our writing, the publication of the "Unterrichts" (No. 281) is only imminent, while Luther writes in his letter of March 5 to Spalatin that it had already gone out before Spalatin had sent him reminders concerning its contents. Therefore, we have not retained the feasible time and place determination, but have dated it further back. The Erlanger Briefwechsel, Vol. I, p. 445 notes that, if the "from Altenburg" of the editions had any meaning at all, Luther may have written the letter already in January during the negotiations with Miltitz in Altenburg and sent it only now on March 3; or Luther may have dated it from Altenburg because the negotiations were held there. In the editions: in Aurifaber, vol. I, p. 152 b; in the Wittenberg (1550), toin. I, lob 235; in the Jenaer (1579), tom. I, lob 210; in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 92; in Seckendorf's Hi8t. bmtk., üb. I, p. 65; in De Wette, vol. I, p. 233; in the Erlanger, opp. var. urg., tom. II, p. 452 and in the Erlanger Briefwechsel, vol. I, p. 442. German in the Wittenberger (1569), vol. IX, p. 65b; in the Jenaer (1564), vol. I, p. 143; in the Altenburger, vol. I, p. 259 and in the Leipziger, vol. XVII, p. 230. We have, according to the Erl. Briefw., which brings the original concept.

Newly translated from the Latin.

Most Holy Father! Again, 1) necessity forces me, the lowest among men and dust of the earth, to speak to your holiness and so high majesty. Therefore, let your holiness deign to incline its fatherly and in truth in Christ's stead (Christi vicarias aures) ears most graciously to this little sheep, and take this my bleating favorably.

The venerable Lord Carl Miltitz, your Holiness' chamberlain, was here with us and complained very strongly in the name of his Holiness to your most noble Prince Frederick about my irreverence and sacrilege against the Roman Church and your Holiness, and demanded satisfaction.

When I heard this, I was very sorry that my extremely faithful service had such an evil destiny that what I had undertaken to protect the honor of the Roman church was interpreted as dishonorable and even by the supreme head of this church was to cause the complete suspicion of all evil.

But what shall I do, most holy Father? I have no counsel at all; I cannot bear the power of your wrath, and I do not know how to escape it. I am asked to revoke the disputation. If he could do what is demanded of him, I would do it without delay. But now, since through the resistance and the urging of the opponents my writings have traveled further than I would ever have expected, and at the same time are more deeply rooted in the hearts of very many than they could be revoked; yes, since our Germany today is extraordinarily flourishing, through many fine minds, through scholarship, through correct judgment: so I see that I cannot revoke anything in any way if I want to honor the Roman Church, for which I must take care above all. For to recant would be nothing other than to defile the Roman Church more and more, and would bring her into the mouths of men to accuse her.

5. those who, O Most Holy Father, have brought this insult and almost [I would like to say] disgrace upon the Roman Church among us, deuen

I have resisted them, that is, those who, with their completely unreasonable sermons under the name of your holiness, have only served the most shameful avarice and have defiled the sanctuary with the shame of Egypt [Jos. 5:9] and made it an abomination, and, as if that were not enough evil, they accuse me, who opposed their outrageous abominations, by your holiness as the author of their outrage.

Now, Most Holy Father, I testify before God and all His creatures that I have not been nor do I now have the will to do anything in any way close to the Roman Church and to Your Holiness.] rather I confess without reservation (plenissime) that the power of this church is over all, and that nothing in heaven and on earth is preferable to it, except only Jesus Christ, the Lord over all, and your holiness will not believe any evil plotters (dolis) who plot something else against this Martinus.

7 And there is only one thing I can do in this matter: I will very gladly promise Your Holiness that I will henceforth let this matter, that which concerns indulgences, go and be completely silent, "if even those will keep their petty grand braggers (ampullas) in check". 2)

8) Yes, I also want to send out a writing among the common people, 3) from which they should recognize and be admonished that they should rightly honor the Cologne church, and not blame it for the outrage of those people, nor follow my sharpness against the Roman church, which I have used, yes, abused, and gone too far against those useless people: whether, at last, by God's grace or through this effort, the disagreement that has arisen might again be quenched.

9. for I have sought this alone, lest through the shamefulfulness of others' avarice

2) Here we have put the speech marks instead of the brackets in our original, since we are of the opinion that the brackets (as otherwise ost in the old editions) should emphasize. - Our translation of ampullas is justified by Luther's word in No. 281, 8 3: "und soll mich nicht vor Wasserblasen zu Tode fürchten".

3) The "Unterricht," No. 281.

The Roman Church, our mother, would be defiled, and people would not be led into error and learn to regard love as less important than indulgences. Everything else, since it neither helps nor harms, is held in less esteem by me. But if I can do more or know how to do more, I will undoubtedly be quite ready to do it. (Christ keep your holiness forever. At Altenburg, March 3, 1519, Brother Martin Luther, Doctor[. 1)

Luther's letter to Spalatin, in which he reports that, at Miltitzen's written request, he has proposed three bishops to decide his case. 19 Jan. 1519.

This letter is found in Aurifaber, vol. I, p. 138d; in Löscher, Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 953; in De Wette, vol. I, p. 212 and in Erlanger Briefwechsel, vol. I, p. 367.

Newly translated from the Latin.

To Georg Spalatin, his dearest friend, the Irenian and wise servant of Christ, his most beloved.

JEsus.

Hail! Carl Miltitz (what you want to know) has written me in a vain, very short letter that he has verbally presented the whole matter to the most noble prince, and it is at the prince's discretion, in order not to hinder the matter, that I would like to name the bishop who should carry out this matter. I have named the archbishop (to Miltitz), first of all that of Trier, 2) then that of Salzburg, 3) and finally the Palatine of Naumburg. 4) But the will of the Lord be done! Time will teach everything. The Lord lives! I will do the rest in his time. Farewell, for I am very busy, or perhaps the one most burdened with business. In the evening of Sebastian [19 Jan.] 1519.

Martin Luther
Augustinian.

C. How Elector of Saxony, no doubt on Miltihen's advice, wanted to apologize to the pope in writing, but subsequently failed to do so.

285: An objection drafted by the Electoral Council of Altenburg concerning the sending of a letter from the Elector of Saxony to the Pope in Luther's matter.

This writing is found in the German Wittenberg edition (1569), vol. IX, p. 62 d; in the Jena edition (1564), vol. I, p. 138 d; in the Altenburg edition, vol. I, p. 255; and in the Leipzig edition, vol. XVII, p. 219.

Firstly, that at the citation issued by Papal Holiness, at the request of His Holiness, and at the request of my most gracious Lord, the Elector of Saxony 2c, Doctor Martinus has obediently appeared at Augsburg before the legate.

Secondly, because the Lord Legate acted more swiftly with Doctor Martinus than he had promised and put off, and was based solely on the revocation, and finally Doctor Martinus was not to come to him again, because he wanted to make a retraction, Doctor Martinus was therefore caused to return from Augsburg, considering that he had undertaken not to make a retraction without the indication of better writing and instruction.

Thirdly, that the Lord Legate, following D. Martinus, denigrated his farewell and property, and wrote to my most gracious lord, whereupon my most gracious lord answered him again; as can be seen above.

Fourthly, my most gracious lord had decided with him to dispense with the things everywhere, so that his C. F. G. in the papal sanctity did not act and take anything contrary.

5th In which His Holiness Nuncio and Chamberlain, Mr. Carl von Miltitz, would have come to his C. F. G., who would have asked, among other manifold diligent solicitations and efforts, that his C. F. G. would not let Doctorem Martinum come away, but rather that he would join him in Altenburg in his C. F. G.'s court camp. F. G.'s court camp, hoping that when they came together they would be able to talk to each other so much that the matter would be carried out and settled in such a way that it would be agreeable to Papal Holiness and Doctor Martin. Thereupon Doctor Martinus, as the obedient one, would have appeared and would have talked with Mr. Carol; as his holiness would further hear from Mr. Carl's letter.

1) The last bracketed words are missing in the original concept.

2) Richard von Greiffenklau.

3) Matthew Lang.

4) Philip, Count Palatine of the Rhine.

Fifth, to consider whether one would like or want to ask Papal Holiness to consider the matter graciously, and to lay it down in such a way that D. Martinus may remain unencumbered in his bid for inheritance, which is considered by many people to be sufficient. Without doubt, D. Martinus would show himself to be an obedient son of papal holiness and a pious Christian man; otherwise, my most gracious lord would help punish him himself and not suffer his conduct in any way.

7) Sixthly, to remember how my most gracious lord wanted to indicate diligence to papal holiness to Carl von Miltitz, so that it would also be good for him, glimpses and graces.

8) Seventhly, whether it would not be good to nevertheless outline a little to papal sanctity how Doctor Martinus came into the matter, and what great attachment Doctor Martinus would have. And whether one would refrain from fraudulence against him, that it would grow to more indignation, which S. C. F. G., as one who always meant it faithfully with papal sanctity, should be sorry for.

9. finally, with attached reverence to papal sanctity 2c. But on male enhancement only 2c.

286 Draft of the princely letter to the pope, established according to the above concerns.

This letter is found in the Wittenberg edition (1569), vol. IX, p. 63 and in the Jena edition (1564), vol. I, p. 139 b with the misleading heading: "Des Kurfürsten zu Sachsen Herzog Friedrichs Schrift, an Bepstliche Heiligkeit, wie der Cardinal Thomas Cajetanus D. M. L. at Augsburg, M. D. XVIII. interrogated at the Imperial Diet." Further in the Altenburger, vol. I, p. 256; in the Leipziger, vol. X VII, p. 220 and in Löscher, Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 14.

1st Most Holy Father 2c. After Your Holiness' Legate, the most venerable in God the Father, Mr. Thomas, of the title of St. Sixti Cardinal, has informed me from the Imperial Diet held in Augsburg last summer, in what manner Your Holiness has ordered him to act in the matter of Doctor Martinus Luther, on the citation which Your Holiness should have issued against the Doctor.

(2) So I have had a conversation with your Holiness' legate, and I with him, and especially that he should ask your Holiness to order the matter out to the German nation, so that it might be heard in an emergency, which he refused me, but I had insisted that Doctor Martinus should come to him himself, that he would deal with him in a fatherly manner, and that he would seek ways that things could be settled amicably. Therefore, I have worked so hard for Doctor Martinus to come to your Holiness's legates in Augsburg, and would also have provided myself with such consolation if his action had been taken in such a way.

3 But the legate's action alone, when I was reported, was to recant. Also, in the end, the doctor was sanctified by him with the words: he should go away and not come before his eyes, because he wanted to recant. Because the doctor had decided with him not to recant without better instruction, he left, thinking that he should not come to the legate again, and so he left.

4 Your Holiness's legate has written to me following such action and farewell, to which I have replied with sent over! Doctor Martinus' instruction to answer it; all of which Your Holiness, at Mr. Carl's request, I hereby send you a copy, which you can believe. I have not yet received an answer to such a letter from your Holiness's legate.

(5) And even though, in response to the same letter from your Holiness, I decided to abstain from the matter altogether, because I did not want to be under the illusion or suspicion that I wanted to be too contrary to your Holiness; as I have also informed D. Martin of this: nevertheless, immediately after your Holiness' nuncio and chamberlain, Carol von Miltitz, came to me; he has, after other manifold, diligent solicitations and efforts, asked that I not let D. Martin come away, but that he join him in the hope that, when they meet, they will talk to each other so much that the matter will be settled. Martin, but that he should join him, in the hope that, when they meet, they will be able to talk to each other so much that the matter will be dealt with in such a way that Your Holiness and the doctor will be comfortable and unburdened. And although I had completely abstained from the doctor, so much diligence was nevertheless applied that the same doctor, as the obedient one, appeared before your Holiness Nuncio, and the aforementioned have conversed with each other, as he offered to ascribe Carol to your Holiness, and he will undoubtedly do.

6 And therefore I ask with obedient diligence that Your Holiness will look into the matter with mercy and in such a way that it will be settled in a just manner, and that Doctor Martinus will not be weighed down by his opponents over his inheritance. Un-

I doubted that he would be an obedient son to your sanctity, according to his commandment, but I wanted to help him punish himself.

7 Thus, Your Holiness will note from Carol's letter how Doctor Martinus was caused to such his undertaking, and that such did not flow from his own will, that Carol, by his diligence in this matter, has partly found out.

8 He will also report to Carol Your Holiness by his letter in what esteem D. Martinus is held by scholars and others, that to worry where the matter should be laid other than by proper and reasonable ways, that a detrimental outrage might result from it.

9 I did not want to restrain Your Holiness, but I have no doubt that the same, as the kind Father, will know how to see things, so that they may be for the betterment of the holy Christian Church.

Commands of Your Holiness me as the obedient son, which the eternal GOD wanted to contain in blissful government for His glory. Date 2c.

287: Elector Frederick of Saxony's letter to Fabian von Feilitzsch, containing the Elector's decision to refrain from writing to the Pope. 12 Jan. 1519.

This letter is found in the Wittenberg (1569), vol. IX. Bl. 63b; in the Jenaer (1564), Vol. I, Bl. 140b; in the Altenburger, Vol. I, p. 257; in the Leipziger, Vol. XVII, p. 221 and in Löscher, Ref.-Acta, Vol. III, p. 17.

GOtt walts.

By the Grace of God Frederick 2c.

Dear faithful and councilor! Since you know that next to Altenburg, at the request of Er Carl von Miltitz, it was considered good and granted to write to Papal Holiness in the matter of D. Martini, we do not want to keep it from you that we have thought about it further and, for various reasons, considered it good to refrain from writing to Papal Holiness in this matter; however, we have had a letter made to Er Carl, of which we are sending you a copy herewith, as you will hear. And thereupon our request is that you answer Er Carl's letter to his future in Altenburg, and at the same time indicate: although next it is considered good that we should inform Papal Holiness of our decision.

If we were to write to him, we would have considered it good for him and ourselves, from various motions, to refrain from doing so.

2 And especially because the legate has sent us such a swift and threatening letter, regardless of the fact that we have nothing to do with the matter, but only that we demanded at his request that he come to him in Augsburg. If we should now write to papal holiness and get involved in the matter, it might be thought that we would be so anxious and urge him not to come from us, and so much would be done with interdict and in other ways that the matter would not come to that, as he considered it good for Carl, and D. Martinus offered. Martinus offered. Wherever such action should be taken against us, for which we would not gladly give cause, we would not like it, especially in these dying days; therefore, we would, as much as possible, think of going about the matter idly.

3 But we would be in error if he, Carl, knew how to report to the papal sanctity of the matter, so that it could be settled more easily and conveniently. For he would know what it was based on, also what would be done with it, and D. Martinus offered.

For if we knew that papal sanctity would suffer action in the matter, what we could then promote for it, we would not allow it to happen to us. How you will further indicate this; and in what way you will depart with him, you will let us know by your letter; in this you do us a favor. Date Torgau, Wednesday after Erhardi [12 Jan] Anno 1519.

288: Prince Frederick of Saxony's letter to Carl von Miltitz, in which he apologizes for not writing to the Pope. Lochau, 11 Jan. 1519.

This letter is found in the Wittenberg (1569), vol. IX, p. 64; in the Jena (1564), vol. I, p. 141; in the Altenburg, vol. I, p. 258; in the Leipzig, vol. XVII, p. 221 and in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 18.

GOtt walts.

By the Grace of God Frederick 2c.

1. our greeting before. Venerable, dear, devout one! After you have considered it good that we should write to Papal Holiness in the matter of Doctor Martin Luther, we would be well inclined to do so.

2 We consider, however, that because papal canonization

Our Lord and friend, the Cardinal St. Sixti, has written us, since his departure from Augsburg, an arduous letter on the action he had with D. Martina, to which we have written again, sending D. Martini's instruction, but have not yet received an answer. Martini's instruction, but have not yet received an answer, which we hereby send you, at your request, a credible copy, from which you will find, as you have heard from us, that we have completely renounced the matter, which we have also reported to D. Martin. Martin of the matter. Although we had nothing to do with the matter before, for as much as we requested, at the legate's request, that D. Martin come to him in Augsburg, as we have now done at your request.

3 We also intend to stand idle in the matter; for we would not like to be under the delusion or suspicion that we might have been in the papal

Holiness that we should promote that which would be detrimental to the Holy Christian Church; therefore, we refrain from writing to Papal Holiness in this matter.

4 But do not doubt, you will know their holiness, how you found the things, and how you inquired into them, together with the circumstances, and how they are surrounded with care, also D. Martini Erbietten. Martini's legacy, as you have indicated to us, so that their holiness, as the kind father, may see into it according to justice.

(5) We did not want to restrain you, and we wish you to command us to papal sanctity as the obedient son. By this you do us favor to recognize in grace against you. Date at Lochau, on the 11th of January, Anno 1519.

Section Four of Chapter Four.

From Miltitzen's journey via Leipzig, where he interrogates Tetzeln, to Cardinal Cajetan in Trier.

A. How Miltitz cited "Tetzel" to Altenburg immediately after his arrival in Saxony, but he did not appear.

Tetzel's letter of apology to the Papal Nuncio Carl von Miltitz that he could not come to Altenburg without risking his life. Leipzig, Dec. 31, 1518.

According to Spalatin's own translation in Cyprian's Urkunden, Vol. I, p. 374; then in Löscher's Res.-Acta, Vol. II, p. 567.

Grandfather. Your Honor encourages me that she has forced me to come to Aldenburg to hear something special from her. Now, I should not be distressed by such work and such recklessness. Your Lordship will be pleased when I leave Leyptzich for the rest of my life. When Martin Luther Augustine aroused and moved the powers that be not only in all German lands, but also in the conquering countries between Austria, Hungary, and Poland against me in such a way that I am nyrgently certain. The aforementioned Martin Luther has also, in the youngest of his actions between Augsburg and in the appeal, the process this citation and the whole grievance which he suffered. then by the foremost clerics the law was falsely imposed on me. And I have been accused of having preached heresy and the reading of God, and of not having drawn the most noble in God, Father and Lord, Archbishop between Meintz and Mayburg and the Holy See between Rome and Cardinal Transitions, into this plan. If, however, the noble Archbishop has ordered them to cite and not me, as God is my witness, now I have forced my sermon before the longest heylicky knowledge. I have also excused myself from the libel against the holy virgin, which he forced me to commit verbally and in writing in the past year, as your Honor will hear from the copies sent over here. But such an apology of mine, when seen, is again obscene to me, as if I had preached heresy and the reading of God. All men's opinion against me is unjustly moved and made me repugnant, some of whom, when I stand from the preaching pulpit, draw my attention to me with their eyes. I have also been warned by many daphne and credible people that I should be very careful. Then many of Martini's followers have sworn me to death. For this reason I can

Our heritage, which I would rather see than an angel, will not come out of my life. Therefore, for the sake of God, and because of my greatest fear, may Your Excellency pardon me, when I have loved the Holy Spirit at all times, and will love Him as long as I live, I have for many years, and especially now, because Martinus, on his predecessor's estate, has had a vntzal ferlickey of life, of rumor, and of the good of the common folk, of spirituality, and of other earthly things. On account of which I am challenged with unimaginable deceptions and schedules. But this is said. I want to defend the truth of the law until my end against all its opponents. Therefore, your father commands me what I should do, so I will live forever, if only I can do it on my own life's journey.

Given at Leyptzick. on the last day of December anno Dni XV 6. XIX-)

Brother Tetzl.

B. How Miltitz therefore demanded that he appear before him when he was passing through Leipzig and gave him his has sharply spoiled sacrilege.

Miltitzen's written report to the Electoral Councilor Pfeffinger on his interrogation of Tetzl in Leipzig. Gräfenenthal, 22 Jan. 1519.

From Chprian's Urkunden, Vol. I, p. 380 reprinted in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, Vol. III, p. 20.

The way I have heard about you not having been healthy in Leipzig, Tetzl has come to me with all his provincials, which I have then spoken about as if they were born out of a search for others. I have heard from many people, and from him himself, that he wants to leave and flee from these lands, and that he is angry with him, because his lies and deceit have been revealed to me in great numbers, and also in great other things I addressed him, also brought enough testimony to him about it in his present value, which

1) That is Dec. 31, 1518, because the new year began with Christmas. Walch has in, the heading wrong: 1519.

I also want to write all the official heylickey and be a vrteyl oberm Tetzl warthen. I have consulted with the Fucker Factor at Leyptig, who has collected the money of the applause, that Tetzl has received every month lxxx fl. for his work and all costs free with a wagon and iij pherd beyrewternn and every month for his servant x fl. ane that he has stolen and useless. We must consider what he has preached of grace and what he has thought of the Holy Roman Church; or of my most gracious Lord of Mentz, that and much else I have truly understood and if it has time I will tell you everywhere, also he has ij children 2c. I want to show this to my most noble lord, if it is good for you. I have had letters from the University of Wittenberg and from Her Martina, and will keep to them as much as I can.

Eylend zw Gräfenthal am Sonnabend nach Sebastiani [22. Jan.] 1. 5. 19.

Carolus von Miltitz..

Luther's report of how Miltitz had let Tetzl get to him in such a way that he died of melancholy.

See Luther's preface to the first part of his Latin books. Walch, St. Louis Edition, Vol. XIV, Col. 445 f.

Luther's magnanimous compassion for Tetzl's condition, who had become quite pusillanimous and sick over the fact that Miltitz had been so hard on him.

See Appendix, No. 6, § 2.

293 Letter of intercession from the Provincial of the Saxon Franciscans, Hermann Rabe, to the Papal Nuncio on behalf of Tetzl, a man in need. 3 Jan. 1519.

From Cyprian's Documents, vol. II, p. 106, Latin there.

Venerable Father and Lord in Christ! I rejoice exceedingly and have already rejoiced that your reverend fatherhood and glory have arrived in our region. I had hoped that I would be comforted by confidential conversation in the so great sorrows and troubles that have come upon me and mine at this time. God forgive Martin Luther, who diligently strives to draw us innocent people into his cause and has striven to make his-would like to pull his head out of the noose a little. But what he inflicted and has inflicted on this venerable father, Magister Johann Tetzl, because he has defended the sovereignty of the apostolic see even with his damage and does not cease to defend it, as his sermons to the people prove, and all who have heard him must bear witness to him, is known to everyone who reads and hears Martin's appeal and other writings. Indeed, I do not know if there is anyone like him who has done and suffered so much and so great things for the Most Holy See and is still suffering. If God wanted our most holy Lord to know, I have no doubt that he would honor him duly for it. But what lies and shameful calumnies, which are invented in an endless way, are poured on him, is known in all places and in all corners. Therefore, I entrust the same Father to your most reverend Fatherhood and Glory, for whose protection and that of the Holy See, for which he also works to the limits, as an honest friend and Lord. I wish that your glory had heard his sermon on the day of the circumcision of the Lord, then it would certainly be able to conclude from it how he was and still is minded against this holy see. Therefore, I once again command him and myself to Your Glory in the best possible manner. Date Leipzig, January 3, in the year of salvation 1519. Brother Hermann Rab, Provincial in Saxony.

C. Von Miltitzen's continued journey to Augsburg and the correspondence continued from there with Chursachsen.

294 Letter from the Papal Nuncio Carl von Miltitz to Chursachsen, in which he gives every good hope of a happy outcome to Luther's cause, but encloses a request that Luther be able to hold on to his book writing until his return, because he has reported everything to Rome. Augsburg, the Feb. 5, 1519.

From Cyprian's Documents, Vol. I, p. 382.

Your Lordship, my most reverend Prince and Lord, my humble and entirely obedient service, together with my duties, are to be granted by your princely grace in all respects. Most Gracious

I have written everything that your Curator has written to me, with all due respect, to my most holy father the Babest, which your Curator has left with me, by the way of doubt, that it is worthy of your approval, and that your Curatorship will be well pleased with all the articles that your Holiness has written. Curff. genaden gut menung fornemenn, dar ann seyn Heylikeit Eyn sunderlichenn gefallen haben, och genedigster Curff. vnd Her, all die artichel die mir Her Fabian von Feyltzß von wegen Ewr Curff. g. I want to save time and money until I can demand that your Curate should proceed in all doubts, if I know that your Curate does not want a greater one. I am also hoping that Your Honor will allow Martin Luther to hold that his will will not be started otherwise until I return, as we have left it up to you, so I hope I will bring the matter to your possession, Most Honorable Honor and Your Honor, Doctor Lamperther of the Supreme Court has given me a more praiseworthy order than Your Honor. I have also written here to your Curff. g. what I have requested from your Curff. g. in the other cases, and with this, I hereby submit to your Curff. g. as my most gracious Lord Date Awßburgk In Die Agathe [5. Feb.] 2) 1519.

Ewr Curff. g.
vnderteniger capellan
Carolus von Miltitz.

295 Elector Frederick of Saxony's answer to Miltitzen's above letter. Altenburg, March 4, 1519.

From Cyprian's Urkunden, vol. I, p. 3dl reprinted in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 95.

By the Grace of God Frederick Duke of Saxony and Elector.

Our greetings before. Dear andechtiger. We have received your letter, and that you have written to Rome about our affairs, and that you will only be informed and will not hinder us, so that we may receive an answer, and that our affairs may be judged to the best of our ability.

1) This comma is set by us.
2) Walch has incorrectly resolved this date in the caption: 6 Feb.

We trust in you. But you indicate that you hope we will keep Martin's lute so that he will not do anything else until you return. As we want to provide him with that, he would be caused to do so. Therefore, we want those who are in need of him to refrain from doing so, so we do not doubt that Doctor Martinus will not resist any further. We have not wished to restrain you from doing so. We are therefore inclined to be gracious to you. Date Aldenburg am virden tag Marti: anno 2c. XIX.

To Her Carol von Miltitz.

No. 335 is Miltitzen's answer to this letter from the Elector. Due to incorrect dating (already in Cyprian), this letter is set in the year 1520.

Luther's letter of apology to the Elector of Saxony, in which he reports how, in order to save the honor of divine truth, he was forced to debate with D. Eck, since he would otherwise have been more than happy to remain silent, according to the conclusion reached with Miltitz, if only the papists had left him alone and not challenged him again, despite Miltitz's promise that his opponents would also be urged to remain silent. Dated March 13, 1519.

From Cyprian's Urkunden, Vol. I, p. 389 in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, Vol. III, p. 204; in the Leipzig edition, Vol. XVII, p. 241; in De Wette, Vol. I, p. 237 and in the Erlangen edition, Vol. 53, p. 7. We have used the variants communicated from the original in the Erlangen correspondence, Vol. I, p. 448.

To the Most Illustrious and Highborn Prince and Lord, Duke Frederick, of the Holy Roman Empire, Elector, Duke of Saxony, Landgrave of Doringen, Margrave of Meist. Reichs Ertzmarschalk, Churfürsten, Herzog zu Sachsen, Landgrafen zu Doringen, Markgrafen zu Meisten, my most gracious Lord and Patron.

Jhesus.

My poorest subject is E. Churf. G. alzeyt beuohr, Durchleuchtigster Hochgeporner Fürst, gnedigster Herr. It is sent to me by E. Churf. G. Capellan Herr Magistro Spalatin some Punct, ßo der Erwidrige Herr Carolus von Miltitz Bepstlicher Heyligkeit Com missarius, to E. C. G. concerning me, has decided that I should stand still in Hynfurt and not start anything new. As we then decided in Aldenburgk. Now God knows that my whole heart was in it, and that I was glad that the spill should have an end, as much as was in my hands, and that I kept the same pact so steadfastly, that I let Her Silvester Prierat's replica 1) go, how much I had despised many of my adversaries' defiant mockery, and had sworn to Aries my friend's counsel: Thus our decision, as Her Carolus well knows, has been that I will remain silent, however far my opponents remain silent. Now, however, Doctor Ecke has attacked me in such a way that he has not disgraced me, but" the entire E. C. G. Univerfitet zu Wittenberg and is noted in the 2) search: "and many brave people think that he has been bought for the cause, has not wanted to show me such a weather-turning, hynderlistic grip, nor to let the truth be put in such mockery". Then one should shut my mouth, and open it to someone else, E. F. G. can well judge, that then also he would fall on me, who otherwise might not look at me. Now I am still heartily committed to obediently follow C. F. G.'s faithful wheel, and to stand still all the way, so that it will also stand still when I have more to do, and when my life is not wanted there. But if not, I ask E. C. F. G. most sincerely, will myrs nitt fürvnnngnaden, dann ich es auch ym gewistzen nicht weiß zutragenn, die warheytt zu lassen. Then, as well as the position of priestly heylickness, I have to follow the disputation of white, to keep the return, all the time with all due respect and obedience of the Holy Roman See. God save Ew. C. F. G. soulidichen, Amen. Given at Wittenberg, on Sunday Invocavit [March 13] 1519.

E. C. F. G. subordinate capellan
D. Martinus Luther, Augustinian.

- 1) Walch, St. Louis Edition, vol. XVIII, 412.
- 2) That is: dishonor.

Section Five of Chapter Four.

How Luther's matter, after Miltitzen's arrival at the Cardinal Cajetan at Coblenz, according to the agreement made with Luther and also with the Cardinal's approval, was to be settled before the Elector Richard at Trier.

A. How Miltitz reminds the Elector of Trier, who is staying at Ehrenbreitstein at that time, in writing, to now undertake the investigation of Luther's case that was assigned to him and also taken over by him.

From Cyprian's Urkunden, Vol. I, p. 393 reprinted in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, Vol. III, p. 96.

The Elector Richard of Trier responds to two letters sent to him by Miltitz, in which he postpones Luther's interrogation until the upcoming Imperial Diet. Ehrenbreitstein, April 2, 1) 1519.

Richardus Dei gratia Archiepiscopus Treuerensis etc. ac Princeps Elector, Wirdiger, Dear Special. We have now again received one of your writings, concerning the first and ecclesiastical, our dear special one, Master Martin Luther, Doctor of the Holy Scriptures 2c. which date stands Sonnabend post Inuocauit [March 19] glychs content of another of your writings, which date stands Zurbitz vff Mitmachen post trium Regum [Jan. 12.], which we received here before, and read all its contents, and let you know that we have given you an answer to your letter, Zurbitz, at Mitmachen post trium Regum, the contents of which we have abolished, and we are not a little surprised, that such an answer of ours should not come to you, then we have officially transferred the same grove to you, and because your Roman Royal Majesty our most noble Lord has written to us and indicated that your Majesty, the King of the Holy Roman Empire, has given his consent to the use of this grove. He will raise them up in this month of March, and as soon as it is deemed convenient, they will go to the Holy Roman Empire in Schelf. Therefore, we hold that the Diet will be held in the near future, and therefore we leave it at our discretion.

1) Seidemann, "Miltitz", p. 11, has "April 1".
2) No. 298.

according to the above-mentioned copies and documents. We also want to remind you herewith of the order that was given to us by the most exalted in God, our special dear lord and friend, the Papal Legate, and how his love is now incumbent in Rome, but nothing then, when the day of judgement was delayed into the long, (as we do not hold), therefore we want to obey Papal Holiness, whose we are in all ways vndertheniglich to wilnfarn and bereyt, and the matter to good, by the highborn vnnserm special friend, Mr. Friederichen, Hertzogenn zu Taxen 2c. We have decided to make an appeal to the Elector, and to the said Master Martin Luther, and how we may obtain the matter from you, to provide Martinum before the Imperial Diet, before us and you, with sufficient sufferings, on a certain day, and to proclaim to you the knowledge of the same in advance, 4) and to act in all possible ways, so that such a matter may be brought to a just end. We did not want to give you this on your first writing, dated Erenbreitstein on the Saturday after Sunday Oculi [April 2] Anno 2c. XV C. and XIX. more Treuerensi

To the former, vnnserm dear special Carolo Miltitz Thumherren zu Meintz, vnndt Bepstlicher Heiligkeit Nuntien 2c.

A copy of the Electorate of Trier's reply to Miltitzen's first letter, enclosed in the above letter, because he had not received it. Feb. 6, 1519.

From Cyprian's Urkunden, Vol. I, p. 395 reprinted in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, Vol. III, p. 97.

Richardus etc.

Dear special. We have received a new letter, from the trade of the first and spiritual of our dear special master Mar-

3) That is, orally.
4) This will probably mean: to designate the certain [day].

The Holy Father, in the holy created Doctors, reporting about much, and especially understood in it, how the same for and for with speeches and writings on remission some artyckel vßpreiten, which would reach the holy Roman church to great disadvantage, with indication as you therefore of Papal Holiness, as to whom such matters have been recently and again highly exhorted, by which you have caused us also to be reminded of this, that we, as judges appointed for this purpose, may take far-reaching action to prevent such errors as may arise from it, and appoint a day for this purpose 2c. We would like to let you know that we are completely inclined and meant to do everything possible for Your Holiness, according to all Your Holiness' wishes, and in this matter, we were also inclined to appoint a special hearing day for the matter, but because we have here before at Franckfurt the separation by the Highborn Prince Mr. Frederick Duke of Saxony 2c. Prince, our friend, as you know, that the matter is to be taken up by us on the future judgement day, and that it should be acted upon in this way, and that the Roman Royal Majesty of our most gracious Lord has briefly written to us, and has announced the future of His Majesty, We therefore consider that the necessity will require that we do not bring forward the judgement day, but rather that we take it forward, and therefore we are of the opinion that we should continue with the matter until the same judgement day, unless a change, which we do not hope for, or other matters arise in the meantime with the honourable of our most noble lord the Roman king, for which reason it is necessary for us to act. We have not wished to do so with your good gracious and favorable opinion. Date Ehrenbreitstein Sunday after purificationis Mariae [Feb. 6], anno XV C. XIX. more Treuirensi.

To the Willing Our Dear Special Carolo von Miltitz, Dhumherr zw Meintz und Bebstlicher Heiligkeit
Nuntien 2c.

B. How Miltitz tried to make Luthern loyal and lure him to Coblenz, but in vain.

299 Miltitzen's letter to Luther, in which he seeks to make him safe and exhorts him to be confident and only soon set out on the road to Coblenz.

so that the settlement of his case will not become more difficult afterwards. Coblenz, May 3, 1519.

From Cyprian's Urkunden, vol. II, p. 123, printed in Löscher, Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 826. Miltitz sent this letter at the same time as his letter to the Elector (No. 304) and to Spalatin (No. 305). Also in Erlanger Briefwechsel, vol. II, p. 18.

Translated from Latin.

JEsus.

Hail! Excellent and venerable father, dearest friend. I think that your fatherhood will still know what happened and was decided among us when we were with our most noble prince, Frederick, Duke of Saxony and Elector of the Holy Roman Empire. I have written to our most holy Lord, and repeatedly urged again and again, that letters and brevia should be sent from their holiness, so that the matter would be happily, as I hope, settled for your fatherhood. But because of many other very important matters with which Her Holiness has been busy in various ways, she has not yet been able to find time for it, although it would have been otherwise. However, I hope hourly for letters from Her Holiness.

Yesterday I came to the most reverend Lord Legate, who was very pleased about my presence and asked me about my prince and about the opinion of your fatherhood, to whom I answered everything to the best of my ability that seemed to me to be useful for the cause of your fatherhood. Among other things, he assured me that he would do everything that a kind father should do, if only your fatherhood would improve, as had already been discussed in many ways between your fatherhood and me in Altenburg. He also added that everything that the most reverend archbishop in Trier would do and decide in his presence should also please his most reverend fatherhood. For since your fatherhood at that time in my presence and afterwards in writing demanded the most reverend archbishop as a unanimous judge and relied on his honesty and loyalty, I also wanted you to come without any fear to the said most reverend archbishop with a letter from the most noble prince; Since I am present, I promise that no injustice will be done to your fatherhood, and also the Cardinal Legate will neither impose nor do anything to your fatherhood than what pleases the said Archbishop. I also promise your Fatherhood, in turn, my faithfulness, which I hope you consider righteous.

Therefore, I admonish and remind your fatherhood, since it is God's will and order, that you prepare yourselves as soon as possible for the journey to us in Coblenz, where everything will be arranged and settled in the best way for the benefit of your fatherhood. I have also written to our most noble prince, our common lord, who will hopefully also write to your fatherhood. For if your fatherhood refused to come to us (God forbid!), then perhaps the matter would become more difficult because of the many judges. For the most reverend Cardinal of Rango has written to me that the Pope wants to add three other bishops to the bishop in Freisingen. Therefore, if your fatherhood does not hasten its arrival, I would be forced to come to your fatherhood with the breves that I am now hourly awaiting. For this reason, your fatherhood is setting out immediately, setting aside all business and without any fear, since the most reverend Lord Cardinal also wants to completely disregard everything that your fatherhood has written against him, even without apology, which he has sworn by his soul. Therefore, I sincerely ask that your fatherhood advise well in this matter for its own sake and for the common honor and benefit, and I hope that if your fatherhood follows my advice, it will never regret it, for it knows how I have been disposed toward it up to now and will be in the future, as long as I live. May your fatherhood live well, to whom I also entrust myself in her prayers. Given in the city of Coblenz, on the day of the Holy Cross [May 3] 1) Anno 1519.

Carl von Miltitz, Commissarius and Apostolic Nuncio 2c., Canon at Mainz 2c.

To the respectable and excellent man, Brother Martin Luther, of the Order of St. Augustine, Professor of Sacred Theology 2c., his esteemed friend.

Luther's report of this to Spalatin and his thoughts about it.

See Appendix, No. 33, UI and 4.

Luther's thoughts to Joh. Lang about these whimsical impositions.

See Appendix, No. 34, § 3.

1) 8. oueis is cross invention. Because Löscher has taken it as the raising of the cross, he places Vol. III, p. 821 this letter as well as the documents No. 304 and 305 in September.

Luther's response to Miltitz's invitation to the Elector of Trier, in which Luther gives a negative answer. Wittenberg, May 17, 1519.

This letter is found in Aurifaber, vol. I, p. 176k; in Löscher, Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 103; in De Wette, vol. I, p. 275 and in Erlanger Briefwechsel, vol. II, p. 53.

Newly translated from the Latin.

To the excellent man, Mr. Carl von Miltitz, apostolic commissary, canon of Mainz, his patron in the Lord.

Jesus.

Hail! Dear Lord, I have received the letters from Your Glory in which you advise me to go to Coblenz as soon as possible, since this would serve my cause. But, I beg you, listen patiently to my opinion. First of all, when we met in Altenburg, it did not seem necessary to me at that time that I be present, but because the books in which I opened my opinion to everyone in the clearest possible way have been published, I thought it would be sufficient if the articles that I had to revoke were established after the examination of my opinions, I thought that it would be sufficient if, after an investigation of my opinions, the articles that I had to revoke were determined, and the manner of the revocation, with indicated causes, so that the revocation would be strong and credible, so that, if it happened in a different manner, it would not be said that it had been forced from me by force, and the last would become worse than the first. And I am still of this opinion.

But even if I should come, you will be able to consider for yourselves how foolish those would think me who heard this matter, since you write that no order has yet come from Rome, nor has the archbishop summoned me in force of this order, but I also do not consider it certain whether such an order will come, especially in this troubled state of the empire; 2) I am also not certain whether the archbishop will accept the order when it comes. How, therefore, can I go into such doubtful matters, through so many dangers and with such heavy expenses? How can I, who

2) during the interregnum after the death of Maximilian I.

I am quite poor, take these? I have spent so much in this matter so far, and have made my protectors tired, that I am ashamed to ask for more, to keep silent in the meantime, that as long as the interregnum lasts, not even anyone could be granted safe conduct, especially me, who has so many enemies after me.

In addition to this, a solemn disputation, which the most reverend Cardinal of Augsburg has refused me, now awaits me in Leipzig, which has been entrusted to me by Johann Eck; if I were to withdraw from it, no matter how just the cause, I would bring the greatest disgrace upon myself and all my friends, and even upon our most noble prince and upon my entire order and the university. Yes, in this disputation, in the presence of so many learned men and in such a sharp discussion, this matter can be examined more loudly and precisely than either before the archbishop or the cardinal, so that it is better that all negotiations in this matter come to a standstill than that this disputation be prevented.

But since the archbishop is also Elector of the realm, will he not be required to be absent at this time? But if he is absent, what slot, what treatment of the matter is then possible?

However, even if everything were even, I do not want this matter to be discussed in the presence of the most reverend Cardinal. I do not want him to be present, and he is not worthy of it, since he has tried to dissuade me from the Christian faith at Augsburg; I doubt that he is an orthodox (catholicum) Christian. And if I have time, I will write to the Roman Pontiff and the Cardinals, and if he does not mend his ways, I will convict him of all the things in which he is most shamefully mistaken. I am sorry that the legates of the apostolic see are such people who strive to put Christ aside.

Therefore, I hope, dear sir, that I am quite justly excused by these causes if I do not come, not to add also that the other day a beau laden with many letters (sycophanta.) was with us, who first asked for you, then for me, who left behind great suspicion that I was being pursued from all sides. Finally he was forced to flee, so that he would not be forced to jump into the Elbe; and there would have been little missing, if we had not resisted, that they would have interpreted it as having happened at your instigation, especially since we heard that you were still staying in Germany, while you promised us that you would travel straight and in a short time to Rome. Thus it comes about that I have excused you, but nevertheless see that I have to fear reproaches from all sides.

As for the fact that you think the matter will become more difficult because the most holy Lord Leo the Tenth should order several bishops to this matter, I believe the opposite. For since I have submitted this matter to the judgment of the whole world through the published books, and now undertake to act in Leipzig before so many men, it will not only not be burdensome for me, but also pleasant, if the matter is brought to an end by the decision of many judges.

But if, as you write, you are compelled by the apostolic brevia you have received to come to us for the sake of my hesitation, God grant that you may arrive happily. I am indeed very busy and serve many. I cannot lose so much time and walk in vain without great harm to many. Be well, dear sir. Wittenberg, Tuesday after Jubilate [May 17] 1519.

Brother Martin Luther, Augustinian.

6) How Cajetan and Miltitz tried to persuade the Elector by empty promises that the golden rose would soon come, that he should deliver Luther to Coblenz, and what answer Chursachsen gave.

303 Cardinal Cajetan's letter to Chursachsen, in which he reports that the golden rose will arrive soon, but at the same time to

The Pope, on the other hand, expects something more detailed from the Elector in Luther's matter. Coblenz, May 5, 1519.

This letter is found in Latin in Seckendorf's Umt. lmtk., lik. I, x. 62 d and from it in Löscher, Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 820. German in Seckendorfs Historie des Lutherthums, p. 165. The date is given by Seckendorf.

Newly translated from the Latin.

Most Serene Prince, Most Reverend Sir! As soon as the venerable Carl von Miltitz, nuncio of our most holy Lord, returned, I immediately sent him back to you, most noble Lord, so that he might bring you the holy gift of the golden rose with the gracious will and favor of his holiness. Let Your Serene Highness see from this how highly our most holy Lord and his holy council, as well as I, His Holiness' servant, think of you. For only the highest princes, who have rendered great service to the Holy Roman Church, are accustomed to be graced with such a great gift. There was also nothing else by which their holiness could have shown a greater love for E. C. F. G., and no prince could have been chosen whom I would rather grant everything of the highest order. It is only left that E.C. F. G. persistently follows the footsteps of her ancestors, who have rendered excellent services to the Pope and the entire Christian religion, as she does, honor the Roman orthodox church, adhere to it lovingly and protect it manfully. If E. C. F. G. will do this, she will certainly not receive less praise and honor from it than her ancestors did until now. But if I can serve E. C. F. G. in anything, I certainly wish to do so with all my heart, and E. C. F. G. be blessed and well. From the city of Coblenz, Trier diocese.

E. C. F. G.

Thomas, Card. St. Sixti, Legat.

304 Miltitzen's letter to the Elector of Saxony, in which he apologizes, as he is only waiting for some brevia from Rome and wants to come soon afterwards, but does not spare any words to induce the Elector to deliver Luthern to Trier. Coblenz, May 3, 1519.

This letter has Löscher, Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 821 reprinted from lob. Iricl. HelLo1iu8 in his Mg.nl pulus I. epist. sinA., p. 39. Löscher has the wrong date: Sept. 14. Also in Erlanger Briefwechsel, vol. II, p. 24.

To the Most Serene Highborn Prince and Lord, Mr. Fredrichen, Hertzog zu Sachsen, of the Holy Roman Empire ErtzMarschalck, Curffürst, Vicario, my most noble Lord. Most Serene Highborn Prince, Most Noble Lord,

My obedient dignity as well as my prosperity for your Curf. and ff. graciousness in all respect, most noble Curf. and Sir, I have, as today of the Holy Cross day, no cobblestones come to the Lord Legate, and his Rev^{ma}

Dominatio has caught me quite happily, and asked sunderly, how it (with) Your Curff. and ff. They also talked to me about Doctor Martin Luther's affairs, in a friendly manner, which they told the Lord Legate and me, which had been going on for three years, and the brevia, or communion, of the Protestant Church had been going on for so long. Concerning Her Martinus things, where I have had an answer from the Cardinal of Rangonibus, that Your Heylikeyt iii. my attack has been handed over to the whole of Her Martinus matter by his Rev^{ma}

Dominatio, and that Bebestliche Heylikeyt has sent my attacks from sthundt ii. Cardinal, as namely Cardinali sanctorum quatuor vnd sancti Eusebii, which sulch brevia wy den seyner Heylikeyt angezeigtget, von sthundt förten, so hat (weder) der Cardinal Legate, nach Ich, bis vff disse sthundt keyn Antwort gehat; Wir seyn aber sulcher brevia vnd commission sampt ander Information alle sthundt warten 2c., so the legate's opinion was that Doctor Martinus was now and to my most noble lord of Trier qveme, that his genad was next to the judge. And the legate has also requested, and ordered me, that your Curff. Genaden, that his Rev^{ma}

Dominatio will not act nor strive against Doctor Martina. What the bishop of Trir does, the legate will not revoke. So I also fear, Most Eminent Curate, and Her, that the matter is not so dear to the Legate, but rather as fihel as I have been able to research in such a short time as it has been for times when there was nothing else to do. So the legate has also ordered me to write to Doctor Martin that he must not worry about where he has shouted against the Rev^{ma} Dominatio. He wants Jtzund from sthund as fergeben vnd fergessen have, and an 1) all adebithen or Genad seek. And to keep it all like this, his father has written this on his heart, as he did to his master, and he, as Doctor Martinus has always said, when I was in the country with him, that my most noble master of Trir should be his judge, so it is just like that. If his friend had been at Kobelentz, I would have spoken to his friends about it myself, before I had written something about it to your Curff. and the FfG. By sthundt, as I hope. In iiij. Days, that his Genad will not come to Kobelentz, I will talk about it with his Curff. I will talk about it with his graciousness. Your Curf. and your Grace may also write to me what I should say to my Lord of Trir in this matter. Hern von Trir in this matter. I want to tell Ewrnn Curff. I have agreed in all confidentiality that Doctor Martina should not give her life. It would be my advice, since the legate is to be released and the matter is thus carried out, that Doctor Martina's body and spouse are safe with my Lord of Trir. The legate has also told me, as he has replied to your Curf. and ff. graces, that all this has been done in the opinion of your noble Curf. and your grace. I have not wished to keep this from your Curts and ff. graces, but have given it to your Curts and ff. graces to be acknowledged at the end of the year. However, if all this does not please your Curia and your Grace, your Curia and your Grace must wait for an answer from Rome. I search for the answer every hour. From now on, when I receive the answer, I want you to know. Curff. and ff. G. Estens a copy of it. I have sent Ewrnn Curff. and ff. Genaden sihel briff von Vlm aws, forhoff they sint Ewrnn Curff. and ff. Genaden zuekommen. When I have received an answer from your Curf. and ff. G. to know whom I will send to your Curff. Curff. and ff. graces. I therefore humbly submit myself to your Curia and your Grace as my most noble Lord, date Eylent at Kobelentz die Ste Crucis [May 3] 1519.

E. Curff. vnd ff. Gn.

humble and submissive capellan

Carolus von Miltitz, Nuncio Apostolicus and Canonicus 2c.

?8et. Most gracious Lord, it is my advice that your Curff. and ff. Genad scream to the bishop of Trir that his father be allyn judge sey Dni. Martini, considered, that the Cardinal gives all things to his own city, and that what his own council ends and decides, should be kept. If Dominus Martinus agrees with the Cardinal, the Cardinal is Colericus, and he may be forgiven in words. 2c. If your Curator and the Cardinal do this, I also hope that he will carry the matter forward in a friendly manner. 8er. Eylent etc. Ut supria.

Most Gracious Lord, when I closed this letter. It has been offered to me by faithful ones, etc. as written above.

Miltitzen's letter to Spalatin, with the same content, in which he makes it even more urgent that Luther should come soon. May 3, 1519.

This letter is found in Cyprian's Urkunden, vol. II, p. 120 and in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 824.

Translated into German.

1. hail! 2c. Excellent and highly learned sir, dearest friend. What happened and was decided between me and the venerable father Martin Luther, when we were with our most illustrious Prince Frederick, Duke of Saxony and Elector of the Holy Roman Empire, will hopefully already be known to your dignities. I have written to our most holy lord, and again and again repeated, that their holiness would send letters and letters, so that the said D. Martin's matter would be ended happily. But because of other highly important business, with which Her Holiness is burdened in many ways, she has not yet been able to think of it, although she would otherwise have been able to do so. However, I hope hourly for letters from Her Holiness.

I came yesterday to the most dignified Lord Legate, who was delighted with my presence and asked me about our prince and the opinion of the said D. Martin; to whom I answered everything to the best of my ability that seemed to me to be useful for his cause. Among other things, he assured me that he would gladly do everything that was due to a pious father in his love, if he only wanted to improve himself. He also added that everything that the most reverend archbishop in Trier would do and decide in his presence should be agreeable to his most reverend fatherhood. For since also D. Martin

1) "an" (that is: without) put by us instead of "he", after the parallel letter of Miltitzen to Luther, No. 299: absousEtiam Petitions veniae. Löscher offers: "und er alles abebithen, oder Genad suchen (soll)".

then in my presence and afterwards in writing demanded the said Archbishop of Trier to be the unanimous judge, and trusted in his honesty and fidelity, as was variously acted between me and him in Altenburg: I wanted Your Honor to admonish and urge him to come as soon as possible to the most reverend Archbishop of Trier with a letter from our most noble Prince, setting aside all fear, where, since I am present, no injustice shall be done to him, which I promise to his fatherhood, and also the most reverend Cardinal will certainly not impose or do anything on him other than what the said Archbishop will deem good; I too, whom I hope he will consider honest, promise this to his paternity with all fidelity. Therefore, he must come to us in Coblenz as soon as possible, where everything, if God so wills and ordains, shall be directed and settled in the best way for the cause and the trade of his fatherhood. I have also written to our common Lord, the Most Serene Prince, who will hopefully write to his Fatherhood. For if his fatherhood refuses to come there (which God and then also the most noble prince together with your reverence would like to prevent), then perhaps the matter would become more difficult, namely because of the number of judges. For the most reverend Cardinal von Rangs has written to me that the Pope wants to add three other bishops to the Bishop of Freisingen; if he therefore does not accelerate his coming to us to the utmost, I will be forced to go to his fatherhood with the brevens, which I now expect hourly. But according to my advice, he may set out without fear, setting aside all business. For since the most reverend Cardinal voluntarily promises that he will forget everything that his reverence has written against him, I sincerely ask that your reverence help his own affairs and dealings and the common good and honor in this, and I also hope that if his fatherhood follows my advice, he will never regret it. For you know how I have been against his fatherhood up to now and will be all my life from now on. May Your Reverence live happily and long, whom I entrust to your prayers. Given in the city of Coblenz, on the day of the Holy Cross sdm May 3] 1519.

Carl von Miltitz, Commissarius and Apostolic Nuncio,
Canon in Mainz 2c.

D. How Churtrier was finally persuaded to bring Luther to Ehrenbreitstein by petitioning Chursachsen, which, however, Churfürst Friedrich wisely refuses.

306 The Elector of Trier, Richard, requests the Elector of Saxony to put Luthern on trial. Ehrenbreitstein, May 10, 1519.

This letter is found in Cyprian's Urkunden, vol. 1, p. 398 and in Löscher, Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 99.

Our most gracious service before, Most Reverend Prince, especially Dear Friend. The Most Exalted in God Father, Hr. Thomas Priest Cardinal T. S. Sixti, Legatus of the Papal Holiness in Germania 2c. is among others involved with us in discussions 1) the ecclesiastical Martin Luther sanct Augustinus Order, in confusions, which have been preserved 2) on account of the same Martinus letter, concerning the indulgence. So the Cardinal let us hear such a thing, and what we will do about it, that he wants to hold by papal grace. So on this day, in the same masses, our dear particular Karolus von Miltitz, Lord of Mainz, Babylonian Nuncio, has also spoken to us about the same things, with the intention of charging us with such matters. Since we, and especially for the honor and the subordinate official pleasure of the Christian Church, would like to see such an error put to rest, to prevent such a witchcraft as may arise from it, and since the aforementioned Martinus may abstain from it under the authority of V. L. 3), we request with all diligence that V. L. may produce the same Martinum for us here. We will diligently look into such a matter, so that it may be completed in the most proper way, and as easily as we can. We also hereby grant the above-mentioned Martin a free and secure sentence, 4) in front of us and all of ours, and whom we are unreservedly entitled to, that he may join us here and, as long as he loves it, remain with us and everywhere in our country.

1) Perhaps: touching [beruren] or concerning sbetrevent?

2) Perhaps: sublime?

3) The "V. L." in this letter will have to be resolved by "Ew. Love".

4) Löscher 1. o. III, 100 remarks: The citation to Luther and the escort letter directed to his person have not yet come to light. Cf. No. 331: Nota: to ask where the escort had remained?

Churfürstenthum syn moege, vnnd Widder von dannen bis an fyne gewarsam. 1) V. L., as a lover of the Friddens, and who has a special affection for godly and merciful things, and of princely grace, also to the Order of St. Augustine, to whom we are pleased with all favor; and that also the same Martinus may come to Friddens, and out of the things concerned, prove himself herewith cheerfully and benevolently. We want to earn all the time for the same V. L., whom we are inclined to produce services, cheerfully. Date Erenbreitstein, on Tuesday after Misericordia Domini [May 10], 2) Anno Domini XV 0. XIX.

Richart von Gottes gnaden Archbishop of Trier 2c. und Churfürst.

307 The Elector Frederick of Saxony's answer to the Elector Richard of Trier to the above request, in which he reports that he has not sent Luther the letter from Trier in which he is required to go to Ehrenbreitstein, because he wants to discuss it first with the Elector at Frankfurt. June 2, 1519.

This letter is found in Cyprian's Urkunden, vol. I, p. 401 and in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 105. In the latter place with the wrong date: "May 9" (1. o. p. 106, note 1).

Our kindest thanks before, most exalted in God especially dear friend. When E. L. wrote to us and acknowledged how the Cardinal Sancti Sixti 2c. and likewise Karlin von Miltitz 2c. had come to E. L. about Doctor Martin Luther of the Augustinian Order, and talked with the same, we together with E. L. heard all the contents, and were willing to consider such E. L. letter to Doctor Martin. However, since we have received such a letter by the way we are now, with God's help, to travel to Franckfurt, as soon as we know, E. L. will also be there, and E. L. Bit, Doctor Martinum, will also be there. L. bit to send Doctor Martinum to Erenbreitstein. So we have omitted to send Doctor Martinum to E. L., but first of all we want to tell E. L., because we hope to be with E. L. in a short time, that we do not want to behave to E. L., who we want to show,

1) Seckendorf misunderstood the following words and referred to the Elector of Trier. Ilist. I, utb., lib. I, p. 62 b.

2) Seckendorf, Ilist. I'utb., lib. I, x. 62 b, has the wrong date: May 3.

Luther's Works, "d. XV.

be fruntlich inclined. Date at Heltburg on Thursday Ascensionis Domini [June 2] 3) anno XV 0. XIX.

Von gots gnaden Friederich 2c.

E. How Miltitz, from received Desehl of Rome, to deliver the golden nose to Chursachsen, the journey of Luther to Coblenz Widerrath, because he himself would come to him, and what Chursachsen, since this Aeberbringung has again delayed, answered to Cajetan.

308 Miltizen's letter to Chursachsen, in which he reports to the Elector that the golden rose has already arrived at Augsburg with the Fuggers, and therefore considers it good that Luther waits until his arrival and does not travel to Coblenz. May 11, 1519.

In Cyprian's Urkunden, vol. I, p. 402 and in Löscher, Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 101.

Sublime Lord Highborn surft gmedigester her mein vndermtige gehorssamme Dinsthe sint Ewrn Curff vnd ff genaden mit sampt mein gebeth zu voran 4) bereyt genedigster Curff vnd Her I hab Ewrn Curff und ff genaden Jtzt ans heyligen Crutz tag [3. May] Eylent von Kobnlentz written to discover what the Lord Legate's meynugk is with Hern Martins Lutther zw handeln och doby Ewr Curff und ff genaden meynn guttduncken nit forhalden, welchs all Ewr Curff vnd ff genaden als ich hoff wirt sorsthandenn habenn so anders als ich nicht zweybel mein Briffe Ew. Curff vnd ff genaden sint zwkommen. V. If my lord has not come from the grave, I have acted in the most faithful way with my own faithfulness between my lordship and his lordship, I have found your lordship's grace to be completely reasonable and willing, and I have offered to help Martinus in his matter 5) with all means and difficulties, who then his Curff genad Ewr

3) Seckendorf, Ilist. I'utb., lib. I, p. 62 b, has the wrong date: June 8. - "Heldburg" is a small town with a castle in Saxe-Meiningen-Hildburghausen.

4) In Cyprian: "meran"; in Löscher: "meren". "voran" put by us. This expression: "zuvoran bereit" is very frequent, e.g. in No. 304: "zu foran"; No. 315: "zuvoran".

5) on == without.

Curff vnn ff genaden has written to me and ordered me to speak to Ewm Curff vnd ff g about these and other matters. Therefore, Most Reverend Judge, and the one who has my authority, do not regard my letter as a nest, concerning the affairs of Martinus, until I have agreed between the Supreme Curate and the Princely Grace. So I wanted to talk to your curate and prince's grace about it, if I had any doubt that the matter should be carried forward according to the will of your curate and prince's grace. I read your. I have been summoned by Rome to submit to the Holy See and to all the bulls of the Holy See and to all the graces of the Holy See for the sake of the Holy State and for the sake of the Holy Spirit, and also for the sake of other matters with the Holy See. I do not know how to deal with the rose and the bulls between me, when your Curia and your Grace know that the rose and the bulls are between Awsburck and the Lord Fuhrer Eden I know Awsburck qveme and thereafter between your Curia and your Grace, If the time is right, I have a meeting with your Curf and your Grace to discuss the matter, which will not be continued, so I am sending your Curf and your Grace a letter to the buyers, asking them to write to your Curf and your Grace to make sure that the matter is answered, where your Curff and ff your Grace will be in charge, I would like to make it clear to your Curff and ff your Grace that I have no objections. If she then comes there, where she will be taken by your Curia and the Holy See, I will then take her to you according to the command of your Curia and the Holy See and do what I am ordered to do by the beastly authority and the Holy See of Rome. I do not now raise any mentz zw faren where I have my pherdt sthen. From now on, as God has helped me to this point, I will submit myself in the most favorable way to Your Curia and Your Grace. In order that the matter may be resolved in a timely manner, I have sent this eloquent offer to your Curate and your Grace, humbly beseeching that your Curate and your Grace will do me the best of their good will, and that life and limb are always for your Curate and your Grace. Herewith I will have myself as your most noble lord before your curvature and your grace in the humble discharge. Datum Coblenz ser Eyilent am Mittwoch nach Misericordias Dom. [11 May] 1519. E Curf. and f g.

Undertheniger Cappellan Carolus von Miltitz, Nuntius apostolicus thumher zw mentz.

309 Answer of the Elector of Saxony, Frederick the Wise, to Cajetan, in which he mentions that the rose, which had been on its way for so long, has not yet arrived, but also does not show any strong desire for it. Würzburg, June 8, 1519.

This letter is found in Latin in Cyprian, Nützliche Urkunden, Vol. II, p. 109 and in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, Vol. III, p. 106.

Translated from Latin.

1 Our cordial greetings! We received the letter of your devotion, venerable Father in Christ, special Lord and friend, dated May 5 at Coblenz, on the 28th of the same month, in which your Reverence informs us that Mr. Carl von Miltitz, the Roman Pontiff Leo X., of our most holy Lord, Nuncio, our dear faithful, was immediately sent back to us to bring us the sacred gift of the golden rose, and that he could not have chosen a prince to whom he would be more grateful for everything of the highest order.

We do not doubt that the papal holiness would be kind to us with paternal benevolence, since we would never willingly give it cause to think otherwise of us than of one who in turn would repay its constant good will toward us with all diligence and love, although there has not been a lack of such people who have dared to blaspheme such things, as with our most holy Lord, so also with us, since we thought of nothing less.

Moreover, Mr. Carl von Miltitz has already let it be known for many days that the golden rose has been sent to us by the pope, out of paternal kindness and clemency, as a gift and for our veneration, although without our merit, but until now it has not yet reached our hands. We do not know for what reasons and through what hindrance the delivery of the golden rose has been delayed.

4. But that your devotion adds in its letter that there is nothing left but that we follow in the footsteps of our forefathers and ancestors, who have rendered excellent service to the popes and the entire Christian religion, and who have held the orthodox Roman Church in honor, clung to it lovingly and protected it manfully, as we would do, by which we would receive as much praise and glory from it as our forefathers had received before: we hope to the Almighty God that He will grant us the grace to be able to conduct ourselves in all right and proper ways.

We are to prove ourselves as an obedient son to papal holiness and the Catholic Church, and to remain in our ancestors' footsteps with such willingness to serve; as you mention in your letter that we have done so up to now, and with God's help are willing to continue to do so in the future. Therefore, since such a duty is due to us as a Christian prince of the Holy Roman Empire, we neither desire nor expect either praise or glory from the People. We have not wished to do this to your devotion, to which we are prepared to show courtesy. Given in Würzburg, June 8, 1519.

Inscription:

To the Most Reverend in Christ Father, Mr. Thomas, of the Holy Roman Church, of the title of St. Sixti, Cardinal Priest, and of the Holy Apostolic See Legate de Latere, our dear Lord and friend.

Section Six of Chapter Four.

About Miltitzen's return to Saxony and finally the delivery of the golden rose that had been promised for so long, in which Chursachsen proves to be rather cold.

Von Miltitzens Reise zum Churfürsten zu Sachsen, und mit welchen für Cermonien er die golden rose presented.

310 Cardinal Cajetan's instruction to Miltitz when he wanted to travel to the Elector of Saxony again.

This document is found in Cyprian's Urkunden lateinisch und deutsch, vol. II, p. 115; in Löscher, Ref.Acta, vol. III, p. 108 only in Latin. The German version will have been made for the chursächsischen Räte (uüiktri), to whom Miltitz (as Cyprian says) communicated a copy of this memorial.

First of all, to have all lead by the By! Duke of Saxony that credible copies of the New Decrees of the Bulls on Indulgences be publicly proclaimed in the churches, monasteries, congregations or conventicles and common and other ecclesiastical places where the people are accustomed to assemble, and that such proclamation be made in the said places properly.

Item: It is to be stipulated that when the said Duke of Saxony comes to Franckfurt, on account of the election of a new Roman King, and before he comes to Franckfurt, the most venerable legate is to be heard at a place not far from Franckfurt, and to be allowed to come to him.

Item: that the same duke wants to be about it, that the most venerable duke has to be touched by the orth come safely and againumb travel from then.

Item: that the Sovereign Duke notify the Most Venerable Legate of a convenient time and place for their meeting, so that all matters may take place properly and in due time.

The following article was signed by the legatee with his own hand.

And from the arrival of Martini to us, as we have talked with each other.

From the clock things that the rose has been warped until now, as we have said.

And to command and offer myself to His Most Serene Sovereignty.

311 Papal breve, which the nuncio handed over when the golden rose was handed down, in which only the power and virtue of the consecrated rose is widely emphasized, but nothing is said about the Turk and Luther, of which the other breve 2) is full. Oct. 24, 1518.

This breve is found in Cyprian's Urkunden, vol. II, p. 62 in Latin, and in German, according to Spalatin's translation, p. 66.

Babst Leo the Zcehend.

To the beloved son noble man Fridrich Hertzogen zu Sachßen. of the Hey. Ro. Reichs Churfurstenn.

Beloved son. the blissful and fruitful benediction. The most holy golden roses at the four-

1) In Latin: "üotivs - in a powerful, effective way, that is, with as much fuss as possible.

2) See above the 250th document of the same date.

On the tenth Sunday of Holy Lent, we celebrate the Holy Unction or Chrismation, and sprinkle the fragrant pysem 1) with favors, as is an old custom, and with other sacred ceremonies. And of a great mystery and hidden meaning. And which the most noble Christian conies or princes use to send and give to you every time. What honor we have bestowed on your nobility, thus according to the will of your most illustrious predecessors, the Dukes of Saxony, for our sake and for the sake of the nobility. Which gift we have given to your nobility in the aforementioned manner, with our permission, and for no other reason than that the person who gave it to us has so far refused to send it, and our skilled man has been able to give to your nobility in your duchy. in your duchy of Saxony, or in your sovereignty of Stete, in which, on account of the presence of the foremost German ecclesiastics and seculars, you would be respected by us with greater praise, honor and esteem. And that he who has done so has sufficiently indicated to your nobility our cousinly and immeasurable love for you, and who would be grateful to us and to your nobility, and although we have many other servants to whom we could have given this gift to your nobility, and have indicated the occasion of this time on our behalf. However, when we recognized our beloved son, notary, chamberlain, and honorable servant Charles of Miltitz, Master Cleric, in our service, we joined them together with great frivolity. And just as we have invented the same Charles from apparent and noble lineage, so he is also graced with good sins and mercy. And your nobility and its nobility and excellence in the most favorable way. For this reason, we have given you this most sacred and most precious gift before all others, and we have given you our support with pleasure. Your nobility shall also, of course, from this most holy gift, be entrusted to us with such great devotion and love, that it may be received more often, and God our Savior and us. Also, to give greater thanks to the holy named shrine, and to show our respect or devotion to us and to the same shrine. For we know that no duke of Saxony has ever been able to do this with such gratitude since the time of Pope Sixtus the Fourth.

Your father Ernst, who was in Rome at the time, has been killed. 2)

Accordingly, noble husband and beloved son, with the most joyful confidence, we call upon the Roses for a pledge of our veteran and special loyalty to you. Then this most holy and most delicious gift, as it came forth from God, so the Holy Roman Catholic Church willed that it should be given to you. The Holy Church willed that the same should be handed over by the hands of the Babylonian, to show the joy and the highest freedom, caught from the extinction of the human race. Which our Savior Jesus Christ redeemed with his most pure blood at the sign of the cross, as it was also previously figured and indicated in the old testament by the redemption of the children of Israel. When the all-true body of the Saviour comes to comfort, lift up, and deliver us in the midst of our needs, the roses will not be compared to it in vain. Then the rose is a flower above all flowers, and the most beautiful and beautiful flower that the earth bears. Therefore, dear son, let this godly odor come and go into the most intimate part of the heart of your nobility, so that you may thereby fulfill that which this same Charles will show on account of your nobility. as we then write of your nobility in another book 3). We hope that you will understand this in your good mind and put it into your noble heart, and that you will see and grasp our holy and benevolent faith even more fervently, in accordance with our hope, to your great lie of courage and greatness. Given at Ciuitat vetus [Civita vecchia]. Viterber

Bishopric, under the fisherman's ring, on the fourth and twentieth day of October. In the year after the birth of the Lord. Thousand, five hundred. and in the eighteenth. Our baby's death in the sixth year.

312 The papal breve given to Miltitzen to the bishop, who would read the mass at the presentation of the rose.

Oct. 24, 1518.

This document is found in Cyprian's Urkunden, vol. II, p. 96 and in. Löschers Ref.-Acta, Vol. II. Since the Elector himself was not present at the handing over of the rose, but had it quietly received by his commissioners, whose head was Fabian von Feilitzsch (at Altenburg on Sept. 25, 1519), the breve will not have been handed over to a bishop.

Translated from Latin.

2) Innocens VIII also gave the golden rose to a Saxon prince. Cyprian 1. c. Vol. II, p. 62.

3) Document No. 250.

1) "pysem" - muskrat.

Leo, Pabst the Tenth.

Venerable brother, salvation and apostolic blessing! The Most Holy Golden Rose, blessed and consecrated with our hands on the fourth Sunday of the holy recent Lent, to which great gift we entrust the beloved son, the noble Lord. Frederick, Duke of Saxony, who, after the manner of his illustrious ancestors, has rendered great service to us and the Holy Apostolic See, among other Christian kings and princes, this year, we wish to consecrate through our beloved son, Carl von Miltitz, our Nuncio, Notarius, chamberlain and secret servant, who has proved himself with us and is very dear to us, to the said Duke and have them appropriated and handed over to him by the same Lord Carl, according to the instruction given to him and with the sacred ceremonies which your brotherhood will observe. Accordingly, we admonish your brotherhood in the Lord and, by virtue of holy obedience, emphatically command you to strive to carefully observe these instructions and ceremonies in the Lord; and furthermore, so that not only the Duke himself may recognize our fatherly love for him from this so great gift, but also the believers in Christ may feel a comfort from this spiritual strengthening: we grant, trusting in the mercy of Almighty God and by authority of His holy apostles Peter and Paul, to all and every believer in Christ of both sexes, who do true penance and confess their sins, also to attend devoutly the mass which you are to say in the episcopal vestments before Duke Frederick on the day of the presentation of the said rose, or the blessing which you will confer on the congregation when the mass is over, and for our and the Duke's welfare, the welfare of the Holy Roman Church and the spread of Christianity, will pray five Our Fathers and as many Hail Marys with devotion, in virtue of the present, in the usual form of the Church, plenary indulgence and forgiveness of all their sins, regardless of all revocations and annulments of equal or unequal pardons made by us and other decrees contrary thereto. However, after the said mass has been held, the present letter shall not be valid at all, but only the One Time. Given in the old city [Civita vecchia] of the Viterbo diocese under the fisherman's ring, October 24, 1518. Our papacy in its sixth year.

B. How Chursachsen did not receive this papal gift, which is otherwise very highly respected and dedicated only to kings, personally, but only through his ministers.

313 Prince Frederick's power of attorney, which he gave to Fabian von Feilitzsch, Haugold von Einsiedel and Günther von Büнау in their entirety and in particular, that they should accept the holy rose from the nuncio of Pope Leo X, Carl von Miltitz, in his place and in his name. Sept. 16, 1519.

This document can be found in König's genealogical history of the nobility, part I, p. 347 and in Kapp, Nachlese nützlicher Ref.-Urk., part III, p. 238.

By the Grace of God, we Friederich, Duke of Saxony, of the Holy Roman Empire, Elector, and of the same Empire in the lands of the Six Rights, and belonging at the end to our Vicariate, at this time Vicari, Landgrave in Düringen and Margrave of Meissen, declare with this letter of ours that we are all men. After the Most Holy in God Father and Lord, Mr. Leo the Tenth of the Name, of the Holy Christian Churches out of Divine Providence Babst, Vnns out of other paternal love with the Holy Roses, on the fourth Sunday in the Holy Lent, according to the praiseworthy custom of the See of Rome, graciously bestowed upon us, and sent to us this with Her Papal Holiness Nuncio, to be delivered to the Honorable of our other, Mr. Carl von Miltitz. Now we are willing to receive this holy and blessed rose in our own person, with great gratitude and reverence as it is born. But since we, for obvious reasons, as we reported to the said Bishop Holiness Nuncio, he himself also knows that he is prevented from doing so in his own person, but so that we do not fail to accept and receive such a gift and donation as much as possible with reverence and gratitude. Thus, we have given to our nobles and dear faithful Fabian von Feylitzsch, Haugolden von Einsiedel, and Günthern von Büנaw, knights sempiternal and particular, such a command and power for our own sake. Give power and authority to the said noble ranks,

We hereby accept such a holy and blessed rose, from the aforementioned Bishop Holiness Nuncio, on our behalf and in our hearts, with proper remorse and reverence, as such a worthy gift, from the Highest Head of Christendom within the clergy, and to ask the Nuncio to pledge submissive gratitude to His Most Holy Holiness for this gracious achievement and gift, which we recognize undeservedly, and to entrust to His Holiness, as the Obedient Son. In witness whereof we have caused to be printed our Secret zwruk to these vnsern letters, which is given at Torgaw, on the sixteenth day of the month of September. After the birth of Christ our Lord five hundred and nineteen years.

Luther's report to Staupitz and Lang, how Miltitz had undertaken to perform a magnificent act with the golden rose at Wittenberg, and already boasted that D. Luther was certainly in his hands; but how he finally presented the rose at Altenburg in the absence of the Elector.

See Appendix, No. 35, § 4 and No. 36, § 2.

Section Seven of Chapter Four.

From the colloquium at Liebenwerda, which was requested in writing by Miltitz during his presence in Saxony at that time, and which was approved by both the Elector and Luther.

A. Von Miltitzens Ansuchen Lamm bei dem Churfürsten und Luther.

315 Miltitzen's letter to the Elector of Saxony, in which he thanks Luther for the gift of 200 florins, which he received after handing over the rose, but at the same time asks for another 200, and then finally asks for the colloquium with Luther in Liebenwerda. Altenburg, September 26, 1519.

From Cyprian's Urkunden, Vol. I, p. 414 in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, Vol. III, p. 828.

Most illustrious prince, most gracious lord, your princely graces have been informed of my recent service, most gracious lord and lord: I have recently written to your lordship, the bishop of Halle, all the contents of the indulgences which my lord, the bishop of Mentz 2c. has between Halle Eyngefurt vnd Anschlagenn let, och doby angetzeyget, dass siyn gl. nicht legatus Ist der heyligen kirchen 2c. forhoff sulch mein schreyben sey Ewrn Curff. gl. I have come to the north, on the sunny day, as I have come to meet with your Curff. gl. and with the heylige roße zw aldenburg Eyn and that with the breue and the bulls Ewr Curff. gl. Com

2c. on monday thereafter I was delivered by Mr. Fabian vonn Feilsch from your curff. gl. because of this measure, that he promised me to your curff. gl. iii year between the two, after which he has transferred ij hundred gülden to me for a ferment as a temporary deed, in which a Christian ruler burns the small lot of the holy church together with the indulgence bulls, of which I am only thankful to your Curff. Gl. as a gift to my most noble lord, I humbly thank your curate for his kindness and for his kindness in granting me my request. It is almost two and a half years since I received from your Honor a b'ebestliche, genad-breve von Bebestlicher heylikeyt, and that your Honor has made me the Pheffinger dem gad genad, von ewr Curff gl vffs fleyssisthe gedant och angetzeygt, dass ich sult befleyßigen die heylige roßen Ewrn Curffl. gl. 2c. which I have done for almost a year, and all my efforts have not been spared, so that I may have been able to get Erlangen, I hope, to your Curiam, with which cost and effort of time I must have done it, to bring me to your Curiam the holy greatness of Erlangen.

1) Eraser..incorrectly: "iii". Cyprian has our reading. Cf. Seckendorf, Uist. I-utk., Uk. I, x". 61a.

Words. From where your Curff gl. I may be unwilling to do so because of the legate who has carried on the cause of the transfer of the great ones, but your Honor will not let me be paid for it, if I hope that your Honor will always be able to conquer my heart. I have recognized, and for this reason, if God gives me life, I will recognize, Your Curate, that I have, at the request and address of Your Curate, secretary to the Count of Nastaw, given him my privilege and prothonotaryship, as well as to Mr. Eberhart the Archbishop, And willingly so is my humble prayer to your Curia, not that I do not ask enough or that I am not led, more than is fair, by your Curia, if I do not do such a prayer to your Curia, the holy rose together with the bulls from Erlangen for a gift, but that your Curia does. By this, I have been informed of my deepest thoughts and hopes that I will carry between your currencies, and by this, I hope for your most noble lord between Erlangen. Thus, I will inform Your Honor of this virtue, that anyone who is faithful according to his own fidelity, will let Your Honor be harmed. I may tell Your Honor that I owe Your Honor in these lands the ij hundred guilders which Your Honor has left to me, which they have paid to me in order to preserve My lands, If I am now to return to Rome, I do not know how I will be served, if your curate will not be kind to me as his servant, whom I hope to be faithful to, it will be quite distressing to me that I will no longer have your curate's permission. Therefore my humble request to your Curate, as to my most noble Lord, is that your Curate will be so kind to me that I may again come with him, as a skilled worker of the holy church, to the place where I have been appointed to serve your Curate. gn. zu dinst vnd Eren ij hundert gülden ferorden zw geben, so wil ich mich wider beffleißigen sulchs vmb Ewr Curff gl In aller vnderdenikeyt zwferdinen, weys gott, allergenedigster her, so ich itzundt fermocht, wolt ich Ewr Curff gl. I would like to leave you unburdened, because God I cannot do anything else, but all compulsion and consolation is with you. I humbly ask you to accept this kindly from me, and to come to my aid, which I would like to be found worthy of your kindness, as for my most noble Lord. I have also been informed by Mr. Fabian von Feylsch that your Curf. I have heard that he has ordered me to act with excommunication and censures against Doctor Martino. I leave you Curff Gl. I do not think that I have thought of it, but I may laugh at other words, if the lewth with doctor Martino have made me a fool, and let a word be said about it. Your Curatorship knows that I have acted with doctor Martinus in your Curatorship between Aldenburg, I will abide by this, and if my humble request is that your Curatorship will kindly order that doctor Martinus not come to your Curatorship, then I will have agreed with him on the matter, and after that I will write to your Lordship of Trier. H. H. of Trier, I demand, I want to be a forfuger, the matter will be settled at the end of the day of Doctor Martinus. Your Curate will let me be princely two and a half days before Doctor Martinus arrives in Libenwerd, so that I may be there, and I hereby declare myself to your Curate as my most noble lord, dated between Aldenburg on Monday after Mathew the Apostle [26 Sept.] 1) 1519.

E Curff gl humble and beloved Capellan Carolus von Miltitz.

316 Miltizen's letter to Luther inviting him to the colloquium in Liebenwerda. Altenburg, 26.²) Sept. 1519.

This letter is found in Cyprian's Urkunden, vol. II, p. 127 and in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 832.

Translated from Latin into German.

Brother Martin, very special friend!

Hail! I am surprised that so many months have passed and that I have not received a letter from your brotherly love. I pass this over to you, as one of my most valued friends. However, I would like you to request a trip to the city of Liebenwerde as soon as possible and also to indicate the day when you would like to be present there. I will also dispose of myself there, for it will certainly be for your good. Therefore do not delay! For many dangers are threatening, which I hope will be averted by your presence. I hereby entrust myself to your brotherhood, as to my most beloved brother. Go

1) Löscher 1. a. p. 831, note: "Was der 21. Sept.", which Walch reprinted for him.

2) Again, the old edition has Walch's "Sept. 21".

Given at Altenburg, Monday after the feast of St. Matthew the Apostle [Sept. 26] 1519.

Your brother, Carl von Miltitz.
Nuncio and Apostolic Commissary, with his own hand.

To the venerable father, brother Martin Luther, professor of sacred theology, my dearest friend at your own hands.

Luther's report and thoughts on this to D. Staupitz.

See Appendix, No. 36, § 2.

B. Of the Elector's and Luther's willingness to do so.

318: Prince Frederick of Saxony's letter to Spalatin that the colloquium at Liebenwerda has been approved and that D. Luther is to be notified of this. Luthern should be informed of this.

Sept. 30, 1519.

This letter is found in Cyprian's Urkunden, vol. II, p. 129 and in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p.832. Also in Erlanger Briefwechsel, vol. II, p. 160.

By the grace of God, Fridrich Hertzog zu Sachsenn Churfürst und Vicarius.

Unnsern grus zuvor wirdiger lieber Andechtiger.

We hereby inform you of our noble opinion that today we have received a letter from Karl von Miltitz to Doctor Martinus, which we are sending to you to hand over to Doctor Martinus, and we do not wish 1) to keep to ourselves that he has also written and indicated to us how he intends to send Doctor Martinus to him in love, now we cannot really consider what he may do with him. But we consider that doctor Martinus is neither to refuse nor to refuse to come to him, therefore doctor Martinus, as well as we will consider it good. So we want to tell the doctor that he, Ern Karlhn, when he wants to be at Liebenwerdt, will write a day to him, and send us the letter by this messenger, so we want to send it for Ern Karlhn to the Scharsfensteyn.

Since we also know that Charles has let himself be heard that he wants to be our friend the Archbishop of Trier, and that we are giving him a letter to this friend of ours, he has let Charles of Aldenberg be heard that he will first act with Doctor Martinus and then send our letter to the bishop of Trier with a messenger. Therefore we want to demand our letter 2) again from the von Miltitz, because if doctor Martinus comes to him, then the matters will perhaps gain a different opinion than has been announced and indicated in the writing, we do not want to restrain you, then we are inclined to be gracious to you. Date to the Lochaw on Friday sant hiero- nimus day [30 Sept.] anno dni. XV C. XIX.

Fridericus.

To the future our chaplain and dear andechtigen Mr.
Jörgen Spalatin thumherrn ' zu Altenburg 2c. 2c.

Luther's letter to the Elector of Saxony, in which he encloses Miltitzen's above letter and promises that he is ready and willing to appear at Liebenwerda on October 9. Wittenberg, October 1, 1519.

This letter can be found in the original in the Oock. Ootdan. 379, No. 8; printed in Cyprians Urkundm, vol. I, p.419; in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p.834; in the Leipzig Supplement, p. 28; in De Wette, vol. I, p. 339 and in the Erlangen edition, vol. 53, p. 27. In the latter two editions with the " wrong date: den 30. September". We have added the inscription, which is very defective in the original. We give the text after Cyprian.

To the most illustrious, highborn Prince and Lord, Lord Frederick, [Duke] of Saxony, Elector, Archmarshall of the [Holy Roman Empire] and of the same [in the Saxon] right lands Vicario, Count in] Thuringia and Margrave of White my most gracious Lord and Patron 2c.

Jhesus!

Most Illustrious High Porter Prince, Lord Privy Councillor. To Your Electoral Grace I have the honour to know how Mr. Carlus of Miltitz has written to me to give him a day's notice against Libenwerdt, such as

1) "want" is missing in the Erlanger Briefwechsel, but is found in Cyprian.

2) The words: "dem von Trier" 2c. until here are missing in the Erlangen correspondence.

E. C. F. G. may recognize from the synergy of the writings enclosed here. Because I then see myself as more of a friend to Carlo than he might think, I have not wanted to do this to E. C. F. G.'s displeasure," and "attributed to him" on the Sunday of S. Dionysius [Oct. 9], 1) for eight days: I have not been able to find out more. I do not think that there is anything to fear. Even if it were true, it would not be much of a problem. I humbly wish, as it is the pleasure of E. C. F. G., to have my letter sent to him along with E. C. F. G.'s authority. Herewith I bow to E.C.F. G.vntertheniglich. May God keep us blessed for a long time, amen. At Wittenberg on the Sunday after Michaelmas [1 Oct.] 1519.

E. C. F. G.

Augustinian Augustinian chaplain D. Martinus Luther.

C. From the colloquium itself, which took place in October 1519.

Luther's short report to Spalatin on the Liebenwerd Conference.

10 M Oct. 1519.

The Latin original is in the 60ä. OotU. 379, toi. 4; printed from it in Seckendvrs Hist. I-utk., lib. I, p. 63u; in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 835; in Strobel-Ranner, p. 52; in De Wette, vol. I, p. 343 and in Erlanger Briefwechsel, vol. II, p. 187. German in Spalatin's translation in Cyprian's Urkunden, vol. II, p. 140 and in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 835.

After Spalatin's translation.

JEsus. 2)

First of all, Karl von Miltitz 2c. has ordered my most noble lord, the Elector of Saxony, to give me his permission.

2. secondly, to greet the Spalatinum on his behalf.

1) Löscher and Walch erroneously state October 8; likewise Seckendorf, Ilist. lib. I, p. 63 u.

2) Added by us according to the Latin original. This word proves that we are not dealing with a fragment of a letter, as De Wette 1. e. and Seidemann, Miltitz, p. 17 assume, but that it is a short report, which is perhaps still written in Liebenwerda. The date is Conjecture of the Erlanger Briefwechsel.

Thirdly, Karl von Miltitz asked if I wanted to continue the agreement and negotiation between him and myself at Aldenburg, and if I would like to make my most gracious lord the Archbishop of Trier 2c. a judge. To this I answered: Yes, I would like to suffer my most gracious lord at Trier to judge.

4 Finally, Karl von Miltitz said that he had now delivered the official letter and wanted to take his way against Rome at this time. He also did not want to take his leave, for he had previously negotiated this matter verbally with me. 3)

5 After a brief discussion, we talked about the Babst's power. In which matters Charles and I have agreed that the apostle's power, which he has now, is not of God's right. But the priest shall nevertheless have another commission or another authority, which the other apostles have not had. Then I ask, what is the difference between the painting and the bevel of the bishop? Says Karl von Miltitz, that the painting and the bevel were one thing alone, which they gave to Sant Peter in a special place in the world. And said: O we will soon become one of the things.

D. Von Miltitzens an Chnrtrier und Chursachsen abgestattetem gar unlauterm Bericht von dieser Conferenz.

1. of Miltitzen's false pretense, as if Luther had promised in the Colloquium to travel with him to the Elector at Trier.

321 Miltitzen's letter to the Elector of Saxony, in which he claims that Luther has agreed to travel with him to the Elector of Trier. Oct. 10, 1519.

From Cyprian's Urkunden, vol. I, p. 421 in Löscher, Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 836 and in Erlanger Briefwechsel, vol. II, p. 189.

3) Here in the original Latin is the signature: Alartinus l^utUer. The following is a kind of postscript.

Sublime Lord Highborn Prince and Gentleman, my beloved and obedient distincts are yours for the time being, noble Curate and Gentleman. As her Fabian von Feylschz Jungst zw aldenburg by reason of Ewr. Curff. Gn. Doctor Martin's matter, I talked to him, and answered him by writing that I myself would not like to deal with Doctor Martin, and to understand his motives, I let him know, that yesterday I was at his court, and after all necessity I talked with him, and I am free to talk to my most gracious lord of Trier about laying down this inheritance everywhere. I have also written to my lord of Trier. Hern von Trier, dobey synen genaden Ewr. If I receive an answer, I will send it in the most favorable way to your Lordship. With this I wish to humbly and sincerely thank Your Royal Grace, all my most gracious servants, for their kindness. Given between Mülburg on Monday after Dionisi [10 Oct.] 1519.

E. Curff. genaden vndereniger humble
Capellan Carolus von Miltitz.

2. how Luther thoroughly answered to the Elector of Saxony.

322 Luther's quite different report of this to Spalatin, at the same time painting Miltitzen's character....

See Appendix, No. 37, U 1-4.

323 Prince Frederick of Saxony's answer to von Miltitz that Luther's report was quite different and that, according to reports, he had wanted to return to Rome; at the same time, he expressed his displeasure that Miltitz had sent the princely letter, which he should have returned, to Trier against the given order.

Oct. 12, 1519.

Ans Cyprians Urkunden, vol. II, p. 131 reprinted in Löscher, Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 837 and in Erlanger Briefwechsel, vol. II, p. 190 (with the incorrect reference: "Löscher III, 387").

Gott waits.

By the Grace of God Friderich Duke of Saxony and Elector.

Dear devotee and councilor. We have heard your letter on the action you had with doctor Martinus, and as you indicate among other things therein, that the same doctor Martinus is content to tear to our friend from Trier with you 2c. Therefore, we do not wish to restrain you, since Doctor Martinus has reported to us that he has asked you whether he wishes to continue the agreement and negotiation between you and him here at Aldenburg, to remain and to be judge, and to suffer our friend the Archbishop of Trier to be judge: to which he answered yes, he would like to suffer our friend of Trier to be judge. And you should have been denied at last, you have now executed the official request, and want to take your way to Roma at once. You also did not want to take your leave, for you had previously discussed this matter verbally with him 2c. That it was not at our discretion to settle with your petition. But that you indicate that you have sent our letter to Trier, we have not failed to do so, for we have not written to you that if the letter is to be sent by messenger, we ourselves would appoint one for it, and that you should send it back to us. Then we have written to our friend from Trier about the agreement we had at Franckfurt with his dear Doctor Martinus, when an imperial diet is to be held and we are to attend it, that we then bring Doctor Martinus with us. But if we were to attend such a Diet, we would also send Doctor Martin with us. We did not want to do that to you, but we are inclined to be gracious to you. Date to the Lochaw on Wednesday after Sant Dionysia Day [Oct. 42] Anno Domini 1519.

3) Miltitz then objected further against Luther.

324 Miltitzen's further letter to Saxony, in which he does not want to know anything about the fact that he had said to Luther that he had now finished his commission; at the same time, he apologizes very humbly because of the letter sent to Trier by the Elector; but otherwise insists that Luther had promised to travel with him to Trier. Dated Dresden, 14 October 1519.

This letter is printed from Cyprian's Urkunden, vol. I, p. 422 in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 838 and from the latter in Erlanger Briefwechsel, vol. II, p. 198 (with Löscher's incorrect reference: "Cyprian II, 422").

Most Illustrious Highborn Prince, Your Royal Grace, my subordinates are all willing to give their consent, Your Grace, and you, I have received a letter from Your Royal Grace on the last week between the Lochau, in which Your Royal Grace has received the letter that I have had with Doctor Martin between Libenwerd, and has given it to you. In view of the meeting I had with Doctor Martin in Libenwerd, and the fact that Doctor Martin did not come to terms with my letter, I have humbly refused to tell Your Honor what Doctor Martin has told Your Honor. otherwise than as I have written to your Curator, he will have been warranted in all that I have given him all the freedom and security, which I will write to your Curator. 1) I have asked Doctor Martinus whether he wants to enter into an agreement between Aldenburg and my Lord of Trevir, and whether he wants to appoint your Curff. I have suffered between a judge, on which he told me that he would gladly do so, on which he would have been out of trouble, but that I should have told Doctor Martino that because I had spoken to him verbally, I had complied with his order, and had not given me any Rome again. 2c. It did not happen from me, most noble curate, and in the war, where I said, if I would not take the trier, between me and my lord the archbishop. I have given my consent to the Archbishop, and I will not make myself a judge again, but if D. Martinus decides otherwise, I must leave it at that. Your Honor shouted to me and asked that I send my Lord of Trier the letter which Fabian von Feilsch had given me between Aldenburgk, his Honor, meanwhile your Honor had told me that your Honor had written to me, if I wanted to send the letter with a messenger, I should send it to your Honor again. If I want to send it back to you with a special offer, I will humbly and explicitly tell your curate that I have not asked for any of your curate's money, I have not received any letter from Aldenburgk, which I have sent to your curate, that I do not have to send the letter to my lord of Trier, which was sent to me by Fabian von Feilsch, my lord of Trier. Hern von trier zwzwschicken vnd ich mich aldo warthe sulchen brieff ober

1) forhilt - behaved.

2) and on the first Monday 3) I have sent no salt from Milberg 4) to Sittich von Berlips, who should then order it for no more money, while I had no knowledge of Erlangen between Mulbergk, to whom I had been entrusted, who would not have wanted to lawffen any money, please most humbly ask Ew. I would like to be excused, because I, as God wants me to be far away, do not like to think that your Curff. gl. was not lyb or frölich. Silence then, that I want to do something, that is against your Curff. Gl, with that I befriend your Curff gl In all demudt vnd untertenikyt, as minn allergenedigsten Hern, Datum, zw Dressen am Freytagk nach Dionis. [Oct. 14, 1519.

E Curff gl vndertheniger humble Capellan Carolus von Miltitz.

Luther's written explanation of the Miltitz letter to the Elector Frederick, how it never occurred to him to travel with him to Coblenz, and how his words and opinion had otherwise been. Wittenberg, October 15, 1519.

The original of this letter is in the Cock. Ootlian.

379, no. 6. Printed in Cyprian's Useful Documents, vol. I, p. 425; in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 840; in the Leipzig Supplement, p. 29; in De Wette, vol. I, p. 349 and in the Erlangen edition, vol. 53, p. 28.

To the Most Illustrious, Highborn Prince and Lord, Lord Frederick, Duke of Saxony, Elector, Archmarshal of the Holy Ro. Reichs Erzmarschalk and K. Mas. in Sächsischen Ländern fVicario], Landgrave of Thuringia, Margrave of Meisten, my most gracious Lord and Patron.

Jhesus.

Most Illustrious High Porter Prince Gnedigister Sir. Your Electoral Grace is always pleased to have my poor prayer and service. Most gracious lord. I have understood how my friend and master, Mr. Carol von Miltitz, wrote to E. C. F. G., as if I had undertaken to go with him to Trier. This is almost strange to me

2) "ferrithe" should probably mean: beriethe.

3) October 10.

4) "saltz", that is, Langensalza.

horenn. If I am not otherwise requested by him, then whether I am still willing to ley the Treuirensen Archiepiscopum zunn indicem, as was discussed at Aldenburg. I have said so, and as E. C. F. G. has said with the same high priest 2c. at Franckfort, I have said: And also E. C. F. G. has said and said: As also our prior 2) presently hears, and still says. Then I thought nothing less than to travel to Trier for the Imperial Diet, with yrgend eiuem man! Not a word was thought of it, indeed, Carol said that he now had his commission before the court and wanted to go to Rome in a punitive manner. So I am still willing and ready to go to the Diet according to E. C. F. G.'s advice and promise, and do what I am supposed to do. But now I do not want to pledge, then keep silent, in such a time as the war pestilence and other accidents everywhere. This I have humbly wished to report to E. C. F. G.: so that E. C. F. G. may know in glowing terms what we have done at Libenwerd. Herewith I humbly compliment E. C. F. G.. At Wittenberg on Saturday, vigilia St. Galli [Oct. 15], 1519.

E. F. G.

Sub-subject Capellan" vnnd servant
D. Martin Luther, Auglstinser.

326 Prince Frederick of Saxony's answer to Miltizen's other letter above, in which he sends him Luther's declaration itself enclosed, and again assures him that he has written to him that he would like to send the letter back to Churtrier. Lochau, 17 Oct. 1519.

In Cyprian's Urkunden, vol. II, p. 133 and printed from it in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 842; from Löscher in the Erlanger Briefwechsel, vol. II, p. 210, with the incorrect proof: "Cyprian II, 151", which is taken from Löscher, but refers there not to this but to the next following document. The correct proof is in Löscher, vol. III, p. 831, note.

1) In Cyprian: "haldenn"; De Wette: have. Our reading is given by the Erlanger Briefwechsel.

2) Prior Conrad Helt was present at the colloquium.

GOtt walts.

By the Grace of God Fridrich 2c.

Our greetings first, venerable, dear, devout and councilor. We have heard your letter, which you have sent to us now, and the notice we have given you on account of the conversation you had with Doctor Martinus, 3) has come from Martinus' report. We have also not omitted to send copies of your letter to us, which you have done so, to the same D. Martinus, who wrote to us again, as you will see from the copy 4). But concerning the letter to our friend the Archbishop of Trier, we do not know anything else to remember, then we have written to you to send the same letter to us again, because you wanted to order it with a messenger. We may also have suffered that it came to pass, and that it was not sent back and forth in such a way. We will not hold you to that. Then we are inclined to be gracious to you. Date to Lochaw on Monday after Sant Gallus day [17 Oct.] 5) Anno Domini 1519.

327 A letter of insinuation from Elector Frederick to Elector Trier, in which the letter reclaimed from Miltitz and also received back was sent enclosed.

Dat. Lochau, October 25, 1519.

This letter is found in Cyprian's Urkunden, vol. II, p. 51 and in Löscher, Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 842. In Löscher and in Walch with the wrong date: "den 21. October".

GOtt walts.

Vnsere friendly service before.

Heir in God especially dear friend. We freely admit to E. L. that he has let Karl von Miltitz hear us before, that he is willing to come to your love, so we have had the other letter written to E. L., 6) and have given it to him.

3) Added by us, because a predicate is obviously missing.

4) This is the previous letter. Compare No. 48 in the appendix of this volume.

5) In Löscher and in Walch the wrong date is: "the 16th of October".

6) Löscher remarks I. c.: "This letter, which has been commemorated in the letters mentioned so far, has been lost. - The letter had not yet reached its final destination, but had been sent, as we see from No. 324, from Miltitz to Sittig von Berlepsch, Captain at Langensalza, for onward transportation to Coblenz. Therefore, the return was possible.

E. L. He then changed his mind, and wished to send the letter to his beloved by messenger, so we demanded it of him, and send it herewith to E. L., because the matter has come to a head, and ask with pleasure that E. L. let the poor monk, in so far as he has the right, be favoured. He is then willing and willing, if an Imperial Diet is held, to comply with our agreement, and to in all fairness, in that which he has found to be wrong. Thus, von Miltitz was told that he should act alongside E. L. in the matter, and we did not want anything else, but that the action should be for E. L. alone. We have not wished to restrain E. L. in this way. We are fully willing to provide this service. Dated at Lochaw on the Tuesday after St. XIM June's Day [25 Oct.] Anno Domini 1519.

Section Eight of Chapter Four.

Von Miltitzen's somewhat more serious dealings with the Church of Saxony ministers at Torgau in the matter of Luther.

A. As Miltitz reports to Chursachsen that the papal court is very unwilling about the delay and has sent him stricter orders - therefore he wants to come to the Elector in Torgau.

328 Miltitzen's letter to the Elector of Saxony, in which he reports that he has received letters from Rome, that the pope is very angry that nothing serious is being done in this matter, and that Luther is still allowed to preach; how he himself has been blackened at the Roman court, and he worries that the ban will break out and the matter will be given to another nuncio. Dec. 8, 1519.

From Cyprian's Documents, Vol. I, p. 408.

Most Serene High Lord and Prince. Your Curffl. Genaden sint meyne vnderthenige gehorssame Dienste zuvoran bereyt. Your Highness and you. I have been on the way to the Lochaw between your Curators. Your Curffl. Genaden to visit, there beside with Ew. Curffl. Genaden Doctor Martinus sache belangennde zw handeln, die weyl Ich mergk und for awgenn ist, dass sich die sachen von tagk zwagk Ergern vnd die lewthe In weyter beschwerungk Jrer gewyßenn gefürt werden und Ew. Curffl. Genaden sulchs von bebestlicher heylikeyt geschrieben, vnd vetterlich ermant, dass Ew. Curffl. The Holy Roman Catholic Church has been asked by the Holy Roman Catholic Church to establish the Holy Roman Catholic Church in the Holy Roman Catholic Church, and to ensure that the Holy Roman Catholic Church is not destroyed during the time that the Holy Roman Catholic Church is in possession of the Holy

My Lord Exalted. I have recently received a letter from Rome stating that the Holy Trinity greatly desires that this matter be brought to such a lengthy conclusion, and has given me serious instructions to demand that the matter be brought to a conclusion. The Most Reverend Holiness does not want the matter to proceed in any way, so I have taken care, Most Reverend, that some bishops have written to the Most Reverend Holiness, and have made a terrible mess of the matter, and indicated how many people are being misled by Doctor Martin's writings and preaching, and added that His Holiness, as a heir of the Christian Church, has the right not to put the matter to other people who will act more diligently against Doctor Martin than has been done up to now, so that his evil actions will be stopped. May Your Grace notice, if it should be given to another than I fear, if it would be taken longer, I have no doubt, Doctor Martinus will not attain such a direction, as I hope God will attain him. It will not happen before the last great day, and I would like to ask your Curffl. Gn. Landen great irthum fulgen darawß mit interdicten vnd andere geistlichen censuren. Thus, most gracious sir, Georgio Spalatin and Hieronymus Rudolf have met me on the other hand, and have not brought me back again, but Hieronymus has told me that it would be good to indicate by my letter to your Curff. Gn. what I want to do about this matter with your Curffector, whom I have pleased. And give Ewr. Curffl. I humbly acknowledge that I will not do anything else with your Cur. Curffl. I have no other business to do with Your Honor than what I have indicated here to Your Grace, concerning Doctor Martinum, ferhoff och zw Got, so ich zw Ewr. Curffl. Gn. to consider such ways, that the matter is not only to be dinstlich, but gräßlich zwtrechtilich between the Concordia. If the matter arises in such a way that Doctor Martinus will be able to satisfy your Curffl. I have complied with my order, which I have from the Supreme Holiness in this matter; and if I want to return to Rome, then your Curl. I have been ordered to go to Rome again, so that I can visit your curate. Gn., which I will then, if it pleases Ew. Gn. will keep. Then Ew. Curffl. I will not allow myself to be burdened with goods, so that I can ask your Curl. I will not let myself be burdened with goods. I would not want to be burdened with goods that would burden your honor in some way, or that would be unpleasant, because the time I am alive, your honor should not be burdened with them. Curffl. His Grace will always find me to be a faithful servant, who will always do according to his own wishes what His Grace wishes. Curffl. His Grace's pleasure. I therefore humbly submit to Your Grace with all due respect. Gn. in all humility, as my most gracious lord, datum zw torgaw iin die beatae Mariae virginis [8 Dec.]

1) 1519.

Ew. Curffl. Gn.

humble Capellan
Carolus von Miltitz.

B. What the Elector, who was staying at Lochau at that time, had his ministers negotiate with Miltitz.

329 The Electoral Council's concerns about what should be reported to Miltitzen or written again.

From Spalatin's uuto^{rap}uo in Cyprian's Urkunden, Vol. I, p. 411. - Regarding this and the two following objections, Seidemann, "Miltitz", p. 20, notes that they are to be placed after December 8, which will be correct. For the trial took place, as No. 331 shows, on Dec. 11 at Torgau.

Most Gracious Sir, upon your request, we consider that you may subsequently write the following opinion to Karl von Miltitz, indicate it or have it rewritten.

First of all, that he is determined to ensure that E. C. G. does not have anything to do with Doctor Martinus' affairs. He has also offered to dispense with him beforehand. As well as Doctor Martinus Widerumb to deprive himself of his C. G. land and principality so that no one can be neth half to. The complaint is granted without reservation. Thereupon he asked C. G. would not let him come away. Then he would like to make the matter more difficult in other places, then under his C.G.'s authority, and on that basis E.C.G., as the obedient official, and the younger ones against official authority. Halden 2) will, so far in no way geliden. Therefore, who the lack of E. C. G. not gewest vnd noch nith were.

1) This is Conssptionig of Mary, since Mary was conceived; the day of Mary's birth is September 8.

Secondly. That Doctor Martinu's matter would become more serious from day to day, and that the people would continue to complain about their consciences. If E. C. G., who has decided on the matter and has nothing to do with it, would make Doctor Martinu's facts, ler and opinion better or better, as it would not be considered a jrthumb, but rather a rightly founded opinion, by many scholars and merciful people. But E. C. G. can suffer, if it were an error, that it would be established, and that these and all things in the whole of Christendom would be correct, unjust and unjustifiable.

Thirdly, the fact that the matter has so far been settled was not lacking in E. C. G., then he knew that our most gracious Lord of Tryer had granted the matter to be heard and settled at the next Imperial Diet, and that it would thus remain unchanged, who was also to blame on E. C. G.

Fourthly, that. Some bishops wrote in Rome and complained about the matter, each one must be allowed to write what he wants. But it was to be expected that many complaints would have been made, if they had not so often complained in various ways to Doctor Martinus.

Fifthly, because E. C. G. has not been able to do anything about the matter, nor has Doctor Martinus been able to respond to his request. The Royal Council hopes that the Royal Council will not burden the country and the principality with interdicts and ecclesiastical censures. In view of the fact that C. C. G. does not want to give the prince any reason to be obedient to his authority.

Sixth, because E. C. G. would like to please Bebstlicher Heyt. and do it for him, she asks. Jr to indicate which form Doctor Martinus should follow E. C. G., so that he may satisfy Bebstlicher Heyt. that E. C. G. wishes to follow. C. G. will gladly indicate to Doctor Martinus, and to please Bebstlicher Heil, and to present to him what is necessary in the matter, as the obedient son, and will not let Doctor Martinus be comfortably unopened.

2) In Cyprian: "half". But, as can be seen from No. 330, "Halden" is to be read.

330 What is to be said on behalf of our most gracious Lord the Elector of Saxony 2c. Vicarii 2c. is to be discussed with Herr Karl von Miltitz.

From Cyprian's Documents, vol. II, p. 142. - In Cyprian's table of contents, sheet b 3^A, this document has the title: "Was mit Herr Karl von Miltitz Doctor Luthers Reise halber gen Trier soll geredet werden. From Spalatini Concept."

Firstly, that our most gracious Lord has received his letter 1) from Torgau and has read his content. And after his C. G. went to the Lochaw because of his death and for the sake that his Curfl. He sent us a letter asking if he would like to make a request for the matter. His Grace then asked to hear the same from him and then to report to his Grace that this letter and submission were quite contrary to his previous action and that it was out of all proportion. Therefore his C. G. im as a countryman, and his father's C. G. has been gracious to him and has therefore also graciously forgiven him for charging himself with this evil matter. Then he wished to remember without doubt what form his C. G. had taken in the past year. G. attributed to the Cardinal Sancti Sixti in the past year, that his C. G. does not want to take anything from doctor Martinus, and wants to abstain from them as much as possible, and that doctor Martinus himself humbly agrees, so that no one may come to trouble and ecclesiastical censures for his sake, to admit to the will of the Almighty, to do from Wittenberg, and to express my most gracious Lord's country and principality. How then all this will be C. G. reported all this to him at Altenburg at his first arrival and insisted that his C. G. wanted to make doctor Martinus' matters necessary, and let him come from his C. G.. Then his C. G. would not like to be other than a Christian prince and obedient son in civil matters. Holiness, and to be found against His Holiness, and not against His Holiness. Holiness. As he asked with all his might, his C. G. will not let doctor Martinus come in any way from then on, but will let him live longer. Then he should come to the other end, the matter may become much more difficult and burdensome, then they were in these lands. And following on your C. G. he-request doctor Martinus to come and talk to him. Thereupon, they had so much to do with each other, as Charles was pleased to hear, that doctor Martinus agreed to appoint my most gracious Lord of Trier 2c. as a commissioner or judge, and what he would instruct him to do and follow in accordance with the law. Karl von Miltitz then let himself be heard to take his next way to the named Cardinal Sancti Sixti, on his knowledge, will, to do, and if he has nothing to do, and to show the same Cardinal such doctoris Martini's request, and to faithfully prevent it, so that the matter may be settled and executed in a reasonable and faithful manner. So the matter was delayed until between Easter and Pentecost, when he wrote 2) that doctor Martinus should come in haste to Coblenz to have his case heard and discussed by my lord of Trier in the presence of the venerable Cardinal and himself, with the request that he should not encounter any complaint from the Cardinal. Shortly thereafter he wrote 3) that doctor Martinus should not be allowed to come to Coblenz in any way, but that he should see my most gracious lord himself within a few days, and report to his C.G. himself about the circumstances of the case. So on Friday after Vocem Jucunditatis [June 3] he came to my most gracious lord in Weymar and brought his C. G., among other things, a letter from my most gracious lord of Trier, in which my lord of Trier indicated to his C. G. how the matter was to be handled. G. how the said Cardinal and he of Miltitz have sought to demand doctorem Martinum to his C. G., with the request to look into the matter with lead, so that it may be done in the most gentle way, and so that his C. G. may always be able to see it. G. ymmer mögen, nyder gelegt würd 2c. And after the Waltag came in, and this matter thus passed, my most gracious lord of Trier with my most gracious lord the Elector of Saxony 2c. decided in the breaking out of the Waltag at Franckfort that doctor Martinus should be provided for at the next Imperial Diet, that he who is to be murdered for Martin 5) should submit himself to my most gracious lord of Trier to interrogate this matter and to lay it as much as possible. So who it has remained until now. So my most gracious Lord of Trier as the Commissarius has not yet required doctor Martinus, and has not set him any other appointment, regardless of when doctor Martinus of

1) Dec. 8, No. 328.

2) May 3, No. 304.

3) Den II. May, No. 308.

4) The letter of May 10, No. 306.

5) This is Martini, the II. November.

of his C. G. would have shown himself to be fair, and would again have no complaint at his C. G.'s request to appear. But if doctor Martinus has so many judges, and one wants to refer him to the one from Trier, the other to him, and the third perhaps to another, he has to see for himself how it will be. Thus, Karl let himself be consoled at times, that this matter could easily be rejected. Now his C. G. again has nothing to do with doctor Martinus's matters, and will also, as before, express himself about them as much as possible. From all of which it is evident that he alone has caused the matter to be so far torn down, and that doctor Martinus, out of complaisance to his favors, must give himself in reproach to save his Cristl. ere. And because of his C. And because the defect has not existed and still does not exist, he may not judge for what reasons his C. G. lands, as he should have done before, are to be burdened with interdicts and other ecclesiastical censures. However, his C. G., as a Christian prince, has no reason to do so, nor would he like to do so, and his C. G. has always been pleased with the pious wolf way of all Christendom throughout her life, for which reason his C. G. also relies on doctoris Martinis. G. relied on doctoris Martini not to take on any further, but if anything else came of it, no one was to blame. But because he states, among other things, that if doctor Martinus follows his C. G., then he will have his right of counsel. He has done enough in this matter, and will immediately return to Roma 2c. and ask the C. G. to show us how and in what form the C. G. should follow doctor Martinus, so that he may do enough for the C. G.'s sake. Bevel does enough. Then E. C. G. would like to have the matter pointed out to doctor Martino, and what is necessary to help him. Then E. C. G. who has ever been inclined as a Christian Elector and again inclined to His Beatitude and Holiness. He is also inclined to be the obedient son of His Holiness, and to live in fair matters.

Nota in erfahrung zukommen welche Bischöfe die fachen mit ihrem schreib gen Rom beschwert haben 2c. und was sust zu wissen gut wer, und bevor was er für bevel in den jüngsten schrifften aus Rom entfangen hett. Item of the interdict etc. To take care of it.

Martinus halber Sundays after Nicolai sll. Dec.1 at Torgau Anno Domini 1519 is to be traded. From Spalatin! uuto^rupüo." - By mistake, Seidemann, Miltitz, p. 21: "M. in Lochau at the Churfürsten. 8""kenck. I, 63 (Dec. II)." However, Seckendorf also reports that the Elector came to Torgau on Dec. 11.

In this way, and to the benefit of our most noble Lord in this matter, I will allow myself to be led to it:

That silence shall be kept, and Doctor Martinus shall not be given cause to write.

Gein Rome have written, his alone spared from this action.

That Mr. Karl drives the matter, and lets himself be incited. If the matter takes this form, he is warned to let it go. Then a complaint should be made, so it comes out of his cause.

Nota, to ask where the glide remained, of which Tryer wrote. 1)

If Doctor Martinus will not be spared, then he shall be spared from my most gracious lord.

Nota, to ask what Her Karl before Bevelh of Tryer, or Bebstl. Heil. hab.

If D. Martinus comes without being asked, he will not be heard gladly in Trier.

What were the ways to indicate what shape come out of the things.

We will gladly help D. Martinus to come to the interrogation according to his will, but that he will be secured.

Why he does not abolish that Emser does not write those at Jutterbock, and others, and does not give Doctor Martino cause.

The disputation at Leyptzig.

What Doctor Martinus is doing is for the salvation of his people, which he is urged to do. For my most gracious lord has commanded him that he shall not give any cause, or move immanently to unwillingness, and shall not take anything burdensome.

Nothing is to be done until the judge makes a decision on the matter. What is then found, it remains in the name of God, and know his grace but not to be denied.

A messenger at Tryer.

Nota Tryers Letter.

Grace ere and wells erzeugt.

The furstellen so acted in this fact.

Doctor Martinus has offered to be obedient, and still is, if he becomes humble. He alone may have fallen to other people.

Doctor Martinus will complain highly, because 331: What is to be done with Miltitz at Torgau [on Dec. 11].

From Cyprian's Urkunden, Vol. II, p. 148. - In Cyprian's Inhaltsverzeichnis, Bl. b 3^, this document has the title: "Was mit Herr Carl von Miltitz Doctor the matter is before the commissioner, so that it can be dealt with again.

The matter is before Tryer as before the commissioner, and he shall draw with ban and other complaints.

Do you think, my most gracious lord, that it is done benevolently, and that his C. G. does not deserve this from you. So Doctor Martinus will complain about it. Perhaps one will find pious people who will be sorry for him.

Chapter Four, Section Nine.

How Miltitz held out in Saxony after this until around Fastnacht 1520.

A. Von Miltitzens Correspondence with Chursachsen concerning the Bishop of Merseburg, Prince Adolph of Anhalt.

332 Miltitzen's letter to Chursachsen, in which he informs him that he has been with Bishop Adolph at Merseburg; he wants to give an oral report of his dealings with him upon his return.

Jan. 19, 1520.

From Cyprian's Documents, vol. II, p. 153.

Most Serene Highborn Prince and Gentleman. My humble and humble dignity is ready for Your. Your Royal Graces are ready to accept. Most Reverend Prince and Sir. I give Your. I give Your Royal and Princely Graces the courtesy of informing you that yesterday I had the pleasure of visiting my lord of Mersburg. Lord of Mersburg yesterday, and have come to your Grace with a decision that your Grace, by his own will and suggestion, will give me the right to have the right to the right to the right to the right. Gn. They have shown me and read their recent letter, and have told me about it. I have learned many things that were hidden from me, but where it comes from the army, that his Grace, the Holy Roman Emperor, has told me. Eur. Curfl. Gn. wrote, that everything was long, but not long to write; but if God wrote to me between Ewr. Curfl. If God helps me, I want to discover everything to Your Grace. Grace. I have not found the Provincial between Halle and Leiptzk, so I must go to Krausschwitz 1) to the monastery, where, as I stood, I will find him. And from there I will go back

1) "Cronschwitz", a village with a former Augustinian nunnery in Saxony - Weimar. "Krausschwitz" will be based on a reading. - Regarding the "Provincial" Seidemann remarks: "Ob Rabe?"

alß meinem Genedigsten Herr: Eylent zw Leipzk am Abent Sebastiani sl9. Jan.] l. 5. 20.

Ew. Curfl. Gn. unterteniger Capellan
Carolus von Miltitz, zu Mayntz und Trier Thumher.

B. Von Miltitzen's correspondence with Chursachsen concerning a life pension.

333 Miltitzen's letter to the Elector of Saxony, in which he asks for the continuation of the 100 fl. pension, which he enjoyed in Rome, for life, and at the same time tells how he made fun of the Bishop of Meissen in Stolpe, since Luther's writing against the official had arrived there that very evening. Scharfenvberg, February 19, 1520.

From Cyprian's Documents, Vol. I, p. 427.

Most Illustrious High Lord and Prince. My humble service is appreciated in all respects by Your Most Serene Highness. Most noble prince and master. I merely wish to inform Your Royal Highnesses that I have decided to rise up in a short time. In the meantime, Your Royal Grace, together with Your Royal Grace, has been my brother for three years on behalf of Your Royal Grace and Your Royal Grace. And for these three years I have been promised a hundred gold pieces of rubbish, which I have humbly submitted to your grace and to your grace. My brother, as I wish to thank my noble and honorable lords, but I am completely aware of this day and night. So it is to Your. My sincerely high esteemed Please, Your Honor. I hope that you will be so kind to me, and that you will give me the money for the rest of my life, so that I may be comforted by what I may have from Your Grace. In the meantime, there is no one on earth to whom I am more inclined than Your Grace and Your Grace's brother. My brother. I hope that I will be able to keep it different, that Ew. I hope that your father and your brother will not take any pleasure in my death, since I know that my parents, your father and your father's father, will be in the hands of your father and your brother. Curffl. gn., so I would not want to be otherwise than a faithful one to your E. Curffl. gn. Be found. Your Grace has humbly requested that I be honored with this money, and that I be given this money for the rest of my life. This I will do in all sincerity for the sake of your curtesy. With this, I hereby submit myself to your honor as my most noble lord, and with all due respect, I will give you a gracious and courteous reply. Date to the scharffenbergk about fastnacht sunday [19. feb.] In XV c. and XX. year.

E. Curffl. gn. vndereniger humble Capellan Carolus von Miltitz.

Follows a postscript.

Most noble Curator and Sir. I have sent you a piece of stone that has grown into a stump, of which I have told you that this piece of stone was cut from a stone that was IX. cubits long. Elen langk were, Saller Ew. Curffl. gn. genugk Erlangen Ew. Curffl. gn. begert, nawe mer 1) zw schreibenn. So I read only to your Curl. gn. 2) know about other people who are going to fastnacht. Most gracious Curffl. and her. I came to the bishop of Meissen on Thursday, and was happy with his grace, and talked with his grace in many ways, including Doctor Martinus, whose friend his grace is not. After the evening meal, we were quite careless in our drinking. The secretary of my noblest Lord of Mentz, Licentiatius Reysch von Pirnen, came to see the new seger. In the night, and has brought my lord Doctoris murtini responsum 3), so has his genad sulchs respons von sthundert gelessenn. In my vnd des Official keggenwertikeit, welcher her official ganz vbel zw friden was, vnd Je syr 4) der official flucht. The sir I laughed, as my gn. her of white sulchs och wohel zwfiredenn was not. I hope that I will inform you of what my Lord of White Sorrows wants to do, but with the advice of my Lord Hertzogk Georgen. Lord Hertzogk Georgen. Thus my Lord of Meissen has given me the chicklet to hand over to my Lord. I gave it to my lord on the day of my birth, and his ffl. lord read it himself. I have laughed a lot about what I want to say to your Lordship, and have argued with myself that your Lordship's letter was long, but I want to have saved it for your Lordship. I will be on the 2nd day Monday and Thursday between the sixties, which is what my ffl. gn. wanted, not considering that my dearest brother, 5) who is in God's grace, has died for XXI days. What I have done, I do not wish to persist. I hope that your grace will kindly consider my request and give me a kind, consoling and cheerful answer. This I will do in all diligence together with diligent servants for the sake of Your Grace as for the sake of my most noble Lord. date supra.

It let my mother tell your curffl. gl. ir gebeht with all vnderenikeyt.

334 Prince Frederick's answer to this, in which he leaves the decision about the requested service money to his brother's decision, and nevertheless reports other news to Miltitzen. 21 Feb. 1520.

From Cyprian's Documents, vol. II, p. 155.

By the Grace of God Fridrich, Duke of Saxony, Elector and Vicar 2c.

Our greetings beforehand, dear and dear councilor. We have received your letter, and after your request that our brother and we pledge you the dinstgeld for the rest of your life, we want to show such your request to his love, and then give you further answer.

The newspaper you have written to us, we have received from you and have no doubts.

1) This is new fairy tale.

2) In Cyprian "an" instead of: gn.

3) Luther's answer to the note that went out under the official's seal at Stolpen. Walch, St. Louis Edition, Vol. XIX, 462.

4) "syr", which is vveryer.

5) Seidemann, Miltitz, p. 22: "Miltitzens leiblicher (?) Bruder Sigmund f zu Rabenau."

We will not do anything else that may be required of us, according to our statements.

We also give you for new tzeitung zuerkennen, das vns in kurz geschriben, das sich Ro. Ko. Mail. Commissarii have finally come to an agreement with the pundits about the Wirtenberg land. Thus the royal guard at Dhenemarck has denied the Swedes several thousand men. And the mayor of Prussia shall have wrested from the king of Poland several hundred horses and the great and good city of Elbungen.

And now there shall be a day at Lucerne in the land of Switzerland, also, Most Reverend Holiness, the Ro. The King of France and the Pundits shall have the power to remove from the Wol that one of them take care of the Switzer, and let it be understood that the von Wirtenberg shall also be there in his own person. We have not wished to hold this against you, of your noble opinion, for we know very well that you like to have permission. We are inclined to be gracious to you. Date at Torgaw on the Tuesday after Esto mihi [21 Feb], Anno Domini XV 6. XX.

We have also received from you the sent over stone, and will have it tried, and if it is found to be useful to us, we will have it ordered again. We do not wish to have it shown to you in our opinion. Date vt supra.

335 Miltitz's letter to the Elector of Saxony from Augsburg, dated March 20, 1519, where he had traveled to seek Cardinal Cajetan. In it, he indicates that he had fallen ill at Landshut in Bavaria when he had wanted to go to Linz to see the Cardinal.

From Cyprian's Urkunden, Vol. I, p. 431, who, however, erroneously places this letter in the year 1520. (Tentzel, Historischer Bericht, Vol. I, p. 363, No. XIX.) This letter is the answer to No. 295, dated March 4, 1519. Either this date is erroneous, or Miltitz erred in his statement in our letter: "äatui Quinta Dlart."

Most Serene Highborn Prince, Most Gracious Lord. My sincere, fully willing, obedient service, along with my commandment, is to Your Lordship. Curffl.

and princely graces with all due respect. Most noble prince and master. I have received a letter from your Curff and your Grace of the date quinta Mart: on which I formally declare that your Curff and your Grace are both my letters 1) are between two grains. But that I Ewer Curff. vnd ff. genad with my schreibenn so lange fortzogen. It has been a great pity for me, and that I have not received an answer from Rome until now, since my most holy father has passed this month, and has been almost weak, which has hindered my expedition a little, and I am grateful to your Curff. I have not been to the legate in person, but I have been in his presence at all times, and so it was necessary for me, because I did not want Linz, when the legate was, I was ill between Landshut, and I was healthy. The legate of Linz did not come to Franckfort. I do not ask for Franckfort, because I will find the legate, as his Highness has written to me, and I hope that I will be able to resolve the matter concerning Doctor Martin. I hope to find a handle, which will be used by my most holy father the Babest to prosecute Doctor Martin's case, and if God will help me, I will write to the President of the Republic and to the Federal Government, and I will inform them of all matters, which are now being dealt with by the legate. I have told my brother, Mr. Pheffinger, what is being said here, but he will not keep it up, I do not want to cry my way back to France, so that I may write the truth of this matter to your Curia and to your ff. gn. Herewith I respectfully submit myself to your curff. and ff. graces. Datum awßburgk am XX. tag Martii 2c. [1519].

E. Curff. vnd ff. gn.

humble capellan

Carolus von Miltitz nuntiu8.

1) Seidemann, Miltitz, p. 10: "The letters are not available". But there is no doubt that one of the two letters is letter No. 294, dated 5 Feb. 1519. Seidemann 1. e. p. 9 overlooked this letter.

2) be entitled to

The tenth section of the fourth chapter.

Von Miltitzen's effort to prevent the publication of the book "An den Adel deutscher Nation. His presence at the Augustinian convent in Eisleben.

A. How Miltitz makes a great complaint about Luther to the Elector and asks him to get Luther to pardon the going out of the book he has under his hands.

336 Miltitzen's letter to the Elector Frederick of Saxony, in which he complains that Luther holds the Roman See in such great contempt and wants to publish a book against it; asks that he be stopped, and promises to attend the Chapter of the Augustinians at Eisleben so that Luther's dispute may be settled. Aug. 19, 1520.

From Cyprian's Documents, Vol. I, p. 433.

Most Sublime Highborn Prince and Lord. My humble servants are at your service. Curffl. genaden in aller vnderthenigkeyt zuuoran bereyt. Most noble Prince and Sir. While I know that all these 1) Your. Curffl. Grace. The time when I would like to take the matter into consideration, the first time, has come, the Most Reverend Prince, Doctor Martinus. and here, Doctor Martinus Lütter, has taken it upon himself to make the Holy Roman Church's reformation first, and to do so in such a way that he will have mercy on me, and as I have far away, between day and hour, will continue to write by his urgent wrath, which grieves me and weighs me down, but I do not see any great reason for this mass of the most solemn sanctity and the stool of Rome to be shouted at, and it is to be feared by the Reverend Curl. And here, as Doctor Martinus continues, with a book which he has under his hand, 2)

1) In Cyprian: allecryt.

2) This is the writing: An dm christlichen Adel deutscher Nation von des christlichen Standes Besserung". Walch, St. Louis Edition, Vol. X, 266. It appeared in mid-August 1520; by August 18, the mood at court about this writing was already known in Wittenberg. Miltitz had therefore come too late. - The letter to Amsdorf is dated June 23 (not 20), 1520.

I am afraid that God, who is so worthy of such an inheritance, and the Holy See of Rome have brought me into such respect and disobedience that I fear I will not be brought back by my life. For this reason, my humble submission to your Cur. Gn. on the grounds of the sacredness of the Church, and of the Holy See of Rome. Curffl. His Grace wants to receive from the Almighty God the reward, and to see in the matter that Doctor Martinus, with his plea, will have the book completed. I am in doubt as to whether Doctor Martinus will be able to help me. Gn. radt from this jrthum vnd vngengenad, he is looking for beybestlicher heylickeyt, zw helffen. I will now come to the Chapter in Eisleben, act there with the Patre Commissario, together with the other brothers, and think of good means, take Doctor Martini's advice, make an effort and an effort, and turn his letter into another style, which will all be done in the first place by Your Curial Grace. Grace. Intercesfion vnd radt. I want to write from now on according to the chapter between your Cur. Come to your Curl. Gn. what I have obtained from the patribus between them. Bith Ewer Curffl. Gn. for God's sake Ewer Curffl. I hope that I will be able to help Doctor Martini to the best of my ability, that I will apply to him with the best of my ability, and that I will bring him back to grace. For the search is not as black as we monkeys make it. Therefore, I hereby submit myself to Your. Curffl. My Lord, to whom I give all my consolation in the name of God. Datum Eilent zw Halle sonntagk nach Rochi [19 Aug.] 1520.

E. Curffl. Gn.
humble capellan
Carolus von Miltitz.

337 The Elector's answer, in which he says how he does not really know the occasion of things, except that it has just now been reported to him how Luther is supposed to have sent out a booklet.

let, which he would have held up however something, where its letter would have arrived rather.

Aug. 23, 1520.

From Cyprian's Urkunden, vol. I, p. 436. In Walch with the wrong date: Aug. 24.

By the Grace of God, Frederick Duke of Saxony and Elector 2c.

Our greetings beforehand. Dear and dear Counselor. We have now received your letter concerning Doctor Martin Luther, together with all its contents. But since we do not really know the occasion and form of this matter: Only that we now report, among others, that a booklet is said to have gone out from the said Doctor Martinus. And if this letter of yours had come to us, and we could have prevented it from being kept for some time, we would gladly have turned the matter over to you. We do not wish to restrain you. Then we are inclined to be gracious to you. Date at Lochaw on Thursday Sanct Bartolmes evening [Aug. 23]. Anno Domini 1520.

B. About the Augustinian convent in Eisleben, and what has been done about Luther's cause in Miltitzen's presence, as well as with Luther himself through deputies sent to him.

338 Luther's report to Spalatin that Staupitz would resign his vicariate at this convention.

See Appendix, No. 38, ? 1.

339 Miltitzen's very polite letter to Luther, which he gave to the deputies sent to him, asking him to obey the deputies; he would have come to him himself if he were not afraid. Dat. Aug. 29, 1520.

The original of this letter is in the 606th Oollmn. .V. 336, No. 14. From it in Cyprian, Urkunden, vol. II, p. 177 and in the Erlanger Briefwechsel, vol. II, p. 466.

Translated into German.

Miltitz to Luthern.

My greetings to you, my learned Martine! I have been in the chapter of your order, which is in ice.

I had been kept alive, especially to see you as a friend whom I hold very dear; but since I could not have the honor, I decided to write to your brotherhood. I have spoken to the brothers by force of our most holy Lord, the Pope, in the chapter, which will not be a harm to your brotherhood, but will be very beneficial. Therefore, I exhort your brotherhood not to be repugnant to their brothers who will visit your brotherhood, but to obey them and the whole chapter and to follow their advice, which I hope will never grieve your brotherhood. I would come to your brotherhood myself if friends of your brotherhood did not pursue me and consider me an enemy of your brotherhood. I hope, however, not to leave these regions, for I have spoken to your brotherhood as my dearly beloved friend. Farewell. From the city of Eisleben, Aug. 29, 1520.

Your

Carl von Miltitz, with his own hand.

To the venerable father and highly learned gentleman,
Brother Martin Luther, the Doctor of Theology 2c., his special friend.

340. Miltitz's very strange letter to Chursachsen, in which it is told what the Augustinians, whom Miltitz had sent to Luther, had done, and that he had heard with joy from the new Augustinian vicar that Luther had been willing at their request to write to the pope and to keep himself as an obedient son; as well as that he met Eck on the way to Leipzig with the bull full of defiance and insistence, and of the danger into which Eck had fallen; whereby Miltitz completely disapproved of the publication of Eck's bull and complained greatly about how Eck was slandering him in Rome. He therefore urges the Elector to give the young Cardinals some medals, and also to give him such medals and some money, so that he can keep his patrons in good standing with the Pope. Leipzig, Oct. 3, 1520.

From Cyprian's Documents, Vol. I, p. 438.

Most Illustrious Highborn Prince, Your Eminence, Your Curate, my humble thoughts are in all respect to you, Your Eminence. As your Cur. Grace to

I am informed by Maitzstadt that Wolfs does not come to this Jarmargkt Jtzundt 1). Recently Maitzster 2) has said that he will give money to others in the Jarmargk, but he has not received anything from me that concerns me completely. Which because I hope that Ewr. Curffl. Gn. Jtzundt zw Franckfurt mit Im meinert halben", vnzweifeln geret, vnd Ew. Curffl. Gn. know how all my affairs are, that I have been on the margin of the money great notortig, wy I the Ewer Curffl. I have informed the court of two goths, and I only want to pay the money to the court. Gn. at your behest. Your Cur. They do not want to let me leave, because I cannot return the money. I must confess that I have two gifts to give to my lords, who are my protectors in the best of holiness, whom Echiuss has poured out to me, and has lied to me in a grave manner in the matter of Martinus. Gn. I must be happy. This is my humble and humble request to Your Grace. Curffl. Grace, that because the bull is not against Your Cur. Gn., your. Curffl. Will, with the greatest sanctity, nevertheless write a little, to which I do not wish to receive an answer from Your Grace. I have not received an answer from your Curl, but I have considered that Doctor Martinus is writing to his sainthood, but has not considered the bull. I have also humbled Ew. Curffl. Gn. zw Gothe humbly begged E. Curffl. Gn. that the Young Cardinals 3) ... my companions, Ew. Curffl. gülden müntz ii. oder drey schengken, vnd so fihel der silberne, den sie sint bei meiner seelen selikeyt alleceyt gueth gewest vff Ewer Curffl. gn. seythen. Your grace will only give me the

1) In Cyprian: "come he".

2) In a letter from Miltizen to Perkheimer, Leipzig, Jan. 1, 1521 (Niederer, Nachtr. I, 170), a third spelling of this name is found: "Matzsted" next to Wolf Hofmann.

3) Cyprian notes: "that Miltitz advised to give gifts to the young cardinals comes from the fact that the old ones could not do anything with Leo, since he had to thank his elevation to the young ones".

one that mine 4) has stolen from me. It is also my wish that our court will allow me to enforce the collection of the fine. I humbly request that your grace will not bear any responsibility for my request. I wish to do so for the sake of your I wish to be found guilty of this for the sake of my most noble lord, whom I consider to be the best of all. Therefore, I hereby declare to you that you are my most noble lord, and that all my consolation lies with him on this earth. Date: Wednesday after Michaelmas [3 Oct.] 1520.

E. Curff. genaden humbly Capellan Carolus von Miltitz.

Luther's report to Spalatin, Sept. 1, that Miltitz had given a speech in the assembly and asked the Fathers to give him advice on how to appease Luther, and what they had answered him.

See Appendix, No. 39, §1.

342 Another report of Luther to Spalatin, what had been done because of him from this general chapter.

See Appendix, No. 13, § 1. 2.

343 Another report from Luther to Spalatin, about how the Eisleben deputies had been with him; however, he did not want to write to the pope now that he had heard that Eck had arrived with the bulls.

See Appendix, No. 40, §1.

4) In Cyprian: "me ner". We assume that the i has fallen out.

Section Eleven of Chapter Four.

About Miltitzen's last conversation with Luther at Lichtenburg in October 1520, and how far Luther had given in even then.

Luther's report to Spalatin that he was about to leave for Lichtenburg for another conference with Miltitz.

See Appendix, No. 41, § 4.

Luther's letter to Spalatin, in which he reports to him how he had become one with Miltitz at Lichtenburg, that he wanted to write to the pope again and assure him that he had never wanted to harm him personally, and that all blame should be placed on Eck.

Oct. 12, 1520.

The original of this letter is in the Anhaltische Gesamtarchiv. Printed by Aurifaber, vol. I, p. 230p (classified as if it were dated from the Antoniusstage, and Walch just offers: "Antonii", that is, the 17th of January); by De Wette, vol. I, p. 496 (dated: "On the 12th or 13th of October") and in the Erlanger Briefwechsel, vol. II, p. 494. According to the latter we have translated. The date of the letter is certain from the letter of the preceptor Wolfgang Reißbusch, No. 347: "Volgend ist gestern Doctor Martinus vmb I Vrhe nach mittag weg gefahren."

Newly translated from the Latin.

To the godly and learned man, Georg Spalatin, Duke of Saxony's court preacher, his friend in Christ.

JESus.

Hail! We have met at Lichtenburg 1) my dear Spalatin, Mr. Carl Miltitz and I, and as much as I hear from him, we have determined with great hope that I shall publish a letter to the pope in both languages, which is to be added to some small book.

1) This place is called in the Wittenberg edition (1853), vol. VI, p. 255, "Liechtenberg S. Antonius Ordens"; Miltitz writes in No. 340: "Lichtenburg!"; in Latin: pieptkupoZas Vntonianae and in the editions usually written "Lichtenberg". Seidemann in his "Miltitz" writes correctly "Lichtenburg". This village is about two German miles from Torgau. Cf. Ungewitter, Erdbeschreibung und Staatenkunde, Vol. I, p. 435.

lein should be prefixed, 2) in which I would like to tell my story, and how I never attacked his person, so that I roll the whole burden on Eck.

Since all this is in truth so, I can do it easily, and will, as humbly as I can, offer silence, only that the others also keep quiet, so that one sees that I have omitted nothing that one would wish, which could in any way serve peace from my side. I have always been ready to do this, which you know very well. Therefore, I will do this above all in the next few days. If what we hope will happen, it is good; if it happens otherwise, it will also be good, because it pleases the Lord. Farewell. At Lichtenburg of the Antonian Lords, 1520.
Martin Luther.

346 Luther's very humble letter to Pope Leo X, written after Miltitzen's persuasion in Lichtenburg. After 13 Oct. 1520.

This letter is found as dedicatory writing to the Draetutus de libertutb epristiann Latin in the Wittenberg edition (1551), tom. II, toi. I; in the Jena (1579), torn. I, toi. 432p and in Aurifaber, vol. I, p. 255 with the wrong date: VI Vprips Vnno LI.O.XX. With correct date, unno ^II)XX, 86xtn Keptkrupris, in De Wette, vol. I, p. 497 and in the Erlanger, opp. vnr. nrZ., tom. IV, x. 210. German, translated by Luther himself, in the Wittenberger (1554), vol. VII, p. 54p; in the Altenburger, vol. I, p. 352; in the Leipziger, vol. XVII, p. 299; in De Wette, vol. I, p. 506 and in the Erlanger, vol. 53, p. 41. This letter, although written after 13. This letter, although written after October 13, 1520, was backdated to September 6 at Miltitzen's request in order to give the impression in Rome that it was written within ten days of the General Chapter of the Augustinians at Eisleben.

2) Luther did this in the writing "von der Freiheit eines Christenmenschen", Walch, St. Louis Edition, Vol. XIX, 986, where in the note also the title and location of the Latin edition is given.

To the Most Holy in GOD Father Leoni, the Tenth, Pope of Rome, all blessedness in Christ JESU
our Lord, Amen.

Most holy in God, Father! The trade and quarrel, in which I have been involved with some desolate people of this time, now into the third year, forces me to look after you from time to time and to remember you. Yes, since it is considered that you are the main cause of this dispute, I cannot refrain from remembering you without ceasing. For although I have been urged by some of your un-Christian flatterers, who have heated up on me without any cause, 1) to invoke a Christian free concilium from your chair and court in my cause, I have never yet so alienated my courage from you that I have not with all my strength always wished the best for you and your Roman chair, and with diligent, heartfelt prayer, sought as much as I could from God. It is true that I have almost despised and tried to overcome those who have so far endeavored to praise the height and greatness of your name and power. But there is one thing that I must not despise, which is also the reason that I am writing to you again, and that is that I am noting, as I promised, 2) and that I am being accused of not having spared your person.

2) But I will freely and publicly confess that I am not aware of anything else than [that I,] 3) as often as I have thought of your person, have always said the most honest and best of you. And if I had not done so, I could not praise it myself in any way, and would have to confirm my accusers' judgment with full confession, and would not rather sing the contradiction of my iniquity and wickedness than this, and revoke my criminal word. I have called you a Daniel of Babylon, and how I have so diligently protected your innocence against the defiler Sylvestrum, may any who read it understand needlessly.

1) Thus the Wittenbergers. In Latin snoviontldus. In the Erlanger: "erhethet".

2) promised - blasphemed.

3) Inserted by us for the sake of easier understanding.

(3) Your reputation and the name of your good life are known throughout the world, and are more glorious and better praised by many scholars than that anyone should touch it with some cunning, however great he may be. I am not so foolish as to attack only the one whom everyone praises; for this I have always had and henceforth will have the wisdom not to touch even those who otherwise have a nasty cry before everyone. I am not comfortable with the arid sin, which I know well, as I also have a beam in my eye [Luc. 6,41.42..], and certainly cannot be the first to throw the first stone at the adulteress [Joh. 8, 7.].

4) I have attacked sharply, but in the common, some unchristian doctrine, and have been nasty to my adversaries, not for their evil life, but for their unchristian doctrine and protection. 4) Which makes me so unrepentant that I have taken it into my mind to remain in such diligence and sharpness, regardless of how some interpret it to me, as I have Christ's example here, who also calls his adversaries by sharp diligence: serpent children [Matth. 23, 33. St. Paul calls Magum a child of the devil and full of wickedness and deceit [Acts 13,10], and some false apostles he calls dogs [Phil. 3, 2], deceivers [Tit. 1, 10] and transgressors of God's word [Gal. 1, 7]. If the soft, tender ears had heard such things, they would have to say that no one is more mordant and impatient than St. Paul. And who is more mordant than the prophets? But in our times our ears have become so tender and soft through the multitude of harmful flatterers that as soon as we are not praised in all things, we cry out that one is mordant; and because we cannot otherwise resist the truth, we still evade it, through fictitious causes of mordancy, impatience and immodesty. But what is the point of salt if it does not bite sharply? What is the edge of the sword for?

4) The words: "and protection", which are not expressed in Latin, will mean: for the sake of the protection given to them in their ungodly doctrine.

if it is not sharp to cut? For the prophet says, "Let the man be reproached who does God's commandment above," and spares too much [Jer. 48:10].

Therefore, I ask you, holy father Leo, to accept this apology of mine, and to consider me as one who has never done anything evil against your person, and who is thus minded, who wishes and wishes you the very best, who also does not want to have any quarrel or quarrel with anyone for the sake of someone's evil life, but only for the sake of the divine word of truth. In all things I will gladly yield to anyone; the word of God I will not, nor may I, forsake nor deny. If anyone has a different idea about me, or understands my writing differently, he is mistaken and has not understood me correctly.

(6) But this is true, I have freshly touched the Roman throne, which is called the Roman court; which also thou thyself, nor any man on earth, must confess otherwise than that it is worse and more shameful than ever Sodoma, Gomorrah, or Babylon. And as far as I can see, his wickedness can neither be advised nor helped from now on. Everything has become exceedingly desperate and groundless. That is why I was displeased that the poor people all over the world were deceived and damaged under your name and the appearance of the Roman church; I have opposed this and will continue to oppose it as long as my Christian spirit lives in me. Not that I measure myself against such impossible things, or hope to do anything in the most abominable Roman Sodoma and Babylonia, because so many angry flatterers oppose me before; but that I recognize myself a guilty servant of all Christian people, therefore it behooves me to advise and warn them, that they may ever be less in number and with less harm corrupted by the Roman destroyers.

(7) For this is not hidden from you, how for many years now nothing but destruction of the body, of souls, of goods, and of all evil things, the most damaging examples have been washed and torn down from Rome into the whole world. All of which is publicly known to everyone today, because the Roman church, which in the past was the most holy church, has been the only church in the world.

Now it has become a murder pit above all murder pits, a jackanapes above all jackanapes, a head and kingdom of all sin, death and damnation; so that it is not easy to think what more wickedness might increase here, if the end Christ himself were to come.

8. but you, holy father Leo, sit like a sheep among wolves [Matth. 10, 16.] and like Daniel among lions [Dan. 6, 16. ff.] and with Ezekiel among scorpions [Ezek. 2, 6.]. What can you do against so many wild wonders? And if already three or four learned, pious cardinals fell to you, what would that be among such a bunch? You must perish by poison before you begin to help the cause. It is over with the Roman See, God's wrath has invaded it without cessation. It is hostile to the common concilii; it does not want to be instructed nor reformed, and yet it cannot prevent its raging unchristian nature; so that it fulfills what was said of its mother, the old Babylon [Jer. 51:9]: "We have healed much in Babylon, but she has not yet been healed; we want to let her go.

9 It should be your and the cardinals' work to prevent this misery, but the disease mocks the medicine, horses and wagons give nothing to the carter. That is the reason why I have always been sorry, you pious Leo, that you have become a pope in this time, who would be worthy to be pope in better times. The Roman chair is not worthy of you and your like, but the evil spirit should be pope, who certainly rules in Babylon more than you.

O! would God that you, having been stripped of honor (as they call it, your most harmful enemies), would hold on to some sinecure or your paternal inheritance! Truly no one should be honored with such honor, except Judas Iscariot and his like, whom God has cast out [John 17:12]. For, tell me, what are you good for in the papacy, but that the more angry and desperate it is, the more and stronger it abuses your power and title, to damage people's property and soul, to increase sin and shame, to dampen faith and truth?

O most blessed Leo! who sits in the 1) most dangerous chair. Verily, I tell you the truth, for I favor you.

(11) If St. Bernard complains about his Pope Eugenius, since the Roman See, even though it was already at the worst at that time, still ruled in good hope of improvement, how much more should we complain about you, because in these three hundred years wickedness and corruption have so irreparably taken over! Is it not true that under the heavenly heavens there is nothing more evil, more poisonous, more hateful than the Roman court? For it far surpasses the Turks in virtue, that it is true that Rome was a gateway to heaven in ancient times, and is now a wide-opened night of hell, and alas, such a night that no one can close by God's wrath; and no counsel is left, for if we would warn and preserve some, they would not be swallowed up by the Roman maw.

12) Behold, my Lord Father, this is the cause and movement why I have pushed so hard against this pestilential chair. For I did not intend to rage against your person at all, that I also hoped I would earn grace and thanks from you, and be recognized for your best 4) if I only attacked such your dungeon, yes, your hell, freshly and sharply. For I respect that it would be good and blessed for you and many others to muster all that all reasonable, learned men are able to muster against the desolate disorders of your unchristian court. They are truly doing a work that you should do, all those who cause such a court all sorrow and all evil; they honor Christ, all those who

1) So the Wittenbergers and in Latin. In De Wette: "des".

2) Walch offers: "seinen Pabst Anastasio klagt", while the other German editions have: "seinen Pabst Eugenium klagt". Of all Latin editions, only the Erlanger, opp. var. urZ., torn. IV, p. 213: suo Vrmstasio oomputitur, while all others read guo LuZonio. The latter will be the correct reading, because to Eugenius III Bernhard addressed his "äo oonsiäorutiono lidd. V", and both died in the same year 1183 in which Anastasius IV became pope. This is confirmed by what is said in § 23, where it says in Latin: soä aomulor 8th Lornäräuru in iidoNo Ennsici. ää Lu^onium.

3) De Wette and the Erlanger: "des".

4) Wittenberger: the best.

to disgrace the court most of all. Recently, they are all good Christians who are evil Roman.

I will speak even further. The same thing would never have come into my heart, that I would have made a fuss against the Roman court or disputed anything about it. For when I saw that he could not be helped, that food and effort were lost, I despised him, gave him a letter of leave, and said: Goodbye, dear Rome, henceforth stink what stinks, and remain unclean for and for what is unclean [Revelation 22:11.] I have therefore gone into the quiet, reprov'd study of the holy Scriptures, that I might be beneficial to those with whom I dwelt. Since I did not act unfruitfully here, the evil spirit opened his eyes and became aware of it; he quickly awakened his servant John Eccium, a particular enemy of Christ and the truth, with a senseless ambition, so that he suddenly dragged me into a disputation, and seized on a word about the Pabstium that had slipped my mind. Then the great, glorious hero threw himself upon me, sputtered and snorted as if he had already caught me; pretended that he wanted to dare and carry out all things in honor of God and praise of the holy Roman Church; puffed himself up and presumed upon your power, which he wanted to use to appoint him the supreme theologian in the world; 6) that he was also sure of, more than of the papacy. He thought that it would be not a little advantageous for him to lead Doctor Luthern in his shield. Now that he has failed, the sophist wants to become nonsensical; for he feels zero, how through his guilt alone the disgrace and dishonor of the Roman See has opened up in me.

Let me here, holy father, also act my cause once before you, and accuse you of your right enemies. You are undoubtedly aware of how Cardinal St. Sixti, your legate, dealt with me at Augsburg; truly immodest and untruthful, yes, even unfaithful, in whose hands I placed all my affairs for your sake, so that he should command peace; I wanted to give the cause of peace to him.

5) that is, calm.

6) summoned == outspoken. - "that he waits", that is, so that he may make himself.

let there be an end and be silent, if my adversaries would also be silent, which he could easily have done with one word. Then the tickle of temporal fame itched him too much, despised my bidding, supported himself to justify my adversaries, to leave them only longer in check, and to command me to recant, of which he had no command. So it has happened by his wanton outrage that the matter has since become 1) much worse, which at the time was in a good place. Therefore, what followed after that is not my fault, but the fault of the same Cardināl, who did not want to grant me that I keep silent, as I asked so highly. What more could I do?

After that, he Carol von Miltitz, also your Holiness' embassy, came, who with much effort, maturing back and forth, and exerting all diligence to bring the matter back to a good place, from which the Cardinal has haughtily and freely repudiated it; finally, through the help of the most illustrious, Highborn Elector, Duke Frederick of Saxony 2c., brought it to be discussed with me several times.

16 Here I have again let myself be instructed, and in honor of your name keep silent, to let the matter be heard by the Archbishop of Trier or the Bishop of Numburg, and to divorce him; which was done and ordered. Since this was done in good hope and peace, your greatest, right enemy Johannes Eccius falls with his disputation in Leipzig, which he has undertaken against Doctor Carlstadt, and with his ranting words he finds a fistful of the papacy, and turns his banners and whole army on me unawares, so that the proposed peace is completely destroyed.

17 He is waiting for Carolus; the disputation has proceeded; judges have been chosen, but nothing has been done. Which does not surprise me. For Eck, with his lies, letters and secret practices, has so embittered, confused and shattered the matter that, if the verdict had fallen on which side, a greater fire would have been lit without doubt, for he sought glory and not the truth. So I have always done what I was asked to do, and I have not left anything undone that I had to do.

was due. I confess that from this cause not a small part of the Roman unchristian nature has come to light; but what is to blame for this is not my fault, but Eccii's, who submitted to a cause of which he was not man enough, seeking by his honor to disgrace the Roman vices throughout the world.

18 This, holy father Leo, is your enemy lind the Roman See. From his example everyone may learn that no enemy is more harmful than a flatterer. What has he done with his flattery, but only such misfortune that no king could have brought about! Now the Roman court's name stinks badly all over the world, the papal guard is weak, the Roman ignorance has a bad cry; which would not have been heard if Eck had not maddened Carol's and my proposal of peace; which he now feels himself, and, however slowly and in vain, is unwilling about my outgoing booklets. He should have considered this before, since he was prancing after glory like a brave, horny horse, 2) and sought nothing more than his own, with your great disadvantage. He thought, the vain man, I would be afraid of your name, give him space and keep silent (for of art and skill, I hold, he did not presume). Now, when he sees that I am still confident and lets me continue to be heard, the late revenge of his sin comes to him and he realizes (if he realizes otherwise) that there is one in heaven who resists the arrogant and humbles the presumptuous spirits.

Since nothing was accomplished by the disputation, but only greater dishonor to the Roman See, he Carolus Miltitz came to the fathers of my order, requested counsel to settle the matter and keep it quiet, as it then stood in the most violent and dangerous way. Some brave men were sent to me by them, because they did not suspect that anything could be done against me by force; they requested that I should honor your person, holy father, and excuse your and my innocence in writing; believing that the matter had not yet been settled.

1) In the old editions: seint.

2) hemerte - neigh.

I am thoroughly lost and in despair, where the present father Leo wanted to lay his hand on it according to his innate, highly praised kindness. But since I have always offered and desired peace, so that I might wait for quiet and better study, this has been a dear, joyful message to me, I have received it with thanks, and have let myself be guided most willingly, and have recognized it as a special grace, if, as we hope, it will happen. For for no other reason have I weaved and rumbled with such strong courage, words and writing, that I laid down and quieted those whom I well saw to be far too small for me.

20 So now I come, dear father Leo, and lying at your feet, ask you, if it is possible, to lay your hands on them, to put a bridle on the flatterers, who are enemies of peace, and yet pretend peace. But if I should revoke my teaching, nothing will come of it; no one may do it to him, for he would drive the matter into a greater tangle. For this I do not like to suffer rule or measure to interpret the Scriptures, because the word of God, which teaches all freedom, should not nor must be imprisoned. If these two things remain for me, nothing else shall be laid upon me that I will not do and suffer with all my will. I am hostile to quarrels, I do not want to excite or irritate anyone; but I also want to be unirkritated. But if I am provoked, I will not be speechless nor without writing, if God wills it. Your Holiness may ever take all this strife to her with light, short words and eradicate it, and enjoin silence and peace, which I have always been eager to hear.

(21) Therefore, my father, do not listen to your sweet ear-singers, who say that you are not a pure man, but mixed with God, who commands and demands all things. It shall not be so; neither shalt thou perform it. You are a servant of all the servants of God, and in a more perilous and wretched condition than any man on earth. Do not be deceived by those who lie and pretend to you that you are the master of the world, who will not let anyone be a Christian unless he is subject to you; who say that you have authority in heaven, hell and purgatory. They are your enemies, and seek to corrupt your soul. As Isaiah says [Cap. 4,12. 9,16.]: "My dear people, those who praise and exalt you, they deceive you." They are all mistaken who say that thou art over the Concilium and common Christendom. They are mistaken who give you alone authority to interpret the Scriptures; they seek nothing more than how, under your name, they may strengthen their un-Christian pretensions in Christendom; as the evil spirit, alas, has done through many of your ancestors. Finally, believe no one who exalts you, but only those who humble you. This is God's judgment, as it is written: "He has deposed the mighty from their seats, and exalted the lowly" [Luc. 1, 52].

(22) Behold, how unequal are Christ and his governors, when they all desire to be his governors; and I verily fear that they are too truly his governors. For a governor is a governor in the absence of his lord. If then a pope rules in the absence of Christ, who does not dwell in his heart, is he not all too truly Christ's governor? But what then is such a multitude, but a gathering without Christ? What can such a pope be but a final Christian and an idol? How much better did the apostles do, who only called themselves servants of Christ dwelling in them, not governors of the absent one, and let themselves be called.

I am perhaps insolent that I am considered to teach such a great height, from which everyone should be taught, and how some of your venomous flatterers accuse you, that all kings and judges received judgment from you. But in this I follow St. Bernard in his book 1) to the pope Eugenius, which all popes should know by heart. I do it not because I think I am teaching you, but out of pure, faithful concern and duty, which compels everyone to take care of our neighbors, even in matters that are safe, and does not make us pay attention to dignity or undignity, as it diligently perceives the neighbor's fate and misfortune. Because I know how your holiness] weaves and floats.

1) with the title: <ts oonsiclsrutiois, that is, what a pope should have in mind.

In Rome, that is, on the highest sea, raging with innumerable dangers in all places, and living and working in such misery that you are in need of the least Christian's help, I have not considered it unskilful that I forget your majesty until I fulfill my duty of brotherly love. I do not like to flatter in such a serious, dangerous matter, in which, if some do not want to understand me as I am your friend, and more than subject, he will be found who understands it.

24 In the end, so that I do not come empty before your grace, I bring with me a little book, which went out under your name, for a good wish and the beginning of peace and good hope, from which your grace may taste what business I would like to do and also deal with fruitfully, if it were possible for me before your unchristian flatterers. It is a small booklet, if the paper is considered; but nevertheless the whole sum of a Christian life is comprehended in it, if the meaning is understood. I am poor, having nothing else to show my service; so you must not be improved more than with spiritual goods. That I may commend myself to thy holiness, which keep him eternally JEsus Christ, Amen. At Wittenberg, September 6, 1520.

347 Letter from Wolfgang Reibenbusch, the prelate at Lichtenburg, to Fabian von Feilitzsch, in which he tells how the colloquium between Miltitz and Luther went in his absence; he also apologizes for not being able to be there and reports that he had them well entertained by his procurator. October 13, 1520.

From Cyprian's Documents, Vol. I, p. 444.

Great Her and Patron. Heint In the night when it struck X, my procurator of Lichtenberg has written to me how Doctor Martinus arrived on Thursday at iij. vrh after noon, and has had Philippum Melanchthon, a brother of his order, a nobleman vnd four travelers with him. My servant reports to me that there were XXX horses not far from there. According to VI.

He Karol also came with two horses. In sum, they have been on good terms and have been completely happy with each other, and I have ordered that they be given good execution and enough money. But what they are supposed to have done with each other, he will report to Karol in his letter, and I will have it turned over to him. Yesterday Doctor Martinus left at noon, and Carol gave him the money, but he thought that Carol had been attacked by a horse. Report to me that he stayed in Lichtenberg yesterday, which I am glad of. Dear sir, if I am honorable, I will not take 100 fl. that I have remained at home. And as I have found myself, so I have found myself. Karol would like to bring me, a poor fool, into the game, so that Doctor Luther would not be reckoned with, and that this would soon pass me by. But that this was Carol's opinion you will find in my procurator's letter, which is also presented here, and almost in the beginning of the same. He has requested me with a Roman mandate, and requisitioned, and thus brought me into the pepper. 1) Dear sir, God will not have mercy on me, since it was against me for some other reason that this day was set in Lichtenberg. Because the fire shuns the fire, he Karol was initially a cause that the Roman boys have brought me more than a hundred fl. For this reason, I have given them a fair deal. This is the reason why I have paid them. This is the reason why I should not deny myself to poor deaf people. Since I have so little need of the bishop and the priest than of each other, I will also act more disgracefully in this matter; but whoever comes into these hands may be much more liberally under the doors. All of which I have hereby willingly informed Your Lordship of, and Your Lordship can certainly not do anything else to me than that I do everything that is lib and dinst to your eyes. And I ask you to be very diligent when he comes here: You will not fail to visit me as a friend and stay with me. This will give me great pleasure, for I will be able to

1) From this it is evident that neither the Elector nor Reibenbusch fully trusted Carl von Miltitz. In addition to the four horsemen who accompanied him, the Elector gave Luthern another thirty horsemen, who (hidden from Miltitz) were waiting not far from Lichtenburg. Reibenbusch feared, and believes to be able to prove this by the letter of his procurator, that Miltitz, if he had been present, might have demanded Luther's capture on the basis of a Roman mandate.

I would like it to happen one day that I could show myself to E. G. in such a way that I would like to serve you according to my abilities. I hereby present myself to Your Lordship as my favorable master.

I request that the second letter be returned to me, which I have sent to your Lord in confidence. I also ask not to be informed about them at all. Date In eyl zw ... Saturday after Dionysius [13th Det.] anno XV C.XX..

To my most gracious lord and patron Ern Fabian von Feilitzsch Churfl. ratt 2c. 1)

348 Miltitzen's letter to the Elector of Saxony, in which he asks him to write to the Pope, to present Luther's peaceableness, his opponents' hardness, his (Miltitzen's) peaceful efforts 2c. so that the arrived bull of condemnation would be limited or cancelled. Oct. 14, 1520.

From Cyprian's Documents, Vol. I, p. 449.

Most Serene Highborn Prince Most Noble Lord. To Your Electoral Grace my most humble thoughts are, in all sincerity, previously reported. Most Reverend Prince and Sir, as I have recently written to your Electoral Grace, I would like to personally address Doctor Martinum, which, praise be to God, will be done in all freedom, and will take place on the day of Maximiliani Martyris, which is the xii. day of October. There we discussed the matter in detail according to all necessity and found that God still wants to give his grace that the matter will reach a good end, even though the Tewfel has gladly prevented the game by unrepentant people, yet Doctor Martinus, through the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, has not accepted it, nor assumed it, they cry or publicize bulls as they wish, and is in obedience to the will of the Holy Spirit. In all humility, write in Latin and German, dedicate a booklet to him, and in the beginning write an epistle on the inside.

1) Cyprian 4,6. p. 447 notes the following on this: Of this Wolfgang Reißbusch we still remember this, that he was already in 1507 Baccalaureus of theology at Wittenberg. In 1511 he was Rector of the University of Wittenberg. At that time, the monastery at Lichtenburg was owned by the Antonian lords, but a few years ago it was made a princely dower seat. The head or preceptor of the monastery was initially always the chancellor of the University of Wittenberg.

His Majesty shall indicate what has been caused in two writings and where it has come from, and who has demanded and supported such a crime, and who has so diligently preached, disputed and written to the detriment of the Holy Church, and what has been done by me in vain 2c. so that His Majesty may preside over the cause of the matter, and for this purpose release His Majesty from all suspicion, so that perhaps by some of His Majesty's people he may be able to prevent it from happening again. The booklet will go out in xii. days and will have the date, on September vj. immediately ten days after [the Chapter at] 2) Eisleben, because he has been requested by [the Order's deputies] 2) to write to Bebst. hey. With all due respect that he did so as an obedient one, so that no one may say that Eckius with his hand forced him to write such a letter to Bebst. hey. with his bull, which bull was published on the twentieth of September. The dispute at Leipzig and my noble lord of Merßburgh's promise to prevent it will also indicate with a beautiful narrative the comforting praise of Babst for his person. I have not wished to tell your Lordship, as my most noble lord, because I know that your Lordship sees the matter of the Holy Roman Council as a comfort and a pleasure, and that Doctor Mar. is also silent, and so are others. He wants to be in discord with the grave monks 3) and not to answer his narrative any further, Doctor Mar. has also written our action and decision in part to Dno Spalatin, which letter I have sent to E. Churfl. gn. Therefore, I humbly request that Your Grace write to the Council for God's sake, thanking them for the roses and bulls, 4) and indicating that Doc. Mar. has long liked to have had it so 5) forbidden to him and the others of your chief or magistrates, had 6) also long written to his court as he had been requested by Imandt to do when he was in power, and that E. Churfl. gn. thereafter set such request before

2) Here are gaps in Cyprian, which would like to be supplemented approximately in the indicated way. Cf. St. Louis edition, vol. XIX, introduction, p. 46.

3) This is: Alveld.

4) This is for the bull that accompanied the golden rose, No. 311.

5) "it", that is, writing and continuing the dispute.

6) "hätt" put by us instead of: has.

my his hey. further instruction. So we want to meet the Eckio and his annex to the extent that they had not thought of it, then Bebst. hey. will certainly be of two minds, a cause for having limited the ban, together with the bull, considered that Doctor Martinus has humbled himself and is writing to his hey. and whoever has become aware of this to his hey. We want to find a cause for the matter soon, before a hundred and xx days pass, I will, if God wills, have another decree made out, to a prelate who shall cancel or moderate such bulla, which E. The Holy Father will inform me by his letter, but the Holy Father shall not complain, to send to the Cardinal St. Sixti . . . a copy for fifty or . . . [1] I have sent the Cardinal on my ... Doctor Mar. letter so it shall if God wills right ... is otherwise at all times good before E. Churfl. gn. 2) . . . and do not worry it will be for the best and write as little as E. Churfl gn. wants, so I am well to be pleased, Doct. Mart. is good thing eight dy bulla nothing. He with his appendix as namely Doctor Carlstadt. Doctor Johannes Doltzkg of Veltkirchen, Magister Egra, 3) Bernhardin von Adelmanshaußen thwmher zw Augspurgk, Wilibald Berckinger, Johann Spengler, Secretarius der von Nornbergk, all of whom Eckius has ordered to be struck together with Martino zw Meysen, and with D. Mart. In the same punishment 2c. Our churfl. gn. want to send me this letter as soon as possible, so that I may rise up to Rome to refute 4) the error, then such a bulla will go into effect, so certainly a great cism, for I will, if God wills, with the help of pious gentlemen, as much as I can strive for it; your curfl. gn. will not hesitate to give me the order to pay the money which I have laid out for your Lordship, but which I cannot pay to Rome, therefore I have asked your Lordship for the most humble of requests, Eckius has ended up at Leiptzick in the night on Freibvrgk zw, and the city servants of Leiptzick are riding with the bulls in the country. With this I dedicate myself to my Lordship as my most noble lord, before whom I place all my comfort after God. Datum eylend zw Eyllenbergk Sonntag nach Maximiliani [14. Oct.] 1520. Ewer Churfl. gn. wolle nicht vorgeffen den juncen Cardinalen ewer Churfl. gn. angesicht zw schicken, wie Ich dann E. Churfl. gn. kürzlich zw Gotha und durch mein Schreiben bitten.

Ew. Curfl. gl.
humble Capellan
Carolus von Miltitz.

3) Miltitz is not very precise with the names. Here Egranus is meant; immediately following: Bernhard Adelmann or von Adelmansfelden; then: Wilibald Pirkheimer.

4) Maybe: niederlegung?

1) Supplemented by Seidemann.

2) As subject to this sentence Seidemann assumes the Cardinal St. Sixti. But it seems to us rather to be the pope. The whole passage would like to be completed like this: To send the Cardinal St. Sixti [their coin] a head for fifty or [one hundred] florins. If I have the Cardinal on my [side and] Doctor Martinus writing, then, if God wills, it shall [become right. His Holiness] has otherwise always been well spoken of to Ew. Gn., she be confident) and let herself be 2c.

Section Twelve of Chapter Four.

Von Miltitzens letzter Correspondenz mit dem Churfürsten Friedrich zu Sachsen.

349 Miltitzen's letter to the Elector of Saxony, in which he reports that Luther's cause in Rome is now better than one would think, and asks that the Elector write to the Pope or to a cardinal, at the same time asking for the pension promised to him. Aug. 10, 5) 1521.

From Cyprian's Documents, Vol. I, p. 522.

Most Serene Highborn Prince, my humble servants are ready beforehand for Your Royal Grace. Your Eminence, when I recently departed from your Highness at Wittenberg, your Highness gave me the order, if I should obtain anything new from Rome concerning my affairs or person, to send it to your Highness. I humbly wish to inform the Holy Father that I have received news from Rome, and that I am grateful and thankful to the Almighty God for this, and so that E. Curfl. gn. may believe me, I have sent the same letters to Hersfeld for the attention of E. Curfl. gn. I have sent the same documents to your honorable court for your approval, and from them your honorable court may indicate to you the kindness of your church, and that Doctor Martin's cause has not been so completely lost in your church as some of the cases that I have received little or no thanks from good friends. I have written and indicated the beginning of this matter until the hour when I am to be held by Saltza Jtzund in the Pentecost, as I have passed it, and there with I have quite faithfully and graciously addressed E. Curfl. gn. I have been asked by doctor Martinum to talk and trade with him according to all my wishes, and I am sure that he has been pleased with it, which I have sought myself through my good lords and friends, whom I am not allowed to write to, so I have consoling hopes that I will be able to give more things to your Curl. gn. more things by virtue of his heylikeyt than before, because his heylikeyt is formerck the E. Curfl. gn. fihel zw milde, 1) and with ferschweygungk der warheyt getragen an seyn heylikeyt. Therefore, my humble request is that E. Curfl. gn. will consider it kindly and give me between freedom and peace to the babest my lord or a Cardinal as Cardinali Compejo who has written to E. Curfl. gn. two times that it will not repent if God wills it to E. Curfl. gn. Most noble Prince and Lord in my name from E. Curfl. gn.

5) Walch: "10 May 1521."

I have recently petitioned and reminded E. Curfl. gn. undertheniglich, of the gracious promise made to me by E. Curfl. gn. and by E. Curfl. gn. Hern bruder zw gotha. I have received a gracious reply from E. Curfl. gn. that E. Curfl. gn. has such a request as E. Curfl. gn. has made in the summer of this year. Hern hertzog hannssen zwkonfft warthen, so sult ich an E. Curfl. gn. och an mein genedigen Hern herzogk hannssen anregungk thuen, durch ein supplication so suld mir genedige Antwort werden, so bin ich genedigster her am sanct Donatus tag [V. Aug.] bei m. gn. Hern hertzogk hannssen, his fl. gn. personally for Sulch's request, has given me his fl. gn. this noble answer. There should be no lack of his fl. gn., but only the matter with your curfl. gn. between request me between good, so is my humble request, your curfl. gn. will only as I comforting hope Erceygen and me poor on such ceyt zw helffe come, dy because I have between no one so great comfort as zw zw E. I would like to be found worthy of this for the sake of Your Honor, as I am alive, with humble and submissive thoughts, and I hereby give my respects to Your Honor, as my most noble Lord. Date at [Scharfenberg] 2) in the Laurentii [Aug. 10] 1521.

E. Curfl. gen.
humble capellan
Carolus von Miltitz.

2) Supplemented according to Seidemann's assumption. "Miltitz, p. 32.

1) "Mild" here has an evil meaning.

The fifth chapter.

Of the very famous disputation held in Leipzig in June 1519 between D. Eck on the one hand, and D. Carlstadt and D. Luther on the other. Luther on the other hand at Leipzig.

First section.

From the next inducement to this disputation.

What gave the first cause for this, and how D. Eck first got into a dispute with Carlstadt because of Luther.

1. Eck broke the good friendship in which he had stood with Luther by the insidious scattering of his obelisks, under the pretext that it was done at the request of the bishop of Eichstädt, where Eck was canon.

350 Luther's complaint that D. Eck had attacked him against the law of friendship without warning by publishing his so-called obelisks.

See Appendix, No. 42, U 2-4.

2 Since D. Eck realized that he had been hasty in this lache, and he had heard that D. Carlstadt would have something printed against him, he apologized to him in writing, but too late.

351 D. Carlstadt's letter to Spalatin, with which he sends him his theses published against D. Eck. May 14, Anno 1518.

From Joh. Gottfr. Olearius sorin. anti^uar., p. 26. Translated into German by Joh. Frick.

To the excellent Georg Spalatin, master of the liberal arts and canon of Altenburg, my very valuable patron.

Hail! The short time I have left for writing letters does not allow, my erudite Spala

I hope that I will answer everything you ask in your letter. Know, however, that I have recovered so far, except that I am still burdened with a headache. Nevertheless, I will read, as before, to a larger number of listeners, should their diligence and desire also suck the marrow out of my legs 2c. Soon I will send a part of my conclusions to your glory, because not all of them are ready for printing. With divine help, you shall see what Eck will oppose them with, and believe that I do not fear him at all, nor others whom I will refute by name. I have the Wittenberg Bible to myself; the preachers fall in with me. Brother Johann Tetzel in his conclusions, I do not want to say us, but even our most gracious prince. I have teased a little about his conclusions; but if it continues like this, I will engage in a scholarly battle. Finally, I ask you to recommend me to our Most Reverend Prince, as well as to Herr Pfeffinger and Hirsfeld, so that they may promote the realization of my humble request and support me. No less recommend me also to von Taubenheim, Hieronymo and all others, and write to me again. Given in the greatest haste at Wittenberg, the Friday after Ascension Day (May 14), Anno 18. I want to become all sorts of things to all of you.

Your glory

Andreas Carlstadt.

As I wrote this, I sent to our printer so that the boy would deliver two copies, one to the knight, Mr. Pfeffinger, the other to your Lordship as a gift; but he only brought one, and the messenger would not hold out. Therefore, I am sending only one copy of today's disputation to your lordship at present; the whole thing, however, shall follow with the future mail.

352 D. Eck's letter to D. Carlstadt, in which he seeks to apologize for his obelisks published out of haste against Luther and offers peace again on the outside.
May 28, 1518.

From Joh. Gottfr. Olearius serin. antiuar., p. 29 reprinted in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. II, p. 64.

Translated into German.

To the venerable Mr. Andreas Carlstadt, Doctor well deserving of the liberal arts and divine learning, Archidiaconus at Wittenberg, his, where I may call him otherwise, immense friend, his to him completely devoted (Tuissimus) Eck wishes good health.

Esteemed Andrew, I have learned that you and your Wittenbergers are very angry with me because I have written some things against the teachings of Martin Luther, our common friend, to my bishop privately, thinking that these trifles would never be presented to the scholars for evaluation. But how these writings came from my bishop's hands into yours, of that I have conjecture, but no certainty. If I had known this, I would not have written them as unprepared as they came into my head, without looking them up in books, and would not have poured them out so hastily. For, as you know, we all take more liberty in private writing than when we put a piece of writing into the light. Therefore, I am very surprised that you are so angry with Eck, who is completely devoted to you. I am told that you accuse me of flattery, but you do not know that I am a man who cannot flatter at all. Ask all those who know me, they will have to admit that Eck cannot fob anyone off with empty words. And even if I could, I would not do it, least of all before such a bishop, with whom the indulgence (as far as I can guess) seemed to have little power for some accidental reason. By the way, they say you are getting ready for a scholarly duel against me, which I can hardly believe. If you are of this intention, I am astonished that you do not rather take up the cause of the neighboring Frankfurters and the inquisitor of heretical malice, who claim in their printed and published papers that Martin has been absent a hundred times; at times he is mad, furious and nonsensical. But if you want to do me the right of the recently established friendship, I will consider it done in love, and ask you that what you have in mind against the innocent Eck may not be done against him.

may not be carried out. My intention was not at all to injure Martinus; but if you do not care about my friendship and believe that I have done too much, I cannot and will not impose a law on you, but nevertheless it would have been your duty, if you wanted to issue something against me, to make this known to me at the earliest. If I am convinced that I have erred, I will gladly confess my errors and not be ashamed of them; if, on the other hand, I see that you are writing in an overly heated or biting manner, I will, with the help of faithful teachers and friends, seek to defend myself in the more famous universities of Christendom, as far as truth requires, but I would rather be spared this trouble. However, you will have to consider what needs to be done, and when you have considered everything well, you will start the deal. Be well, whose welfare I sincerely desire and wish. From Ingolstadt in a great hurry, May 28, 1518.

I apologize for my cursory and poor writing due to the quick departure of the messenger.

353 D. Carlstadt's answer to D. Eck, in which he strongly reminds him of his immodesty against Luther as a good friend, and admonishes him to think better of it.
Wittenberg, June 11, 1518.

From the Olearius serin.

p. 29.

Translated into German by Johann Frick.

To the venerable and excellent D. Johann Eck, Doctor of Holy Scripture, Ordinary and Pro-Chancellor of Ingolstadt, Canon of Eichstädt, my very dear friend and patron.

Your most devoted Andreas Carlstadt, good health! Esteemed Eck, your beautiful letter has been well delivered to me. Now, to answer it recently, I cannot refrain from telling Your Glory that the injustice done to the fundamentalist scholar Martin Luther was most displeasing to me. You accused the man of great and grave crimes, as if he had even offended the majesty, spread heretical teachings and caused division in the church. You have described the rebellious Bohemian, and you have imprinted these accusations. Does not a writing, according to your Scotus' opinion, by its nature make things common, known and obvious? You have done so and thereby not only caused a contradiction of others.

but even forced you to do so. Therefore, I have published a polemic or responsibility against some of your sentences, which was printed in Wittenberg and is now available for sale here and there. I am quite distressed about this, for the sake of your arrogance, that you have forced us to attack you. If things that have happened were to be changed, I would rather have endured the injustice with patience than to have settled it by arguing and disputing. But that I have chosen you in particular before others, and not the unlearned inquisitor or another of his like as an opponent, I have done not out of envy, not out of anger and heat, but for the sake of your beautiful eloquence, diligence, astuteness, but especially for your and the whole common welfare. I do hope that you will fall in with my opinion, and that a Saul will become a Paul. Nor did I want to engage in battle with a famous Leone and eloquent Marco rather than with a stupid ass, and I thought it would do me no harm if I were to lean more on eloquence in your example. If I have offended you, I ask you to forgive me; but if you continue to offend me, the offended part, even more, you may do so, if you can, and want to be regarded as the one who wants to mistreat a person in a hostile manner or even overturn the holy scripture. I have resolved to tolerate war and tyrannical fits much rather than to keep a completely wrong peace to the detriment and harm of the divine word; it may go for me as it may. But I would not like to lose your friendship, if you would grant me the same. I love you dearly. I want to be lost if I wish you death or the slightest misfortune. I am making a masterly effort so that God's word, which lies blissfully under the bench at our sad time, may soon become lovelier and brighter, yes, may rise as clear as day. Long live our Martinus, who has given us the opportunity to proclaim the law of the Lord in its power. Yes, long live Eck, our friend. But if he is an enemy to us, let him become a lover of the truth. This is what I have opened to you in haste, and at the same time I have wished you all the best. Farewell. Given hastily at Wittenberg, Friday, June 11, 1518.

My dear corner, forgive, because I have wanted to forgive you. Forgive, if you think that I have brought up empty gossip. But I wish that you do not concede the slightest thing to falsehood, but rather that it be completely eradicated, banished and annihilated.

354 D. Carlstadt's letter to Spalatin, with which he sends the above letter from D. Eck together with his reply. June 14, 1518.

From the Olearius serin. anti^uar., x. 28.

Translated into German by Joh. Frick.

To the highly learned Georg Spalatin, master of the liberal arts and canon of Altenburg, his very worthy patron.

Here you have, my highly learned Mr. Georg, the copy of the letters, which Eck wrote much more politely than you would have thought, sent to me, together with my answer. I do not know what will come of it; I am not interested in what he may have in mind and what he may undertake. In addition, I am sending you the four sheets which, according to the report, you lacked, and I most earnestly request that you entrust the highly deserving and righteous official, Mr. Pfeffingern, with the care of my cause and the promotion of the same; that your lordship also do the same, and that you consider drawing all good friends who approve of my resolution to my side, especially Mr. Hirsfeld, Mr. Taubenheim and Jerome. Because I am now so poor that I cannot let my enemies know, and I will not experience such a lack as long as I am a doctor, I will not keep it from you, but in such a way that the others shall not hear of it. I can neither buy books nor the food that is useful for my health. The diligence of my listeners is my only consolation. But it makes me uneasy that many have to stay away because of lack of copies, and where our most noble prince will not provide advice, some will probably even leave out of displeasure. They approach me daily and get empty hope. Greetings to all my lords. Farewell and write to me again. I have hardly been able to gain time to write to you. For I am now working under divine help on the notes on the book of the spirit and the letter. Farewell. Given at Wittenberg, Monday, June 14, 1518, Andreas Carlstadt.

Two letters are sent to Mag. Georg Spalatinum, Capellan of Her Serene Highness Prince Frederick.

3. of D. Carlstadt's carriage figures published against Eck and what has happened because of it.

355. description of the figure published by D. Carlstadt in woodcut of two carriage-the first of which is the right way to heaven, but the other is the wrong way of the scholastic

The teacher and the fallacy of free will are to be presented.

From Löscher's Ref.Acta, Vol. II, p. 104. Löscher says: Carlstadt had published two figures in woodcut in the form of two carriages in 1518 and had the interpretation of the figures of the carriage printed in 1519. Jäger "Carlstadt" says p. 17: that this satirical little writing of the "two carriages" appeared towards the end of the year 1518. And p. 24: Carlstadt published this satyr again with explanations on April 18, 1) in defiance of the Leipzigers. The title reads: "Auslegung vnnnd Lewterung etzlicher heyligen geschriffen. So dem Menschen dienstlich vnd erschießlich seindt zu Christlichem leben. The book is a short description of the figures and writings of the chariots, especially of the creed. The dedication bears the date: Monday after Palmarum [April 18] 1519. Is it this new edition that Luther sends to his friend Johann Lang already on April 13, 1519? (De Wette, Vol. I, p. 255.)

On the first stood a crucifix, at the head of which: God does not love for reward,
 Rejoice in faith and hope.

By the hands of the protected party:
 Hendel of the night: that is hypocrisy in diligence and diligently avoided:
 The arrows fleeing by day: that is, publicly suffering storm, persecution and grief willingly.

Long of the Creutz:
 Dem Teufel und Welt wiederstee
 Beware of yourself, so you stay on wee, Always urteyl your affliction and life, So you may give God guilty sooner.

Under the Creuz:
 From the will of God, the righteous D. Stercken, man grows with his creed and work.

Christ's image has in one hand the words:
 Love own will all yours and you,

In the left corner:
 Take your creutz and follow me.

Furthermore, on the car:
 From me furent me, So mich anseh, erschreck ich, Wie gern wär ich mir from,
 Wenn mich selbstbest erkon, Brengt mich
 von meinem Koth, Ich drieff aus grosser Noth,

1) Hunter has wrong "the 17th of April".

And much more like that. The other wagon was full of false sayings from the school teachers, such as:

Govern yourself according to your highest, and you will come to the best.
 He has a sure courage that does so much.
 Than he can do himself. Then God must give him help 2c.

356. as II. Eck complains in a letter to the Elector of Saxony about these carriage images.

See below the 413th Document, § 5.

In a letter to the Elector of Saxony, Carlstadt answers for this figure.

See below the 416th Document, § 7.

In another letter to the Elector of Saxony, D. Eck again makes a counter-recollection of Carlstadt's responsibility.

See below the 419th Document, § 4.

B. How D. Eck, according to the agreement made at Augsburg in the fall of 1518, did not want to debate with D. Carlstadt alone at Leipzig, which was the place Eck had chosen, but also wanted to have Luthern there by force, and since Luthern refused in every way, demanded that he do so by means of a printed note.

Luther's letter to D. Eck, in which he reports to him that D. Carlstadt wants to discuss with him in Leipzig or Erfurt. Carlstadt, according to the agreement made in Augsburg, wants to debate with him in Leipzig or Erfurt and leaves him the choice of selecting one of the two places.

Nov. 15, 1518.

This letter is found in Latin in the German Wittenberg edition (1569), vol. IX, p. 84; in the German Jena edition (1564), vol. I, p. 164 k; in the Altenburg edition, vol. I, p. 292; in the Leipzig edition (Latin and German), vol. XVII, p. 271; in Löscher, Ref.Acta, vol. III, p. 203 with the wrong date: Nov. 12; likewise in Ströbel - Ranner, p. 47 and in Walch; in De Wette, vol. I, p. 171 and in Erlanger Briefwechsel, vol. I, p. 280.

Newly translated from the Latin.

To the excellent theologian and philosopher
Johann Eck, Vice-Chancellor of the University of Ingolstadt, his Lord to be revered in Christ.

JEsus.

Hail! My dear Eck, Mr. Andreas is satisfied that we agreed in Augsburg that you should meet either in Leipzig or in Erfurt and honestly discuss the truth with each other, so that the quarreling and writing of books will come to an end. Therefore, he asks that you yourself determine the day on which they must meet; at the same time also the place, which of the two it should be. For he would have determined it for you, but he thought that he would have to put it in your home, because of the difficulty of your further journey and your perhaps more varied business. Therefore arrange it in such a way that I have not brought the man to his decision in vain; indeed, that the adversaries hope in vain that the theologians will always quarrel among themselves and never compare. Farewell. In the shortest time and among many transactions. On the Monday after Martinmas [Nov. 15] 1518.

Your Martin Luther.

360 Luther's thoughts to Johann Egranus, as well as to D. Lang, about Eck's public challenge, from which it is clear that Luther should not have and wanted to dispute with D. Eck at all, but only Carlstadt, and thus Luther was forced to do so.

See Appendix, No. 30, U 5. 6 and No. 43, § 2.

Luther's response to Eck's edited disputation note, in the form of a letter addressed to D. Carlstadt. Late January or early February 1519.

Eck had a disputation note printed on December 29 at Augsburg before his departure for his homeland with the title: In studio Inpssusi cksiputadit Dekans propositionss inkra notatas ooutru D. Locksustsin Earlsctackimn ^rsNidiasonnrm st, ckostorsin VuittöndurAsn., to which he enclosed a letter to Matthäus (Lang), Cardinal of the title St. Angeli, Coadjutor zu Salzburg, dated 29 Dec. and printed in Adam Petri's laicnidrationura park una. Lasilsas 1520 msuks 4Mio, p. 286 Because Luther's doctrine was attacked in the theses, which Eck wanted to drag into the dispute, Luther responded by our letter to Carlstadt, which he prefixed to his twelve counter-theses against Eck, which is to be shredded either at the end of January or the beginning of February, because already on February 7 Luther sent a printed copy of it to Spalatin (De Wette, Vol. I, p. 222). This letter appeared several times in 1519 in a single print (to which Eck's disputation note with the letter to Matth. Lang is also attached) under the title: "Disputatio domini Johannis Eccij et Pa. Martini Luther in studio Lipsensi futura." In collections: in Adam Petri's l^ucmdrationum park UUA, p. 288; in Aurifaber, vol. I, p. 158; in Löscher's Ref.-Acta, vol. III, p. 206; in De Wette, vol. I, p. 249; in the Erlanger, opp. var. ars., tow. IV, p. 73 and in the Erlanger Briefwechsel, vol. I, p. 401. De Wette places this letter "at the end of March or beginning of April," but Seidemann has improved De Wette, vol. VI, p. 486 this and dated it "at the end of January." We have translated from the Erlangen correspondence.

Newly translated from the Latin.

Martin Luther, Augustinian, wishes the highly learned and excellent gentleman, Andreas Bodenstein von Carlstadt, highly respected advocate of pure theology, archdeacon at Wittenberg, his teacher and superior in Christ, Hail! Our corner, dear sir, has issued a disputation note 1) in which he makes a noise with splendid, pompous words (but this is the manner of this man) that he will dispute against you in Leipzig, and I had negotiated this with him in Augsburg on your behalf, whether in some way your dispute might be settled personally and in a friendly and intimate meeting, which you also, as befits your dignity, did not refuse. But behold! the man, who remembers his word so beautifully and always remains the same, finally, after having reviled you shamefully, promises an attack against you, but turns it against me; I do not know whether with his frogs or with his gnats.

2. I had hoped that your extremely important matters would be discussed, and of the grace of God, of human misery, and mainly of the matter in dispute between you; but meanwhile my corner is clamoring against my pettiness.

1) Eck himself had sent this note to Luther, as we can see from the following document.

or rather plays his game with carnival larvae 1) in the manner of these days. In short, he almost brings the foolish questions about indulgences out of the underworld. He treats your things as secondary and hardly touches them with the tip of his finger (as they say). Perhaps the Holy Spirit, foreseeing this playfulness and washiness of this man, told the excellent doctors of the University of Leipzig that they would refuse you to make this deal with them.

But I also do not want, my dear Andrew, that you allow yourselves to become involved in this unworthy and masked disputation, both because this splendid and red-cheeked and white-armed 2) larva attacks mine and me, and also because your gifts and your disputation stand too high that they should lower themselves to these petty things of the sophist and mine, namely to the indulgence or more correctly and in truth indulgence 3). Since all teachers, even the scholastics, the unfortunate teachers of Eck, themselves confess, first, that it [indulgences] is not necessary for a Christian, then, if there were none, it would be better, and for that reason it fits the Scriptures and a theological trade like a donkey fits a harp, and even I would never have considered him worthy of my disputation, if it had not been necessary, for the sake of Christ's people, to put an end to the seducers, the useless talkers, the self-seekers, the shameful profit-seekers [Tit. 1, 10. 7.]: nevertheless, these great and noble theologians are so miserably concerned about these trifling and trivial things, striving to protect them with even anxious concern.

1) This word has been interpreted to the Fastnacht time and therefore often our letter has been set in too late time. In 1519, Shrove Tuesday fell on March 8. But this assumption is already excluded by the date of Eck's dedication letter to Matth. Lang (Dec. 29, 1518). Probably the saying is to be referred to the writings of Silvester Prierias (as the Erlangen correspondence assumes), because almost around the time of our letter Luther had his replica printed. Compare Walch, St. Louis Edition, vol. XVIII, 413, note 1.

2) ^a^tⁱ-^ä^s^c compiled from Iliuä. I, 145 and 596 (Erl. Briefw.).

3) The play on words in Latin: inäulMutias- nsZliAsntikrs
^aNachlässigkeit in guten Werken! cannot be rendered quite accordingly in German.

The first thing is that the theologians are so puffed up that it is seen that they have placed in it the highest adornment of their name and their office, while in the meantime the right task of theology and that which serves the cause is completely neglected and put to rest, - of course not out of a desire for profit or honor, except incidentally, accidentally, and that it can happen in the process, 4) only that it is not too far away.

Since I am not allowed to live in a more dignified position, because God wills it so, than that I spend my life with the wash-hastened and vain sophists, with the harmful flatterers of the Roman pope and the Romanizing tyrants, I happily and gladly put aside my serious matters for the play of these people.

Therefore, dear Eck, I do not accuse you of the vainest honor that you published this disputation before you were sure what the Leipzigers would do in this matter, yes, after you had learned from me that they would reject it altogether, 6) because you certainly hoped to gain honor from a blue gloom and a disputation that was never to take place. I do not blame you for deceitfully and not at all friendly, let alone theologically, opposing Doctor Carlstadt's foreign theses. Since you could hope that he would by no means acknowledge them as his own, you could again triumph from a blue gloom over such a great man.

(6) I do not complain that you have turned to the most shameful flattery against the pope and have again made a fairy tale of me, and have laid on me new errors invented by you, and yet you pretend to do nothing less than that. We tolerate that this

4) Here are several difficult to translate scholastic expressions:
nist minus prineipulitr psr ueeiclsns 6t in pot6ntia.

5) komanantinm formed according to the analogy of papenzen, judenzen 2c.

6) On Dec. 4, 1518, Eck approached the university and Duke George about the organization of the disputation (Seidemann, Leipziger Disputation, p. III f.). He received the negative answer only on February 4. Luther's letter of Jan. 7, 1519, from Leipzig, in which he informed him of the Leipzigers' negative answer to Carlstadt (this letter is lost), was received by Eck, as he says in the following document, only on Feb. 8, 1519.

by a theologian; we only want to show that we certainly understand your wretchedly clever tricks and your images formed from nothing, and to remind you amicably that henceforth, for the sake of your honor, you may be inferior to our nose, yes, to our heel, with a little finer cunning. This your rustic and sleepy cleverness you may play off against your fellow sophists.

In the meantime, be a brave man and "gird your sword at your side, O hero" [Ps. 45:4]. For after I have not been acceptable to you as a mediator to your peace, perhaps I will be welcome to you as a fighter. Not that I have set myself to conquer, but that, after your victories in Austria, in Lombardy and in Bavaria 1) (if we can believe you), I may become an opportunity for you to gain the name with which you will be greeted as eiu Triumphator in Saxony and Meissen, and, if you will, as the all-time ruler of the empire for eternity, and thus, after you have gained such everlasting, exceedingly great fame, you may rest, according to the words of your master: When there is full skill in a thing, the movement ceases. 2) But I would rather that you finally give birth to the miraculous animal, which you have been feeding me for a long time, and expose the disgusting things, by which your stomach is in danger, to the public, and put an end to your magnificent and glorious threats.

8) But, my dear Andreas, I return to you and ask that you write with me to the most noble prince, Duke Georg, and also to the wise council in Leipzig, 3) whether they would deign to give us even one secular house for this trade.

1) In Vienna, Bologna and Landshut. Wiedemann, Eck, pp. 63 and 53.

2) The old translator has rendered the words: Ilabitudis oxistontibns in matoria, oessat motus thus: "If the acquired skills stick in the matter, the movement stops." But to us, according to the context, this seems to be the meaning: When someone has reached the highest degree of skill, he must stand still.

3) Luther did both on February 19. Seidemann, Leipziger Disputation, p. 33, notes that Luther's letters to the university and the theological faculty of Leipzig are missing.

to make them available. For I do not want the excellent doctors of the university to be burdened with the danger of the office of judge, which they have also very wisely refused.

9 Yes, we want to do this: after two notaries have been called in, both Eck and Luther, and if others want to do the same, may dictate their reasons and answers to the notaries. I do this with the intention that we too will not be subjected to the shameful glorification and futile effort that one sees in Eck's Vienna disputation; 4) and also so that the clamor and the impetuous gestures with which the disputators of our time are wont to rage and to corrupt the truth may be subdued, while everything may be expressed in writing with the greatest possible modesty, and this, thus written, may be presented to the apostolic see, to the bishops, and to the judgment of the whole Christian world.

362 Eck's so-called Disputation and Apology against Luther's Accusations (Disputatio et Excusatioiv Domini Johannis Eccii adversus criminationes F. Martini Lutter, ordinis Eremitarum) in response to Luther's open letter to Carlstadt. March 14, 1519.

This document is the reply to Eck's thirteen theses Against Luther and Carlstadt, which he sent out on March 14, 1519, on a disputation slip. The first part of this note is this letter addressed to Gaspar (not Caspar), Abbot of Wessobrunn and the Provost Johan" of Polling, the second part is the theses themselves (St. Louis edition, vol. XVIII, 712). In the three existing editions, the names of these addressees are incorrect. Walch offers, "Herr Caspar, Abbot of Soissons and Herr Johann Polling, Provost," 2c. Löscher, vol. III, p. 559 and the Erlanger, opp. var. ar^u, tom. III, p. 4: Domino Oaspari, Vdkuti kontis Kuossoms, et Domino 3oUunni DoUinZi, pmeposito. The Erlanger Briefwechsel, vol. I, p. 405 names the former in note 2: Oa.8par, Dontis KnoSSIONIS, and even Eck's biographer, Wiedemann, offers p. 494: "The translator M. A. Tütel gives sbei Walch) 'kortis ssio Kuossonis' smo) with Soisson ssio) and gives the pope ssio) Johann the spelling name 'Polling'." The title we put over this writing is not found on the original disputirzettel, and will probably have been added only to the editions published in quarto in 1519. The original

4) Eck's boastful letter to Bishop Gabriel von Eyb zu Eichstädt is printed in Wiedemann, Eck, pp. 63-75.

begins with these words: Ooo amuntiss. prelati O. Oaspari addati kontis Vu6880ni8 et ck. Ioanni?ollin^ae praeposito patronis suis odsorvantiss. LeLiu8 in äornino ^WII, dene aZere. The original, which is in our hands, we have already described in the 18th volume of our edition, Col. 712, note, where Eck's thirteen theses are printed.

. Newly translated from the Latin.

To the God-loving prelate, Mr. Gaspar, Abbot of Wessobrunn, and Johann, Provost of Polling, his highly venerable patrons, Eck wishes well-being in the Lord Jesus.

Since, venerable fathers, the new teaching of M. Luther, 1) Augustine, seemed to me to deviate in many ways from the path of truth, it is by no means unknown to you what I have done from the beginning, 2) and what has followed with Andreas Bodenstein. But since I have always hated the kind of writing that has to do with violent attacks, I have decided to make an attempt on my opinion before the most learned people, in whose judgment 3) I would like to capture my mind and make it serviceable, since I know that holding oneself (φιλαυρία) is a mother of errors, and that standing alone leads to traps, as Bernhard says, and, if one does not want to believe wiser people, is foolishness, as Boethius testifies. Although the possibility of coming together was cut off for a long time by the adversary (con- traversarium = adversarium), we finally agreed on the University of Leipzig, whereupon, following Aurelius 4) Augustine's prescription, I had the brief epitome of the future disputation written down in a note 5) even in great haste, so much so that I omitted the article that should not have been omitted, 6) on free will and faith.

unnoticed. But 7) since this note had been sent by me to brother Martin Luther, he immediately, as he is a hero in biting, spread a letter 8) addressed to his advocate among the people. Whether this [letter] corresponds to Eck's modesty, I leave to the reader's judgment. But because such a kind of people, as St. Gregory assures, loves only 9) those who are silent, I am not moved nor offended by his biting letter. Would God that I were considered worthy, as the apostles boasted, to suffer shame for the truth and the Lord Jesus. But I see that I must take care that the weak are not annoyed, who would easily applaud the one who belittles me, if they did not receive an apology from me. 10) I am not a man of the Lord.

Luther is unhappy about the fact 11) that, while I had promised to dispute against D. Bodenstein in Leipzig, I had directed the attack against him, and as he is completely an Olibrius 12), he adds: he does not know whether with frogs or with mosquitoes; meanwhile, I had ranted against his trifles (nugas==pranks) about indulgences, treated D. Bodenstein's sayings as secondary things and, as they say, hardly touched them with the tip of my finger. But how impudently he interprets this does not escape the reader's judgment. For since Bodenstein is Luther's advocate and did not reject my three comments on Luther's disputation on indulgences, which I had made privately for my reverend Bishop of Eichstädt, both in an erudite manner and biting, and promised the same for the others, I did not touch the matter of indulgences in three 13) theses without reason. This matter Luther calls, as if it were something contemptible, his antics (nugas), in which so many heroes have labored. I know that Jerome says that antics in the mouth of a priest are blasphemy. But I did not think that these people had to be separated in the disputation, who fought tooth and nail for one and the same opinion. Therefore, since the most illustrious prince, Duke George

7) Original: tn, which will have to be resolved by camouflaging; eraser: turn.

8) The previous document, which together with the counter-theses against Eck was written for printing.

9) Original: solum; Löscher: solns; Erlanger: solos.

10) Original: äetradenti; eraser: äetrationäi.

11) ^e^re kört appears in the original like this: LZrekert.

12) Original: Olibrius; eraser: olidrins; the old translator: "a whimsical head". Olibrius was a Roman consul who was the subject of mocking songs.

13) tridus is missing in Löscher.

1) Instead of: Ueverendi patres, Untteri etc., Löscher has: Leverenäi katris moi Iuttieri etc.. The Erlangen edition follows Löscher, so we need not consider it.

2) Original: eZerirn; eraser: eZerirnus.

3) Eraser: sontontias instead of: sententinna and immediately following: Bervitut68 instead of: servitutum.

4) In the original; Löscher: et.

5) Original: exarari; eraser: exarare.

